ALBUM RATINGS

Outstanding
Without fault in every way. A classic and therefore strongly recommended. No comprehensive record collection should be without this album.

Excellent.
A high standard album from this artist and therefore highly recommended.

Good.
By the artist's usual standards and therefore recommended.

Disappointing.
Flawed or lacking in some way.

Poor.

Louvin, Charlie

b. Charlie Elzer Loudermilk, 7 July 1927, Rainsville, Alabama, USA. From 1943-63, Louvin sang with his elder brother, Ira, as the Louvin Brothers, until differences saw them split to pursue separate careers. After the split, Charlie formed his own touring show. He also toured with other artists, continued to record for Capitol and to make regular appearances on the Grand Ole Opry. His solo career received a major boost when his recording of 'I Don't Love You Anymore', became a number 4 country hit in 1964. From then until 1970, his name was regularly in the charts gaining a Top 7 hit with 'See The Big Man Cry' and Top 20 hits with such songs as 'You Finally Said Something When You Said Goodbye', 'Will You Visit Me On Sundays', 'Hey Daddy' and the strangely titled 'What Are Those Things With Big Black Wings'. In the 70s, he not only registered six further solo chart hits, including 'You're My Wife, She's My Woman' but, between 1970 and 1973, he recorded two albums with Melba Montgomery which saw them gain six chart hits the biggest placement being a number 18 with 'Something To Brag About'. After leaving Capitol, he moved to Little Darlin' where, in 1979, he had a minor hit with 'Love Don't Care', a duet with Emmylou Harris. In the early 80s, he made appearances and recorded a Soundwaves album with bluegrass duo Jim And Jesse. Their 1982 recording of 'North Wind' made the Top 60. Louvin's final chart hit (at writing), a number 87, came as a result of a Hal Kat duet recording with Roy Acuff of Acuff's 1940 hit 'The Precious Jewel'. In 1988, when Robert Whitstein of the modern bluegrass duo the Whitstein Brothers, was unable to tour in Britain, Louvin took his place. Their ability to so accurately recreate the Louvin Brothers' sound proved extremely popular and led to them playing major bluegrass festivals and country venues in the USA. In 1992, they toured in Europe making appearances in several countries including the UK and recorded an album together. Over the years Louvin has released albums on numerous labels and in 1992, he celebrated his 50 years in country music by recording an album for Playback on which he was joined on varying tracks, as a mark of their respect for his input to the music, by Willie Nelson, Waylon Jennings, Charlie Daniels, George Jones, Crystal Gayle and Tanya Tucker. The album was released in Europe on the Cottage label. During his career Louvin also appeared in two films, Music City USA (1966) and Gold Guitar (1967). In 1998, Louvin was still in demand for public appearances, still continuing his long association with the Opry and with the Louvin Museum that he opened at Bell Buckle, Tennessee. After all the years as a solo artist, Louvin has often said 'When I come to the parts where the harmony should be, I instinctively step to the side of the microphone, just as I did for all those years when Ira and I were singing together'. Louvin's long input into country music should surely see him inducted into the Country Music Hall Of Fame during his lifetime.

Lovano, Joe

b. 29 December 1952, Cleveland, Ohio, USA. Lovano grew up to the sounds of jazz, thanks to a father who played tenor saxophone professionally and also owned a large record collection. In 1971, he went to the Berklee College Of Music, where he studied with Gary Burton and first met with future collaborators Bill Frisell and John Scofield. Returning to Ohio in the mid-70s, he played tenor saxophone with Lonnie Liston Smith, making his recording debut with him on 1974's Aphrodisiac For A Groove Merchant, and later toured with another organist, Brother Jack McDuff. Lovano moved to New York in 1976 and, after work with Albert Dailey and Chet Baker, played with the Woody Herman band until 1979. The following year he joined the Mel Lewis big band (with which he still works on occasion) and a little later met up with Paul Motian, in whose groups he has played and recorded for the last decade, renewing his acquaintance with Frisell in the process. (Motian and Frisell also play on Lovano's own Worlds.) In 1987, he toured Europe with Elvin Jones and in the late 80s worked with Charlie Haden's Liberation Music Orchestra (Dream Keeper) and recorded a duo album with drummer Aldo Romano. Reuniting with Scofield, he played on the guitarist's highly-acclaimed Blue Note Records debut Time On My Hands together with the follow-up What We Do, and was signed by the label himself, his Landmarks appearing in 1991. Lovano's third album on Blue Note, Universal Language, comprised a line-up of Jack DeJohnette, Charlie Haden, Steve Swallow, Tim Hagans, Scott Lee, Kenny Werner and Judi Silverman.
An admirer of Hank Mobley, Sonny Stitt, John Coltrane and Sonny Rollins, Lovano's own saxophone playing is distinguished by a lovely tone, fluent line and lucid sense of time - still showcased to best advantage, perhaps, in the company of Motian and Frisell on recordings such as One Time Out, On Broadway and Bill Evans (all under the drummer's name). Lovano's output with Blue Note during the early 90s is particularly inspiring especially From The Soul and Rush Hour (Orchestrated by Gunther Schuller). He performed the excellent 'Joe Lovano Tango' on Dave Brubeck's Young Lions & Old Tigers and recorded with his Wind Ensemble (Bill Frisell, Gary Valente, Henry Texier, Paul Motian, Judi Silvano, Tim Hagens in 1995 He now stands in the very top league of tenor players, already rated by many amongst the finest jazz saxophonist of the century.

For many, the doyens of Los Angeles progressive rock in the 60s, brilliantly erratic and producers of one of the finest rock albums ever made: Forever Changes. Love were formed in 1965 as the Grass Roots by Bryan Maclean (b. 1947, Los Angeles, California, USA; guitar/vocals), Arthur Lee (b. 1945, Memphis, Tennessee, USA; guitar/vocals), John Echols (b. 1945, Memphis, Tennessee, USA; lead guitar). Don Conka (d. 1973; drums) and Johnny Fleckenstein were soon replaced by Alban 'Snoopy' Pfisterer (b. 1947, Switzerland) and ex-Surfaris Ken Forssi (b. 1943, Cleveland, Ohio, USA). They become the first rock band to be signed by the expanding Elektra Records, just beating the Doors by a whisker. Their debut single was Burt Bacharach and Hal David's 'My Little Red Book', in a different form from the way the writers imagined it. Love were an instant sensation on the LA club scene, outrageous, loud, innovative and stoned. The furiously energetic '7 And 7 Is' was released in the summer of 1966 and became their second hit. Although 'The Castle' on Da Capo pointed to a new direction, it was Forever Changes that put them in the history books. That album, 25 years later, is still found on most critics' recommended lists and no comprehensive record collection should be without it. It is a superlative record, unassumingly brilliant, gentle, biting and full of surprises. It proved to be Arthur Lee's finest work and marked the end of the partnership with Bryan Maclean. A new Love featuring Lee, Frank Fayad (bass), Jay Donnellan (guitar) and the drumming pyrotechnics of George Suranovitch, proved to be the most stable line-up and lasted for two albums. Both records contained rare glimpses of Forever Changes, but ultimately they were bitter disappointments. False Start featured a few memorable moments, one being a guitar solo from Jimi Hendrix. Reel To Real is a truly wretched affair. The long-held opinion that Lee had become a casualty of too many chemicals was strengthened throughout the 70s, 80s and 90s with various stories chronicling his erratic and eccentric behaviour. In 1996 the latest rumours to surface were that Lee and former member Johnny Echols were working together again. Later that year it was confirmed that Lee now suffers from Parkinson's disease, followed by the astonishing news that he was awaiting a 12-year prison sentence for threatening behaviour with a firearm. Many attempts to resurrect his career have faltered, although any news of Lee is always greeted with enthusiasm. Like Brian Wilson, Syd Barrett, and Skip Spence he is another wayward genius who took one trip too many.

Love Affair

Originally formed in 1966, this London-based quintet comprised Steve Ellis (vocals), Morgan Fisher (keyboards), Rex Brayley (guitar), Mick Jackson (bass) and Maurice Bacon (drums). Although Ellis was barely 16 years old, the group performed frequently in clubs on a semi-professional basis. Fisher was briefly replaced by Lynton Guest and the following year Ellis, backed by session musicians, recorded a sparkling cover of Robert Knight's 'Everlasting Love' for CBS Records. By January 1968, the single unexpectedly hit number 1 in the UK and Love Affair became instant pop stars with Ellis' cherubic looks gracing teen magazines throughout the nation. With Bacon's father Sid overseeing the management, the group resisted the solicitations of more powerful entrepreneurs, yet failed to exploit their potential. Four more hits followed, 'Rainbow Valley', 'A Day Without Love', 'One Road' and 'Bringing On Back The Good Times', but by the end of the 60s the lead singer left to form his own group, Ellis, who released two albums for Epic Records (1972's Riding On The Crest Of A Slump and 1973's Why Not?). Ellis later sang with Widowmaker. Fisher reappeared in Mott The Hoople, Bacon became a music publisher and the group name was successively plundered for cabaret/revivalist bookings.

● ALBUMS: The Everlasting Love Affair (Columbia

- COMPILATIONS: Greatest Hits (1985)★★★, Everlasting Hits (1993)★★★, Everlasting Love (Columbia 1996)★★★.

Love And Money

After the break-up of the Glasgow band Friends Again in the mid-80s, guitarist James Grant formed the pop/funk-influenced Love And Money, taking with him erstwhile 'Friends', Paul McGeechan (keyboards) and Stuart Kerr (drums), plus Bobby Patterson (bass). The group was named after Grant's personal pledge as to what he wanted to achieve in the coming year. Since then, they have had a string of minor hit singles in the UK, starting with 'Candybar Express' (1986), released on the Mercury label, followed by the Fontana-issued 'Love And Money' (1987), 'Hallelujah Man' (1988), 'Strange Kind Of Love', 'Jocelyn Square' (both 1989) and 'Winter' (1991). Stuart Kerr left the group in 1987 and subsequently joined the Glasgow-based Texas. Love And Money recorded their second album as a trio. By the time of Dogs In The Traffic the line-up was bolstered by the addition of Douglas McIntyre (guitar, vocals) and Gordon Wilson (drums). Seemingly forever on the fringes of success, Love And Money were one of those bands which never achieved that vital major breakthrough. Grant released a strong solo set in 1998.

- ALBUMS: All You Need Is Love And Money (Mercury 1986)★★★, A Strange Kind Of Love (Fontana 1988)★★★, Dogs In The Traffic (Fontana 1991)★★★, Little Death (Iona 1994)★★★.

Solo: James Grant Sawdust In My Veins (Survival 1998)★★★.

Love And Rockets

This avant garde UK rock band formed at Christmas 1985 from the ashes of Bauhaus. When David Jay (aka David J) had finished working with the Jazz Butcher on the Sex And Travel and A Scandal In Bohemia albums, he linked up once more with old colleague Daniel Ash, who had been working with Tones On Tail. Kevin Haskins also came with Ash, forming the band's nucleus of David Jay (vocals, bass, keyboards), Daniel Ash (vocals, guitar, keyboards) and Haskins (drums, keyboards). Early singles included 'Kundiluni Express', concerning Tantric meditation, and a cover of the Temptations' 'Ball Of Confusion'. The band's debut, Seventh Dream Of Teenage Heaven, was a celebration of the rituals of youth, based loosely on their own experiences of going to rock concerts to see bands such as Roxy Music. Like all of the post-Bauhaus projects, the band have failed to cultivate a UK audience to rival their previous standing. However, they had a big hit single in the USA with the hard-rocking 'So Alive', where their work still sells moderately well. Both Ash and David J concentrated on their solo careers, before Love And Rockets returned with Hot Trip To Heaven, a bold, dance-oriented record. Following the Glittering Darkness EP, the band jettisoned the ambient dance approach for the Sweet F.A. album, which featured the moderately successful single, 'Sweet Lover Hangover'. The band were dropped by Beggars Banquet in 1997.

- ALBUMS: Seventh Dream Of Teenage Heaven (Beggars Banquet 1985)★★, Express (Beggars Banquet 1986)★★★, Earth Sun Moon (Beggars Banquet 1987)★★★, Love And Rockets (Beggars Banquet 1988)★★★, Hot Trip To Heaven (American 1994)★★★, Sweet F.A. (Beggars Banquet 1996)★★★.

Solo: David J Etiquette Of Violence (Situation Two 1983)★★, Crocodile Tears And The Velvet Cosh (Glass 1985)★★★, David J On Glass (Glass 1986)★★, Songs From Another Season (Beggars Banquet 1990)★★★, Urban Urbane (MCA 1992)★★★.

Love At First Sting - Scorpions

Youthful delusion persisted in an ageing Scorpions camp with what was a quite reckless, strutting declaration of an album. A party atmosphere prevailed throughout the entire record. The same English-as-a-second-language and identikit sexuality reigned, with such dumb gems as 'So give her inches, feed her well' ('Rock You Like A Hurricane') and 'Tie you up and you give it away' ('Bad Boys Running Wild'). However, it is the heartfelt exuberance of their delivery that carries the whole thing along so well. A grand execution much in the style of contemporaries Def Leppard, though without their deliberation or formality.

- Tracks: Bad Boys Running Wild; Rock You Like A Hurricane; I'm Leaving You; Coming Home; Same Thrill, The; Big City Nights; As Soon As The Good Times Roll; Crossfire; Still Loving You.
- First released 1984
- UK peak chart position: 17
- USA peak chart position: 6

Love Canal

Based in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, USA, Love Canal comprise Chad Phoebus (vocals), Stephen Carroll (guitar), George Fotiadis (bass) and Jody Martin (drums). Melding elements of 80s hard rock with its more alternative 90s variants, the group made its debut with two self-released EPs and several appearances on local Florida various artists compilations. One of these, a Rock The Vote compilation on Phisst Records that included their single 'Wormhold', led to Love Canal being signed permanently to that label. Their self-produced debut album, Embers, followed in the summer of 1995.

- ALBUMS: Embers (Phisst 1995)★★★.

Love Chronicles - Al Stewart

Al Stewart was part of the late 60s bedsitter folkies who went electric scene. John Martyn, Ralph McTell and Michael Chapman are others who spring to mind. Stewart was a credible songwriter with a hint of a camp lisp in his voice. Women loved it, men clearly felt threatened by it. Years before 'Year Of The Cat', Stewart recorded his mammoth track 'Love Chronicles', a sort of up-tempo 'Sad Eyed Lady Of The Lowlands'. Even better was the woeful tale of a young girl falling into prostitution through a series of unlucky circumstances - 'Old Compton Street Blues' is a superb song, well worth your attention as 'the circle it turns and turns and turns so mad little girl'.

- Tracks: In Brooklyn; Old Compton Street Blues; Ballad Of Mary Foster; Life And Life Only; You Should Have Listened To Al; Love Chronicles.
- First released 1969
- UK peak chart position: did not chart
- USA peak chart position: did not chart

Love City Groove

The UK's entrants in the 1995 Eurovision Song Contest, dance/rap collective Love City Groove originally entered the competition 'for a bit of a laugh'. Certainly their stylised but effusive distillation of the Stereo MC's formula proved an unexpected hit in the qualifying stages. Led by Beanz (b. Stephen Rudden), with fellow rappers Jay Williams, Paul Hardy and 'Reason', the song, a half rapped/half sung affair also titled 'Love City Groove', found favour in the UK charts. It also served to give the competition some unexpected credibility and became a staple of the UK's summer 1995 pop radio schedules. There was some controversy over the single in the press, however, when runners up Dear Jon argued that the single had already been released to club DJ's in January 1995 (though this did not infract standing rules). Speculating on its Eurovision chances, Jonathon King commented that the song would 'either win or come last'. It did neither, managing a respectable UK Top 5 placing. Prior to the group's Eurovision success the members had all been struggling fruitlessly as musicians, but now found the opportunity to record their debut album at London's Nomis Studios, with all of the group members contributing to the writing process.

- ALBUMS: Hard Times (Planet 1996)★★★.

Love Is The Thing - Nat 'King' Cole

Released in the days when albums were not promoted by extracting individual tracks and issuing them as singles, this was the first opportunity that young record-buyers had of hearing Nat 'King' Cole sing 'When I Fall In Love' and 'Stardust', songs with which he would forever be identified. Composer Hoagy Carmichael, who wrote 'Stardust' with Mitchell Parish, always maintained that this version, complete with the lovely verse, was his personal favourite. Of all the singer's varied albums - jazz, 'soft' country, easy listening - Love Is The Thing, which spent 55 weeks in the US Top 40, was the only one that went to number 1, where it stayed for eight weeks.

- Tracks: When I Fall In Love; The End Of A Love Affair; Stardust; Stay As Sweet As You Are; Where Can I Go Without You; Maybe It's Because I Love You Too Much; Love Letters; Ain't Misbehavin'; I Thought About Marie; At Last; It's All In The Game; When Sunny Gets Blue; Love Is The Thing.
- First released 1957
- UK peak chart position: did not chart
- USA peak chart position: 1

Love Life

A most unusual show, with music by Kurt Weill, and a book and lyrics by Alan Jay Lerner, Love Life opened at the 46th Street Theatre in New York on 7 October 1948 - just 18 months after Brigadoon, the author's first big Broadway success with Frederick Loewe. Contrasting sharply with Kiss Me, Kate, and South Pacific, which both made their debut in the same season, this unconventional show deals with a fantasy situation in which a married couple, Sam and Susan Cooper (Nanette Fabray and Ray Middleton) with their two children, reflect on their lives from the year 1791 until the present day - initially a happy, satisfying relationship, which declines into a pointless cynical arrangement - but without the protagonists aging at all. The individual scenes are linked by vaudeville acts, and no attempt is made to integrate the songs into the plot, such as it is - rather, they provide a commentary on the action that is taking place on the stage. Fabray had 'Green-Up Time' and 'Here I'll Stay' (which became a hit for Jo Stafford), and she won the 1949 Tony Award for best actress in a musical. The rest of the score included 'Progress', 'Economics', 'Mr. Right', and 'I Remember It Well', a title that Lerner remembered well enough to use it again in the Oscar-winning film, Gigi, in 1958. Considering the style and tone of the piece, a run of 252 performances seems to have been a reasonable outcome. In 1996, Weill and Lerner's 'vaudeville' received its 'first production outside the USA for 48 years'. The occasion was the show's European premiere at the Grand Theatre Leeds. Caroline Gawn directed an Opera North staging which starred Margaret Preece (Susan) and Alan Oke (Sam), with Geoffrey Dolton in the role of the Cabaret-style MC.

Love Me

This Australian duo, built around a creative core of Tom Kristensen (guitar) and Madeleine King (vocals), formed in 1995 after both partners had experienced varying degrees of success in other bands. As Kristensen told the press, 'We were sitting in our lounge playing songs together when a friend suggested we should get out and do them in public.' Writing principally in a melodic country blues vein, the group signed to MDS Records. In addition to Kristensen and King, the group features three other members, with each participant playing at least three different instruments. This has helped lend Kristensen's songs a crisp, eclectic sound quite unlike anything in their genre. Their self-titled debut album, produced by You Am I guitarist Tim Rogers, was voted album of the year by many Australian roots music critics.

- ALBUMS: Love Me (MDS 1996)★★★★.

Love Me Forever - Carlton And His Shoes

One of the purest recordings ever to grace vinyl, Carlton Manning's Carlton And His Shoes (the Shoes comprised brothers Donald and Lynford Manning) provided one of reggae music's most popular (and versioned) songs ever, 'Love Me Forever', which was originally released on Coxsone Dodd's Supreme label. The b-side, 'Happy Land', formed the basis of the Abyssinians' anthem, 'Satta Masa Gana', another key work in the history of Jamaican music. Their rocksteady-into-reggae hits are here, and although they never repeated the success of 'Love Me Forever', they continued to record throughout the 70s, and almost all of their output for Studio One is here. The album is a beauty and the heart-rending purity of 'Never Give Your Heart Away' still tears apart the listener. Underrated and under-recorded, they remain a legendary outfit.

- Tracks: Love Me Forever; Never Give Your Heart Away; Love Is All; Sincerely Yours; Just Me; This Feeling; I've Got Soul; Love To Share; Me And You; Forward Jerusalem.
- First released 1978
- UK peak chart position: did not chart
- USA peak chart position: did not chart

Love Me Or Leave Me

This realistic biopic of the popular 20s and 30s torch singer Ruth Etting was produced by Joe Pasternak for MGM in 1955. Daniel Fuchs won an Oscar for his original story which he and Isobel Lennart adapted for the absorbing screenplay. Doris Day shrugged off her 'goody-goody' image and gave a fine performance as the singer whose dramatic rise from dancehall hostess to nightclub and Ziegfeld star was masterminded by her gangster husband Martin 'Moe the Gimp' Snyder. James Cagney was outstanding as the domineering Snyder, whose response to his wife's relationship with her pianist (Cameron Mitchell) is to shoot him. Although cinematic convention (and box office returns) required a happy ending, there was enough reality left to make this a distinctive film. Most of the songs were authentic Etting favourites, and included 'Ten Cents A Dance' (Richard Rodgers-Lorenz Hart), 'Shaking The Blues Away' (Irving Berlin), 'It All Depends On You' (De Sylva, Brown And Henderson), 'You Made Me Love You' (Jimmy Monaco-Joseph McCarthy), 'Everybody Loves My Baby' (Jack Palmer-Spencer Williams), 'Mean To Me' (Roy Turk-Fred Ahlert), 'Sam The Old Accordion Man' (Walter Donaldson), 'My Blue Heaven' (Donaldson-George Whiting), 'At Sundown' (Donaldson) and the singer's theme song, 'Love Me Or Leave Me' (Donaldson-Gus Kahn). One of the new songs, 'I'll Never Stop Loving You', which was written by Nicholas Brodszky and Sammy Cahn, became a US Top 20 record hit for Doris Day. The strong supporting cast featured Robert Keith, Tom Tully, Harry Bellaver, Claude Stroud, Richard Gaines, Peter Leeds and Audrey Young. Alex Romero was the choreographer and Charles Vidor directed this popular, and sometimes intriguing, film that grossed over $4 million in the USA alone.

Love Me Tender

Elvis Presley's first feature, released in 1956, cast the singer as one of three brothers who rob a bank. Strife over a share of the spoils is compounded by conflicting love interests, culminating with the Presley character's slaying, although he appears as a wraith in the final reel. Although cast as a miscreant, the singer had opted for a more conservatively styled film, a western, rather than embracing contemporary teen subcultures in the manner of Rebel Without A Cause. Indeed, he did not enjoy top billing - Richard Egan was the star - but interest naturally focused on Presley's performance. Critics were generally impressed, citing great potential, something tossed to the wind by much of the singer's subsequent film output. Although not a musical, the film's mournful title track gave the singer his third US chart-topper and Love Me Tender also featured the well-known 'weepie' 'Old Shep'. Again, by avoiding 'controversial' musical content, the Presley industry showed that, even at this early stage, a wider audience was being courted.

Love Me Tonight

This stylishly adventurous musical which was released by Paramount in 1932, bore many of the hallmarks of Ernst Lubitsch. However, it was, in fact, superbly directed by Rouben Mamoulian whose innovative work on dramatic films such as Applause, City Streets and Dr. Jekyll And Mr. Hyde, had already marked him out as a master of the medium. The sometimes risqué and satirical screenplay, by Samuel Hoffenstein, Waldemar Young, and George Marion Jnr., was set in France where a simple tailor (Maurice Chevalier) is passed off as a baron by the Vicomte de Vareze (Charlie Ruggles) who owes him a great deal of money. Chevalier is eventually paid in full and also wins the hand of Princess Jeanette (Jeanette MacDonald). The film is brimful of memorable scenes, such as in the early moments when the city of Paris rouses itself from sleep, and especially the sequence in which one song, 'Isn't It Romantic?', is used to transport the action from place to place - a technique which was, at the time, entirely original. The lyric for that song was inextricably linked to the film's story, referring as it did to Chevalier's occupation as a 'tailor', and its composers, Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, wrote a new set of words for the number's wider publication. Their score also contained another enduring standard, 'Lover', which was introduced by Jeanette MacDonald, and she had 'The Son Of A Gun Is Nothing But A Tailor', as well as duetting with Chevalier and others on 'A Woman Needs Something Like That', 'Love Me Tonight', and 'Song Of Paree'. Chevalier was his charming self on 'The Poor Apache', and, especially, 'Mimi'. Also among the cast were Charles Butterworth, Myrna Loy, C. Aubrey Smith, Elizabeth Patterson, and George 'Gabby' Hayes, who would eventually become a respected character actor in Western movies. Love Me Tonight, which is regarded by film buffs all over the world as one of the most perfect and important films in the history of the cinema, was photographed by Victor Milner and produced, as well as directed, by Rouben Mamoulian.

Love Parade, The

Sometimes called 'the first truly cinematic screen musical in America', The Love Parade was released by Paramount in 1929. Jeanette MacDonald, who was making her screen debut, co-starred with Maurice Chevalier in Ernest Vajda and Guy Bolton's adaptation of the French play, Le Prince Consort. The somewhat bawdy story concerned the Queen of Sylvania (Macdonald), who, having heard on the royal grapevine that her emissary-at-large, Count Alfred (Chevalier), is engaging in the wrong kind of foreign affairs, recalls him so that he can devote more of his energies to her. After he has measured up to her exacting standards, they marry, although her domination extends to the marriage certificate which reads 'wife and man'. Among the rest of the cast were British comedian Lupino Lane, Lillian Roth, Edgar Norton, Lionel Belmore, Virginia Bruce, and Jean Harlow. The score was written by Victor Schertzinger (music) and Clifford Grey (lyrics), and included 'Paris, Stay The Same', 'Dream Lover', 'Nobody's Using It Now', 'The Queen Is Always Right', 'March Of The Grenadiers', and 'Let's Be Common'. Chevalier and MacDonald excelled on 'Anything To Please The Queen' and 'My Love Parade', and the combination of the jaunty boulevardier and the unsophisticated, shrill soprano helped The Love Parade to become an enormous box-office winner. Much of the film's success was due to the innovative direction of Ernst Lubitsch, whose lavish settings, and consummate skill in the seamless blending of music, dialogue and action is constantly admired.

Love Sculpture

Having recorded as the Human Beans, Dave Edmunds (b. 15 April 1944, Cardiff, South Glamorgan, Wales; guitar) and John Williams (bass) formed Love Sculpture in 1967 with Bob 'Congos' Jones (drums). This Cardiff-based trio enjoyed modest airplay with their debut single, 'River To Another Day', before a rousing interpretation of Aram Khachaturian's 'Sabre Dance', initially aired as a radio session by BBC disc jockey John Peel, became a surprising hit single. Its success bestowed a novelty tag on a group already hampered by a lack of musical direction and although their debut album offered worthy blues interpretations, the psychedelic tinges on a second set were somewhat anachronistic. This impasse led to a split in the original line-up and Mickey Gee (bass) and Terry Williams (drums, later of Man and Dire Straits) joined the guitarist for a final flourish. Edmunds then disbanded the group and embarked on a solo career.

Love Spit Love

Formed by singer Richard Butler in the aftermath of Psychedelic Furs' demise, Love Spit Love were officially founded in 1992. Butler teamed up with guitarist Richard Fortus (ex-Pale Divine, who formerly opened for the Psychedelic Furs on tour), drummer Frank Ferrer and Butler's brother Tim, also ex-Furs, on bass. They recorded their self-titled debut for Imago Records in 1994. It was produced by Dave Jerden, and owed something of a stylistic debt to another band with whom he had worked, Jane's Addiction. However, partly owing to conflict with their record label and lack of promotional push (and generally lukewarm reviews), the album failed commercially. Tim Butler then left to form Feed, and was replaced by Chris Wilson. Disillusioned, the group looked for another contract, and found a sympathetic ear in Maverick Records' Guy Oseary. The release of the group's second album, Trysome Eatone, came at a time when the Psychedelic Furs' legacy was undergoing something of a renaissance (their material having been covered by Live, Counting Crows and Elvis Costello), culminating in the release of a new anthology. However, Butler's new compositions for Love Spit Love, notably 'Little Fist' and 'Long Long Time', were the equal of his best mid-80s work and deserved to be heard by a wider audience than the purely nostalgic.

Love To Infinity

UK garage production duo comprising the brothers Andrew and Peter Lee, who have been working together since the late 80s. Both were trained in classical music, while their modern work recalls the heyday of disco, with strings, diva vocals and uptempo rhythms. Peter is responsible for programming, while Andrew acts as engineer. In addition to remixing for the Other Two, Melanie Williams, D:Ream and Grace Jones, they have also worked as a band in their own right, notably with Bruce Forest in 1990. They co-wrote with Boy George, and released their own album in Japan. They also released a 12-inch for Big Life, before eking out a living with engineering work for Sub Sub and the Mock Turtles. They returned to their own recording work in the early-90s, alongside vocalist Louise Bailey, on singles like 'Somethin' Outta Nothin'' for Pigeon Pie.

Love Unlimited

Formed in 1969 in San Pedro, California, USA, under the aegis of singer/producer Barry White, the group consisted of Diane Taylor, Linda James and her sister

Glodean James, who married White on 4 July 1974. The trio had an early hit with 'Walkin' In The Rain With The One I Love' (1972), an imaginatively arranged performance which married contemporary soul to the aura of the now-passed girl-group genre, reminiscent of the Shangri-Las. Love Unlimited's later releases included 'It May Be Winter Outside (But In My Heart It's Spring)' (1973) and 'Under The Influence Of Love' (1974), both of which White had previously recorded with Felice Taylor. The care the producer lavished on such releases equalled that of his own, but despite further R&B hits, 'I Belong To You' (1974) was the trio's final US pop chart entry.

Love Unlimited Orchestra

This 40-piece orchestra was pieced together by singer Barry White to back his girl trio protégées, Love Unlimited. The unit also supplied the silky backing to several of White's singles and enjoyed an international hit in 1974 in their own right with 'Love Theme'. Later releases, including 'Rhapsody In White' and 'Satin Soul', were less successful, although they did provide the theme song to the Dino DeLaurentis remake of King Kong (1977). One member, saxophonist Kenny G, later embarked on a solo career.

Love, Clayton

b. 15 November 1927, Mattson, Mississippi, USA. While studying as a medical student at Alcorn, Love formed the Shufflers with some of his fellow students, including Jesse Flowers and Henry Reed, to play clubs and colleges around Vicksburg. His cousin, Earl Reed, had a big band which had recorded for Trumpet Records in Jackson. With his encouragement, Love contacted Lillian McMurray and a session was arranged. 'Shufflin' With Love', released in 1951, was a ragged imitation of bands led by Louis Jordan and Roy Milton that toured the south. Other records, for Aladdin, Modern and Groove, followed over the next years. By then, he had met up with Ike Turner, a childhood friend from his Clarksdale days. Turner's band, the Kings Of Rhythm, was based in St. Louis and in 1957, with Love as their lead vocalist, the band recorded three singles for Federal, including the regional hit 'The Big Question'. He then joined pianist Roosevelt Marks' group and sang on two singles for Bobbin. Love became a full-time teacher in the 60s and only resumed a musical career on his retirement. In 1990, along with fellow pianists Johnnie Johnson and Jimmy Vaughn, he recorded four titles for Rockin' Eighty-Eights, including a remake of 'The Big Question' and Fats Domino's 'Goin' Home'.

Love, Darlene

b. Darlene Wright, 26 July 1938, Los Angeles, California, USA. A prolific vocalist, Love began her career in 1957 as a founder-member of the Blossoms. This influential girl-group not only enjoyed an extensive recording career in its own right, but also appeared on scores of sessions and as the resident singers on US television's Shindig. Love also enjoyed a fruitful association with producer Phil Spector, and sang lead vocals on the Crystals' 'He's A Rebel' and 'Zip-A-Dee-Doo-Dah' by Bob B. Soxx And The Blue Jeans. Love completed six singles in her own right for Spector's Philles label, including 'Christmas (Baby Come Home)', '(Today I Met) The Boy I'm Gonna Marry' and 'Wait Til' My Bobby Gets Home', the latter reaching the US Top 30 in 1963. Love subsequently pursued her solo career on a variety of outlets before being reunited with Spector in 1977 for 'Lord, If You're A Woman'. She continued her demanding session-singer schedule and in the 80s branched into acting with film roles in Lethal Weapon and Lethal Weapon 2, as well as the Royal Shakespeare Company's co-production of Stephen King's horror-novel Carrie. In 1990, Love completed the long-awaited Paint Another Picture, before touring the USA as a back-up vocalist for Cher. Together with Marianne Faithfull and Merry Clayton she performed a female vocal cabaret as '20th Century Pop' in 1996. In March 1997 she was awarded considerable back-royalties for singing on a number of Spector's records, claiming that she was not rewarded financially because she did not have any formal contract.

Love, Geoff

b. 4 September 1917, Todmorden, Yorkshire, England, d. 8 July 1991, London, England. Love was a musical director, arranger, composer and one of the UK's most popular easy-listening music personalities. His father, Kid Love, was World Champion sand dancer, and came to the UK from the USA. Geoff Love learned to play the trombone in his local brass band and made his first broadcast in 1937 on Radio Normandy. He moved to the south of England, and played with violinist Jan Ralfini's Dance Orchestra in London and with the Alan Green Band in Hastings. After six years in the army during World War II, he joined Harry Gold's Pieces Of Eight in 1946, and stayed with them until 1949, providing the vocal on their successful record, 'Blue Ribbon Gal'. In 1955, Love formed his own band for the television show On The Town, and soon afterwards started recording for EMI/Columbia with his Orchestra and Concert Orchestra. He had his first hit in 1958, with a cover-version of Perez Prado's cha-cha-cha 'Patricia', and made several albums including Enchanted Evenings, Our Very Own and Thanks For The Memory (Academy Award Winning Songs). In 1959, Love started to release some recordings under the pseudonym, Manuel And His Music Of The Mountains, which proved be immensly successful. Besides his own orchestral records, Love provided the accompaniment and arrangements on record, and in concert, for many popular artists such as Connie Francis, Russ Conway, Paul Robeson, Judy Garland, Frankie Vaughan, Johnny Mathis, Des O'Connor, Ken Dodd, Marlene Dietrich and Gracie Fields. In the 70s, he formed yet another group, Billy's Banjo Band, later known as Geoff Love's Banjo Band, while still having hits under his own name with Big War Themes, Big Western Movie Themes and Big Love Movie Themes. He also capitalized on the late 70s dance fad with several volumes of Geoff Love's Big Disco Sound, while retaining his more conservative image with Waltzes With Love and Tangos With Love. He was consistently popular on radio, and on television, where, besides conducting the orchestra, he was especially effective as a comic foil to Max Bygraves on his Singalongamax, and similar series. Love's compositions range from the Latin-styled 'La Rosa Negra' to the theme for the hit television situation comedy, Bless This House. His prolific album output included mostly film or television themes. His son Adrian, is a well-known and popular radio broacaster.

Love, Laura

b. 1960, Omaha, Nebraska, USA. Singer-songwriter Laura Love was born to mixed-race parents in Omaha, the daughter of Preston Love (sideman to Count Basie, Lucky Millinder and Johnny Otis) though she did not meet her father until she was 16. Preston also led his own band which at various times included Love's mother Winnie Winston as lead vocalist. However, Winston suffered from depression and was frequently institutionalised, meaning Love and her sister spent much of their youth in foster homes and orphanages. Her first group was the US blues-grunge band Boom GI. During her time with them she was accused of singing misogynist and racist lyrics by a writer for Rolling Stone. Love took Gillian Garr's words to heart and enrolled at the University of Washington to study race, gender and psychology. As a direct consequence of those courses, she began writing her own lyrics and formed her own band, a three-piece led by Love on bass and vocals. By now her musical influences had also changed, drawing on the Celtic muse of Four Men And A Dog and the Pogues as well as African artists such as Ladysmith Black Mambazo and Miriam Makeba. There were also more native influences. 'Somehow or other it got all mixed up, jumbled through hearing bluegrass and Appalachian music', she told Folk Roots magazine in 1996. The bluegrass influence came predominantly from Jo Miller of Ranch Romance, the Seattle group who share Love's management. The two mutually admiring artists teamed up to record Jo Miller And Laura Love Sing Bluegrass And Old-Time Music in 1996. Previously Love had recorded three solo collections for her own Octoroon Biography label, Z Therapy (1990), Pangaea (1992) and Helvetica Bold (1994). She also appeared on Purumayo World Music Records I'm A Givin' Way On Shelter: The Best Of Contemporary Singer-Songwriters. This placed her alongside such artists as Mary-Chapin Carpenter, Nanci Griffith and Shawn Colvin, with whom she also shared a stage at New York's Carnegie Hall.

Love, M'Pongo

b. M'Pongo Landu, 5 June 1956, Kinshasa, Zaire, d. 1989. Crippled by polio as a young child, but, determined to become a professional vocalist, Love overcame her disability and began working at the nightclubs in the Zairean capital of Kinshasa in her mid-teens. By the mid-70s she was known throughout the country as La Voix Du Zaire, and in 1977 was invited to represent her country at the pan-African arts and culture festival, FESTAC, in Lagos, Nigeria, where she appeared alongside OK Jazz. She released her first album, L'Afrique Dance, the same year. On the 1980 set La Voix Du Zaire she was accompanied by a galaxy of stars including Jules Kamga, Vicky Edimo and Eko Roosevelt - some of whom were also featured on the follow-up Femme Commercante. In 1984, she drafted in Les Quatre Etoiles' Bopol and Wuta May for the superb Basongeur. Later that year, she toured widely in Europe, supporting fund-raising activities for the International Year Of The Child. She died unexpectedly in 1989, following the release of the critically-acclaimed Partager.

Love, Monie

b. Simone Johnson, 2 July 1970, Battersea, London, England. Monie Love is a female rapper who has lived in New York since 1989. Her first recordings were with childhood friend MC Mell 'O', Sparki and DJ Pogo, under the banner Jus Bad Productions, who formed in 1987. They released a solitary single 'Freestyle'. Love started recording solo with DJ Pogo in 1988, releasing 12-inch singles on obscure underground labels which were eventually spotted by DJ Tim Westwood, who asked them to do a single for his Justice label. There were several delays in releasing it, so instead they approached Cooltempo with 'I Can Do This', which became a hit in early 1989. Love has since worked with many other rap groups including the Jungle Brothers, who she met at a London gig in September 1988. They subsequently introduced her to the Native Tongues Posse, while Afrika Baby Bambaataa would produce her debut album. There have also been collaborations with Andy Cox and David Steele of the Fine Young Cannibals on the summer 1990 single 'Monie In The Middle', and with the band True Image, who are best known for performing the theme to the Cosby Show. They featured on Monie's Christmas 1990 single, 'Down To Earth'. Previous hits included 'I Can Do This', 'Grandpa's Party' (a tribute to the original Afrika Bambaataa), and her biggest hit, the Spinners' cover - 'It's A Shame (My Sister)'. In 1991 she teamed up with Adeva, as well as working with Queen Latifah and Almond Joy on the Bold Soul Sisters feminist project. Tracks on her debut album like 'RU Single' were intelligent attacks on the expectations and stereotypes of black women. Despite maturity beyond her years, she recognised that this phase of her career was still an apprenticeship; 'To me, rap is a school. The heads are split between Public Enemy and KRS-1's Boogie Down Productions. The students are me, Jungle Brothers, De La Soul... but the best thing about it is that the classroom is open to all'. She would go on to appear in Forest Whittaker's Harlem film, Strapped.

Love, Preston

b. 26 April 1921, Omaha, Nabraska, USA. He inherited an alto saxophone from his older brother 'Dude' and obtained his first professional job in 1940, after which he took lessons from Illinois Jacquet's brother Julius. Inspired further by Count Basie's Earle Warren, Love played with Lloyd Hunter, Nat Towles and Snub Mosely before replacing Warren in Basie's band briefly in 1943. He worked with Lucky Millinder in 1944 and rejoined Basie for a longer spell from 1945-47, after which he played on-and-off in the band of his friend, Johnny Otis. Love also led his own orchestra (recording for his own Spin label and Federal Records) until 1962. Moving to California in 1962, he became a top session-player until he joined Ray Charles' band in 1966, going on to become the west coast house bandleader at Motown. Today, he lectures in African-American music at colleges and writes for local newspapers while maintaining a healthy touring schedule, including frequent trips to Europe.

Love, Willie

b. 4 November 1906, Duncan, Mississippi, USA, d. 19 August 1953, Jackson, Mississippi, USA. A musician from an early age, Love's career was spent almost entirely in and around the Mississippi Delta country. In the 40s and 50s, he was a regular performer on the famous radio show King Biscuit Time, but his music is known now only because of a handful of records issued on the Trumpet label in the mid-50s. These are tough, down-home blues, on which he demonstrated considerable proficiency on the piano, as well as an effective singing voice. 'Nelson Street Blues', in which he describes the street of that name in Greenville, Mississippi, is particularly notable for its strong and fascinating evocation of time and place. Among his accompanists were Elmore James, Little Milton and Joe Willie Wilkins.

Love/Hate

This Los Angeles, California-based quartet, formerly known as Data Clan, originally comprised Jizzy Pearl (lead vocals), Jon E. Love (guitar), Skid Rose (bass) and Joey Gold (drums). Proudly dubbing themselves the 'stoopidest band in the world', the new name was first invoked in 1986. With a streetwise attitude and a highly talented frontman, their debut album, produced by Tom Werman, was released to widespread critical acclaim. A hybrid of Guns N'Roses and Mötley Crüe, their songs dealt with the well-worn themes of sex, drugs, drink and rock 'n' roll. It was in a live setting that the band truly excelled, however, playing with genuine commitment and generating real intensity with their brand of funk-infused, jitterbug rock. The visual spectacle of a cross constructed from empty Budwiser cans also appealed. Wasted In America confirmed their fans' faith in them and recruited many new converts, but nevertheless saw them dropped by Columbia. They regrouped for Let's Rumble, with Love replaced by Darren Housholder, but by this point some of the earlier momentum, if not their native talent, had dispersed. I'm Not Happy was a prophetic title, with the band bereft of any new chords.

Lovebug Starski

b. Kevin Smith, 13 July 1961, New York, USA. One of the pioneering forefathers of hip-hop culture, Starski has seen commerce move rap away from what he originally envisioned. Still remembering the days in the Black Spades when 'we used to push refrigerator-size speakers through the blocks', his role in the developmental parties was pivotal. At the age of 13 he began spinning records on the playground of the Forrest Housing Project (at which time he also adopted his stage name, from the popular television show Starsky & Hutch). The modus operandi would be to set up two turntables in the South Bronx parks, or mix live at parties. He was among the first to begin 'rapping' over the records he played. Although technically too young, Starski would sneak into a West Bronx club, 371, where his friends DJ Hollywood and Peter 'DJ' Jones worked, initially under the guise of roadie. From there his reputation brought him prestige placements at upmarket venues like Dancetaria and Stardust Ballroom, before eventually being offered a residency at Disco Fever - rap's first proper home. In 1981, he released his first single, 'Positive Life', followed by 'Funky Pledge', a typical Lovebug message rap preaching the virtues of education, responsibility and self-respect. By 1983, with hip-hop showing signs of moving overground, Starksi cut his first proper record deal with Fever Records, owned by Sal Abatiello, the manager of Disco Fever. 'You Gotta Believe', on which he collaborated with producer Larry Smith (Whodini etc) would go on to sell nearly a million copies. It also became the theme for WABC-television's Big Break Dance Contest. It was followed by the masterful 'Do The Right Thing' (produced by Kurtis Blow) and the title theme for the movie, Rappin'. In 1986 he enjoyed crossover hits with 'House Rocker' and 'Amityville'. For a period in the mid-80s it looked as though Starski would truly break through, signing an album deal with Epic. Unfortunately, the resulting record sunk without trace, and Starski became another hip-hop pioneer to fall by the wayside. He slid into cocaine dependency and returned to the streets until he was busted for possession in 1987. He was finally released in December 1991. He returned, fittingly, to his old haunt, Disco Fever.

Loved Ones

Formed in Melbourne, Australia in 1965. The raucous Gerry Humphries was the vocal and focal point of this group, and with a good-time band behind him the Loved Ones had success in the Australian charts with their first two singles 'The Loved One' and 'Everlovin' Man'. The five-piece band, which also comprised Rob Lovett (guitar), Ian Clyne (piano), Kim Lynch (bass) and Gavin Anderson (drums), was formed by musicians from traditional jazz bands including the successful Red Onion Jazz Band. It was probably this jazz background which gave the group a more distinctive sound than that of many in the post-Beatles beat groups explosion. An EP and two more singles were successful and then in 1967 an album was released. This album has proven to be something of an evergreen, being released several times and still being available today. The band petered out by the year's end and Humphries moved into management. Humphries re-formed the band in 1972, as the Joy Band and managed briefly to recapture the atmosphere of the original band. Despite Humphries' inconsistency, on a good night he could enthrall a rowdy public hotel audience in a fashion that few of his contemporaries could match. Many critics regard the Loved Ones as Australia's finest 60s band surpassed only by the Easybeats.

Lovedrive - Scorpions

The Scorpions' unruly history of album artwork continued with the cover of this album. Gone was the implied fellatio with a Doberman pinscher, or the naked photograph of a pre-pubescent girl; Lovedrive featured a couple seated in the back of a car, the man's hand pulling what looked like a yard of bubble gum from the woman's right breast. Thankfully not a concept album, Lovedrive's musical content was not, unlike its cover, left wanting. Their ramshackle, if faint-hearted, misogyny was still intact, but their musical elegance - 'Coast To Coast', 'Always Somewhere', 'Loving You Sunday Morning' - still shone brilliantly through.

Loveless - My Bloody Valentine

'The last word in noise-pop' was how this release was reviewed on release in 1991, but that is a somewhat simplistic response. Creation Records must have been relieved, having invested some £200,000 over three years indulging their notoriously workshy recluses. The results are well worth the price, at least in artistic terms. Eighteen sound engineers are credited on the LP sleeve and the group's huge, luminous soundscapes now involved everything from guitars to bagpipes. At one turn the Jesus And Mary Chain, at others Philip Glass or the Beach Boys, Loveless is a colossal achievement, and by necessity one constructed by the most ambitious studio band of their generation.

Loveless, Patty

b. Patricia Ramey, 4 January 1957, Pikeville, Kentucky, USA. The youngest of eight children, she began to write songs and sing in local venues with her brother Roger, after the family relocated to Louisville. When she was 14 years old they visited Nashville, where her singing and songwriting so impressed the Wilburn Brothers (although they felt she was not mature enough to record), that they offered her the opportunity to work on their shows. She combined singing and schooling, but in 1973, after marrying Terry Lovelace, who played drums with the Wilburns, she relocated to North Carolina, and for a time, finding the current country music did not suit her more traditional preferences, she left the music scene. During this time her marriage ended and a second marriage to a rock musician also floundered in the mid-80s, seemingly because he told her to give up country. Eventually, she resumed her singing career (even singing some rock 'n' roll in local clubs) and, using the name Loveless to avoid being confused with porn actress Linda Lovelace, she moved to Nashville in 1985. She became a staff writer at Acuff-Rose and her brother Roger (acting as her manager) persuaded his friend Emory Gordy Jnr., a producer and musician at MCA, to record her. She made her chart debut in 1985 with 'Lonely Days, Lonely Nights' and her career was firmly established by her debut album, Patty Loveless, in 1987. In 1988, she had her first Top 10 successes with 'If My Heart Had Windows', which George Jones had first charted 21 years earlier, and her version of Steve Earle's 'A Little Bit Of Love'. Loveless established herself with UK audiences by her fine performances at the 1987 and 1988 Wembley Festivals. She became a member of the Grand Ole Opry in 1988 and in 1989, she married Emory Gordy Jnr. She continued to record chart-making songs, enjoying number 1s with 'Timber, I'm Falling In Love' and 'Chains'. In 1992, she recorded a successful duet, 'Send A Message To My Heart', with Dwight Yoakam. Also late in 1992, she underwent surgery for a leaking blood vessel on her vocal cords, and in spite of some initial concern, she soon recovered. Believing that it was time to make some changes, she reluctantly dispensed with her brother's management and moved to the Epic label. She is quoted as saying, 'The goal was to find a real good style and just have a lot of fun with it'. She quickly gained a number 1 country hit, 'Blame It On Your Heart', which also nudged the pop charts. There seems little doubt that her vocal stylings will see her achieve continued success. Indeed, her 1995 hit, 'Here I Am', reinforced her approach; adhering to her belief in hard country music, she says, 'You're gonna hear that old bluegrass style, those blues licks when I sing. It's who I am - and I can't leave that behind. What we sang growing up was more old mountain style music, white man's blues, and that'll always be in there'. Although she never mentioned the fact when she was struggling to make her name, she is actually a cousin of Loretta Lynn, Crystal Gayle, Peggy Sue and Jay Lee Webb. Cousin Loretta finally broke the news one day on live television. A further number 1 came in March 1996 with 'You Can Feel Bad'. Loveless was voted Best Female Vocalist at the 1997 CMA awards.

Lovelites

An R&B female group from Chicago, Illinois, USA. The Lovelites epitomized a Chicago approach to soul music that married teenage voices to bright-sounding horn arrangements and mid-tempos. The architect of the group was Patti Hamilton, who was the principal songwriter and whose emotive lead voice helped immeasurably ensure the success of the Lovelites. She formed the original group in 1967, with herself, her sister Rozena Petty, and Barbara Peterman. Ardell McDaniel replaced Peterman in 1968, who in turn was replaced by Rhonda Grayson in 1971. Petty was replaced by Joni Berlmon in 1970. The trio had two magnificent hits, 'How Can I Tell My Mom And Dad' (number 15 R&B) from 1969, and 'My Conscience' (number 36 R&B) from 1971. Their one album, With Love From The Lovelites, only yielded one national hit, yet was loaded with fine songs that were frequently played in many locales. The group broke up in 1973.

Lovens, Paul

b. 6 June 1949, Aachen, Germany. Self-taught Lovens grew up listening to his sister's Elvis Presley records and BFR hit parades. While at school he played drums in dixieland and dance groups. His earliest jazz influences included Chris Barber, Art Blakey and Thelonious Monk. In 1969, he met German improvisers Manfred Schoof and Alexander von Schlippenbach. Thereafter, he established himself as one of the leading percussionists in improvised music. Lovens has toured worldwide, making numerous collaborations and recordings; most notably with Schlippenbach's trio, quartet and Globe Unity Orchestra, and duos with Paul Lytton, Toshinori Kondo, Urs Voerkel and the influential pianist, Cecil Taylor. In 1976, he founded the Po Torch label with Lytton. His playing is likely to veer, without a moment's notice, from unrestrained tumult to the most delicate use of a horsehair bow drawn across tiny cymbals.

Lover Speaks, The

This acoustic duo featuring David Freeman (vocals/lyrics) and Joseph Hughes (various instruments) rose to prominence by supporting the Eurythmics in 1986 at a series of large arenas, after they had been 'discovered' by Dave Stewart on an early demo. He played this demo tape to producer Jimmy Iovine, who was in London recording material with the Pretenders. The result was a debut album and the single 'No More I Love You's', although other singles 'Terrible Dancing', 'Every Lover's Sign' and 1987's 'I Close My Eyes And Count To Ten' failed to match that song's impact. The future for the band seemed bright with dates lined up to work with Alison Moyet on album tracks and production work with Maria Vidal and others. However, the partnership dissolved soon after. While Hughes gave up the music business in favour of carpentry, Freeman continued to write songs at Dave Stewart's studio, recording some ten album's worth of material. However, with one or two exceptions these compositions remained unreleased. In 1991 he did release Balance, a 1,000-copy pressing credited to Free-Man-Creese. A cassette credited to The Lover Speaks, but actually solely the work of Freeman, titled Under A Tall Tree, was also given a limited (500 copy) release. However, with Annie Lennox reaching number 2 in 1995 with a cover version of 'No More I Love You's', the group was once again the subject of some interest. Freeman used the resultant publicity to search for a major recording contract and pieced together a 'greatest hits' selection from his unissued archive recordings.

Loverboy

Loverboy were formed in Toronto, Canada, in 1980, by Mike Reno (vocals), Paul Dean (guitar), Doug Johnston (keyboards), Scott Smith (bass) and Matthew Frenette (drums). Reno was formerly with Moxy, and Dean and Frenette had been members of Sweetheart, a melodic AOR/heavy rock band. With this pedigree, Loverboy were signed by CBS Records as soon as they were formed. Producer Bruce Fairbairn helped them to record a self-titled album that was to set Loverboy's standard for years to come. It was an American-styled melodic hard rock collection that also dipped into reggae and jazz moods. With the hit singles 'Turn Me Loose' and 'The Kid Is Hot Tonite', Loverboy went platinum. After touring, the group re-entered the studio in 1981, with Fairbairn again producing, to record the follow-up, Get Lucky. The album lived up to its name by selling over two million copies, helped by the singles chart progress of 'Working For The Weekend'. The only territory where the band had failed to take off was Europe. After further touring Fairbairn produced the multi-platinum Keep It Up in 1983, from which 'Hot Girls In Love' charted. Loverboy's inviting blend of melodic AOR had been honed to a fine art, the album's success keeping the band on the road for nearly two years. On Lovin' Every Minute Of It they were joined by Tom Allom, best known for his work with Judas Priest. The result was a musically tougher album that proved to be the band's least successful, though it still sold well over a million copies. The title track, released as a single, was written by Def Leppard producer Robert John 'Mutt' Lange. Fairbairn had by now made his name as the producer of Bon Jovi, but returned to the helm for Loverboy's Wildside, released in 1987, and their most complete album to date. Bryan Adams, Richie Sambora and Jon Bon Jovi all co-wrote various tracks. 'Notorious' also proved the band's most successful single, achieving platinum status three times over. This was followed by a marathon two-year tour, their longest yet. They did, however, take a break for two months to record tracks with producer Bob Rock before supporting Def Leppard on their European tour in the spring of 1988. Afterwards, Loverboy returned home to Canada and an uncertain future. Dean and Reno announced plans to record solo and this left the rest of the band in limbo. In 1989 a compilation album was released by Columbia, Big Ones, which also contained three new tracks that had been recorded with Bob Rock. Later that year, Dean released a solo effort assisted by Loverboy drummer Frenette and Jon Bon Jovi on harmonica. The parent band, meanwhile, have remained inactive.

Lovers Rock

Although love songs have always been staple fare in reggae, and other musics, lovers rock as a genre did not emerge until the mid-70s, chiefly in London. Mixing Philly soul with sweet skanking rhythms, it was the antithesis of the roots reggae movement and provided non-Rasta reggae fans with something with which to identify in an era otherwise dominated by dub. Early exponents such as 15-16-17, Brown Sugar (who featured Caron Wheeler, later of Soul II Soul) and Carroll Thompson, all sold incredibly well. The critics reviled them for their sickly, barely trained harmonies and schoolgirl voices, but this truly working-class music was to be found in teenagers' bedrooms in every British city centre. There were few lovers chart hits, one exception being Janet Kay's 'Silly Games' (number 2 in 1979), but the music thrived away from the mainstream music business, and some records, such as Louisa Mark's 'Caught You In A Lie' and 'Six Sixth Street', were real artistic successes, albeit largely unheralded ones. Throughout the 80s and early 90s lovers rock has remained a largely underground music, while artists such as Winsome, the Investigators, the Instigators, Deborahe Glasgow and Sandra Cross have built huge followings. One international success has been Maxi Priest, who combined lovers with ragga, roots and soul to produce that long-awaited breakthrough fusion.

Lovett, Lyle

b. 1 November 1957, Houston, Texas, USA. Singer-songwriter Lovett grew up 25 miles north of Houston in the rural Klein community (an area largely populated by farmers of German extraction), which was named after his grandfather, Adam Klein. During his teenage years, as Houston's borders expanded, Lovett was exposed to more urban influences, and attended Texas A&M University where he studied journalism and then German. During this period (late 70s), he began writing songs; his early heroes included Guy Clark (who later wrote a dedication on the sleeve of Lovett's first album), Jerry Jeff Walker and Townes Van Zandt. Having visited Europe (to improve his German) in the late 70s, he met a local country musician named Buffalo Wayne (who apparently took his name from his favourite western heroes), and remained in touch after returning to Texas - when Wayne was organizing an event in Luxembourg in 1983, he booked Lovett, and also on the bill was an American band from Phoenix whose members included Matt Rollings (keyboards) and Ray Herndon (guitar), who were later involved with Lovett's albums. Lovett worked the same Texas music circuit as Nanci Griffith, singing on two of her early albums, Once In A Very Blue Moon (1984, which included one of his songs, 'If I Were The Woman You Wanted') and Last Of The True Believers (1985), on the cover of which he is pictured. When Guy Clark heard a demo tape by Lovett in 1984, he passed it on to Tony Brown of MCA Records, and by 1986, Lovett had signed to MCA/Curb. His self-titled debut album was idiosyncratic, to say the least, including both the song covered by Griffith and 'Closing Time', which was covered by Lacy J. Dalton, as well as a fine song he co-wrote with fellow singer-songwriter Robert Earl Keen Jnr., 'This Old Porch'. However, his acceptance was slow in US country music circles, and Lovett first received substantial critical acclaim when the album was eventually released in Europe. The follow-up, Pontiac, was released in 1987 after Lovett had successfully toured Europe backed only by cellist John Hagen. The album made it clear that Lovett was rather more than a folk or country artist, with such songs as the surreal 'If I Had A Boat' and 'She's Hot To Go', while guests on the album included Emmylou Harris. By this time, Lovett was talking about both recording and touring with what he called His Large Band, with several saxophone players and a female backing singer, Francine Reed, as well as a regular rhythm section, and his third album, released in 1989, was indeed titled Lyle And His Large Band. Including an insidiously straight cover version of the Tammy Wynette standard 'Stand By Your Man', and a version of the R&B oldie 'The Glory Of Love', this again delighted critics by its very humour and eclecticism, but further confused record buyers, especially in the USA, who were unsure whether this was a country or jazz record or something quite different. At this point Lovett moved away from Nashville, where he was regarded as too weird, and as a result, his fourth album, produced by Los Angeles heavyweight George Massenburg, was not released until early 1992. Its title, Joshua Judges Ruth (three consecutive books in the Old Testament, but meaning something very different if read as a phrase), was symptomatic of Lovett's intelligence, but perhaps equally so of his idiosyncratic approach. As usual, critics loved it, although it included hardly any traces of country music, and seemed to portray him as a Tom Waits-like figure - ultra-sophisticated, but somewhat off the wall. In 1992, Lovett was chosen as the opening act for many of the dates on the first world tour during the 90s by Dire Straits. This exposed him to a huge international audience, but seems to have done little to extend his cult following. In the same year, Lovett met the Hollywood actress Julia Roberts on the set of The Player, a high-grossing film, in which Lovett played the role of a detective. They married in June 1993; the following year their marriage was floundering, and by 1995 it appeared to be over. Presumably Lovett will now resume his career as one of the sharpest and wittiest songwriters to come out of America in recent times. He performed 'You've Got A Friend In Me' with Randy Newman for the soundtrack of the hugely successful movie Toy Story. The Road To Ensenada mixed Lovett's razor wit with pathos. Long-standing observers of Lovett's lyrics will read much into this album and pontificate for hours about their relevance to his relationship with Roberts.

Lovich, Lene

Vocalist Lovich was one of several acts launched by the Stiff label in 1978. The former horror-film soundtrack screamer joined new signings Mickey Jupp, Rachel Sweet and Jona Lewie on the Be Stiff national tour, of which this charismatic performer emerged as the undoubted star. Her arresting, gypsy-like appearance, and warbled intonation was matched by a sense of pop's dynamics, as evinced by her UK Top 3 hit, 'Lucky Number'. Shaven-head guitarist Les Chappell provided a visual and compositional foil to a singer who enjoyed further, albeit minor, hits with 'Say When', 'Bird Song' (both 1979) and 'New Toy' (1981). Lovich also entered the album charts with Stateless, which derived its title from the air of mystery the artist cultivated about her origins. Subsequent releases fared less well and her 1982 single, 'It's You Only You (Mein Schmerz)', provided Lovich with her final chart entry. Problems within Stiff undermined the progress of a singer who sadly failed to maintain her early promise. Eight years later a new album appeared from Lovich and Chappell, but their music showed scant sign of any artistic progress.

Lovin' Spoonful

Few American pop groups have gathered as much universal affection over the years as the brilliant and underrated Lovin' Spoonful. Their back catalogue of hits is constantly repackaged and reissued as their stature increases. They were formed in 1965 by John Sebastian (b. 17 March 1944, New York, USA; vocal/guitar/harmonica/autoharp) and Zalman Yanovsky (b. 19 December 1944, Toronto, Canada; guitar/vocals) following their time together in the Mugwumps (as eulogized in the Mamas And The Papas hit 'Creeque Alley'). The band were completed by Steve Boone (b. 23 September 1943, Camp Lejeune, North Carolina, USA; bass) and Joe Butler (b. 19 January 1943, Long Island, New York, USA; drums/vocals). Their unique blend of jug-band, folk, blues and rock 'n' roll synthesized into what was termed as 'electric good-time music', kept them apart from every other American pop group at that time. In two years they notched up 10 US Top 20 hits, all composed by John Sebastian. From the opening strum of Sebastian's autoharp on 'Do You Believe In Magic?' the party began; from the evocative 'You Didn't Have To Be So Nice', to the languid singalong 'Daydream'; from the punchy and lyrically outstanding 'Summer In The City': 'Hot town summer in the city, back of my neck getting dirt and gritty', to the gentle romanticism of 'Rain On The Roof'; 'You and me and the rain on the roof, caught up in a summer shower, drying while it soaks the flowers, maybe we'll be caught for hours', their four regular albums were crammed full of other gems in addition to the hits. Additionally Sebastian wrote the music for two films, Woody Allen's What's Up Tiger Lily and Francis Ford Coppola's You're A Big Boy Now, the latter featuring the beautiful 'Darling Be Home Soon'. Sadly the non-stop party came to an end in 1968 following the departure of Yanovsky and the arrival, albeit briefly, of Jerry Yester. The quality of Sebastian's lyrics and melodies makes him one of the finest American songwriters.

In 1991, Steve Boone, Joe Butler and the Yester brothers announced the re-formation of the band for a tour - however, without Yanovsky and Sebastian, the 'magic' cannot be present.

Loving You - Elvis Presley

Elvis Presley's first film, Love Me Tender, included music as an afterthought, but music was the priority in his next, Loving You. Four of the seven songs were hits, while 'Mean Woman Blues' has been recorded by Jerry Lee Lewis, Roy Orbison and many others. '(Let's Have A) Party' at 90 seconds is the shortest single ever to make the charts, a peculiar achievement as Presley has an additional verse in the film. Fans used to send Elvis Presley teddy bears, hence the song of the same name. Jerry Leiber and Mike Stoller wrote one of their finest ballads with 'Loving You', a song comparable to Cole Porter's 'True Love' which, in turn, completed this 8-track, 10-inch album. In the USA, the album was issued in 12-inch format and the four additional tracks were released on an EP in the UK.

Low

Based in Duluth, Minneapolis, USA, Low consist of Alan Sparhawk (vocals/guitar), his wife Mimi Parker (drums/vocals) and Zak Scalley (bass), who joined in time for the group's second album. Formed in 1993, Low were initially influenced by Brian Eno and Joy Division and 'the boredom of living in Duluth'. A demo tape was subsequently passed to underground producer/artist Kramer, who invited the band to his New York studio to record their debut album. This revealed a band who specialise in a uniquely uncommercial songwriting process, 'We just wanted to annoy people by building up all this tension and not giving them any release.' However, over the course of a full album, they mellowed, with their minimal instrumentation similar to the slow-burning power of Morphine. Similarly, Low conducted themselves without recourse to conventional formats - Parker's drum kit consisting merely of one snare and a cymbal. By the second album they had dispensed to some degree with the reverb-dominated sound, although this was still not music for the faint-hearted, with the band opting for a moribund but hypnotic groove. The band spent part of 1995 touring with Spectrum, before beginning work on The Curtain Hits The Cast.

Low - David Bowie

The first (Heroes and Lodger would follow) of David Bowie's three Berlin albums. Living there as a semi-recluse for three years, he worked with svengali/producer Brian Eno and the results of their collaborations helped change the face of the European mainstream. Artists such as Gary Numan, Ultravox and OMD were indebted to the sound Bowie had created with the synthesizer to build a somewhat terse wall of sound. Critically acclaimed, but a relative commercial failure, apart from the surprise 'Sound And Vision' hit single, it remains as a pertinent reminder of Bowie's ability to surprise and enlighten.

● Tracks: Speed Of Life; Breaking Glass; What In The World; Sound And Vision; Always Crashing In The Same Car; Be My Wife; A New Career In A New Town; Warszawa; Art Decade; Weeping Wall; Subterraneans.

Low-Life - New Order

New Order evolved from the rump of Joy Division following the death of vocalist Ian Curtis. The course they followed contrasted with that of their former incarnation, exploring a heady mix of techno-styled dance tracks and melodic soundscapes. Low-Life captured the quartet in eclectic mood, taking an electronic muse through diffuse material. It boasts two of New Order's finest ever songs, the ballad-styled 'Love Vigilantes' and the lush 'The Perfect Kiss', while elsewhere the quartet explore different facets of their sound without losing cohesion. This acclaimed release finally confirmed New Order as an act in its own right.

Lowe, Frank

b. 24 June 1943, Memphis, Tennessee, USA. Although originally categorized as a 'new thing' (the US 60s free-jazz movement) player, Lowe has grown into one of the most distinctive and thoughtful of contemporary tenor saxophonists. Growing up in Memphis, one of his first jobs was at the Satellite record shop and its offshoot label, Stax. A liking for the records of Gene Ammons developed into a fascination with the newer musics of John Coltrane, Ornette Coleman and the AACM. He attended the University of Kansas, then moved to San Francisco and studied with Rafael Garrett, Sonny Simmons and Bert Wilson. Moving to New York in the mid-60s, he worked with Sun Ra then, after a spell at the San Francisco Conservatory, he settled in New York, playing with numerous musicians from the jazz avant garde, including Rashied Ali (Duo Exchanges), Alice Coltrane (World Galaxy) and Don Cherry (Relativity Suite, Brown Rice), while his own debut as leader - Black Beings - had Joseph Jarman guesting. In the mid-70s he formed a group with Joe Bowie and Charles 'Bobo' Shaw, recording Fresh (which also featured Lester Bowie) and The Flam (with Leo Smith). While in San Francisco, he had met Lawrence 'Butch' Morris, who has become one of his most frequent collaborators (Current Trends In Racism In Modern America), as has Billy Bang, with whom he plays in the collective quartet Jazz Doctors (Intensive Case) and in the violinist's own group (Valve No 10). Always open to new ideas, Lowe has played with leftfield rock musicians such as Eugene Chadbourne and seems as comfortable with New York's 80s avant garde downtown scene as he does with 60s jazzers such as Cherry and Charles Moffett: indeed, his own recordings feature a diverse array of artists, from John Zorn (Lowe And Behold) to Geri Allen and Grachan Moncur III (Decision In Paradise). As he told Cadence magazine, 'I've always tried to go in and out', though adding that even when playing in, he likes to 'experiment with time and colours'.

Lowe, Jez

b. 14 July 1955, County Durham, England. Having played on the folk circuit, with various groups from 1973, Lowe also worked for a time with Ged Foley, who was later to join the House Band. In 1979, Lowe, performing mainly traditional songs, turned professional. His first release, in 1980, was on Fellside Records, and included three Lowe originals. He was supported on Jez Lowe by Jim Barnes (cittern, guitar) and Sylvia Barnes (whistle, vocals). Both had previously been members of the Battlefield Band. From 1981, he pursued a largely solo career, but performed at festivals and concerts, both at home and in the USA and Europe, with Jake Walton (hurdy gurdy). However, Lowe continued to record with Fellside, releasing Old Durham Road and the highly acclaimed Galloways, which contains the much covered Lowe composition 'Old Bones'. Subsequent releases contained more Lowe originals, and, following the release of Bad Penny, he formed Jez Lowe And The Bad Pennies, taking on Bev Sanders (vocals, percussion, whistle) and Rob Kay (vocals, keyboards, melodeon, recorder, percussion) who was in turn replaced in 1991 by Bob Surgeoner (bass, accordian, banjo, keyboards). They recorded Briefly On The Street, which contained the excellent 'The Famous Working Man' and 'Davis And Golightly'. Lowe has had songs recorded by artists such as Gordon Bok and Mary Black among others, and he continues to be a popular figure on the folk circuit. Billy Surgeoner (fiddle, whistle, keyboards, bass) joined in 1991. Tenterhooks and The Parish Notices were two exceptional albums.

Lowe, Mundell

b. 21 April 1922, Laurel, Mississippi, USA. Guitarist Lowe began playing at the age of six and seven years later, left home and headed for New Orleans, Louisiana. He listened and learned at many of the city's clubs before he was found by his Baptist minister father and taken back home. He soon made another try for an early career in music, this time visiting Nashville where he played in the Pee Wee King band. Taken home again he graduated from school in 1940 and promptly joined the Jan Savitt band. Drafted for military service, Lowe was posted to a camp near New Orleans. At a nearby camp the entertainments officer was John Hammond Jnr. and their meeting helped Lowe establish his career after the war. Hammond introduced him to Ray McKinley who was leading the postwar Glenn Miller band and thereafter the guitarist worked with Benny Goodman, Wardell Gray, Fats Navarro and Red Norvo among many leading jazz musicians. During the late 40s and early 50s, Lowe worked mostly in New York, playing club dates and recording sessions with a remarkable array of top-flight artists, including Lester Young, Buck Clayton, Charlie Parker and Billie Holiday. During the 50s Lowe played in the NBC studio orchestra, was musical director on the Today show on television, acted on and off Broadway and continued to play and record with such well-known jazz musicians as Georgie Auld, Ruby Braff, Ben Webster, Carmen McRae and Harold Ashby.

Since 1965, Lowe has been based in Los Angeles, again working in television and radio and also establishing himself as a writer of scores for films and television. He also became active as an educator but despite his busy schedule found time to continue his recording career, accompanying such musically diverse artists as Sammy Davis Jnr., Tony Bennett, Bill Berry, Richie Kamuca and many others. In the early 80s he formed a small band he named TransitWest, in which he was joined by Sam Most, Monty Budwig and Nick Ceroli, which made its first major appearance at the 1983 Monterey Jazz Festival. A quietly elegant player with a cool but surging swing, Lowe's playing style, with its deceptively sparse exploration of the often-overlooked subtleties of many standards from the jazz and popular song repertoires, is in the great tradition of jazz guitar. Nevertheless, his experimentations with 12-tone compositions have also put him in the forefront of jazz-guitar thinking.

b. 24 March 1949, Walton-On-Thames, Surrrey, England. Lowe has for many years been held in high esteem by a loyal band of admirers aware of his dexterity as a producer, musician, vocalist and songwriter. His early apprenticeship as bass player/vocalist with Kippington Lodge, which evolved into Brinsley Schwarz, made him a seasoned professional by the mid-70s. He then started a career as a record producer, making his debut with the Kursaal Flyers' Chocs Away, followed by Dr. Feelgood's Malpractice. He also owns up to being responsible for an appalling novelty record, 'We Love You', a parody of the Bay City Rollers, recorded under the name the Tartan Horde. He formed Stiff Records with Jake Riviera and Dave Robinson in 1976 and was an early pioneer of punk music. His own singles were unsuccessful, but he was critically applauded for the catchy 'So It Goes', backed with the prototype punk song, 'Heart Of The City'. He was an important catalyst in the career of Elvis Costello, producing his first five albums and composing a modern classic with 'What's So Funny 'Bout (Peace Love And Understanding)'. Lowe became a significant figure in the UK, producing albums for the Damned, Clover and Dave Edmunds. In 1977, Lowe co-founded Rockpile and also managed to join the legendary 'Live Stiffs' tour. His own debut, Jesus Of Cool (US title: Pure Pop For Now People), was a critics' favourite and remains a strong collection of unpretentious rock 'n' pop. The hit single, 'I Love The Sound Of Breaking Glass', is still a disc jockey favourite, although the equally impressive 'Little Hitler' failed miserably. In 1979 he produced another important single, 'Stop Your Sobbing', by the Pretenders, and released another excellent collection, Labour Of Lust, which contained the sparkling 'Cruel To Be Kind' and 'Cracking Up'. Lowe was indeed cracking up, from a surfeit of alcohol, as his brother-in-arms Dave Edmunds intimated in the UK television documentary Born Fighters. Towards the end of a hectic year he married Carlene Carter. In the early 80s, as well as continuing his work with Costello, he additionally produced albums with John Hiatt, Paul Carrack, Carlene Carter and the Fabulous Thuderbirds. His own recordings suffered and were rushed efforts. In 1986 he reunited with Costello for Blood And Chocolate, although his own albums were virtually ignored by the public. He returned in 1988 with Pinker And Prouder Than Previous, with contributions from Edmunds, but once again it was dismissed, making his catalogue of flop albums embarrassingly large, a fact that Lowe observes with his customary good grace and humour. In 1992 Lowe formed a loose band with Ry Cooder, Jim Keltner and John Hiatt, known as Little Village, whose debut album received a lukewarm response. Much better was The Impossible Bird with some of his best lyrics in years, notably 'Lover Don't Go' and 'Love Travels On A Gravel Road'. He followed this renaissance with the equally strong Dig My Mood, a dark and forboding lyrical odyssey of infidelity and sadness. At times, on this album, he sounds like a 50s lounge singer and this in turn demonstrates how his voice has actually developed and improved in recent years.

Lown, Bert

b. 1903, USA, d. 1962, Portland, Oregon, USA. Founded in New York City, New York, USA, in the early 20s, Bert Lown's dance band included musicians Adrian Rollini, Chauncey Gray, Tommy Fulline, Irving Kaufman, Paul Mason, Johnny Costello, Rudy Adler, Miff Mole, Frank Cush, Eddie Farley, Ward Lay, Stan King, Merrill Kline and Elmer Fedlkamp. The featured vocalists were Smith Ballew and Scrappy Lambert as well as the Biltmore Rhythm Section. Essentially a hotel band, the orchestra achieved more widespread prominence through remote broadcasts conducted primarily at the Biltmore. Their theme tune was 'Bye Bye Blues', though other originals such as 'You're The One I Care For', 'By My Side' and 'Tired' were released on labels including Harmony, Bluebird, Victor and Columbia Records. Lown helped Rudy Vallee get his start as a bandleader, but gave up his own group in the mid-30s. During World War II he returned to music and took part in many fundraisers and relief work. He became Regional Field Manager for the Committee for Economic Development after the end of the war.

Lowther, Henry

b. 11 July 1941, Leicester, England. As a child Lowther learned trumpet from his father and took private violin lessons before going on to study with Manoug Parakian at London's Royal Academy of Music. From the mid-60s on he worked with Mike Westbrook, the New Jazz Orchestra, Keef Hartley, John Mayall, Manfred Mann, Michael Garrick, Norma Winstone (in Edge Of Time), John Dankworth, Art Themen, Alan Jackson (in the superb Kinkade), Barbara Thompson (Jubiaba), John Stevens, Kenny Wheeler, Mike Gibbs, Tony Coe, John Surman, Gordon Beck, Gil Evans, John Taylor, the BBC Symphony Orchestra and the London Brass Virtuosi as well as his own groups, Quarternity and Group Sounds Five. That list is in itself a testimony to his versatility and craftsmanship. As well as playing trumpet, flügelhorn, cornet and violin he has composed for jazz and orchestral groups. Influenced by sources as varied as Indian music, Karlheinz Stockhausen, Joe 'King' Oliver, Weather Report and the Average White Band, Lowther is still playing with as much freshness and directness as ever, touring in the early 90s with Kenny Wheeler and Barry Guy's London Jazz Composers Orchestra.

b. 1969, Croydon, Surrey, England. During the 90s Bukem played a significant part in the development of drum 'n' bass. He grew up around Harlesden and then Watford where he learned the piano and listened to the Jam, the Police and the 2-Tone bands. He later became interested in rare groove, soul, funk and jazz and in the mid-80s began DJing with the Sunshine Sound System; he subsequently became interested in dance music and made his DJing breakthrough in 1990 when he played at Raindance in Essex. His first release was 'Logical Progression' on Vinyl Mania in 1991 which was followed by 'Demon's Theme', 'Bang The Drums' (featuring Tayla) (both 1991), 'Return To Atlantis' (1992) and 'Music' (1993), on his own label Good Looking Records. 'Demon's Theme' introduced the strings and mellow ambience which characterizes much of Bukem's work and was one of the first records to feature the sound that became known as drum 'n' bass. Rather than sampling old breakbeats like much jungle and hardcore artists of the time, Bukem preferred to create his own rhythm tracks in this style thereby creating a more varied beat for his recordings. In 1993 with Fabio he brought his sound to a wider audience with the launch of the club Speed in central London, which featured such DJs as Adam F., Alex Reece, Deep Blue, Goldie and lead to widespread media coverage of this new English cultural phenomenon. His success continued with a remix of Jodeci's 'Feenin" (1995) and the development, along with Tony Fordham, of Good Looking. He has since presented his touring club Logical Progression and its associated albums, and the Earth compilations. In 1997 Bukem contributed a version of 'Thunderball' to David Arnold's album of James Bond-theme remakes, Shaken And Stirred.

Lubinsky, Herman

b. 30 August 1896, USA, d. 16 March 1974. Lubinsky formed Savoy Records in 1942 in Market Street, Newark, New Jersey after running a record shop on the site for many years. He had previously been responsible for operating New Jersey's first radio station in 1924. Savoy scored a number 1 hit from its first recording session and, bolstered by this success, went on to build a peerless jazz, gospel and R&B roster in the late 40s with top-selling records by such artists as, on the jazz roster: Charlie Parker, Lester Young, Dexter Gordon, Erroll Garner, J.J. Johnson, Fats Navarro, Miles Davis, Leo Parker, Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis; gospel: the Kings Of Harmony and the Deep Tones (on the King Solomon subsidiary); and R&B: Dusty Fletcher, Paul Williams, Wild Bill Moore, Hal Singer and Brownie McGhee. In 1948, Savoy opened a successful west coast office under Ralph Bass who continued in Savoy's excellent tradition of recording the finest R&B and bebop, having big hits with Johnny Otis/Little Esther Phillips and Big Jay McNeely. In the 50s, Savoy largely eschewed rock 'n' roll, concentrating on its jazz and ever-expanding gospel catalogue - the latter of which now included Clara Ward, the Drinkard Singers, the Davis Sisters, the Selah Jubilee Singers and, later, Alex Bradford and Jimmy Cleveland. This catalogue would prove to be the company's 'bread and butter' through the 60s and 70s. However, they continued to enjoy R&B success with Nappy Brown, Big Maybelle and Varetta Dillard, as well as making several brilliant territorial forays into the Atlanta and New Orleans musical communities and purchasing important smaller independents labels such as National. Lubinsky remained a strong character, fronting Savoy until just a few months before his death from cancer in March 1974. Savoy Records was purchased by Arista in 1975, and a large-scale reissue programme was commenced.

Lubitsch, Ernst

b. 28 January 1892, Berlin, Germany, d. 30 November 1947, Bel Air, Los Angeles, California, USA. A celebrated film director who took Hollywood by storm after moving to America in 1923. His reputation was based on a series of sophisticated comedies, first with silents, and then with talkies such as Trouble In Paradise (1932). In the early 30s, he did grace several immensely successful Paramount musicals - all of which starred Maurice Chevalier - with his highly individual, innovative and delightfully risqué 'Lusbitsch touch'. These were The Love Parade, Paramount On Parade (co-directed), Monte Carlo, The Smiling Lieutenant, One Hour With You, and The Merry Widow (1934). For a time during the 30s Lubitsch was the director of production at Paramount, and he continued work as a director on a variety of films into the 40s. The sole musical among them was 20th Century-Fox's That Lady In Ermine, starring Betty Grable, Douglas Fairbanks Jnr., and Cesar Romero. Sadly, it had to be completed by Otto Preminger after Lubitsch's death from a heart attack in 1947. A year earlier he had received a special Academy Award for 'his distinguished contributions to the art of the motion picture'.

Lucas

b. *c.*1970, Copenhagen, Denmark. His mother an artist and his father a writer, Lucas moved around the world from an early age, finding his most permanent port of call in New York. There he immersed himself in the prevailing hip-hop culture on the Lower East Side, rubbing shoulders with old school crews like Kid Crush as he became a breakdancer, a DJ, and finally a rapper. By 1990 he was signed to Uptown Records as part of Key West, billed as the label's 'first white artist'. When that band fell from favour Lucas worked briefly with Chubb Rock and Kool Keith (Ultramagnetic MCs), DJing for The Lifers Project, before leaving New York for England. His debut single for WEA, 'Wau Wau Wau'/'Work In Progress', revealed the experience he had gained. While the a-side was an easily likeable jazz-tinged affair, distinguished by a sample left on his answerphone by a drunken kid, the b-side cut, featuring the vocals of Fay Simpson (Nu Colours) and Junior Dangerous, spanned rap, soul and ragga. Lucas also became prominent in UK hip-hop circles for his production skills (Nu Colours, Shara Nelson).

b. Albert B. Lucas, Windsor, Ontario, Canada, d. 19 June 1983. Born into a musical family, he was taught first by his mother and also took advice from his bass-playing father. Before he was in his teens he had chosen the bass as his principal instrument and while still only in his mid-teens he was living and playing in New York. He spent almost a decade with the Sunset Royal Orchestra and then joined Coleman Hawkins. Between 1943 and the end of the 40s he played with numerous front-rank jazz musicians including Oran 'Hot Lips' Page, Duke Ellington, Eddie South, Erroll Garner, Mary Lou Williams and Illinois Jacquet. He had also played with Eddie Heywood during this period and rejoined him for a long spell in the 50s, playing also with Hawkins, Williams, Jacquet, Teddy Wilson, Ruby Braff and Charlie Byrd. Lucas continued to play jazz gigs in the 60s and 70s but was mostly to be found engaged in studio work. A strong and rhythmic player, Lucas extracted a full, rich sound from his instrument adding pleasing texture to the ensembles of which he was a member.

Lucas, Carrie

b. Carmel, California, USA. This sensuous soul and disco stylist started as a backing singer with the Whispers and did backing vocals on record for D.J. Rogers. She also wrote songs recorded by R&B acts the Whispers, the Soul Train Gang and South Shore Commission before joining the Soul Train label in 1976. Her first chart record and biggest hit was the disco smash 'I Gotta Keep Dancin'', released simply under the name Carrie in 1977. Two years later 'Dance With You' on Solar, (formerly Soul Train) also made the lower reaches of the Top 100 and gave her a UK Top 40 entry. Over the next six years she registered four US Top 200 album entries and a further five R&B chart singles, the biggest of these being her revival (with the Whispers) of Barbara Lewis's 'Hello Stranger', which reached the Top 20 in 1985 on Constellation Records. Lucas, who is married to Solar Records head Dick Griffey, has now put her singing career on ice.

● ALBUMS: Simply Carrie (Soul Train 1977)★★★, Carrie Lucas In Danceland (Solar 1979)★★, Portrait Of Carrie (Solar 1980)★★, Still In Love (Solar 1982)★★★.

Lucas, Clyde

b. USA. Clyde Lucas And His California Dons were formed in the early 30s. Lucas led the band from the front with his singing, sometimes alongside a vocal quartet named 'Four Men Only'. The band was arranged with four saxophones, two trumpets and four rhythm players, and violins were occasionally included as well. Often musicians doubled up on different instruments to provide further flexibility. Their theme song was 'Dance Mood', and they recorded sparsely for Vocalion and Columbia Records. Most of their engagements were at hotels in California before they expanded their itinerary to take in the rest of America. Lucas also found extensive employment in the film industry, scoring and playing background music in some of the earliest films. By the late 40s, the group's popularity was on the wane, as was the case with so many of the dance bands, and they ceased performing.

Lucas, Dick

Rarely gaining the recognition as an innovative, intelligent singer-songwriter with a strong social conscience that his work deserves, Lucas started his career as a teenager in anarcho-punks the Subhumans in the early 80s. During this initial period, it became clear that his lyrics and musical ambitions stretched beyond the usual punk rut. The 1983 mini-album Time Flies But Aeroplanes Crash included the melancholy 'Susan', a moving tale of a young girl resorting to suicide in order to escape from the restrictions of conventional life. It was something most of the Subhumans' contemporaries would never have dreamed of attempting. With his own record label - Bluurg - now established within the alternative scene, Lucas moved on to the upbeat tempo of ska, mixed with reggae references and punk politics. The vehicle for this was Culture Shock, arguably the most interesting and entertaining underground group of the late 80s, providing welcome relief from the usual uniformity and drabness of so-called 'political punk'. With Culture Shock, Lucas produced three fine albums, the best of which was undoubtedly Onwards And Upwards. On this excellent collection listeners were treated to lyrics on personal, emotional and socio-political subjects without ever devolving into empty rhetoric or personal deification. The stand-out tracks, 'You Are Not Alone' and 'Don't Worry About It', showed an extraordinary gift for tapping into the minds of isolated young listeners, marking Lucas as a Morrissey for the 'crusty' generation. Lucas decided to start the 90s with a new project, named Citizen Fish, embracing his philosophy that anarchists and libertarians are free-flowing souls trapped by the rules of civilization. Free Souls In A Trapped Environment confirmed this stance, as Lucas struggled with the dilemma of expressing strong political views in an exciting way without losing the fun by being too rhetorical or burying the meaning with flippancy. A heavy dose of thrashing guitars/drums, offset by rootsy ska/dance tones, proved to be the perfect solution. The lyrics, of course, were as astute as ever: 'Just to know that every up and down must balance out somehow/And there's a smile to end a conversation that was full of frowns/And here's a major chord to lift the minors up and dance around/And if the song seems far too long then tune in to another sound.' Wider Than A Postcard continued the social theory and skanky music, while the music press, whenever they deigned to actually write about them, compared Citizen Fish with the much-vaunted Manic Street Preachers - 'these are the REAL Generation Terrorists!'

b. 22 August 1897, Newark, New Jersey, USA, d. 28 July 1982. Lucas was a vocalist/guitarist/banjoist whose easy-going style made him a massive record seller in the late 20s and early 30s. Initially in vaudeville, he played clubs before becoming banjoist with the Dan Russo-Ted Fio Rito Oriole Orchestra in the early 20s and was known as the 'Singing Troubador'. Lucas signed to Brunswick and had his first hit with 'My Best Girl' in 1925. This was followed by a string of best-sellers through to 1931, including 'Brown Eyes Why Are You Blue', 'I'm Looking Over A Four Leaf Clover', 'Tiptoe Through The Tulips' and 'Painting The Clouds With Sunshine'. He appeared in the Broadway musical Showgirl in 1929 along with Ruby Keeler, Jimmy Durante and the Duke Ellington Orchestra. That same year he featured in two early 'talkies' Gold Diggers Of Broadway and Show Of Shows. During the 30s he settled in Hollywood making movie shorts and playing clubs. In 1934, he headed a dance band for a while and by 1937 was resident on the Al Pearce radio show. He became inactive in the 50s and 60s apart from the occasional one-off show, but Tiny Tim's late 60s version of 'Tiptoe Through The Tulips' rekindled interest in Lucas and in 1974 he sang on the soundtrack of the film The Great Gatsby.

Lucas, Robert

b. 1962, Long Beach, California, USA. A 13-year-old Lucas watched Jimi Hendrix play 'Hear My Train A-Comin'' in the documentary about his life and asked his local record store for more acoustic blues. He was sold Robert Johnson's King Of The Delta Blues Singers and a compilation of Leroy Carr/Scrapper Blackwell recordings. His hands were too small to properly learn the guitar, so he took up the harmonica instead. By the age of 20, he was playing harmonica and guitar with the Bernie Pearl Blues Band behind such bluesmen as Big Joe Turner, George Smith, Lowell Fulson, Pee Wee Crayton and Percy Mayfield. In 1983 he joined the Confessors, an R&B band with whom he stayed for three years. He then formed his own band, Luke And The Locomotives, but also performed solo gigs at which he demonstrated a comprehensive slide guitar technique. His first solo release in 1989 was a self-produced cassette on Delta Man Music, Across The River, which was followed a year later by the first of a series of albums on Audioquest which combined solo and small group recordings. Luke And The Locomotives cut out the acoustic playing and featured amplified blues. Having dispensed with the band, Lucas has returned to playing solo. On Layaway he expanded his musical horizons by featuring keyboards and a horn section.

Lucas, Trevor

b. 25 December 1943, Bungaree, Victoria, Australia, d. 4 February 1989. Lucas began as a singer-songwriter, performing contemporary folk songs, in the cafes and clubs of Melbourne, Australia. He recorded one obscure album before moving to the UK in 1964, where he established himself on the folk circuit, as a duo with fellow Australian Kerilee Male. They formed one of the first electric folk groups, Eclection, in 1967 and later formed Fotheringay with Sandy Denny, whom he married. Lucas then became a producer at Island Records for 18 months until he joined Fairport Convention in 1972. He left the band in early 1976 to take up production work again. He returned to Australia in 1978, after Sandy Denny's death. His time fully engaged in the production of such bands as Paul Kelly, Bushwackers, Goanna, and Redgum, plus film documentaries and children's dramas. He died in Sydney, Australia of a suspected heart attack.

Lucas, William 'Lazy Bill'

b. 29 May 1918, Wynne, Arkansas, USA. Bill Lucas's first instrument was a guitar, financed by selling a pig, but he really wanted a piano. Living on a farm with five siblings it seemed like a dream when his father actually bought him one in 1932. However, when the family moved to Cape Girardeau, Missouri, the piano was left behind. Lazy Bill had no real contact with the blues until he met Big Joe Williams in St. Louis in 1940. Converted, he moved to Chicago in 1941 and turned back to the piano after playing guitar in support of many of the famous artists of the day. He was one of Little Hudson's Red Devils and recorded with his own Blue Rhythms for the Chance label in 1954. Experiencing difficulties due, in part, to the nervous condition that had rendered him virtually blind since childhood, he moved to Minneapolis, Minnesota, in 1964 where he continued to play, appearing at festivals and recording for his own Lazy label in 1970 and later for the Philo label.

Lucca, Papo (and Sonora Ponceña)

b. Enrique Arsenio Lucca Jnr., 1946, Ponce, Puerto Rico. A remarkable pianist (he also plays percussion, vibes, tres, synthesizer and flugelhorn), gifted soloist and innovative arranger, Lucca is musical director, arranger and producer of Puerto Rico's oldest active band, Sonora Ponceña. In 1944, his father, Enrique 'Quique' Lucca, founded the two trumpet, rhythm section and voices band, Orquesta Internacional, which was entirely composed of musicians from Ponce. They specialized in the typical Cuban song-and-dance form called son, and Quique played guitar with the band. Out of deference to the internationally famous Cuban band, Sonora Matancera, they were renamed Sonora Ponceña (Son Orchestra of Ponce) for their 1954 recording debut. A third trumpet was added to their line-up during the 50s, and in the 60s they had a four-trumpet front-line. Papo was a child musical prodigy. He started playing congas at the age of four. When he was six years old he began formal musical education at the Free School of Music in Ponce, run by the famous Puerto Rican music teacher Don Julio Alvarado. Lucca commenced intensive piano, clarinet, saxophone and theoretical tuition, and within his first month, he performed a classical piece on the local radio station. Attending the school at the same time were singer Héctor Lavoe and trumpeter/arranger José Febles.

Lucca first performed with Sonora Ponceña at the age of eight. In the mid-50s, he played solo piano on the television show of Ruth Fernández (b. Ponce, Puerto Rico). Ruth was blessed with a rich golden voice and recorded with Obdulio Morales, Orquesta Panamericana and Machito. Lucca made his recording debut at the age of 11 when the band accompanied bolero singers, Felipe Rodríguez and Davilita (Pedro Ortiz Dávila) on Al Compás de Las Sonoras, released on the Marvela label. His first arrangement for the band was transcribed from the record of Tito Puente's hit 'Caramelos' (contained on Pachanga Con Puente). Papo graduated from the University of Puerto Rico and studied at Puerto Rico's Conservatory of Music. Sonora Ponceña recorded for the Marvela and Inca labels. They remained with the latter into the 90s. The band's career really took off after Inca was sold to Jerry Masucci, co-founder (with Johnny Pacheco) of the Fania Records label. Masucci did a great deal to promote them, and Latin music in general. They became especially popular with the Latino audience in New York. Success boosted their confidence and inspired others, demonstrating that it was possible to make a living from the music.

In the late 60s, Sonora Ponceña had big hits with interpretations of a couple of Arsenio Rodríguez classics: 'Hachero Pa' Un Palo' and 'Fuego En El 23'. The original recordings are still available on the 1975 compilation Lo Mejor De Sonora Ponceña. Bandleader/pianist Larry Harlow produced the band's albums between 1972 and 1975. Ponceña had returned to a three-trumpet section, comprised of José A. (Joe) Rodríguez, Ramón A. (Tony) Rodríguez and Delfin 'El del Café' Pérez , for Desde Puerto Rico a Nueva York (From Puerto Rico To New York) in 1972. Lead vocals were provided by the raw and earthy voice of Luis Guillermo 'Luigui' Texidor (b. 1940, Puerto Rico; joined Ponceña in the mid-60s), and Humberto Luis 'Tito' Gómez (b. 1948, Juana Díaz, Puerto Rico; joined Ponceña in 1968), the latter whose voice has a haunting, melancholic timbre. Both singers were ex-members of Conjunto Antoanetti.

Trumpeter Joe Rodríguez left to lead La Terrifica, taking Tito Gómez and percussionist Miguel 'Mikey' Ortiz with him. They debuted on the Larry Harlow produced Terrifica in 1974. Gómez split from La Terrifica, did a brief stint with Ray Barretto and recorded as a solo artist, ie. Para Gozar Borinquen (1977), produced by Harlow. Miguel A. Ortiz 'Miguelito', who possesses a high-pitched voice, filled Gómez's vacancy on Ponceña's 1974 release Sabor Sureño. Conga player Vicente Rivero 'Little Johnny' joined the band on 1975's Tiene Pimienta. In 1976, Lucca made his debut as producer, in association with Louie Ramírez, on Musical Conquest/Conquista Musical. The album contained the smash hit 'El Pio Pio', composed by the Mexican duo Lobo y Melón (Angel Luis Silva). That year, Lucca and Texidor participated in the first Puerto Rico All Stars album. In 1977, Papo assisted Ramírez with the production of El Gigante Del Sur. The hit track 'Boranda', was about Puerto Rico's then frequent droughts, and commented on the migration of the country people (jibaros) and abandonment of the land. Yolanda Rivera joined Ponceña as a third lead vocalist on this album; formerly a member of La Terrifica, she had appeared on their Sabor A Pueblo in 1976. Texidor left to join Bobby Valentín on his Musical Seduction (1978), on which he sang the hit 'Naci Moreno' (Born Brown), an affirmation of the racial mixture that is Puerto Rico's identity. Texidor later recorded as a solo artist and with Tito Puente and El Combo Del Ayer. He has now retired from the business.

Although intimated on earlier albums, Ponceña's present bright, mellow, laid-back, yet relentlessly swinging style noticeably started to coalesce on Explorando in 1978. A further trumpet was added, and with his arranger's pen, Lucca began developing a unique, well-blended four-trumpet sound of elaborate, interweaving lines. Lucca told UK salsa broadcaster Tomek, in May 1991, that he had got the idea for four trumpets from Conjunto Casino, a popular Cuban band of the 40s and 50s. 'I'm honest', he said. Lucca was the sole producer on Explorando and all Ponceña's subsequent recordings. Tito Gómez returned to fill Texidor's vacated slot and sang lead on the hit track 'Moreno Soy' (I Am Brown), which was Lucca's arrangement of 'Naci Moreno'. Gómez sang in the chorus on La Orquesta De Mi Tierra in 1978, before leaving to work with Tito Valentín, La Amistad (see Nati) and Grupo Niche. In 1979, Sonora Ponceña teamed up with Celia Cruz for La Ceiba. That year, Jeremy Marre's television film Salsa, featured a tantalizing glimpse of the band backing Celia, with Yolanda Rivera in the chorus. Also in 1979, Texidor and Lucca reunited in the context of the Fania All Stars to perform a 'live' version of 'Naci Moreno' on Habana Jam, recorded in Cuba. In 1980, Alberto Antonio Ledeé 'Toñito' (b. Salinas, Puerto Rico) joined Yolanda and Miguelito as a third lead singer on Ponceña's New Heights. Their second release in 1980, Unchained Force, was dedicated to longstanding members Tony 'El Cordobes' Rodríguez, Delfin Pérez and bassist Antonio Santaella (Tato).

Yolanda departed after 1982's Determination and relocated to Miami, USA, where she sang coro (chorus) with Gabino Pampini and Fuerza Noble. She sang lead vocals with bandleader/trombonist Rubby Haddock, on Otra Vez! (1988) and Salsa Tropical (1990), and also performed as a solo artist in 1990 with the Hermanos Rivera Orchestra. Her vacancy was filled by another ex-La Terrifica member, Héctor 'Pichy' Pérez, on Future in 1984. Yet another former La Terrifica member, Manuel Martínez Roldan 'Mannix', replaced Miguelito Ortiz on Ponceña's 30th anniversary release Jubilee, which contained an updated version of their 60s hit 'Fuego En El 23'. 1988's On The Right Track contained a tribute poem and song to Toñito Ledeé, a devoted family man, who was tragically killed in a car crash on 28 May 1986. After a 15-year tenure, conguero Johnny Rivero walked out on Ponceña following a row with Quique, while the band were at the airport waiting for a flight to Tenerife in 1990 - something he apparently later regretted. Lucca and the band made a foray into salsa romántica territory on Into The 90's. He has described the popular style as 'salsa monga' - a term coined by Willie Rosario - which politely translates as 'flaccid salsa'. The album was partly recorded in their own Pianissimo Studios in Ponce. In 1990, Pichy Pérez left to join Tommy Olivencia's band. He was replaced by Luisito Carrión, who worked previously with Julio 'Gunda' Merced's Salsa Fever, La Terrifica, Bobby Valentín and Don Perignon. In 1976, Lucca replaced Larry Harlow as the pianist with the Fania All Stars and made his UK debut with them the same year. He continued to gig and record with them into the 90s. Lucca and Sonora Ponceña made their UK debut in May 1991 with an outstanding concert at London's Empire Ballroom.

Luciano

b. Jepther McClymont, 1974, Davey Town, Jamaica, West Indies. Luciano was one of the most promising new singer-songwriters to emerge in 1993. He began singing in his local parish church before assuming the name of Stepper John and migrating to Kingston in April 1992. There he voiced his debut tune for Herman Chin-Loy at Aquarius, then half an album with Pressley for Mau Mau producer Sky High. Homer Harris of Blue Mountain had by that time changed McClymont's name to Luciano. His first Jamaican hit, 'Give My Love A Try', was for Castro Brown and a clutch of ballads and self-penned reality songs soon followed, initially for Brown's New Name label. Philip 'Fatis' Burrell produced his first two UK hits, 'Chant Out' and 'Poor And Simple', in the summer of 1993 on Exterminator, and was later to release his debut solo album Moving Up. Singles for Exterminator, Blacka Dread ('Time Is The Master') and Sly And Robbie's Taxi label helped to establish Luciano's fast-growing reputation before he joined Freddie McGregor's Big Ship organization. 'Shake It Up Tonight' became his first UK reggae number 1 and led to a well-received album of the same name. He earned a contract with Island Records, and his association with Burrell continued with the critically acclaimed Where There Is Life, which featured the Jamaican chart-topper 'It's Me Again Jah'.

Lucky People Center

Proclaiming themselves 'dance terrorists', the samples used on this Swedish trio's debut album built on the traditions of Test Department and others by using speeches from world leaders, in this case marrying George Bush and Saddam Hussein to a backbeat on 'It's Still Cloudy In Saudi Arabia'. The group were formed in 1992 by Johan Söderburg (percussion), Lars Åkerlund (samples) and Sebastian Öberg (electric cello). The relentless barrage of samples were adopted in a vein more prevalent within hip-hop than the dance scene, though Lucky People Center are firmly placed in the latter by the dominance of rhythm over lyrics.

Ludus

Founded in 1978, this Manchester, England-based quartet was consistently fronted by the enigmatic lyricist/vocalist Linder (b. Linda Mulvey, 1954, Liverpool, England). The backing was provided by Arthur Cadmon (b. Peter Sadler, Stockport, England), formerly of Manicured Noise and originally the musical genius behind the group. The line-up was completed by bassist Willie Trotter (b. 1959, Manchester, England) and drummer Phil 'Toby' Tolman (ex-Ed Banger And The Nosebleeds). With their jazz-influenced forays and Linder's strong, sloganeering, elliptical feminist lyrics, the group were one of the most interesting of the Manchester new wave of the late 70s. The departure of Cadmon and later Trotter, replaced by Ian Devine (Ian Pincombe), saw the group change direction, though the jazz influence remained. Linder, a former girlfriend of the Buzzcocks' Howard Devoto, later became a well-publicized confidante of Morrissey. In spite of some inspired moments, the group almost wilfully avoided the mainstream. As manager Richard Boon concluded: 'Ludus were totally improvisational and their set list would read: "bass, drums, voice, next number". There was something self-limiting about Linder. Any time she seemed on the brink of a breakthrough, even if that meant selling 50 extra records, she would retreat, just like the poet Stevie Smith'. Ian Devine teamed up in 1989 with ex-Weekend singer Alison Statton to form Devine And Statton.

Lukather, Steve

b. USA. Perhaps best known for his accomplished guitar work with AOR supremos, Toto, Lukather started out as a session player. Indeed, the first Toto album was originally intended to be a one-off project and brought together the talents of some of the most notable Californian session musicians. Such was the success of the project that the arrangement soon became permanent and Toto went on to record many albums. Later albums saw varying musical styles and fluctuating commercial success. In 1989, Lukather released his first solo album. The album saw him joined by a whole host of guest players including fellow guitar maestros Eddie Van Halen and Steve Stevens, Richard Marx on vocals and Jan Hammer on keyboards. Lukather's recent live work with Toto has seen them once again adopt a heavier musical stance.

b. 20 March 1942, Los Angeles, California, USA. Luke was a rockabilly-style singer who had one Top 5 success, 'Susie Darlin'', in 1958. His family moved frequently, and in 1953 settled in Hawaii, where he learned to play guitar and ukulele. He was discovered by entertainer Kimo McVay, who introduced him to Bob Bertram, who then recorded Luke in his own Bertram International studio. The simplistic 'Susie Darlin'', named after Luke's younger sister, was recorded using a great deal of echo, with Bertram singing behind him and percussion created by simply banging two pens on a box (Bertram later reported that some 75 takes of the song were recorded). The single was issued on the Bertram International label and became a local favourite. It was then picked up by the larger Dot Records and began its 1958 ascent to number 5 (a few other singles were issued on Bertram while the Dot contract was already in effect). In 1959, Luke moved to California and continued to record, now backed by top session musicians such as Glen Campbell and Barney Kessel. Luke remained with Dot until 1962, but never had another hit, possibly because the more elaborate productions lacked the charm of the minimal Bertram record. In the early 60s, Luke moved to Missouri to complete his education and he subsequently became a university tutor. His only recording after leaving Dot was a remake of 'Susie Darlin" for K-Tel Records in the 70s.

Lukie D

b. Michael Kennedy, 1972, Cockburn Pen, Kingston, Jamaica, West Indies. Kennedy began his career performing on various local sound systems, building a solid reputation as a dancehall singer. His influences included local heroes Frankie Paul, Tenor Saw and ragga DJ Supercat. His popularity led to recording sessions that produced his biggest hit, 'Centre Of Attraction', alongside combination hits with Lieutenant Stitchie ('Don't Deny Me') and Beenie Man and Black Pearl ('Bag It Up'). Lukie D joined the Firehouse Crew, noted for fostering the careers of Luciano and Sizzla. While with the Firehouse crew he released his debut, Centre Of Attraction, featuring combinations with Mikey Spice and DJ Determine. He also released a series of hits, including 'I Won't Let You Go', 'Lonely Nights', 'Let Me Love You Now', 'Heavy Load' and 'You've Got It Going'. His success allowed him to commute between Jamaica and the USA, where he became acquainted with more diverse musical influences, resulting in the broadening of his repertoire. In 1997 he released a 20-track compilation featuring, unconventionally, versions of AC/DC's 'You Shook Me' and Queen's 'We Will Rock You'. His alternative approach garnered attention in the USA, but alienated the partisan dancehall crew.

Lullabys, Legends And Lies - Bobby Bare

When RCA gave Bobby Bare the freedom to make an album on his own terms, he decided to showcase the talents of one songwriter, Shel Silverstein. Silverstein, noted for his hit songs for Dr. Hook, gave Bare his best material - the shaggy dog story of 'The Winner', the whimsical story based around the Irish potato famine, 'The Wonderful Soup Stone', and the eight-minute saga of 'Rosalie's Good Eats Cafe' (the full lyric, reprinted in Playboy, runs to 40 verses!). Perhaps the album could have been a little more melodic, and perhaps the sentimentality should have been curbed, but, all in all, Shel had his 'Sure Hit Songwriters Pen' with this album and Bobby Bare, with his laconic, laid-back delivery, has never sounded better.

Lulu

b. Marie MacDonald McLaughlin Lawrie, 3 November 1948, Lennox Castle, Glasgow, Scotland. Lulu was originally a beat group vocalist with her own backing group the Luvvers, who comprised Ross Nelson (guitar), Jim Dewar (rhythm guitar), Alec Bell (keyboards), Jimmy Smith (saxophone), Tony Tierney (bass) and David Miller (drums). The 15-year-old singer first came to prominence with a rasping version of the Isley Brothers' 'Shout' in 1964. Under the tutelage of manager Marian Massey she survived a stormy couple of years during which only two of her eight singles charted. Abandoning the Luvvers along the way, she switched record labels from Decca to EMI/Columbia Records and found a new hitmaker in the form of Mickie Most. A cover of Neil Diamond's 'The Boat That I Row' saw an upsurge in her career during 1967, which was punctuated by an acting part in the movie To Sir With Love. The theme tune from the film gave her a million-selling US number 1, and in the UK it reached number 6, despite being relegated to b-side of the inferior 'Let's Pretend'. Further UK hits followed, notably 'Me, The Peaceful Heart', 'Boy' and 'I'm A Tiger'. Having established herself as an entertainer of wide appeal, Lulu was granted her own television series and later represented Britain in the Eurovision Song Contest. The painfully trite 'Boom-Bang-A-Bang' tied for first place and provided her highest UK chart placing at number 2. Her brief marriage to Maurice Gibb of the Bee Gees was followed by another switch of labels and musical styles when she worked with famed producer Jerry Wexler on two albums. A lean period of flop singles ended when David Bowie intervened to produce and arrange her hit version of 'The Man Who Sold The World'. During the 70s, she concentrated increasingly on stage work and developed her career as an all-round entertainer, a spin-off of which was becoming the long-standing model/endorser for the Freeman's mail-order catalogue. Appearances in Guys And Dolls, Song And Dance and the television programme The Secret Diary Of Adrian Mole distracted her from the studio but a disco re-recording of 'Shout', in 1986, repeated the Top 10 success of 22 years before. In 1993, Lulu released Independence, an album of 'modern disco-pop with a flavour of classic soul and R&B'. Co-produced by Bobby Womack and London Beat, the title track registered strongly in the UK and US charts, and was followed by another single, 'I'm Back For More', on which Lulu duetted with Womack. She was, by then, creating some of her own material, and one of her songs, 'I Don't Wanna Fight Any More', written with her brother, Billy Laurie, was recorded by Tina Turner.

Lulu Belle And Scotty

Lulu Belle (b. Myrtle Eleanor Cooper, 24 December 1913, Boone, North Carolina, USA) and Scott Wiseman (b. 8 November 1909, Spruce Pine, near Ingalls, North Carolina, USA, d. 31 January 1981). Lulu Belle learned to play the guitar and sing mountain songs as a child, but after the family relocated to Evanston, Illinois, in 1929, she first worked as a clerk. In 1932, she successfully auditioned at WLS television company Chicago and was given a spot on the National Barn Dance programme, where she initially worked with Red Foley. Wiseman grew up on the family farm and developed his first musical skills by learning to play a home-made banjo. He became interested in a musical career after seeing Bradley Kincaid perform and by working in his school holidays, he bought himself a guitar. In 1927, he made his radio debut, singing and playing in a manner that showed a distinct Kincaid influence, on WRVA Richmond. Initially doubtful that he could make his living by music, he decided to study for a teaching career. From 1929-32, he attended the Teachers College at Fairmont, West Virginia and obtained a degree. During these years, he wrote songs and, appearing as Skyland Scotty, was regularly featured on WMMN Fairmont. In 1933, he joined the National Barn Dance, where he began to work with Lulu Belle. He made his first recordings (solo) in December 1933, when, playing his guitar for one of the few times on record, he cut four songs for RCA-Victor. One of the songs was 'Home Coming Time In Happy Valley', which soon became a popular song for the duo. They were married on 13 December 1934, by which time they had become a very popular act. On stage, Scotty wore plain, casual attire and played banjo, while Lulu Belle dressed in old gingham styled dresses, pantalettes and usually wore pigtails. Their simple harmony singing, interspersed with comedy and novelty songs, endeared them to the network audience and gained them the nickname of the Sweethearts of Country Music. In 1936, Lulu Belle was voted the most popular woman on American radio and between 1938 and 1944, their national popularity saw them appear in seven films including Shine On Harvest Moon. They remained stars of the WLS National Barn Dance from 1933-58 but also had a spell on the Boone County Jamboree (later the Midwestern Hayride) on WLW Cincinnati, as well as playing on the Grand Ole Opry and the Ozark Jubilee. They were also regulars on WNNBQ-TV Chicago from 1949-57. Over the years, they recorded for various labels including Conqueror, Vocalion, and Bluebird. They popularized many songs including 'Mountain Dew' (written by Scotty with Bascombe Lunsford), 'Remember Me', 'My Heart Cries For You', 'Tying The Leaves' and 'Does Your Spearmint Lose Its Flavour On The Bed Post Overnight?' (a UK pop hit for Lonnie Donegan with 'Chewing Gum' substituted for 'Spearmint' in 1959). Perhaps their best-known song is one that originated at a time when Scotty was hospitalized with appendix trouble. During a visit, Lulu Belle said 'Have I told you lately that I love you' and it inspired him to write a song. Gene Autry recorded it in November 1945 and in 1946, it was a Top 5 US country hit for Autry, Tex Ritter, Red Foley and Foy Willing. It went on to become a country standard and has been recorded over the years by many artists, including Bing Crosby with the Andrews Sisters, Jim Reeves, Van Morrison and Elvis Presley. In 1958, after Scotty had obtained an MA Teaching degree at Northwestern University at Evanston, they semi-retired from the entertainment business. They moved back to Spruce Pine, where Scotty taught people with speech problems at the college. They also bought a cattle farm but still made a few concert appearances and recorded for the Starday label in the 60s. At one time, they presented their Breakfast In The Blue Ridge radio show supposedly live from their home, but in reality, it was taped in Chicago. They appeared at the 1975 Fan Fair in Nashville and on the Opry, but generally during the 70s, Scotty continued to teach and they restricted themselves to local appearances. In 1971, his many songs saw him elected to the Nashville Songwriters' International Hall of Fame. Lulu Belle became interested in politics and in 1974, she was elected to the North Carolina House of Representatives. Scotty died following a heart attack when driving home from Gainsville, Florida. Lulu Belle remarried in 1983 (Ernest Stamey, an old family friend) and in 1986, she recorded a solo album for the Old Homestead label.

Luman, Bob

b. Robert Glynn Luman, 15 April 1937, Blackjack, near Nacogdoches, Texas, USA, d. 27 December 1978, Nashville, Tennessee, USA. Luman's father, Joe, a school caretaker, bus driver and gifted musician, taught his son country music, but Luman's first love was baseball, which he played on a semi-professional basis until 1959. He was influenced by seeing Elvis Presley in concert, later saying, 'That was the last time I tried to sing like Webb Pierce or Lefty Frizzell'. His band then won a talent contest sponsored by the Texas Future Farmers of America and judged by Johnny Horton. In 1955, Luman recorded the original version of 'Red Cadillac And A Black Moustache' and also a scorching 'Red Hot' for Imperial Records. He joined Louisiana Hayride as replacement for Johnny Cash and came into contact with guitarist James Burton and bass player James Kirkland, whom he recruited for his band. Unfortunately for Luman, Ricky Nelson was so impressed by Luman's musicians that he made them a better offer. After a brief, unsuccessful period with Capitol Records, Luman moved to Warner Brothers, who released 'Class Of '59' and 'Dreamy Doll', both featuring Roy Buchanan. He had a transatlantic hit with Boudleaux Bryant's satire on 'death discs' such as 'El Paso' and 'One Of Us (Will Weep Tonight)' in 'Let's Think About Living'. 'If we keep losing our singers like this,' he concluded, 'I'll be the only one you can buy.' He failed to repeat his success, despite such clever novelties as 'The Great Snowman' and 'Private Eye'. After spending part of the early 60s in the army due to the draft laws, he became a member of the Grand Ole Opry in 1964 and made many country records for the Hickory label, including John D. Loudermilk's witty 'The File'. He became a big-selling US country artist via his Epic recordings, 'When You Say Love', 'Lonely Women Make Good Lovers' and 'Neither One Of Us Wants To Be The First To Say Goodbye', subsequently a pop hit for Gladys Knight And The Pips.

In 1976, he underwent major surgery and then, prompted and produced by Johnny Cash, he recorded Alive And Well. Despite the title, he collapsed and died shortly after an appearance at the Grand Ole Opry. In recent years, Luman's work has been reassessed with retrospectives and, like Johnny Burnette, it is his early, rockabilly work that most interests collectors. To quote one of his country hits, 'Good Things Stem From Rock 'n' Roll.'

Lumpy Gravy - Frank Zappa

Was it that Frank Zappa's music was so far ahead of its time, or was it just not what we thought a weirdo genius like him should be doing? Either way, since his death, his stature as a serious composer has grown. Lumpy Gravy missed most by a mile because it was the first of Zappa's 'challenging' orchestral pieces, and not what his audience had come to expect. Performed by the Abnuceals Emuukha Electric Symphony Orchestra & Chorus, it was a lengthy instrumental suite broken up by equally 'challenging' dialogue. On the back cover, Zappa looks out and asks, 'is this phase 2 of We're Only In It For The Money?'. No, we don't think so.

Luna

Singer/guitarist Dean Wareham (b. New Zealand), a graduate of Harvard University, left his previous band, Galaxie 500, in 1991. Luna effectively became his solo venture, with contributions from former members of the Feelies and the Chills. Luna's debut album, Lunapark, revisited Wareham's famously brittle songwriting, but added more rhythmic propulsion to the material, particularly on 'Slide'. The same track also headed Luna's 1993 EP, which included several cover versions alluding to Wareham's more obvious influences (notably a version of the Dream Syndicate's 'That's What You Always Say'). Bewitched was a comparative disappointment, with the inappropriate production reducing Wareham's power as a natural lyricist. Produced by Wareham with Pat McCarthy and Mario Salvati, Penthouse pushed the group towards more mainstream approval with songs such as 'Double Feature' and '23 Minutes In Brussels'. In 1996 Luna contributed a version of Donovan's 'Season Of The Witch' to the soundtrack of a new film about Andy Warhol, I Shot Andy Warhol. The dark and hypnotic Pup Tent was another well-received album.

Lunachicks

Legend has it that New York's Lunachicks were rescued from a life of street gangs, drinking, idolatry and terrorism against humanity by being discovered by Sonic Youth, who recommended the all-female band to Blast First Records so vociferously that the Lunachicks' debut, Babysitters On Acid, was barely recorded before it was let loose upon an unsuspecting public. The 'not-at-all-nice-girls' turned their rebellious behaviour into a stage act. Becky (drums), Squid Sid (bass), Gina (lead guitar) and Sindi (guitar) were the musicians with a taste for excessive volume; Theo was the singer with a predilection for blood-splattered wedding gowns. The Lunachicks can only be described as 'different'. Binge And Purge was a marked (and listenable) improvement over their debut. With new drummer Chip on board the band took a backward step with Jerk Of All Trades, which lacked the inventiveness of the previous album.

Lunceford, Jimmie

b. 6 June 1902, Fulton, Mississippi, USA, d. 12 July 1947. At school in Denver, Colorado, Lunceford studied under Wilberforce Whiteman, father of Paul Whiteman. He later read for a degree in music at Fisk University, where his studies included composition, orchestration and musical theory and he also developed his precocious ability as a performer on many instruments although he preferred alto saxophone. After leaving Fisk, he worked briefly in New York in bands led by Elmer Snowden and others before taking up a teaching post at Manassas High School in Memphis, Tennessee. He formed a band at the school which included Moses Allen (bass) and Jimmy Crawford (drums). Later, Willie Smith and pianist Eddie Wilcox were added before Lunceford took the band on tour. They became very popular and after several such tours Lunceford decided in 1929 to make the band his full-time activity. For the next few years, with the same nucleus of musicians, he toured and broadcast throughout the mid-west. In 1933, the band reached New York and quickly established a reputation. More broadcasts, national tours and, eventually, some successful records made Lunceford's one of the most popular black bands of the swing era. The band's arrangers were originally Wilcox and Smith but later additions were Eddie Durham and Sy Oliver. It was the arrival of Oliver that set the seal on Lunceford's greatest period. Thanks to excellent charts, brilliantly performed by a meticulously rehearsed reed section (credit due largely to Smith), biting brass and a powerful rhythm section sparked by Crawford, the band became one of the best of the period. In addition to the band's sound they also looked good on stage. The Lunceford band was chiefly responsible for the showmanship which crept into many subsequent big band performances, but although many copied, none ever equalled the élan of Lunceford's band, especially the members of the trumpet section who would toss their horns high into the air, catching them on the beat. Apart from Smith, the band had good soloists in tenor saxophonist Joe Thomas and trombonist Trummy Young who gave the band a hit recording with his own composition, 'Tain't What You Do (It's The Way That You Do It'. Oliver's departure in mid-summer 1939 to join Tommy Dorsey was a blow but the band continued to use his arrangements. How long this state of affairs could have continued is debatable because the band's days were numbered. Lunceford's personal behaviour was distressing many of his long-serving sidemen. Their dismay at the manner in which he spent money (on buying airplanes for example), while refusing to meet what they saw as reasonable pay demands led, in 1942, to a mass walk-out. The band continued with replacements but the flair and excitement had gone. Although recordings over the next few years show a new promise any further improvement was forestalled when Lunceford died suddenly in July 1947. Although often overlooked in surveys of swing era big bands, during its glory days Lunceford's was one of the best in its precision playing of superbly professional arrangements, it had no betters and very few equals.

Lunch, Lydia

b. Lydia Koch, 1959, Rochester, New York, USA. The provocative Lydia Lunch was a pivotal figure in New York's 'no wave' scene of the late 70s and has worked with an array of talent since then. After spells with Teenage Jesus And The Jerks and Beirut Slump (the latter were restricted to one US single, 'Try Me'), Lunch opted for the freedom of solo work with 1980's acclaimed Queen Of Siam on the Ze label. Her next project, Eight-Eyed Spy, toyed with funk and R&B while retaining her uncompromising vocal style and violent, experimental musical approach. Then came 13:13 on the Ruby label, which benefited from a harder production and more co-ordinated sound. In 1982 she shared a 12-inch EP with the Birthday Party on 4AD Records, The Agony Is The Ecstasy, revealing her increasing fascination with the baser instincts of human nature. Members of the Birthday Party also backed her on 'Some Velvet Morning', while Einsturzende Neubauten joined her for 'Thirsty'. This marriage of the New York and Berlin undergrounds was further developed on 'Der Karibische Western', on Zensor with Die Haut. Lunch continued her collaborative ventures in 1983, working with Danish band Sort Sol. 1984's In Limbo, a mini-album for Cabaret Voltaire's Doublevision label, reintroduced her to solo work, and she soon founded Widowspeak Productions in 1985 as an outlet to document her work, starting, appropriately, with the Uncensored Lydia Lunch cassette. This included 'Daddy Dearest' - a document of the abuse she suffered at the hands of her father. After a project with Michael Gira (Swans), entitled Hard Rock (a cassette on Ecstatic Peace), Lunch teamed up with New York art rock pranksters Sonic Youth for 'Death Valley '69', a menacing record concerning the Manson killings, which launched Blast First Records in the UK. An equally sinister solo offering, The Drowning Of Lady Hamilton, was followed by a 10-inch EP recorded with No Trend, Heart Of Darkness. The next release for Widowspeak was a limited edition box set, The Intimate Diaries Of The Sexually Insane, containing a cassette of chronic case histories, a magazine and a book, Adulterers Anonymous, co-written by Lunch. The remixed and remastered double album retrospective, Hysterie, summarized her work from 1976-86, before she paired with the man behind Foetus and Clint Ruin, Jim Thirlwell, for the awesome Stinkfist project in 1989. That year also witnessed Harry Crews, an all-female, wall-of-guitar-sound group in which Lunch was joined by Sonic Youth bassist Kim Gordon. She spent 1993 working on a film script, Psychomenstruum. Lunch, in conjunction with her soul mate Thirlwell, has also become known as an avid opponent of censorship. Her own work is uncompromisingly confrontational and lurid, including videos featuring highly explicit sexual activity. The politics of outrage remain her gospel. Rude Hieroglyphics was a provocative collaboration with X singer Cervenka.

Lund, Art

b. Arthur London, 1 April 1915, Salt Lake City, Utah, USA, d. 2 June 1990, Salt Lake City, Iowa, USA. An actor and singer, with a fine, strong baritone voice and rugged good looks, Lund sang with Jimmy Joy's Band, before attracting the attention of a far more famous clarinet leader, Benny Goodman, in the late 30s. During his two spells with Goodman in the 40s, which were separated by a four-year stint with the US Navy in the South Pacific, he duetted with Peggy Lee on a recording of 'Winter Weather', and also sang on other band sides such as 'Don't Be A Baby, Baby', 'I Don't Know Enough About You' and the immensely popular 'Blue Skies'. When he went solo in 1947, Lund immediately had a US number 1 with Mack Gordon and Edmund Goulding's lovely ballad, 'Mam'selle', which he followed, through until 1953, with other hits such as 'Peg O' My Heart', 'And Mimi', 'But Beautiful', 'Love Is So Terrific', 'Hair Of Gold' (with the Crew Chiefs), 'You Call Everybody Darling', 'On A Slow Boat To China', 'I've Got My Love To Keep Me Warm', 'Mona Lisa', 'Cincinatti Ding Dong', and 'Crying In The Chapel'. During the early 50s Lund appeared in a number of provincial productions of musicals such as Wonderful Town, Fiorello!, and No Strings, as well as various straight plays. In 1956, he created the role of Joey in Frank Loesser's hit musical, The Most Happy Fella, on Broadway. He also appeared in the 1960 London production, starred in two New York City Center revivals. Lund's other Broadway musicals, Donnybrook! (1963), in which he played a prizefighter with a conscience, and Sophie (1963), a celebration of the life of Sophie Tucker, both flopped. From the 50s onwards, he appeared on US television in programmes such as Gunsmoke, Little House On The Prairie, and The Rockford Files, and in the late 60s he began to appear in feature films. In later years, Lund sang at Swing Era nostalgia nights, and was reported to be working in cabaret shortly before he died.

● FILMS: The Molly Maguires (1970), Bucktown (1975), The Last American Hero (1973).

Lundberg, Victor

b. 1923, Grand Rapids, Michigan, USA. Victor Lundberg provided the inevitable response to the protest recordings of the mid-60s, 'An Open Letter To My Teenage Son'. Lundberg was a former news reporter and radio announcer who owned a company which created radio and television commercials when, in 1967, he sought to address the current 'generation gap' with his patriotic spoken-word 'letter' addressing the youth of America on how to 'straighten up and fly right'. Whether his words of advice were observed by the kids or their parents, enough copies of the single, on Liberty Records, sold to push it into the US Top 10.

● ALBUMS: Open Letter To My Teenage Son (1967)★★★.

Lundy, Ted

b. Teddy Joe Lundy, 26 January 1937, Galax, Virginia, USA, d. 23 June 1980. It was hardly surprising that Lundy had a great interest in music. His great-uncle, Emmett Lundy, was a famous old-time fiddler and both his parents played instruments. He first played guitar aged eight, but after hearing Earl Scruggs' new style of banjo playing, as opposed to the more common old-time clawhammer style, he adopted the banjo as his main instrument. After playing on local radio in 1951, he joined Jimmy Williams' Shady Valley Boys, with whom he played at WHIS Bluefield, West Virginia and WCYB Bristol, Tennessee. After relocating to Delaware, he played on a part-time basis with several artists, including Rome Johnson. He recorded for Starday with Alex Campbell in the early 60s, before forming his own Southern Mountain Boys, which included his cousin Jerry Lundy (fiddle), Fred Hannah (mandolin) and Bob Paisley (guitar). They recorded a few sides for New River in 1962 but did not release an album until 10 years later. After one album for the German-owned GHP label, they moved to Rounder Records. The band continued to play the circuits and appeared at festivals through to 1980, although there were several changes of personnel, including Paisley, who formed his own group in 1979. The Southern Mountain Boys disbanded after Lundy committed suicide in 1980.

Lunn, Robert

b. Robert Rainey Lunn, 28 November 1912, Franklin, Tennessee, USA, d. 1966. Little is known of Lunn's early life, probably because of the fact that he apparently expected writers to pay for interviews. He may well have worked in vaudeville before he arrived on the Grand Ole Opry in 1930, with an act that included comedy and ventriloquism, but mainly the gimmick that led to him acquiring the pseudonym of 'the Talking Blues Man'. A left-handed guitarist, he used a heavy guitar vamp as a backing, while he talked his way through recitations that sometimes contained countless verses (the practice had previously been used in the 20s by a vaudeville artist called Chris Bouchillon, whom Lunn may have seen). It is unlikely that comedy numbers such as 'Tooth Picking Time In False Teeth Valley' would ensure stardom today, but by the mid-30s, with his band the Talking Blue Boys, he was a very popular Opry act and remained so for many years (he also worked on occasions with Roy Acuff and his talking blues style was used later by folk-singer Woody Guthrie). A noted practical joker, Lunn would sometimes stand at the stage door and audition any would-be Opry members, who wrongly assumed him to be the stage manager, in the street. Apart from a break during military service in World War II, he remained on the Opry until 1958 and toured with Acuff to Australia and Hawaii in 1959. He very rarely sang and his recording career consisted of a single Starday album. Lunn died following a heart attack in 1966.

● ALBUMS: The Original Talking Blues Man (Starday 1962)★★★.

Lunny, Donal

Sometimes referred to as 'Ireland's Quincy Jones', Donal Lunny is his nation's most respected traditional music producer and performer. A specialist in the bouzouki and keyboards, Lunny originally worked alongside Christy Moore as co-founder of Planxty, a band more responsible than any other for making traditional Irish music relevant and engaging to contemporary musicians and audiences. Following an equally productive spell with the Bothy Band, Lunny also worked with Moore in Moving Hearts, another innovative group who combined folk with rock music to great effect. However, since that group's demise in 1984 Lunny has continued to enjoy a peripatetic existence, collaborating with musicians from almost every ethnic tradition and musical style. Arguably his best work of the late 80s and early 90s, however, has been with artists who share his heritage - notably Christy Moore's solo work, and albums by Mary Black, Capercaillie (whose Manus Lunny is his brother) and Maire Brennan (of Clannad). His interest in contemporary styles has been invigorated by his son Oisin's involvement in the radical hip-hop politics of Marxman.

By 1995 Lunny had appeared on more than 100 albums as a session player, producer, arranger or as a member of Planxty, Bothy Band or Moving Hearts. Among the most notable have been Paul Brady's Welcome Here Kind Stranger (1978), Kate Bush's The Dreaming (1982), Van Morrison's A Sense Of Wonder (1983), Capercaillie's Sidewalk, Elvis Costello's Spike and Altan's Horse With A Heart (1989) and Bill Whelan's The Seville Suite (1991).

In 1996 he served as arranger for the French entry in the Eurovision Song Contest - a Breton folk song performed by Capercaillie's Karen Matheson, and narrated a 13-part Irish television series featuring performances by traditional and modern acts such as Mark Knopfler, Robert Plant and Jimmy Page, and Michael O Suilleabhain. He also corralled some of his former friends and collaborators together in order to record the 1996 set, Common Ground. This featured performances from Bono and Adam Clayton of U2 (a new version of their 'Tomorrow'), Neil and Tim Finn of Crowded House ('Mary Of The South Seas'), Kate Bush, Elvis Costello and Maire Brennan.

LuPone, Patti

b. 21 April 1949, Northport, New York, USA. An actress and singer who left several well-known Hollywood and Broadway stars feeling bitterly disappointed and distraught when she won the role of Norma Desmond in Andrew Lloyd Webber's 1993 London production of Sunset Boulevard. LuPone made her stage debut, tap dancing, at the age of four, and later took dancing classes with Martha Graham. She trained for the stage at the Juilliard School where she met the actor Kevin Kline. A six-year personal relationship was supplemented by a joint association with John Housman's Actor's Company, which gave them both invaluable experience in the straight theatre, and resulted in their appearance together - as the bride and bridegroom - in a short-lived Broadway musical, The Robber Bridegroom (1975). After several other flops, including The Baker's Wife (1976) and Working (78), LuPone won Tony and Drama Desk Awards for her performance in the leading role of Evita (1979) on Broadway, and stayed with the show 'until the strain of being obnoxious and dying from cancer every night got too much'. She returned to serious theatre in the provinces and had occasionally effective roles in films such as 1941 and Witness. In 1985 LuPone moved to London and appeared firstly in The Cradle Will Rock. In the same year, she became the first American actress and singer to gain a principal role with the Royal Shakespeare Company, in the hit musical Les Misérables. The names of both shows appeared on her 1985 Olivier Award. In complete contrast to those two roles, in 1986 she played Lady Bird Johnson in a US mini-series based on the ex-President's life, and, a year later, was back on Broadway in an acclaimed revival of Anything Goes. In the late 80s and early 90s LuPone had a major role in the popular US situation comedy Life Goes On, and experienced some difficulty breaking free from her contract when the call came from Lloyd Webber. She first played Norma Desmond at the composer's Sydmonton Festival in the summer of 1992. Declining the use of the book on stage, she learnt the part and gave what was regarded as a 'sensational' performance. Soon afterwards it became obvious that she had stolen the role-of-a-lifetime from 'under the noses' of bigger names such as Meryl Streep, Angela Lansbury, Liza Minnelli, and Julie Andrews. Sunset Boulevard opened in the West End in July 1993, and although LuPone enjoyed a personal triumph, her contract to take the show to Broadway was cancelled, resulting in a pay-off 'in the region of $1 million'.

Lurie, Evan

Lurie was a part of a group of young New York musicians, including his brother, John Lurie (saxophone) plus Arto Lindsay and Henry Kaiser (guitars), and Anton Fier (drums). They were unwilling to recognize the boundaries between different forms of popular and not-so-popular music and so happily mixed avant garde techniques with pop music and jazz. Lurie became the keyboard player with the Lounge Lizards, a band led by his brother John, which was one of the first New York bands to play jazz with a pop sensibility and present it in that adaptation of 50s style which became fashionable in the 80s. The black-and-white cover on the band's first album showed them in a picture reminiscent of the 50s and this was typical of the approach. Lurie is a technically able pianist who is able to adapt his playing to the very varied repertoire encompassed by the band, everything from 'Harlem Nocturne' to Thelonious Monk pieces like 'Epistrophy'. Lurie also wrote music for the band.

Lurkers

This first-generation UK punk quartet formed during 1977 in Uxbridge, London. Comprising Arturo Bassick (b. Arthur Billingsley; bass), Howard Wall (lead vocals), Pete Stride (guitar) and Manic Esso (b. Pete Haynes; drums), they were heralded as the British answer to the Ramones. They had four minor UK hit singles between 1978 and 1979, with 'Ain't Got A Clue' and 'I Don't Need To Tell Her' proving the most successful. Bassick had departed quickly, and was replaced first by Kim Bradshaw (ex-Saints) then, more permanently, Nigel Moore. The Lurkers specialized in two-minute blasts of punky rock 'n' roll, delivered with an almost naïve charm. Their simple, yet effective style was instantly accessible and exuded warmth as well as energy. They never received the recognition their talents deserved, however, because of a lack of image and media support. Pete Stride teamed up with John Plain (the Boys) in 1980 to record New Guitars In Town. The material on this album was very much in a Lurkers vein, but again it met with limited success. The Lurkers were inactive for a short time at this juncture, with Stride and Moore then bringing in new singer Mark Fincham. The group re-formed in 1988 (with the Stride/Bassick/Esso/Moore line-up) appearing on punk nostalgia bills and touring widely in Europe as well as recording new material.

Luscious Jackson

The New York-based band Luscious Jackson enjoyed almost universal press acclaim in the 90s with their spacious, bass-driven hip-hop/rock crossover. Their sound sampled New York life first-hand, with breakbeats married to traffic noise and overheard conversation, coupled with a slouching bass and guitar that managed to effect a Brooklyn drawl of its own. The band were actually most heavily influenced by UK groups such as Delta 5, the Slits and Gang Of Four. Thus inspired, Jill Cunniff (vocals, bass), Gabrielle Glaister (vocals, guitar) and Kate Schellenbach (drums) used to forge ID to get into Manhatten's Lower East Side's punk clubs, as a result of which Schellenbach was recruited as drummer by the Beastie Boys, in their original hardcore guise. Having worked on their first two releases, Pollywog Stew and Cookie Puss, she later drummed with Hippies With Guns before rejoining her old friends.

However, the trio then went off to separate art schools (Cunniff and Glaister also formed a punk band, Jaws, in San Francisco, and Cunniff edited the fanzines Decline of Art and The Golfing Experience). They returned to New York in 1991, and Cunniff and Glaister began to write short sketches, songs and rhymes together, recruiting Cunniff's art school friend, the classically trained musician Vivian Trimble, to add keyboards for their first shows. With a guitar and beatbox as their musical foundation, they added primal but amusing sampling on their first demo tape. Old friend Mike D heard it and was impressed enough to release it, virtually unchanged, as the group's 1992 debut mini-album on the Beastie Boys' Grand Royal label. Many were impressed by their erudite wit, displayed both in the songs themselves and in the choice of samples. Natural Ingredients was more reserved musically, but was just as barbed lyrically, concentrating on nostalgia, romance and relationships: 'A lot of the lyrics on this record are about coming to terms with womanhood and the search for the identity and confusion that women tend to experience in adolescence or in long-term relationships' - not that the band made it sound as prosaic as that, with their clever use of irresistible harmonies and low-slung bass on the fine track 'Energy Sucker' and promotional single 'Deep Shag'. The Daniel Lanois-produced third album tempered the band's aggression with more relaxed grooves, and featured backing vocals from Emmylou Harris on 'Sooth Yourself'. The prolific Cunniff and Trimble have also recorded as Kostars.

Lush

Though they made their live debut at the Camden Falcon on 6 March 1988, little was heard of London-based Lush's serene pop qualities and full-bodied guitar sound until their mini-album Scar was issued in October 1989 on 4AD Records. It was a critically acclaimed debut, and red-haired Miki Berenyi (b. 18 March 1967, St Stephen's, London, England; vocals, guitar), Emma Anderson (b. 10 June 1964, Raynes Park, London, England; guitar, backing vocals), Steve Rippon (bass guitar) and Christopher Acland (b. 7 September 1966, Lancaster, Lancashire, England, d. 17 October 1996; drums) found themselves topping the independent charts. Previously Anderson, a former DHSS clerical assistant, had been bass player for the Rover Girls, Berenyi had played with I-Goat, Fuhrer Five and the Lillies, while Acland had been a member of Infection, Panik, A Touch Of Hysteria, Poison In The Machine and others. Tours with the Darling Buds and Loop followed Lush's initial breakthrough, plus an appearance on BBC2's Snub TV and a John Peel radio session.

The EP Mad Love, issued in February 1990, was less raw but soared to new heights with the help of producer Robin Guthrie from the Cocteau Twins. Lush's consistent coverage in the music press, not least for their perpetual appearances at pre/post-gig parties, made them one of the leading UK independent groups of the year; one that was taken up with tours in the UK and Europe and an appearance at the Glastonbury Festival. Another EP, Sweetness And Light, offered a further move towards a commercial pop sound and only narrowly missed the national charts. The three EPs were compiled, originally for the US market, on Gala. Much of 1991 was spent recording the long-awaited full debut album, during which time they also issued an EP, Black Spring (which included a cover version of Dennis Wilson's 'Fallin' In Love'). When Spooky was finally released, many were disappointed, some insisting that Guthrie's production had swamped the group sound. Nevertheless, the album reached the national Top 20 and number 1 in the UK independent chart. During the winter of 1991/2 the group line-up changed when bassist Steve Rippon left amicably, to be replaced by New Musical Express picture researcher Phil King (b. 29 April 1960, Chiswick, London, England). His musical apprenticeship had already included stints in the Servants, Felt, Biff Bang Pow! and See See Rider. The critical reception that awaited 1994's second album, Split, was fervent, with its cool guitar textures winning over many who had doubted their staying power. Berenyi and Anderson, dismissed in some quarters as 'two pissheads from London', had dispelled not only that notion, but also that of them being a 'typically glacial post-punk 4AD band', with a stunningly evocative collection of pop songs. Although Lovelife failed to a certain degree in putting Lush in the premier league of pop bands (as was touted) it did contain the engaging 'Single Girl', an effortless classic pop song, and '500', a paean to the tiny Fiat car. Anderson stated to the NME: 'I was sick of writing about bloody men, so I wrote about being in love with a car. They're more reliable than men'. Acland took his own life in October 1996, and the group disbanded the following year.

Berenyi was reported to be writing solo material, King joined the Jesus And Mary Chain and Anderson formed Sing Sing.

Lusher, Don

b. 6 November 1923, Peterborough, Cambridgeshire, England. Lusher grew up in a musical family, his grandfather, father and mother playing and singing in Salvation Army bands. Lusher learned to play trombone and pursued his musical interests at school. At the age of 18, he went into the army but contrived to keep up his playing by joining Salvation Army bands in any town he happened to be near. A visit to a camp he was at by Geraldo And His Orchestra, in whose trombone section was Ted Heath, convinced Lusher that once the war was over that was how he would make his career. In 1947, he left the army, bought a secondhand trombone, and joined a band led by an army friend in Tenby, Wales. He then joined Joe Daniels And His Hot Shots, but only a few weeks later the band folded. Lusher's next professional engagement was with Lou Preager at London's leading dancehall, the Hammersmith Palais. He then worked in a band led by Maurice Winnick at Ciro's Club, following this with important and career-moulding engagements with the Squadronaires and the Ted Heath band, with which he visited the USA. By the 60s Lusher was one of the UK's best-known trombonists, touring extensively with prominent artists, such as Frank Sinatra. Subsequently, Lusher led big bands for special television and radio appearances and for limited concert work, activities which continued into the early 90s. He also established a reputation as an educator, working in this capacity in the USA, Japan and Australia as well as in the UK. Despite his international fame, Lusher has never lost contact with his musical origins and regularly performs and records with brass bands. An outstanding technician, Lusher's flowing, precisely articulated playing style remains an object lesson to fellow trombonists in all areas of music.

Lusk, Professor Eddie

b. 21 September 1948, Chicago, Illinois, USA, d. 26 August 1992, Chicago, Illinois, USA. Lusk's parents were both ministers in the Pentecostal Church and ran The Lusk Bible Way Center on Chicago's South Side. When he was old enough, his mother delegated the piano-playing duties to her son. Lusk was also tempted by the blues sounds emanating from Pepper's Lounge nearby and spent his teenage years struggling against their influence. He was ordained in the Pentecostal faith in 1968 but found the temptation of the blues too strong. He became music director at the Shiloh Academy, thus inspiring the nickname given to him by Professor Longhair. He worked with Luther Allison for three years and throughout the 80s recorded with artists such as Fenton Robinson, Syl Johnson, Koko Taylor, Buddy Guy and Michael Coleman, and toured with Jimmy Dawkins, Phil Guy and Otis Rush. He formed his own band, the Professor's Blues Review with vocalist Gloria Hardiman, and recorded 'Meet Me With Your Black Drawers On' for the 1987 anthology The New Bluebloods. On his only solo album, Professor Strut, Hardiman was replaced by Karen Carroll. He continued to be in demand for sessions, some of which remain unissued. He and his band appeared in the 1991 film V. I. Warshawski, and later in the year toured Europe with Coleman and Kenny Neal. In the summer of 1992, Lusk was diagnosed with colon cancer, brought on by AIDS. In desperation, he took his own life by jumping into the Chicago River.

Lust For Life - Iggy Pop

Iggy Pop and David Bowie at the height of their respective powers presented a formidable artistic engine, and Lust For Life saw them working up a full head of steam. Two songs will need little introduction - 'Lust For Life' and 'The Passenger' are as intrinsic to the tapestry of 70s rock music as sundry Beatles efforts were to the previous decade (their influence on 90s film soundtracks is a testament to their durability). Those monolithic jukebox favourites aside, listeners may also find space in their hearts for the swaggering 'Neighbourhood Threat' (shades of the Stooges, without the musical clatter) and the disquieting 'Turn Blue', written from the viewpoint of an overdosing junkie.

Lutcher, Joe

Brother of Nellie Lutcher, Joe moved from Lake Charles, Louisiana, to California where he played his alto saxophone with the Nat 'King' Cole Trio, the Will Mastin Trio and the Mills Brothers. He then signed for Capitol Records in the summer of 1947 (at the same time as Nellie) and had strong sellers with his 'Strato Cruiser', 'No Name Boogie' and the US Top 10 hit 'Shuffle Boogie'. Leaving Capitol in 1948, Lutcher's Jump Band went on to record for Specialty Records, Modern (resulting in a moderate hit with 'Mardi Gras' in 1949, which uncovered his Louisiana connections), London, Peacock, and several small obscure independent labels. Meanwhile, Lutcher undertook some session work, before giving up the 'devil's music' and becoming an evangelist in the mid-50s; he is said to be responsible for converting Little Richard from secular to spiritual music in the late 50s.

Lutcher, Nellie

b. 15 October 1915, Lake Charles, Louisiana, USA. A singer and pianist, notable for her percussive piano-playing and distinctive scat-vocal approach, Lutcher initially played in a big band with her bass-playing father before moving on to join the Southern Rhythm Boys band. She played clubs on the west coast during the late 30s/early 40s and signed to Capitol Records in 1947 following an appearance on a March Of Dimes charity show. Her first release, the R&B-styled 'Hurry On Down', became a US Top 20 hit that same year and was followed by 'He's A Real Gone Guy', 'The Song Is Ended' and 'Fine Brown Frame'. The latter was a cover version of an earlier hit by bandleader Buddy Johnson. She later moved on to Liberty Records, recording a highly rated album, Our New Nellie. However, her popularity had faded, and during the late 60s and early 70s she took a staff job with the Hollywood Local Branch of the Musicians' Union, still occasionally playing clubs such as the New York Cookery.

Luther, Frank

b. Frank Luther Crow, 5 August 1900, near Hutchinson, Kansas, USA, d. 16 November 1980. A competent musician, Luther was one of the early pioneers who popularized western songs with city dwellers, via his personal appearances and radio performances. Sometimes working with his brother Phil, he toured and by the mid-20s, had established a considerable reputation. He had noted the success of Carson Robison and Vernon Dalhart with their country ballads and cowboy songs and performed similar material. In 1928, Robison and Dalhart split and Luther and Robison began to work together. They recorded under various names including the Highhatters, the Homespun Trio and Men About Town. They even used some of Dalhart's own pseudonyms, and Luther was very adept at imitating the latter's nasal tones. However, they are perhaps best remembered for their fine recordings as Bud and Joe Billings. Their recordings proved good sellers and were released in various countries; the 1929 Regal Zonophone recording, 'Will The Angels Play Their Harps For Me', was very popular in the UK.

Another combination in 1931 saw 'In The Cumberland Mountains' listed as Bud And Joe Billings and Carson Robison (brother Phil Crow being the extra vocalist). They occasionally performed as the Carson Robison Trio with Luther's wife, Zora Layman, as the third member. (Layman, a Kansas-born singer and fiddler, also recorded in her own right, being especially remembered for her recording of 'Seven Years With The Wrong Man'. She and Luther divorced in 1940, but continued to worked together for several years. A pioneer of early country music, she later worked as a singing teacher and died in October 1981.) In 1934, Luther made recordings with singing cowboy Ray Whitley. The use of pseudonyms, and the fact that in those days, artists recorded for different labels, saw Luther appear on a vast number of recordings. It has been suggested that, in one year, he made over 500 recordings and it has been estimated that he probably appeared on 3,000 in all. In the mid-30s, he became interested in recording cowboy and other songs especially for children. He finally worked on the production of children's material for Decca. He co-wrote 'Barnacle Bill The Sailor' with Robison and some of their recordings may be found on Just A Melody (Old Homestead).

Luvdup Twins

Twins Mark and Adrian Luvdup, who won numerous UK music press Single Of The Week plaudits with their debut 12-inch, 'Good Times'. This was released on Manchester's UFG label (set up by E-Lustrious), and featured mixes from Jon Dasilva and John McCready. The duo play out at the Jolly Roger night in their native Manchester's Paradise Factory venue, review for Mixmag Update (having formerly run the well-regarded Luvdup fanzine), and have remixed for Awesome 3 among others.

b. Luz Casal, Spain. Originally recording under her full name, Luz has become Spain's best known female rock/pop singer since she made her debut in 1980 with the hit single, 'El Ascensor' ('The Elevator'). Previously she had played with the 'exploitation' rock band the Fannys. 'El Ascensor' provided the impetus to procure a significant recording budget for her 1982 debut album, recorded in Madrid, Brussels and Amsterdam. The success of Luz made her a star attraction throughout Europe, confirmed by her successful tour of Czechoslovakia in 1985.

This was followed by a major tour of Latin America where her popularity is also huge. A series of strong-selling albums followed throughout the 80s without matching the impact of the debut, but her international profile again rose in the 90s. She appeared alongside U2, Sting and Bruce Springsteen at the 1991 Amnesty International Concert in Chile, while her album of that year, A Contraluz ('Backlighting'), sold more than half a million copies in Spain alone. In the three-year interim before Como La Flor Prometida ('Like The Promised Flower') she toured Japan, Europe and Latin America. With another huge commercial success behind her, Luz remained a fixture in Spain's public eye, not least due to the outspoken and frank opinions given to media interviewers.

Lyle, Kami

b. Kimberlee Howg, 7 September 1968, Edina, Minnesota, USA. As a child, Nashville-based singer-songwriter Kami Lyle ranged far and wide in the ravines and woods of Minnesota - experiences that would later inform her songwriting. After her parents divorced when she was four, Lyle followed her mother's example and took up the trumpet. By the time she attended Hopkins High School, she had joined the local Tex-Mex group Mezcal. She gained her stage name by accident - working in a bookstore, she lost her name-tag and replaced it with that of a departed Iranian employee named Kami. She combined this with her father's first name, Lyle. She graduated from the Berklee College Of Music in 1992. Her debut album, Blue Cinderella, a series of character-sketch narratives and semi-autobiographical passages, impressed many with its clarity and authenticity; for example, the endearing 'Grocery Song' was written about her experiences as a supermarket bagger following her initial move to Nashville. With arrangements fashioned by Sting/XTC producer Hugh Padgham, the contents prompted several critics to recall Victoria Williams' work, although Lyle's voice and phrasing were more conventional than that comparison might suggest.

● ALBUMS: Blue Cinderella (MCA 1997)★★★.

Lyman, Abe

b. 1896, USA, d. 1957. Founded in Los Angeles, California, USA, in the early 20s, Abe Lyman And His Californians grew out of their leader's previous theatre affiliations in the Chicago area. He had worked there in the cinema pits as a drummer, before starting his first dance band in Santa Monica, California. This group became regulars at the Ship Café in Venice, a venue frequented by major movie stars of the day including Bebe Daniels and Gloria Swanson. Through these starry connections he was invited to audition for the Ambassador Hotel, and soon found himself opening at the Cocoanut Grove Ballroom. He recruited strong musical sidemen including Ray Lopez, Howard Fenimore, Jim Welton, Slim Martin, Al Baker, Horace Keyes, John Schoberger, Charles Kaley, Gus Arnheim, Charlie Pierce, Jake Garcia, Jimmie Grier, Al Newman, Fred Ferguson, Harry Podalsky, Teddy Powell, Dave Herman, Ted Dale, Ed Landry, Warren Smith, Arthur Most, Tommy Macey, Marty Gold, Carmen Cavallaro, Frank Parrish, Jack Pleis, Yank Lawson, Bill Clark, Frank Bruno, Ted Sandow, Gil Bowers, Murray Gaer, Al Pollack, Si Zentner and Don Moore. The vocal component was provided, at various times, by Frank Sylvano, Phil Meely, Dick Robertson, Smith Ballew, Grace Barrie, Sonny Schuyler, Barry Wood, Rose Bane (Lyman's wife) and Billy Sherman. They remained at the Cocoanut Grove until 1926. Always based on the west coast, Lyman's troupe nevertheless visited almost every state in America and took on long engagements in Europe. These included sets at the Kit Kat Klub and London Palladium in England was well as the Moulin Rouge and Perroquet in Paris, France. He was an established star when he returned to America, with several remote radio broadcasts (notably weekly appearances on NBC's Waltz Time) as well as recordings for Bluebird, Brunswick and Decca. These included 'Mary Lou', 'Mandalay', 'After I Say I'm Sorry' and 'I Cried For You', plus their theme songs, 'California, Here I Come' and 'Moon Over America'. The orchestra continued to tour throughout the 40s, but by the end of the decade Lyman had retired. He entered the insurance business in Beverly Hills with wife Bane.

Lyman, Arthur, Group

b. 1936, Kauai, Hawaii, USA. Lyman popularized a jazzy style of Hawaiian music during the 50s, and gathered a following as a purveyor of so-called exotic music. As a child, Lyman moved to the large Hawaiian city of Honolulu, where he became interested in the music of Benny Goodman and Lionel Hampton. He learned to play along with their records on a toy marimba. At the age of 14, he joined a jazz group and by his early 20s was performing with 'mood music' king Martin Denny. Lyman was signed to the Hi-Fi record label in 1957 and released his debut, Taboo, the following year. It ultimately reached number 6 in the USA and remained on the chart for over a year. Lyman led a quartet, with himself on four-mallet vibes, guitar and percussion, John Kramer (bass, ukulele, guitar, flute, clarinet, percussion), Alan Soares (piano, celeste, guitar, glockenspiel, chimes, clavinet, percussion) and Harold Chang (percussion). Because of its superior production - all of their music was recorded at the Henry J. Kaiser Aluminum Dome in Hawaii - and the unusual orchestral sounds created by the group, the record was particularly popular among consumers purchasing the then-new stereo equipment. In 1961, Lyman's single 'Yellow Bird' reached number 4 in the USA, one of the most uncharacteristic hits of the era. The album of the same name reached number 10. Lyman's last charting album in 1963 was I Wish You Love.

Lyme And Cybelle

Formed in 1966, this Los Angeles duo consisted of Warren Zevon (guitar/vocals) and Tule Livingston (vocals). They recorded several singles for White Whale, the label which launched the Turtles. The latter act recorded a cover version of Zevon's composition 'Like The Seasons' in 1967. The pair's best-known song, 'Follow Me', is a pulsating example of folk/rock. It was taken up in the UK by ex-Searchers vocalist/bassist Tony Jackson, and by another White Whale act Nino Tempo And April Stevens. Lyme and Cybelle broke up when their personal relationship fell apart.

Lymon, Frankie, And The Teenagers

b. 30 September 1942, Washington Heights, New York, USA, d. 28 February 1968, New York City, New York, USA. Often billed as the 'boy wonder', Lymon first entered the music business after teaming up with a local all-vocal quartet, the Premiers. The latter comprised Jimmy Merchant (b. 10 February 1940, New York, USA), Sherman Garnes (b. 8 June 1940, New York, USA, d. 26 February 1977), Herman Santiago (b. 18 February 1941, New York, USA) and Joe Negroni (b. 9 September 1940, New York, USA, d. 5 September 1978). Lymon joined them in 1954 and soon afterwards they were signed to the Gee label as the Teenagers. Their debut, the startling 'Why Do Fools Fall In Love?', was issued on 1 January 1956 and soon climbed into the US Top 10, alongside the early recordings of Elvis Presley and Carl Perkins. The song went on to reach number 1 in the UK and sold two million copies. Lymon soon left school and the group toured extensively. For their second single, 'I Want You To Be My Girl', the 13-year-old boy wonder was given superior billing to the group. With their use of high tenor, deep bass and soprano, and teen-orientated lyrics, the Teenagers boasted one of the most distinctive sounds in 50s pop. After registering chart entries in the USA with 'I Promise To Remember' and 'The ABCs Of Love', they found greater acclaim in England. The soaring 'I'm Not A Juvenile Delinquent' (from the film Rock Rock Rock) hit the UK Top 12 and Lymon was afforded the honour of appearing at the London Palladium. So strong was his appeal at this point that the single's b-side, 'Baby Baby', received separate promotion and outshone the a-side by climbing to number 4. During his celebrated UK tour, Lymon recorded as a soloist with producer Norrie Paramor and the resulting 'Goody Goody' reached the Top 30 on both sides of the Atlantic. By the summer of 1957, he had split from the Teenagers, and thereafter, his career prospects plummeted. He enjoyed the excesses of stardom, smoking cigars, drinking heavily and enjoying under-age sex with women old enough to be his mother. Despite recording a strong album, his novelty appeal waned when his voice broke. By 1961, the teenager was a heroin addict and entered Manhattan General Hospital on a drug rehabilitation programme. Although he tried to reconstruct his career with the help of Dizzy Gillespie and even took dancing lessons and studied as a jazz drummer, his drug habit endured. In 1964, he was convicted of possessing narcotics and his finances were in a mess. His private life was equally chaotic and was punctuated by three marriages. In February 1968, he was discovered dead on the bathroom floor of his grandmother's New York apartment with a syringe by his side. The Teenager who never grew up was dead at the tragically young age of 25. His former group continued to record sporadically and in the 80s, surviving members Santiago and Merchant formed a new Teenagers and Pearl McKinnon took Lymon's part. They were inducted into the Rock And Roll Hall Of Fame in 1993.

Lymon, Louis, And The Teen-Chords

This vocal group from New York City, New York, USA, consisted of Louis Lymon (lead), Ralph Vaughan (first tenor), Rossilio Rocca (second tenor), Lyndon Harold (baritone) and David Little (bass). Lymon, the youngest brother of the great Frankie Lymon, built a remarkably top-notch group modelled on the pre-teen girlish sound of his brother and his group the Teenagers, even though he lacked the range and commanding stage presence of Frankie. The Teen-Chords never secured a national hit, but were extremely popular on the east coast, where doo-wop groups attracted their biggest following. The group was formed in 1956 and was signed by Bobby Robinson; he formed the Fury label to launch the group. They achieved two New York hits for Robinson, with 'I'm So Happy' (1956) and 'Honey Honey' (1957), and the group was subsequently signed to George Goldner's End label. They promoted their first End release, 'Your Last Chance', by making an imposing appearance in a quirky rock 'n' roll film, Jamboree. However, that was the peak of their success. After having a hit with 'Dance Girl' in 1958, the group, disillusioned by their lack of national success, broke up.

Lynam, Ray

b. 29 November *c.*1951, Moate, County Westmeath, Eire. Lynam played saxophone with a local group, the Merrymen, while still at school. He was so greatly influenced by the recordings of George Jones and Buck Owens that in his early career, he carefully reproduced their vocal styles in his own singing. In 1969, he became front man for the Hillbillies, a band led by lead guitarist Kevin Sheeran that also included Billy Condon (both later members of Daniel O'Donnell's band). In 1970, a recording of 'Busted' attracted attention, while the follow-ups, 'Sweet Rosie Jones' and 'Gypsy Jo And Me', firmly established Lynam on the Irish country scene by their chart success. In 1971, Lynam and the band proved a hit in London at the Wembley Festival, which led to concert appearances in the UK. In the early 70s, he began to work with Ireland's Philomena Begley. They were very popular on the 1974 Wembley Festival and voted Top European Duo by the British Country Music Association. They also proved a highly successful duet recording partnership, recording two albums together and scoring Irish chart hits with 'You're The One I Can't Live Without' and 'My Elusive Dreams'. In 1974, Lynam visited the USA to record, Something Special, his first Nashville album. In the early 80s, he returned to record Music Man and gained a US single release with 'There Ought To Be A Law'. He and Begley were reunited for an album on Ritz, while Lynam had UK success with his cover of David Allan Coe's 1984 hit 'Mona Lisa Lost Her Smile'. Since that time, he has remained active and a popular figure on the Irish and UK country scene.

Lynch Mob

Following Dokken's acrimonious split, guitarist George Lynch and drummer Mick Brown recruited bassist Anthony Esposito and tempted vocalist Oni Logan away from the embryonic Cold Sweat to complete Lynch Mob. Wicked Sensation was a decent hard rock debut, carried by Lynch's considerable ability, but youthful vocalist Logan's inexperience began to show through on the road. The band felt particularly uncomfortable when comparing Logan with Geoff Tate during a European tour with Queensrÿche, where the highlight of the set tended to be a rendition of 'Mr Scary', Lynch's Dokken-era instrumental guitar workout. Logan was replaced by another relative unknown, Robert Mason, when touring was complete. Lynch Mob incorporated more R&B influences, moving further from the Dokken sound, and this suited Mason's bluesy tones, while the band paid tribute to their influences with a cover version of Queen's 'Tie Your Mother Down'. However, neither album really took off, and Lynch split the band, opting to go solo while Brown rejoined Don Dokken.

Lynch, Brendan

b. USA. Despite the Neil Young-styled delivery of his songs, Brendan Lynch's musical education came in the series of punk bands that he joined from the age of 13. Indeed, he still cites Black Flag, X and the Blasters among his greatest influences. Based in Los Angeles, California, USA, he began recording his first album in 1995 with the hope of self-releasing it. However, while hunting for a distribution contract he met up with Steve Greenberg, head of A&R at Mercury Records, who signed him to the label and also became his manager. Through Greenberg Lynch was introduced to Glen Ballard, the producer behind Alanis Morissette's Jagged Little Pill. Ballard and Lynch co-wrote the 11 songs on his 1997 debut, Fighting Gravity. The title track was the album's most stirring song, its narrative concerning a man who loses his job and subsequently takes his own life. The attendant single, 'Wonderful', meanwhile, dealt with drug addiction. However, Lynch was keen to point out that he was not interested in polemic: 'I'm just trying to tell stories, like Jimmy Buffett, and not turn anything into a sermon.'

Lynch, Claire

b. Hazel Green, Alabama, USA. In her childhood Lynch discovered the magic of old bluegrass recordings, and by 1973 had joined the Hickory Wind group. Subsequently evolving into the Front Porch String Band, between 1975 and 1981 they released three albums before agreeing to part company. Afterwards, Lynch moved to Nashville with the intention of working as a songwriter. Her accomplished backing vocals and writing skills soon found her regular employment with artists such as Patty Loveless, Kathy Mattea and Tanya Tucker. All three artists recorded her songs, while her backing vocals were also employed by Linda Ronstadt, Emmylou Harris, Charlie Sizemore and Dolly Parton. She re-formed the Front Porch String Band with her former colleagues in 1991, with whom she recorded the well-received Lines And Traces. Her solo debut came in 1993 with Friends For A Lifetime, a record that accrued further excellent reviews. Three years then passed before Moonlighter, her debut for Rounder Records, which further enhanced her profile with its sweet singing belying more bittersweet lyrics. Silver And Gold was an even more accomplished follow-up from this masterly singer.

Lynch, Kenny

b. 18 March 1939, Stepney, London, England. Britain's best-known black all-round entertainer has been a television personality for three decades. The youngest of 13 children, he first appeared on stage at the age of 12 with his sister, singer Maxine Daniels. At 16 he joined Ed Nichol's Band and before going into the services in 1957 worked in a string of bands including Bob Miller's. He joined HMV Records and hit the UK Top 40 in 1960 with his debut single, a cover of 'Mountain Of Love'. He appeared in several films and hit his recording peak in 1963 with two successive Top 10 entries - a cover of 'Up On The Roof' and 'You Can Never Stop Me Loving You' (which made the US Top 20 when covered by Johnny Tillotson). Over the next 20 years he was one of the UK's busiest and most popular entertainers and was also awarded an OBE. He co-wrote the Small Faces' number 1, 'Sha La La La Lee', and has recorded spasmodically since then on Columbia, Atlantic Records, Polydor, Laser, Towerbell and Spartan. In 1983, he had a surprise chart return with a Brit-funk track 'Half The Day's Gone And We Haven't Earned A Penny' on Satril.

Lynch, Ray

b. Texas, USA. One of the most prominent and influential of the new age musicians of the 80s, Lynch's initial training was on piano, before he switched to classical guitar at age 12 after hearing Adrés Segovia's work. Later he moved to Barcelona, Spain, studying guitar technique for three years under Eduardo Sainz de la Maza. His studies continued back in America with a three year course at the University of Texas, learning composition of symphonic and chamber music. Some of these scores were later performed by the Dallas Symphony Orchestra. He also joined a group of madrigal singers as an auxiliary lutist. This led to an invitation to join the Renaissance Quartet in New York. He consequently relocated to the east coast and spent seven years performing with the Quartet and other sympathetic 'early music' groups, with interest in medieval and baroque music undergoing something of a revival. Purchasing a 125-acre farm in Maine, Lynch concurrently toured the country giving virtuoso solo performances, until he found something lacking in his life and dropped everything to move to California. His recording career was well under way at this point, having started in 1983 with The Sky Of The Mind, a reflective piece of mood music, with Tibetan bells merging with classically formed song structures. Deep Breakfast became a certified Platinum album in the aftermath, mainly on the strength of the accompanying hit single, 'Celestial Soda Pop'. The five year delay before No Blue Thing engendered a much expanded sound, with evocative melodies fashioning a full, adroit range of moods and atmospherics. It quickly became a runaway success in US new age circles, staying on Billboard's genre chart for 122 weeks. Lynch also won Billboard's award for New Age Album of The Year, an honour which the same record was awarded again the following year. 1993's Nothing Above My Shoulders But The Evening reflected on the trials of the human spirit, with Lynch commenting: 'The mind filters out so much of our humanity. Great art, if we participate fully in it, gives us permission to feel, and creates a space in which we can feel at a depth not ordinarily allowed.'

Lynn, Barbara

b. Barbara Lynn Ozen, 16 January 1942, Beaumont, Texas, USA. Lynn was signed up by producer Huey P. Meaux after hearing a demo tape and watching her perform in a Texas club. Her early records were recorded at Cosimo's New Orleans studio and leased to the Jamie label. Composed by Lynn, 'You'll Lose A Good Thing' (1962) was an R&B chart-topper and pop Top 10 hit in the USA, and was followed by 'You're Gonna Need Me' and 'Oh! Baby (We Got A Good Thing Goin')'. The last of these was revived by the Rolling Stones on Out Of Our Heads. Barbara issued several singles on Meaux's own label, Tribe, among which was her version of 'You Left The Water Running' (1966). Subsequent releases for Atlantic Records included 'This Is The Thanks I Get' (1968) and '(Until Then) I'll Suffer' (1972), both of which reached the R&B chart for this accomplished singer, songwriter and guitarist, who continued to tour, including visits to Japan, and also recorded albums for Ichiban and Rounder/Bullseye.

Lynn, Cheryl

b. Cheryl Lynn Smith, 11 March 1957, Los Angeles, California, USA. The full-throated Lynn became a hit-maker at the height of disco's popularity, singing dance tunes that retained the gospel vocal approach of classic soul. Lynn grew up in the church where her mother was a minister of music. Her break into the music business came in 1976 after she won as a contestant on the US television amateur talent show The Gong Show. Before signing with Columbia, however, she spent half a year with a touring company of The Wiz, a black musical based on the Wizard Of Oz story. Lynn achieved a million-seller with her very first record, 'Got To Be Real', reaching number 1 R&B and number 12 pop in 1978. Other chart entries followed, notably 'Shake It Up Tonight' (US R&B number 5), 'Encore' (US R&B number 1), and 'If You Were Mine' (US R&B number 11). She also enjoyed success in 1982 with an excellent remake of the Marvin Gaye and Tammi Terrell hit, 'If This World Was Mine' (US R&B number 4), on which she duetted with Luther Vandross. Her success in the UK was minimal, with only 'Encore' briefly entering the charts in 1984.

Lynn, Judy

b. Judy Voiten, 12 April 1936, Boise, Idaho, USA. The daughter of bandleader Joe Voiten (who once worked with Bing Crosby), she grew up to be a teenage rodeo rider. She also became a yodelling champion and in 1955, she represented her state in the Miss America contest. Later the same year, when the touring Grand Ole Opry show played Boise, she deputized for the indisposed Jean Shepard, which resulted in her joining the show.

In 1957, she co-hosted with Ernest Tubb the first national television showing of the Opry. This led to appearances on many major television shows and after leaving the touring Opry show, in 1960 she formed her own band and started her own television series. 'Footsteps Of A Fool' became her first and only US country Top 10 hit, when it charted in 1962. Noted for her beauty and elegance, her colourful western-style Nudie costumes and with a repertoire that ran from big ballads to yodels, she became very popular. She was one of the first country singers to appear in Las Vegas and was a featured artist around the Nevada casino circuit for over twenty years, being a frequent performer at such major venues as the Golden Nugget Club and Caesar's Palace. She recorded for several labels including ABC, United Artists, Musicor and Columbia Records and her last country chart hit was 'Padre' in 1975. She retired from the music industry in 1980 to become a church minister. (She is not related to country star Loretta Lynn.)

b. Loretta Webb, 14 April 1935, Butcher Hollow, Kentucky, USA. Lynn is a coalminer's daughter, being the second of the eight children of Ted and Clara Webb. She is one-quarter Cherokee and her name came from her mother's fondness for film star Loretta Young. She was raised in a small shack during the Depression and was attracted to country music as an 11-year-old, when the family acquired a radio and she heard the singing of Molly O'Day. Her autobiography tells of her makeshift wardrobe and how, at the age of 13, she married a serviceman, Oliver Vanetta Lynn, known to his friends as Doolittle or Mooney (short for Moonshine). He took her to Custer, Washington, and she had four children and several miscarriages by the time she was 18. They had six children in all and Lynn was a grandmother at the age of 29. 'Mooney', recognizing her talent, encouraged her to sing in local clubs and her band, the Trailblazers, included her brother, Jay Lee Webb, on guitar. Her talent was recognized by Don Grashey of Zero Records, who took her to Los Angeles in February 1960 where she recorded four of her own songs. Zero had no money for promotion so she and Mooney promoted 'I'm A Honky Tonk Girl' themselves, the song taking its style from Kitty Wells' 'It Wasn't God Who Made Honky Tonk Angels'. Mooney said that 'they drove 80,000 miles to sell 50,000 copies', but it reached number 14 in the US country charts and enabled her to appear regularly on the Grand Ole Opry. Many female singers were jealous of her success, but Patsy Cline sprang to her defence and they became close friends (Lynn released a tribute album to her in 1977). When they moved to Nashville, she became a regular on a weekly television show with the Wilburn Brothers, who also managed her. Kitty Wells and Patsy Cline were two of her major influences and she was pleased to be assigned to their producer, Owen Bradley, by USA Decca Records. 'Success', her second country hit, peaked at number 6 in 1962, and she had further hits with 'Before I'm Over You' and 'Blue Kentucky Girl'. She then developed a hard-hitting persona as the wife who stood no nonsense from her rivals ('You Ain't Woman Enough', 'Fist City') or her husband (her first country number 1, 'Don't Come Home A-Drinkin' (With Lovin' On Your Mind)' from 1966, 'Your Squaw Is On The Warpath'). Her best-known record, the autobiographical 'Coal Miner's Daughter', was a US country number 1 in 1970. Shel Silverstein, ironically a Playboy cartoonist, wrote 'One's On The Way' in which she was harassed by her children and an insensitive husband. She answered Tammy Wynette's 'Stand By Your Man' in 1975 with the double standards of 'The Pill', which was banned by several US radio stations. By way of contrast, she subsequently had a country hit with 'Pregnant Again'.

Although her first duets were with Ernest Tubb, she formed a regular team with Conway Twitty and the combination of the two distinctive voices worked well, especially in 'After The Fire Is Gone', 'As Soon As I

Hang Up The Phone', 'The Letter' and the amusingly-titled 'You're The Reason Our Kids Are Ugly'. When she fell out with the Wilburn Brothers, she formed United Talent Inc. with Twitty. As the brothers still owned her publishing, she was reluctant to record her own material, although subsequently she was elected to the Nashville Songwriters International Hall of Fame. In 1972, Lynn was the first woman to become the Country Music Association's Entertainer of the Year and she also shared the Vocal Duo of the Year award with Twitty. In 1973, she made the cover of Newsweek and was the first woman in country music to become a millionaire. However, she met with little UK success and some of her UK releases sold less than 200 copies. Her bestselling autobiography, Coal Miner's Daughter, showed how the human spirit could combat poverty and sickness, but also illustrated that the problems of endless touring could be as traumatic. Lynn's musicians call her 'Mom' and share their problems with her. Sissy Spacek won an Oscar for her portrayal of Lynn, which included reproducing her singing, in the 1980 film Coal Miner's Daughter; the film also featured Tommy Lee Jones as her husband and Levon Helm of the Band as her father. Her country music success includes 16 number 1 singles, 60 other hits, 15 number 1 albums and numerous awards, but she has never sought pop success. Her last Top Ten single was 'I Lie' in 1982. She owns a huge ranch 70 miles outside of Nashville, which has the whole town of Hurricane Mills in its grounds. Another part of the property, the Loretta Lynn Dude Ranch, is a tourist attraction with camping facilities. Despite her prolific output in the 60s and 70s, she has not recorded much recently, although she teamed up with Tammy Wynette and Dolly Parton for 1993's Honky Tonk Angels album. To quote Roy Acuff, 'A song delivered from Loretta is from the deepest part of her heart.' She received the Legend Award at 1996's 3rd Annual Country Music Awards.

Lynn, Tami

Tami Lynn was one of several New Orleans, Louisiana, USA-based artists who worked for Harold Battiste's AFO (All For One) label during the early 60s. She sang on A Compendium, an album which featured the co-operative's crack houseband, but this phase in her career was forestalled when the company folded. Tami's best-known single, 'I'm Gonna Run Away From You', was originally released in 1967. This powerful Bert Berns composition failed to register in America, but became a belated UK hit in 1971, when it reached number 4. Its popularity was confirmed four years later when it again entered the Top 40. Lynn had meanwhile continued to record, but this excellent performance remains her most lasting legacy.

● ALBUMS: A Compendium (1963)★★★, Love Is Here And Now You're Gone (1972)★★★★.

Lynn, Vera

b. Vera Welch, 20 March 1917, London, England. A much-loved singer with a clear, strong, plaintive voice, who is held in great esteem by British audiences because of her work in entertaining service personnel during World War II. At the age of seven she was singing regularly in working men's clubs, and later joined a dancing troupe until she was 15. She made her first broadcast in 1935, singing with the Joe Loss Orchestra, and later worked with Charlie Kunz and Ambrose. While she was with Ambrose she met saxophonist Harry Lewis, who later became her husband and manager. She went solo in 1940, and with the help of producer Howard Thomas, launched her own BBC radio series entitled Sincerely Yours. Introducing each programme with the signature tune 'Wishing', she attempted to become the musical link between the girls 'back home' and their men overseas, by reading out personal messages and singing sentimental favourites such as 'Yours', 'We'll Meet Again' and 'White Cliffs Of Dover'. In 1941, she appeared in the revue Applesauce at the London Palladium, with Florence Desmond and the 'Cheekie Chappie', comedian Max Miller. By now, she was the most popular female vocalist in Britain and with UK Forces overseas, to whom she was known as 'The Forces Sweetheart'. One comedian was heard to remark: 'The war was started by Vera Lynn's agent!'.

She also made three films, We'll Meet Again (1942), which featured Geraldo's Orchestra, Rhythm Serenade (1943) with comedy duo Jewell and Warriss, and One Exciting Night (1944) with top wartime comedian Richard Murdoch. Lynn toured Burma with ENSA, entertaining the troops, and shortly after the war ended she retired, temporarily. She returned to the UK variety circuit in 1947, and soon had her own BBC radio series again, this time with Canadian Robert Farnon as musical director. Partly because a musicians' strike was causing disruption in the USA, UK Decca Records decided to issue some of her material on their US London label. From 1948-54, she had several US Top 30 hits there, including 'You Can't Be True, Dear', 'Again', 'Auf Wiederseh'n Sweetheart' (the first record by a UK artist to top the US charts), 'Yours', 'We'll Meet Again', 'If You Love Me, Really Love Me' and 'My Son, My Son'. She promoted the records by making regular guest appearances on Tallulah Bankhead's US radio programme The Big Show. In the UK during the 50s, besides 'Auf Wiederseh'n' and 'My Son, My Son' (a UK number 1), Vera Lynn had Top 30 entries such as 'Homing Waltz', 'Forget Me Not', 'Windsor Waltz', 'Who Are We', 'A House With Love In It', 'The Faithful Hussar (Don't Cry My Love)' and 'Travellin' Home'. From 1952-54 she appeared at London's Adelphi Theatre in the revue London Laughs, which also featured young English comedians Jimmy Edwards and Tony Hancock. In the late 50s, with the UK variety theatres in decline, Lynn appeared mainly on radio and television. In 1960, after 20 years with Decca, she joined EMI, a move that prompted the album Hits Of The Sixties, which contained contemporary ballads such as 'By the Time I Get To Phoenix', 'Everybody's Talking' and 'Fool On The Hill'. In 1962, her recorded voice was used to evoke memories of the war years each night in Lionel Bart's West End musical Blitz! In 1969 she launched her first television series for seven years, and in the following year was unable to sing for four months after developing the lung condition emphysema. In the same year she was awarded the OBE. Since then she has worked less and less, preferring to save her performances for nostalgic occasions organized by bodies such as the Burma Star Association at London's Royal Albert Hall, and shows to mark the 50th anniversaries of the outbreak of World War II, the D-Day landings, and VE Day. She was created a Dame of the British Empire in 1975, and is still fondly regarded as a legend by a large proportion of the British public.

Lynne, Gillian

b. 1926, Bromley, Kent, England. An internationally acclaimed director and choreographer with over 40 London and Broadway shows to her credit. Gillian Lynne was originally a dancer and made her stage debut with the Sadlers Wells Ballet in 1944, remaining with the company for seven years, during which time she played several leading roles. During the 50s she danced many times at the London Palladium, and played Claudine in Can-Can at the Coliseum. In 1960 she appeared in John Cranko's New Cranks at the Lyric, Hammersmith, and choreographed her first ballet, Owl And The Pussycat, for the Western Theatre Ballet. Since that time Lynne has worked as a choreographer and/or director on musical productions such as The Roar Of The Greasepaint - The Smell Of The Crowd, The Match Girls, Pickwick, How Now Dow Jones, Tonight At Eight, Songbook, Tomfoolery, Once Upon A Time, My Fair Lady, Cabaret, Cats, and The Phantom Of The Opera. Her work on Cats earned her an Laurence Olivier Award - one of four she owns - and the Austrian Government's Order of Merit for a production of the show which was presented in Vienna and subsequently played in East Berlin and Moscow. Her Paris production won the prestigious Moliére Award. She has also worked extensively for the Royal Shakespeare Company, the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, and on more than 10 films including Half A Sixpence, Man Of La Mancha, and Yentl. Her television credits include The Muppet Show series, her own creation, The Fool On The Hill, which was based on the Beatles' music, and her BAFTA award-winning ballet A Simple Man. In the early 90s, as well as supervising and working on many other productions world-wide, she re-staged and choreographed the 1993 UK revival of Leslie Bricusse and Cyril Ornadel's musical, Pickwick, starring Harry Secombe and Roy Castle, and devised her first full-length ballet, The Brontës, which had its world premiere in Leeds early in 1995. Two years later, a series of workshop productions of 'a contemporary musical fable', Anyone Who Had A Heart, celebrating the works of Burt Bacharach and Hal David, based on an idea by Lynne and Kenny Solms and directed and choreographed by Lynne, were presented at New York's Roundabout Theatre. Also in 1997, Lynne was created a CBE for 'services to dance'. She was married to actor/producer Peter Land for 17 years before they separated in 1997.

Lynne, Gloria

b. 23 November 1930 or 1931, New York City, New York, USA. Lynne began singing as a very small child in the local Mother African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, but she was also interested in secular music. She entered numerous amateur talent contests, including one at the famed Apollo Theatre, which she won, and these helped to attract attention. Although she studied music for five years, much of her learning was gained through gigging with jazz musicians including Quincy Jones, Bobby Timmons, Philly Joe Jones and Harry 'Sweets' Edison. She began making records and in the early 60s had minor hits with 'June Night', 'Love I Found You' and a big one with 'I Wish You Love', a recording that did much to establish her career. She toured as supporting artist to many other singers, such as Ray Charles, Ella Fitzgerald and Billy Eckstine. Nevertheless, after the hits and some moderately successful albums, limelight work became harder to find. The late 60s and 70s were leaner years, although Lynne never stopped singing, continuing to develop her personal style and keep her voice in good order. Perseverance paid off and in the 90s an earlier recording of hers, 'Speaking Of Happiness', was used in the film Seven, and was also taken up for a television commercial for the Ford Motor Company both in the USA and the UK. This helped to reawaken interest and her appearances became higher in profile; a new recording in 1997 drew the attention of audiences who had lost touch or who had missed her earlier heyday. Lynne's voice is strong and authoritative and even as she approached her late 60s, she displayed no loss of power and few of the inevitable signs of ageing to which singers are prey. Lynne has also written songs, among other things supplying lyrics to the jazz instrumentals 'Watermelon Man' by Herbie Hancock, and Kenny Burrell's 'All Day Long'.

Lynne, Jeff

b. 30 December 1947, Birmingham, England. Lynne's long and varied musical career began in 1966 when he joined the Nightriders, a popular beat group still reeling from the loss of their leader, Mike Sheridan, and guitarist, Roy Wood. Having completed all contractual obligations, the band took the name, Idle Race and, under Lynne's guidance, became a leading exponent of classic late 60s pop. Frustrated at a lack of commercial success, the artist opted to join the Move in 1970, where he was teamed with the aforementioned Wood. Lynne's contributions to the unit's late-period catalogue included the riff-laden 'Do Ya', but this era is also marked by the duo's desire to form a more experimental outlet for their talents. This resulted in the launch of the Electric Light Orchestra, or ELO, of which Lynne took full control upon Wood's early and sudden departure. The group gradually developed from cult favourites into one of the 70s' leading recording acts, scoring international success with several platinum-selling albums, including A New World Record and Out Of The Blue. Lynne's dual talents as a composer and producer ensured the group's status but, sensing an artistic sterility, he abandoned his creation in 1986. The artist then assumed an increasingly backroom role, but won praise for his production work with George Harrison (Cloud Nine), Randy Newman (Land Of Dreams) and Roy Orbison (Mystery Girl) and he has also contributed his distinctive production qualities to much of Tom Petty's recent output. Lynne's work with Orbison coincided with his position as 'Otis Wilbury' in the Traveling Wilburys, an informal 'supergroup' completed by Orbison, Harrison, Tom Petty and Bob Dylan. This particularly prolific period was also marked by his work with Brian Wilson on the ex-Beach Boys' first long-awaited solo album. In 1990, Lynne also unveiled his own solo debut, Armchair Theatre, on which his gifts for pop melody remained as sure as ever. In recent years Lynn has gained a measure of success (and some criticism) for his production of the Beatles lost tapes, notably 'Free As A Bird' and 'Real Love'. He co-produced Paul McCartney's excellent Flaming Pie in 1997.

Lynne, Shelby

b. Shelby Lynn Moore, 22 October 1968, Quantico, Virginia, USA. The exceptionally talented Lynne was raised in Jackson, Alabama, and her life reads like a soap opera: there were long arguments with her father who had her jailed on a trumped-up charge, and later, she saw her father shoot her mother dead and then commit suicide. When she appeared on the Nashville Now talent show at the age of 18, it was evident that she was a very good singer with a rather unusual, deep voice. Billy Sherrill offered to produce her records and her first album included the standards 'I Love You So Much It Hurts Me' and 'I'm Confessin''. Her first single, 'If I Could Bottle This Up', was with another of Sherrill's artists, George Jones. She is a very determined country performer who does not kowtow to the media by turning on smiles for the photographers. Her reputation made it difficult to obtain a record contract after parting with Epic. Temptation was a radical album, employing a full horn section, and sounded closer to Harry Connick Jnr. than country music. Her video for 'Feelin' Kind Of Lonely Tonight' indicated her wish to tour with an orchestra. Restless marked something of a return to traditional country, although there were still jazz and R&B overtones. Despite her talent, she has yet to win over US radio stations.

Lynott, Phil

b. 20 August 1951, Dublin, Eire, d. 4 January 1986. Having enjoyed considerable success in Thin Lizzy, Lynott first recorded solo in 1980, the same year that he married Caroline Crowther, daughter of UK television celebrity Leslie Crowther. Lynott's first single, 'Dear Miss Lonely Hearts', reached number 32 in the UK charts and was followed by an album, Solo In Soho. A tribute to Elvis Presley, 'King's Call' also reached number 35. Lynott had to wait until 1982 for his next hit, 'Yellow Pearl', which reached the UK Top 20 after being used as the theme tune to television show Top Of The Pops. In the summer of 1983 Thin Lizzy broke up and it was widely anticipated that Lynott would go on to solo fame. A new group, Grand Slam, failed to develop and Lynott's subsequent solo single, 'Nineteen', did not sell. The last notable instalment in his career came in May 1985 when he partnered Gary Moore on the number 5 hit, 'Out In The Fields'. He played his last gig with Grand Slam at the Marquee in London on 3 December 1985. At the turn of the following year he suffered a drug overdose and, following a week in a coma, died of heart failure, exacerbated by pneumonia.

Lynyrd Skynyrd

Formed in Jacksonville, Florida, in 1964, this US boogie/hard rock band took their (slightly corrupted) name from their Physical Education teacher, Leonard Skinner. The group initially comprised Ronnie Van Zant (b. 15 January 1948, Jacksonville, Florida, USA, d. 20 October 1977; vocals), Gary Rossington (b. 4 December 1951, Jacksonville, Florida, USA; guitar), Allen Collins (b. 19 July 1952, Jacksonville, Florida, USA, d. 23 January 1990; guitar, ex-Mods), Larry Jungstrom (bass) and Bob Burns (drums, ex-Me, You & Him), the quintet meeting through minor league baseball connections. They played together under various names, including Noble Five, Wildcats, Sons Of Satan and My Backyard, releasing one single, 'Need All My Friends', in 1968, before changing their name to Lynyrd Skynyrd. After playing the southern states during the late 60s they released a second single, 'I've Been Your Fool', in 1971, after recording demos in Sheffield, Alabama. The group were discovered in Atlanta by Al Kooper in 1972 while he was scouting for new talent for his Sounds Of The South label. Signed for $9000, the group's ranks were swollen by the addition of Leon Wilkeson (b. 2 April 1952; bass), who replaced Jungstrom (who went on to work with Van Zant's brother, Donnie, in .38 Special). Kooper produced the group's debut album, Pronounced Leh-Nerd Skin-Nerd, which also featured former Strawberry Alarm Clock guitarist Ed King (originally standing in on bass for Wilkeson, who dropped out of the band for six months) and Billy Powell (b. 3 June 1952; keyboards). Their three-guitar line-up attracted a great deal of attention, much of it generated through support slots with the Who, and the combination of blues, honky tonk and boogie proved invigorating. Their momentous anthem, 'Free Bird' (a tribute to Duane Allman), included a superb guitar finale, while its gravity and durability were indicated by frequent reappearances in the charts years later. In 1974 the group enjoyed their biggest US hit with 'Sweet Home Alabama', an amusing and heartfelt response to Neil Young who had criticized the south in his compositions 'Southern Man' and 'Alabama'. After the release of parent album Second Helping, drummer Bob Burns was replaced by Artimus Pyle (b. 15 July 1948, Spartanburg, South Carolina, USA). The group were by now renowned as much for their hard living as their music, and Ed King became the first victim of excess when retiring from the band in May 1975 (Van Zant's name was also regularly to be found in the newspapers, through reports of bar brawls and confrontations with the law). Gimme Back My Bullets arrived in March of the following year, with production expertise from Tom Dowd.

In September 1976 Rossington was injured in a car crash, while Steve Gaines (b. 14 September 1949, Seneca, Missouri, d. 20 October 1977; guitar) became King's replacement. With their tally of gold discs increasing each year and a series of sell-out tours, the band suffered an irrevocable setback in late 1977. On 20 October, Van Zant, Gaines, his sister Cassie (one of three backing singers) and personal manager Dean Kilpatrick were killed in a plane crash en route from Greenville, South Carolina, to Baton Rouge, Louisiana. Rossington, Collins, Powell and Wilkeson were seriously injured, but all recovered. That same month the group's new album, Street Survivors, was withdrawn as the sleeve featured an unintentionally macabre design of the band surrounded by flames. With their line-up devastated, the group dispersed and the remaining members went on to join the Rossington-Collins Band (with the exception of Pyle).

In 1987 the name Lynyrd Skynyrd was revived for a 'reunion' tour featuring Rossington, Powell, Pyle, Wilkeson and King, with Ronnie's brother Johnny Van Zant (vocals) and Randell Hall (guitar). One of their performances was later issued as the live double set, For The Glory Of The South. Collins had earlier been paralyzed and his girlfriend killed during an automobile accident in 1986. When he died in 1990 from pneumonia, this only helped to confirm Lynyrd Skynyrd's status as a 'tragic' band. However, members were still performing and recording in the early 90s, after disentangling themselves from legal complications over the use of the name caused by objections from Van Zant's widow. The most spectacular aspect of this was a 20th anniversary performance live on cable television in February 1993, with Rossington, Powell, Wilkeson, King and Johnny Van Zant joined by guests including Peter Frampton, Brett Michaels (Poison), Charlie Daniels and Tom Kiefer (Cinderella), the latter having also written new songs with Rossington. Pyle was conspicuous by his absence, having been charged with the sexual assault of a four-year-old girl the previous year.

b. 18 November 1916, USA, d. 10 April 1994. One of the greatest of jazz's promotors and impressarios, Lyons was first employed in 1941 as a publicity agent for a dance hall venue offering Stan Kenton's 'Artistry In Rhythm Orchestra'. Already a jazz enthusiast, and impressed by Kenton's craft, he took a DJ job in California, where he persuaded the management to give Kenton a live spot. This helped bring the bandleader to the public's attention, and Lyons too was well served by his success, graduating to NBC where he worked as a presenter and producer, notably on New York's The Jubilee Show for Armed Forces Radio. Post-war, Lyons returned to his native California, hosting the NBC show Discapades, where he proved a major influence on the jazz scene's transition from dixieland to bebop (the Gerry Mulligan/Chet Baker group famously paying tribute in 'Line For Lyons'). Lyons also played a crucial role in bringing to light the talents of Dave Brubeck and his octet, when everybody else was turning a deaf ear. However, Lyons greatest triumph still lay ahead of him. In 1958 he programmed the first line-up of the Monterey Festival, boasting the discovery of vibraharpist and drummer Cal Tjader in addition to new work from Duke Ellington. Other artists included Billie Holiday and Dizzy Gillespie. Lyons remained the captain of the Monterey event up until the early 90s, when he was forced to retire after being criticised for his conservative and intransient booking policies. Whilst this was perhaps true, the sniping should not rob him of his status as a vital component in the emergence of the west coast jazz scene.

Lyons, Jimmy

b. 1 December 1933, Jersey City, New Jersey, USA, d. 19 May 1986. A self-taught alto saxophone player, Lyons was encouraged while still in his early teens by such leading jazzmen as Buster Bailey, Bud Powell and Thelonious Monk. He first worked with Cecil Taylor in 1960 and through this association became known as a leading exponent of free-jazz. In the early 70s he was actively engaged in musical education while simultaneously pursuing his own studies. This period saw him broadening his musical base but he retained his links with Taylor, touring with him in various parts of the world. In the early 80s Lyons formed a quartet with Andrew Cyrille, Joseph Jarman and Don Moye. Soon thereafter his health began to fail and he died of cancer in May 1986.

Lyons, Willie James

b. 5 December 1938, Alabama, USA, d. 26 December 1980, Chicago, Illinois, USA. A west side Chicago blues guitarist in the 50s, Lyons worked as an accompanist with many artists, including Luther Allison, Jimmy Dawkins and Bobby Rush. Unaccountably ignored by Chicago record companies, he was taken up by French blues enthusiasts in the 70s. He recorded as an accompanist, made a disappointing half album, and in 1979 visited Europe, where he recorded his only full album. This proved to be the work of a fine singer and guitarist, influenced by B.B. King and Freddie King, 'T-Bone' Walker and Lowell Fulson.

Lytell, Jimmy

b. James Sarrapede, 1 December 1904, d. 28 November 1972. Lytell began playing clarinet as a child, quickly taking an interest in jazz and achieving a sufficient level of expertise to be called upon occasionally to deputize for Larry Shields with the Original Dixieland Jazz Band. In 1922 he became a member of the Original Memphis Five, playing and recording with the group until 1925. During the late 20s and on into the following decade he worked as a freelance studio musician, playing a wide-ranging repertoire that embraced popular classics as well as contemporary dance and popular music. Although still active in jazz (he was host of the popular radio show The Chamber Music Society Of Lower Basin Street), his main occupation in these years was as a musical director with NBC. Occasionally, Lytell played in reunions of the OMF and also led his own small bands into the early 70s. A fluent soloist with a strikingly assured technique, Lytell was influential in bringing traditional forms of jazz to a wide audience through both his playing and his broadcasting.

Lyttelton, Humphrey

b. 23 May 1921, Eton, Buckinghamshire, England. Raised in an academic atmosphere (his father was a Housemaster at Eton College), he taught himself to play a variety of instruments including the banjolele. His prodigious talent was spotted early and he was given formal lessons on piano and, a little later, in military band drumming. Eventually, his education took him back to Eton College, this time as a pupil. He joined the school orchestra as a timpanist but after a while drifted away from the orchestra and the instrument. At the age of 15 he discovered jazz, thanks to records by trumpeters Nat Gonella and, decisively, Louis Armstrong. By this time Lyttelton had switched to playing the mouth-organ, but, realizing the instrument's limitations, he acquired a trumpet, which he taught himself to play. Forming his own small jazz band at the college, he developed his playing ability and his consuming interest in jazz. With the outbreak of World War II he joined the Grenadier Guards, continuing to play whenever possible. After the war he resumed playing, this time professionally, and in 1947 became a member of George Webb's Dixielanders. The following year he formed his own band and quickly became an important figure in the British revivalist movement. In the late 40s and through to the mid-50s Lyttelton's stature in British jazz increased. Significantly, his deep interest in virtually all aspects of jazz meant that he was constantly listening to other musicians, many of whom played different forms of the music. Although he was never to lose his admiration for Armstrong, he refused to remain rooted in the revivalist tradition. His acceptance and absorption of music from the jazz mainstream ensured that when the trad boom fizzled out, Lyttelton continued to find an audience. In the mid-50s he added alto saxophonist Bruce Turner to his band, outraging some reactionary elements in British jazz circles, and a few years later added Tony Coe, Joe Temperley and other outstanding and forward-thinking musicians.

In the early 60s Lyttelton's reputation spread far beyond the UK and he also developed another important and long-term admiration for a trumpet player, this time, Buck Clayton. By this time, however, Lyttelton's personal style had matured and he was very much his own man. He was also heavily involved in many areas outside the performance of music. In 1954, he had published his first autobiographical volume and in the 60s he began to spread his writing wings as an essayist, journalist and critic. He also broadcast on radio and television, sometimes as a performer but also as a speaker and presenter. These multiple activities continued throughout the next two decades, his UK BBC Radio 2 series, The Best Of Jazz, running for many years. His writings included further autobiographical work and his ready wit found outlets in seemingly unlikely settings, such as his role as quizmaster on the long-running radio comedy-panel series, I'm Sorry I Haven't A Clue. During this time he continued to lead a band, employing first-rate musicians with whom he toured and made numerous records. Among the sidemen of the 70s and 80s were Dave Green, Mick Pyne, John Surman, John Barnes, Roy Williams and Adrian Macintosh. He also toured and recorded with singers Helen Shapiro, Carol Kidd and Lillian Boutté. Back in the late 40s Lyttelton had recorded with Sidney Bechet and in the 70s and 80s he occasionally made albums with other American jazz stars, including Buddy Tate on Kansas City Woman, and Kenny Davern on Scatterbrains and This Old Gang Of Ours. In the early 80s Lyttelton formed his own recording company, Calligraph, and by the end of the decade numerous new albums were available. In addition to these came others, mostly on the Dormouse label, which reissued his earlier recordings and were eagerly snapped up by fans of all ages. Although he has chosen to spend most of his career in the UK, Lyttelton's reputation elsewhere is extremely high and thoroughly deserved. As a trumpet player and bandleader, and occasional clarinettist, he has ranged from echoing early jazz to near-domination of the British mainstream. For more than 40 years he has succeeded in maintaining the highest musical standards, all the time conducting himself with dignity, charm and good humour. In the early 90s, touring with Kathy Stobart, he showed no signs of letting up and barely acknowledged the fact that he had sailed past his 70th birthday.

M was the brainchild of former art school student and folk singer Robin Scott (b. 1 April 1947). He started out as manager of the R&B band Roogalator and formed the Do It label to release an album by them. Do It later found critical success with the band Adam And The Ants. Scott moved to Paris in 1978, where he produced the Slits and several French bands. It was here that he got the idea for the band M, whose name was taken from the signs for the Paris Metro. Their debut single 'Moderne Man' was not successful and was released at the same time as a single by Comic Romance in which Scott also featured. However M's quirky and hook-laden second single 'Pop Musik' was a massive hit both in the UK and the USA as well as across Europe. As a gimmick, some copies of the single featured both a and b-sides on the one playing surface with the listener taking pot luck as to which groove the needle dropped on to. An album was released to capitalize on the hit and, as well as the singles, also featured a re-recording of the track 'Cowboys And Indians' - previously the b-side of the 'Comic Romance' single. The album was recorded using session musicians Wally Badarov (keyboards), Gary Barnacles (saxophone/flute), Philip Gould (drums), Julian Scott (bass, ex-Roogalator), and Betty Vinchon (vocals). Among the musicians on the second album were Level 42's Mark King. After a couple of minor hit follow-ups, M's career slipped into rapid decline with subsequent singles (including a release on Stiff Records) failing to chart. Only a 1989 remix of 'Pop Musik' returned the name of M to the charts. Meanwhile, Scott worked with Ryûichi Sakamoto on two albums and put out his own solo album - The Kiss Of Life - in 1985.

M People

The key component of M People is Mike Pickering (b. March 1958, Manchester, England; keyboards, programming), a former disc jockey at the Factory Records' owned Hacienda club in Manchester. His activities there once encouraged The Face magazine to proclaim him as 'England's most revered DJ'. After school, Pickering worked in a fish factory and engineering warehouse, becoming a big fan of northern soul. He played saxophone and sang for mid-80s indie dance forerunners Quando Quango, and had various connections with New Order, including sharing a flat with their manager, Rob Gretton. He also had the distinction of having booked the Smiths for their first Manchester gig, and having signed both James and Happy Mondays in his role as Factory's A&R representative. After leaving Factory he became a junior director at DeConstruction Records, to whom he brought Black Box and Guru Josh, the label's two most important early successes. He also provided DeConstruction with North - The Sound Of The Dance Underground, cited by many as the first UK house music compilation, though in truth it was Pickering and his band T-Coy behind seven of the eight songs. He is also the founder member and songwriter for M People - the M standing for his Christian name - who also record for DeConstruction. The band includes ex-Hot House vocalist Heather Small (b. 20 January 1965, London, England) and Paul Heard (b. 5 October 1960, Hammersmith, London, England; keyboards, programming), formerly of Orange Juice and Working Week. They made their debut in May 1991 with 'Colour My Life', achieving major success with the club hit 'How Can I Love You More' at the end of the year. These singles promoted a first album which took its name from Pickering's early musical leanings, Northern Soul. 1993 was M People's breakthrough year. On the back of colossal UK hits such as 'Movin' On Up' (later used as a campaign tune by the UK's Labour Party), they were awarded a BRIT Award for Best UK Dance Act. The album which contained the hits, Elegant Slumming (the title was taken from a Tom Woolfe book), included a cover of Dennis Edwards' 'Don't Look Any Further', and vocal support from Nu Colours. In 1994 it won them the Mercury Prize for best UK act in any category, much to the chagrin of hotly tipped pretenders Blur. Meanwhile, their highly polished, commercial sound (omnipresent on car stereos and commercial radio) was being cited as the perfect example of 'handbag house', a term the group themselves despise. Bizarre Fruit and attendant single, 'Search For The Hero', were greeted with mild disappointment, but with the addition of new bongo/percussion player 'Shovel' the group nevertheless embarked on a tour of the world's stadia to ecstatic receptions. Their love affair with the critics had cooled, the media taking special pleasure in poking fun at Small's choice of boyfriend - rugby league player Shaun Edwards. Bizarre Fruit II merely compiled several remixes and edits as a prelude to a new album, though an ill-advised cover version of the Small Faces' 'Itchycoo Park' managed to irritate the critics further. Fresco proved to be another smooth slab of easy-listening dance music, with the single 'Just For You' the stand-out track.

M&O Band

This UK studio act was assembled by studio owner and producer Muff Murfin and his engineer and assistant Colin Owen. Murfin, who ran a recording studio at the back of a department store in Worcester, England, recorded many acts under various names before becoming involved with the burgeoning northern soul scene in the mid-70s. A specialist at duplicating sounds, he recorded tracks for Disco Demand under names like the Jezebelles and the Sounds Of Lancashire and also worked with Wigan's Ovations. He then built the Old Smithy studio in his large garden and produced television personality John Asher's 1975 Top 20 revival of 'Let's Twist Again'. In 1976 he covered Eddie Drennon's 'Let's Do The Latin Hustle' as the M&O Band and made it a bigger hit. He was accused of sampling part of Drennon's track on his record which he took as a compliment on his close duplication of Drennon's rhythm track. The publicity, however, harmed the act and future records failed to chart. Today Murfin continues to run a successful studio and publishing operation.

M&S Productions

M&S Productions was formed in London, England, in 1994, when former Catch-A-Groove shop assistant Ricky Morrison teamed up with Fran Sidoli. Both had been listening to US garage house since their school days together, and Morrison had already made his name as a garage DJ. M&S Productions subsequently remixed for artists including Urban Discharge (their UK hit, 'Drop That House On That Bitch'), as well as Kenny Thomas, Beverly Brown and Soul Corporation. Also employing other names including Street Sense, the group then recorded singles for high profile US labels including Cutting, Todd Terry's Freeze and Strictly Rhythm Records, as well as UK imprints including Public Demand and MCA Records. The decision of Strictly Rhythm to release M&S Productions' 'Justify', was an honour particularly cherished by the partners. The duo also established their own UK dance imprint, 1001 Records, early in 1996.

This short-lived UK heavy rock supergroup project was assembled in 1987. Featuring Tony Macalpine (guitar), Tommy Aldridge (drums), Robert Rock (vocals) and Rudi Sarzo (bass), their collective pedigrees promised more than they delivered. Produced by Mike Varney, their sole album would have been indistinguishable from Vinnie Moore's, Tony Macalpine's, Marty Friedman's, Jason Becker's or Greg Howe's instrumental sets, were it not for the additional vocals of Rock. Project Driver clearly lacked identity, with the all-too transparent influences of Yngwie Malmsteen and Rainbow unbalancing the collection. The band dissolved soon after the release, with Sarzo and Aldridge joining Whitesnake, Rock taking over vocals in Joshua and Macalpine resuming his solo career.

M.O.P.

Their name standing for Mash Out Posse, Lil' Fame and Billy Danzenie were the faces behind one of Select Records' freshest hardcore arrivals of 1994. They came to prominence when 'How About Some Hardcore', included on the House Party 3 soundtrack, took off. Fame had already made his debut with three tracks on 4th & Broadway's The Hill That's Real. After a projected solo deal with the label fell through, he hooked up with old friend Danzenie, then fresh out from a prison stretch. When 'Hardcore' succeeded they elected to make the partnership a permanent one. Both had grown up in Brownsville, Brooklyn, New York, and brought a sense of justice to their summaries of urban life. M.O.P. was the title of the gang they ran with, who in turn descended from the Tomahawks. M.O.P. thus started life as an 11-piece, but, according to legend, four of that number were cut down in gang fights, and five more are in jail. The sole remainder numbered Fame and Danzenie, alongside producer/manager Lazy Laz. Their debut album, produced by Darryl D, included the predictable put-downs of 'F.A.G.''s (fake-ass gangstas), while 'Blue Steel' confirmed that 'Nowadays shit is for real - so I'm packin' blue steel'.

b. 12 November 1960, Fouata, Senegal. Vocalist and guitarist Maal had humble origins, growing up in the sparsely populated town of Podor, where his father worked in the fields, but also had the honour of calling worshippers to the Mosque using song. The influence of Islam would remain central to his son's activities too, both father and son being members of the Fulani community, which originally brought the Muslim religion to the area. His mother was also a musician, writing her own songs, though the influence of imported western sounds (via transistor radio) such as Otis Redding and James Brown, then reggae ambassador Jimmy Cliff, would also have a profound influence. After winning a scholarship to the Ecole Des Beaux Arts in Dakar, the capital of Senegal, he travelled widely throughout Senegal and neighbouring Mali and Mauritania, studying the traditional musics of the area. 'It's very important for young modern musicians in Africa to do a lot of research. To know what is African music. You cannot say you are doing African music if you don't know exactly where this music comes from.' He spent a further two years of academic study at the Paris Conservatoire, learning European theory and composition, before returning to Dakar in the early 80s to form Daande Lenol ('the voice of the race'). This group was formed with his long-standing friend, musical accomplice and family 'griot', Mansour Seck. In 1982 he released the first of seven cassette-only albums which would, by mid-decade, establish him as a potential rival to Youssou N'Dour, the reigning king of Senegalese youth music. Disc jockey John Peel described Djam Leelii, as like 'listening to Muddy Waters for the first time.' The music employed the Pekan songs of Northern fishermen, Gumbala chants of ancient warriors and Dilere weaving tunes. Most pervasively, the musical framework was based on the Yela songs of indigenous women pounding grain - taught to him by his mother. In 1985, he signed to the Paris-based label Syllart, releasing three superb albums: Wango, Taara and Nouvelle Generationa. In 1991 he moved to London-based Island Records subsidiary, Mango, ensuring his continued growth as an international artist. His debut for Mango, Baayo, featured a typically acoustic line-up, with Maal and Seck joined by Sayan Sissokho (guitar), Malick Sow (xalam) and Yakhoba Sissokho (kora). The emphasis here was on the experiences of his childhood, a delightful portrait of West African life which justified the award of several critical accolades. Lam Toro, dedicated to his mother, provided a more modern Senegalese sound, with synthesizers and programmed percussion. It was later released in remixed form. Firin' In Fouta was also well received by the critics and introduced freeform jazz and reggae beats in an impressive marriage of the new and the old. It was partially based on a return journey to Podor when Maal made recordings of the traditional singers and musicians he had heard in his youth, mixing these into the final recording in Dakar. Nomad Soul featured an array of guest vocalists (Sinead O'Connor, Luciano) and producers (Eno, Howie B.), but Maal's unique talent still shone through.

Mabley, Moms 'Jackie'

b. Loretta Mary Aiken, 19 March 1894, Brevard, North Carolina, USA, d. 23 May 1975. Mabley was raised in Washington, DC. Her maudlin 1969 recitation of the Dion hit 'Abraham, Martin And John' somewhat obscured her history as the most successful comedienne on the black theatre circuit. The song made her a one-hit-wonder when it made number 18 R&B and number 35 pop, yet she had been performing for almost 40 years and had already charted with 13 comedy albums on the pop album charts. She was masterful at blue humour but less effective with suitable family fare. Mabley entered the Chitlin' Circuit in 1921, touring with Butterbeans And Susie. She also had minor roles in the films Emperor Jones (1933), Killer Diller (1947) and Boarding House Blues (1948). Amazing Grace (1974) was her only starring appearance.

Mabon, Willie

b. 24 October 1925, Hollywood, Tennessee, USA, d. 19 April 1986, Paris, France. Accompanying himself on piano and secondly on harmonica, Mabon sang in an urbane blues style similar to Charles Brown. He moved from Memphis, Tennessee, to Chicago in 1942 and was first recorded in 1949 as a member of the Blues Rockers group. After military service he became a popular entertainer in Chicago's Black Belt, and by the early 50s, was well established as an R&B singer with a number of successful records to his credit. Signed as a solo artist to Chess Records in 1951, Mabon immediately hit with a novelty blues, 'I Don't Know' (R&B number 1, 1952), a remake of a Cripple Clarence Lofton record from 1938. Mabon had other hits with 'I'm Mad' (R&B number 1, 1953), 'Poison Ivy' (R&B Top 10, 1954) and 'Seventh Son' (1955). After leaving Chess in 1956, he continued to record on various small labels, achieving success on Formal in 1962 with 'Got To Have Some'. During the 70s and 80s, Mabon would flit back and forth between Chicago and Europe, making occasional albums for German and French labels, most of which were poorly received. He found a wider audience in Europe, playing the Montreux Jazz Festival and festivals in Berlin and Holland. A polished performer, with a measure of glossy sophistication to his singing, Mabon retained a strong affinity with the earthier aspects of the blues and was an influence upon Mose Allison.

Mabsant

This Welsh trio took their name from the Patron Saint of festivals in Wales. The current line-up includes Siwsann George (b. Suzanne George, 2 April 1956, East Glamorgan Hospital, Church Village, Wales; guitar, harp, concertina, spoons, vocals), Stuart Brown (b. 7 May 1956, Springburn, Glasgow, Scotland; recorder, bouzouki, whistle, keyboards); and Steve Whitehead (b. 10 March 1960, Coventry, Warwickshire, England; clarinet/saxophone). The group was formed in mid-1978, playing Welsh and Irish songs and tunes in Cardiff pubs. The line-up at the time was Siwsann George, together with Pete Meazey (mandolin, banjo, mouth organ, dulcimer, vocals), Alun Roberts (mandolin) and Chris Jones. Following the departure of Jones, and Roberts falling ill, Stuart Brown joined the group, this was to be the first of a number of personnel changes. After a three-week tour of Brittany in 1980, Meazey stayed behind, making way for Duncan Brown (Stuart's older brother) to join on double bass. Later the same year, Gareth Westacott (mandolin) and Non Harris (vocals) were added. Their debut album was followed by television work and touring. The following year, Siwsann won the Pan-Celtic traditional singing competition (solo category) with a song called 'Aberfan'. Mabsant were the first Welsh group to appear at the Inverness Folk Festival in Scotland in 1982. The group turned fully professional in 1984 and toured extensively. In November 1986, Robin Huw Bowen (b. 7 June 1957, Liverpool, England; harp), joined the group, and in 1987 Mabsant toured the Far East for the British Council. In 1988, they appeared at London's Royal Albert Hall and toured Hungary, Ireland, Denmark and Brittany. Bowen left in 1989 to pursue a solo career and continue his research work of Welsh folk tunes. Peter Stacey (pipes/saxophone/flute) joined temporarily, but family commitments forced him to play less and less and Steve Whitehead was recruited. In December 1989, Mabsant toured Germany for the first time, and by 1990 they were recording music for television. Despite the changes in personnel, Mabsant's sound has continued to develop with each change, without losing sight of the original feel for the music. Cofeb was almost folk/jazz, but still had the unmistakable Mabsant touch. Owing to Mabsant's success, the folk world at large now acknowledges that (good) folk music exists outside Scotland and Ireland; the group has paved the way for a number of other highly talented Welsh artists.

Mabuse, Sipho

b. 6 February 1950, Cape Town, South Africa. Vocalist, guitarist, keyboard player and drummer Mabuse is one of the giants of South African township pop. He began his career in the late 60s, as drummer with the Beaters, a band heavily influenced by the Beatles, Rolling Stones and, to a lesser extent, South African groups like the Manhattan Brothers and the Skylarks. By the early 70s, township music was increasingly rejecting imported music in favour of indigenous, traditionally-rooted styles, and the Beaters were no exception. A three-month tour of Zimbabwe in 1973 did much to influence this development, with the band becoming deeply influenced by the Afro-rumba style of Harare bands like OK Success. In 1974, their single, 'Harari', became a huge hit throughout Southern Africa and provided a new African sound and name for the band, as the tide of black consciousness rose around them. Harari enjoyed widespread success, despite a number of personal problems, not least the deaths of two leading members. By the late 70s their style had moved away from Afro-rumba towards a more overtly mbaqanga sound. In 1984 - the same year Hugh Masekela recorded three Mabuse compositions on his Techno Bush album - Harari disbanded and Mabuse decided to pursue a solo career as a vocalist and instrumentalist. His first release, 'Rise', became a major hit later the same year. In 1985, his album Burn Out followed suit, selling an unprecedented 230,000 copies in South Africa alone and subsequently being picked up for American release by CBS Records. The album charted a new path for South African pop, with Mabuse focusing his arrangements on keyboards rather than guitars, in addition to saxophones, previously the great staple of township music. In 1986, he enjoyed substantial success on the British independent charts with the single 'Jive Soweto'; the following year he was signed to Virgin Records, who released the single 'Shikisha' and the album Sipho Mabuse. Mabuse then became a leading figure in the South African Musicians Against Apartheid organisation, which campaigned for greater freedom of movement and opportunity for black musicians. However, his late 80s output never achieved the same level of recognition, despite Chant Of The Marching encompassing several songs sung in English and a range of styles running from funk and rock to Zulu pop.

Mac And Bob

Mac (b. Lester MacFarland, 2 February 1902, Gray, Kentucky, USA, d. 25 July 1984, Oliver Springs, Tennessee, USA; mandolin, harmonica, fiddle, tenor vocals) and Bob (b. Robert Alexander Gardner, 16 December 1987, Oliver Springs, Tennessee, USA, d. 30 September 1978, Knoxville, Tennessee, USA; guitar, lead vocals) were one of the very first close harmony duet acts to sing in country music. Both blind, they first met, in 1915, while studying at Louisville's Kentucky School For The Blind and began to sing together. In 1922, they began playing the vaudeville circuit and local venues, but by 1925, as MacFarland And Gardner, they were an established act on WNOX Knoxville. Their very effective style saw Gardner singing lead and playing guitar, while MacFarland picked the instrumental lead on his mandolin and added tenor harmony. During the 30s, his mandolin playing did much to popularize the instrument in country music. In 1926, in New York, they recorded 24 sides for Vocalion Records, with their version of 'When The Roses Bloom Again' proving so successful that they made further recordings that year. Vocalion arranged tours for them, in 1927, and held further recording sessions. When, in April 1931, they relocated to Chicago, to become regulars on WLS National Barn Dance, they also became Mac And Bob. Leaving Vocalion, they made recordings for ARC in 1933, which the company marketed, not only on different labels such as Perfect and Oriole, but also under pseudonyms such as Bob Lester And Bud Green, the Harper Brothers, Parsons And Kent, the Perry Brothers and several others. It has been estimated that they made over 250 recordings for various labels during their career. In the late 30s, they moved briefly to Pittsburgh, but returned to WLS in 1939. They remained popular performers there until 1950, when they withdrew from full-time performing. They popularized such country songs as 'Tis Sweet To Be Remembered', 'Twenty One Years' and 'The Knoxville Girl' (all since recorded by numerous acts, especially including the Blue Sky Boys, the Louvin Brothers and Mac Wiseman). However, their wide repertoire ran to gospel material, as well as popular songs such as 'I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles'. In later years, they made a few more recordings and Mac actually sang on Precious Memories with Patsy Montana. Gardner, a religious man, became an evangelist and MacFarland worked for some years in a Chicago hospital. In the early 70s, they both moved back to the Knoxville area, where Gardner died in 1978. MacFarland died at his home in Oliver Springs in 1984. In addition to the albums listed, some recordings have appeared on compilations of old-time music.

Macabre

Chicago-based specialists in the field of sick rock, Macabre's chief obsession is with serial killers. The positive response on the fanzine network to their mass murderer-fixated demos demonstrated the degree to which Macabre had tapped into a fascination of the heavy metal underground. During the late 80s, serial killers were becoming the ultimate villains - icons of antisociality - and serial killer T-shirts, magazines and books were doing a brisk trade on the darker fringes of youth culture. In 1987 Macabre released their official debut, the self-financed EP Grim Reality, which featured ditties about such deviants as German cannibal Fritz Haarmann and Harvey Glatman, 'the Want Ad killer'. Macabre's material often sounds like punk nursery rhymes: serial killer tributes that drip with black humour and kitsch crudity, delivered with frantic speed, minimal polish and a total disregard for any standards of good taste. As their career has progressed, their style has veered away from their more punkish roots to include a few death metal flourishes, but is still decidedly rough. With the stable line-up of Dennis the Menace (drums), Corporate Death (vocals, lead guitar) and Nefarious (bass guitar), Macabre remain a morbid gag of extravagant proportions.

Macalpine, Tony

Initially trained as a pianist, Tony Macalpine graduated to the electric guitar with an ambition to fuse rock and classical influences into a musical form that would have widespread appeal. Teaming up with ex-Journey drummer Steve Smith and ex-David Lee Roth bassist Billy Sheehan, he recorded Edge Of Insanity, which featured a set of classical-jazz-rock fusion instrumental numbers. The album was characterized by Macalpine's ability to improvise and imbue feeling and emotion into songs, even at breakneck speed. He experimented with the idea of forming a straightforward rock band as a consequence, and signed up Tommy Aldridge (drums), Rudi Sarzo (bass) and Robert Rock (vocals) to record Project Driver under the M.A.R.S. alias, but the result was a disappointing Rainbow-style collection of hard rock numbers. The band split soon after the release and Macalpine returned to solo status, forming his own Squawk label. He released another all-instrumental album but it was readily apparent, not least to the artist, that he had taken this particular format as far as it could go. On 1990's Eyes Of The World, released on Vertigo Records, he added Alan Schorn on lead vocals, Mark Robertson (keyboards), Billy Carmassi (drums) and Mike Jacques (drums) to form Macalpine, the band, specializing in highly polished melodic rock, punctuated by fluid but economical guitar breaks.

Macauley, Tony

b. Anthony Instone, 21 April 1944, Fulham, London, England. Originally a song-plugger for Essex Music, Macauley became one of the UK's leading pop composers of the late 60s and early 70s. He burst onto the scene in 1967 with two number 1 hits, 'Baby Now That I've Found You' for the Foundations and 'Let The Heartaches Begin' for Long John Baldry. With uncomplicated lyrics by John MacLeod, the songs were bouncy and melodic, setting the pattern for much of Macauley's subsequent output. The run of hits continued in 1968-69 with songs for Herman's Hermits ('I Can Take Or Leave Your Loving'), the Hollies ('Sorry Suzanne' with lyrics by Geoff Stephens) and the Foundations again ('Back On My Feet Again' and 'Build Me Up Buttercup'). Another good-time pop band, Johnny Johnson And The Bandwagon, became a vehicle for Macauley's compositions in 1970 when they recorded 'Sweet Inspiration' and 'Blame It On The Pony Express'. But his biggest songs of the year were Pickettywitch's 'That Same Old Feeling' and 'Love Grows (Where My Rosemary Goes)' by Edison Lighthouse, while the most accomplished was the reflective 'Home Lovin' Man', recorded by Andy Williams. During the early 70s, Macauley's progress was interrupted by a lengthy legal dispute with his publishers, which the songwriter won on appeal in 1974. The case had staggering implications for the music industry, presaging similar actions from Gilbert O'Sullivan and Elton John. Macauley's later successes were almost all in association with American artists. For the Drifters he wrote 'Kissin In The Back Row Of The Movies' and 'You're More Than A Number In My Little Red Book' and he helped to revive Duane Eddy's career by providing him with 'Play Me Like You Play Your Guitar'. Geoff Stephens rejoined Macauley for the biggest hits of this phase of his career and the pair provided a series of soft ballads for actor David Soul (star of television's Starsky & Hutch), the most successful of which were 'Goin' In With My Eyes Open' and the 1976 transatlantic number 1, 'Don't Give Up On Us'. With the arrival of disco, Macauley turned away from the pop scene to write stage musicals and film music but none of these projects achieved the popularity of his earlier hits.

Macbeth, David

b. 1935, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, England. Macbeth was on Newcastle United Football Club's books before being conscripted into the army. He was discovered as a pop singer when he appeared on the Carroll Levis Talent Show which led to him making several appearances on local Tyne-Tees Television (some under the pseudonym David North). In 1959, while still working as a commercial traveller, he made his debut single for Pye Records, 'Mr. Blue', a cover of the Fleetwood's US number 1, which proved to be his only Top 20 success. In 1962 he represented Britain at the European Knokke Festival in Belgium and later that year his cover of Bobby Vinton's US chart-topper 'Roses Are Red' entered the Top 40. He worked the cabaret circuit and recorded on Decca and Piccadilly in the early 60s before going into the agency side of the music business in 1965. He returned briefly to recording in 1969, under the guidance of producer Tony Hatch, but further chart success was not forthcoming.

Macc Lads

This trio from Macclesfield, Cheshire, England, comprised pseudonymous chancers The Beater (guitar, vocals), Muttley McLad (bass, vocals) and Chorley The Hord (drums). With a musical brief that incorporated elements of three-chord boogie, metallic riffs and punk, they insulted and entertained their audiences with a barrage of foul-mouthed one-liners and rock 'n' roll rugby songs. Lyrically, they extolled and exaggerated the virtues of the northern, macho, male-dominated pub scene: drinking real ale, 'pulling' women, Chinese takeaways and homophobia. Sample song titles include 'Now He's A Poof', 'Eh Up Let's Sup', 'Dan's Big Log' and 'No Sheep 'Til Buxton'. Releasing a series of albums full of schoolboy humour, they inevitably ran out of ideas. Shunned by nearly every record company and live venue in the land, the Macc Lads' grim philosophy, if such a polysyllabic word is appropriate, endures.

MacColl, Ewan

b. Jimmie Miller, 25 January 1915, Salford, Manchester, England, d. 22 October 1989. The singing talents of his parents enabled MacColl to learn many of their songs while he was still young. He subsequently wrote many classic and regularly covered songs of his own, including 'Dirty Old Town', which was inspired by his hometown of Salford. The song was later made popular by the Pogues and the Dubliners, among others. Having left school at the age of 14, MacColl joined the Salford Clarion Players, and by the age of 16 he was already actively involved in street theatre. His lifelong allegiance to the Communist Party was influenced by his first-hand experiences during the Depression years, and by seeing the effects of the era on his own father and others around him. As a result of his early involvement in political theatre, MacColl, as playwright, actor, director and singer, co-founded the Theatre Workshop at Stratford, London, with Joan Littlewood, who became his first wife. A meeting with folklorist and collector Alan Lomax in the 50s persuaded MacColl to become involved in the revival of British folk songs, which at the time took a back seat to the wealth of American folk material that had arrived via the skiffle boom. The Critics Group was formed by MacColl in 1964, in an effort to analyze folk song and folk-singing technique. This had its critics, who felt that MacColl and the group were setting themselves up as an élitist authority on folk music. It was in the Critics Group that he met Jean Newlove, who became his second wife. They had two children, Hamish and Kirsty MacColl. In 1965, a series of programmes called The Song Carriers was broadcast on Midlands Radio. Later, the innovative Radio Ballads was formulated, combining the voice of the ordinary working man with songs and music relevant to their work. The first series, The Ballad Of John Axon, was broadcast in 1958. This brought together Peggy Seeger and radio producer Charles Parker. Despite the success of these programmes, no more were commissioned by the BBC on the grounds of expense. It is more likely, however, that the views and opinions expressed in the series did not conform to prevailing ideas on what was suitable for broadcast. Unlike many, MacColl believed that it was not sufficient to perform only old songs, but that new material should be aired, and 'The Travelling People' emerged from these ideas. Both Seeger and MacColl continued to perform professionally throughout the 70s and 80s, having married following the break-up of MacColl's second marriage. Together they set up Blackthorne Records. They were particularly noticeable during the UK miners' strike of 1984, recording and appearing at benefits.

Outside folk music circles, MacColl is probably best remembered for the beautiful 'The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face', which he wrote in 1957 for Peggy Seeger. Roberta Flack reached the top of the US charts with the song in 1972, as well as the UK Top 20. MacColl received an Ivor Novello Award for the song in 1973. He died in October 1989, having only recently completed an autobiography. Black And White is a compilation of live and studio recordings from 1972-86 and was compiled by his sons, Calum and Neill. In addition to the three children born to him and Seeger, songs such as 'My Old Man' and 'The Joy Of Living', and a pride in British traditional song, are just part of the considerable legacy he left behind.

MacColl, Kirsty

b. 10 October 1959, England. The daughter of the celebrated folk singer Ewan MacColl, Kirsty has enjoyed success in her own right as an accomplished songwriter and pop vocalist. Originally signed to Stiff Records as a 16-year-old, she was most unfortunate not to secure a massive hit with the earnest 'They Don't Know'. Many years later, the television comedienne Tracey Ullman took an inferior rendition of the song to number 2 in the UK charts. MacColl had to wait until 1981 for her first chart hit. A change of label to Polydor Records brought her deserved UK Top 20 success with the witty 'There's A Guy Works Down The Chip Shop Swears He's Elvis'. Her interest in country and pop influences was discernible on her strong debut, Desperate Characters. In 1984, MacColl married producer Steve Lillywhite, and during the same year she returned to the charts with a stirring version of Billy Bragg's 'A New England'. During the next couple of years, she gave birth to two children but still found herself in demand as a backing singer. She guested on recordings by a number of prominent artists, including Simple Minds, the Smiths, the Rolling Stones, Talking Heads, Robert Plant, Van Morrison and Morrissey. In December 1987, she enjoyed her highest ever chart placing at number 2 when duetting with Shane MacGowan on the Pogues' evocative vignette of Irish emigration, 'Fairytale Of New York'. In 1989, she returned to recording solo with the highly accomplished Kite. The album included the powerful 'Free World' and an exceptionally alluring version of the Kinks' 'Days', which brought her back to the UK Top 20. Smiths guitarist Johnny Marr guested on several of the album's tracks and appeared on the excellent follow-up released in 1991. Electric Landlady, an amusing pun on the Jimi Hendrix Experience's Electric Ladyland, was another strong album that demonstrated MacColl's diversity and songwriting talent. The haunting, dance-influenced 'Walking Down Madison' gave her another Top 40 UK hit. Her career to date was sympathetically compiled on Galore, which demonstrated a highly accomplished artist, even though four albums in fifteen years is hardly prolific.

MacDermot, Galt

b. 18 December 1928, Montreal, Canada. Nostalgia reared its grey and grizzly head at the Palace Theatre in New York when George M!, a celebration of the life and works of George M. Cohan, opened on 10 April 1968. Just under three weeks later, audiences at the nearby Biltmore Theatre came face to face (and other parts of the anatomy) with what many theatregoers felt was the 'grim reality' of the present and future, in the full-frontal shape of Hair, the 'American Tribal Rock Musical'. Galt MacDermot wrote the music for what was not so much a show as a social phenomenon, and the book and lyrics were by Gerome Ragni (b. 1943, Pittsburg, USA, d. 10 July 1991, New York, USA) and James Rado. The trio won Grammy Awards for the cast album which spent over a year in the US chart and spawned several hit singles, the most succesful of which was probably the Fifth Dimension's 'Aquarius/Let The Sunshine In'. During the 1970s, MacDermot's compositions featured in a variety of productions, including Isabel's A Jezebel (1970, London), Two Gentlemen Of Verona (Tony Award), Dude, Via Galactica, Take This Bread, an oritorio, Vieux Carré, I Took Panama, and The Sun Always Shines On The Cool (1979). In 1984, his musical The Human Comedy, lasted for less than two weeks on Broadway, and was revived by the West Coast Ensemble in Hollwood as part of their 1993 season. For some considerable time during the late 80s MacDermot collaborated with the West Indian poet and playwright Derek Walcott on the score for Steel, which eventually had its world premiere at Cambridge, Massachusetts, in May 1991. His music for the show was a cosmopolitan mixture of calypso, blues, gospel, and ballads. A reminder, perhaps, of his early days - even before Hair - when his instrumental composition, 'African Waltz', won two Grammys and an Ivor Novello Award, and became a UK hit in 1961 for British jazzman Johnny Dankworth.

MacDonald, Hank

b. 12 March 1926, Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, Canada. The family were musical and he learned guitar as a boy, later adding piano, banjo, mandolin and fiddle. In the early 40s, greatly influenced by Hank Snow, he began singing in dancehalls and other venues in the Maritime provinces of Canada. During World War II, he worked on coastal boats, the railroad and accompanied by a drum playing elder sister, he played piano and sang for dances in army canteens. In 1948, he had his own show on CKCR Kitchener, Ontario, where he met and later toured with Kidd Baker. In the early 50s, he was a member of the CKNX Travelling Barn Dance Gang at Wingham and was also on network radio broadcasts. During the 60s, he fronted his own band playing the nightclub circuit and often accompanied American stars, including Cowboy Copas, Mac Wiseman, Carl Smith and Grandpa Jones, on their Canadian tours. He made his first recordings, including three popular self-penned numbers, 'The Bachelor's Train', 'I'll Remember You Darling' and 'Your Memory Haunts Me', in 1957. He eventually retired to the Okanagan Valley in British Columbia but in the mid-80s, he was still making appearances at festivals and reunion concerts. MacDonald's singing always showed the careful phrasing and delivery of Snow; at times he sounded very like his idol particularly on his recordings of Snow's songs such as 'Mother' and 'Brand On My Heart'.

MacDonald, Laurel

b. Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada. The singer-songwriter and multi-instrumentalist Laurel MacDonald is the cousin of the east coast folk singer Mary Jane Lamond. She learned piano and ukulele as a child, and in the 60s played guitar in folk clubs. It was not until the late 80s, though, that she decided to pursue a career in music. MacDonald and her producer Philip Strong (whom she met in 1992 while he was mixing her score for Mehra Meh's film Siblings) recorded her debut in 1994, with MacDonald herself distributing it to local shops until Cargo Records signed her. The album was firmly in the Celtic folk tradition, albeit with an avant garde edge, and its mix of musical styles, including Turkish, Balkan, Indian and Celtic, soon won her many admirers. MacDonald played bodhran, bouzouki and harmonium, Catherine Keenana played the hurdy-gurdy, Loretto Reid the Irish tin whistle and Rob Piltch the electric guitar. MacDonald has said of her writing, 'Primarily the album is me telling a story about my life and about my reality.'

- ALBUMS: Kiss Closed My Eyes (Improbable/Cargo 1994)★★★.

MacDonald, Ralph

b. 15 March 1944, New York City, New York, USA. MacDonald learnt the conga while listening to his father's band playing in Harlem. His own playing reflects interests in both African and West Indian music. When he was 17, he joined Harry Belafonte's band and stayed with him for 10 years (1961-71). After that he played with Roberta Flack before leading his own band right through to the 80s. His main work was as a producer in his own studio (Rosebud Recording Studio), with a team of writers that included William Salter and William Eaton. Donny Hathaway had a huge hit with their 'Where Is the Love' which sold 10 million copies. MacDonald went on to write songs on eight million-selling records and produced seven gold records, including Grover Washington's Mr. Magic and Rod Stewart's Trade Winds. He has also worked with saxophonists Roland Kirk, Paul Desmond, David Sanborn and Randy and Michael Brecker.

Maceo And The King's Men

This group was formed in 1970 by Maceo Parker (b. 14 February 1943, Kinston, North Carolina, USA; tenor saxophone) and Melvin Parker (b. Kinston, North Carolina, USA; drums). Former members of various high school bands, the brothers joined the James Brown revue in 1964, and were featured on several of the artist's seminal recordings before embarking on an independent career in March 1970. The new group, Maceo And The King's Men, was completed by other defecting members of Brown's troupe. Richard 'Kush' Griffiths (trumpet), Joseph 'Joe' Davis (trumpet), L.D. 'Eldee' Williams (tenor saxophone), Jimmy 'Chank' Nolen (guitar), Alphonso 'Country' Kellum (guitar) and Bernard Odum (bass) were all serving members of the James Brown Orchestra, and similarities between both groups' music were thus inevitable. Despite this, however, neither of the King's Men albums sold well, and several musicians drifted back to their former employer. Both Maceo and Melvin also rejoined Brown, but in deference to their obvious frustration, he wrote, arranged and produced several tracks for a spin-off project, Maceo And The Macks. Two singles, 'Party - Part 1' and 'Soul Power 74 - Part 1', reached the R&B Top 30, before an album entitled Us, credited solely to Maceo, was released in 1974. The brothers left the fold again in 1976, whereupon the saxophonist joined George Clinton's Funkadelic empire. Maceo did, however, rejoin Brown briefly in the 80s. 'Cross The Track (We Better Go Back)', a track by Maceo And The Macs, was reissued in 1987 and reached number 54 in the UK chart. In the early 90s Maceo Parker joined with fellow Brown alumni, tenor saxophonist Pee Wee Ellis and trombonist Fred Wesley, to make the well-received Roots Revisited and Mo' Roots.

Macero, Teo

b. Attilio Joseph Macero, 30 October 1925, Glens Fall, New York, USA. A member of the first Charles Mingus Jazz Composers' Workshop in 1953, Macero's keen interest in composition led to an involvement in the Third Stream Music and Guggenheim Awards for composition in 1957 and 1958. It was arguably after he joined CBS as a producer in 1957 that Macero had his greatest influence. Working on many of Miles Davis' finest albums, he played a particularly important role in In A Silent Way and Bitches Brew, where his editing gave the albums their form. He continues to perform on the saxophone.

MacGowan, Shane, And The Popes

There are doubtless those in the music industry, particularly some vulture-like members of the press, who never expected Shane MacGowan to survive, never mind record again, after the Pogues splintered in the early 90s. Following a promotional single, 'That Woman's Got Me Drinking' ('she must have been employed by the brewing industry', as one wag in the press noted), MacGowan unveiled his new group, the Popes, and the debut solo album, The Snake, in October 1994. The Popes included Paul McGuinness (guitar), Bernie France (bass), Tom McManamon (banjo) and Danny Pope (drums). Unsurprisingly, given MacGowan's collaborative track record, there was also an array of guest musicians in attendance, including Barney McKenna and John Sheahan (Dubliners), Jem Finer and Spider Stacy (Pogues) and the actor Johnny Depp, who directed and starred in the video for 'That Woman's Got Me Drinking', also contributing some elementary guitar on the track. The Snake additionally featured eleven other original compositions, and was co-produced with Dave Jordan in London and Ireland. The range of musical styles on offer was typically impressive, running from the raucous cow punk of 'Mexican Funeral In Paris', which could have graced any Pogues album, to more reflective and traditional songs such as 'Donegal Express'. Three years later MacGowan continued to confound critics by releasing another worthy album, The Crock Of Gold, with the track 'St. John Of God's', in particular, providing further evidence of his songwriting abilities.

Machine Gun - Peter Brötzman

Perhaps the most savage and brutal recording in jazz history, Machine Gun is a landmark in the European avant garde. The reasoning behind the record's title becomes brutally clear within the first five seconds, as the three-saxophone front line of leader Peter Brötzmann, Willem Breuker and Evan Parker ruthlessly fires off round after round of thunderous musical ammunition, accompanied by pianist Fred Van Hove, bassists Buschi Niebergall and Peter Kowald and drummers Han Bennink and Sven Ake Johansson. Bordering on the unbearable, there is an acute sense of both the emotional and technical extremes, which constitutes a curiously addictive, if draining, experience.

Machine Head

Formed in Oakland, California, USA, in June 1992, Machine Head comprise Robb Flynn (b. 19 July 1968, Oakland, California, USA; vocals, guitar, ex-Violence), Logan Mader (guitar), Adam Duce (bass) and Chris Kontos (ex-Verbal Abuse; drums). Specializing in angry, violent scenarios, their debut relied heavily on Flynn's 'reflections about the self and some of my personal experiences'. These were accompanied by overdriven guitars in the tradition of a fresh-faced Anthrax, with a level of guile that few had anticipated. European touring with Slayer brought the band rave reviews the following year, before Roadrunner released 'Old', backed by cover versions of hardcore material by Poison Idea and the Cro-Mags. Meanwhile, Burn My Eyes picked up third place in Kerrang! Magazine's critics' lists for 1994, describing the band as 'the HM discovery of the year'. Kontos left the band in 1995 to work with Testament; his replacement was ex-Sacred Reich Dave McClain. Logan Mader unexpectedly left the band in spring 1998 and was replaced by Ahrue Luster.

Machine Head - Deep Purple

From the heady intro of 'Highway Star', written in a couple of hours on a bus between shows, to the lazy beat of 'Space Truckin'', Machine Head would have remained one of the classic line-up's (Roger Glover, Ian Paice, Ian Gillan, Ritchie Blackmore, Jon Lord) great albums. However, the hand of fate took them to Montreux at the same time as Frank Zappa's Mothers Of Invention. Their witnessing of the burning down of the Casino, immortalized in 'Smoke On The Water' with Blackmore's plaintive riff studied and dedicated to memory in a thousand guitar classes, and Gillan's simple retelling of events, elevated them and their record to legendary status. Da da da, dada dada, da da da, da da.

Machito

b. Frank Raul Grillo, 16 February 1912, Tampa, Florida, USA, d. 15 April 1984. Raised in Cuba, Machito became a singer and maracas player, working with many of the best-known bands on the island. After arriving in New York in the late 30s, he became similarly well-known as an accomplished player in various Latin-American dancebands. In 1941 he formed his own unit, the Afro-Cubans, and the following year his brother-in-law, Mario Bauza, until then lead trumpeter with Chick Webb, joined him. Under Bauza's watchful eye, the Afro-Cubans became one of the leading exponents of their particular form of Latin-American music. In the late 40s, and throughout the 50s, Machito's band regularly teamed up with leading jazz musicians, especially beboppers, for recording sessions, some of the earliest of which were produced by Norman Granz. These artists included Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, Joe 'Flip' Phillips, Buddy Rich and Howard McGhee. His music appealed greatly to Stan Kenton, helping prompt Kenton's long-lasting love affair with Latin rhythms. Machito played percussion instruments on some of Kenton's recordings, including the original version of 'Peanut Vendor'. Machito had a number of successful records during the mambo craze of the 60s, but it was the increasing popularity of salsa which helped keep him in the front rank of popular entertainment until his death in April 1984, which occurred during an engagement in London.

Macintosh, Adrian

b. 7 March 1942, Tadcaster, Yorkshire, England. Macintosh began playing drums as a child and worked with various bands locally before moving to London in the mid-60s. He played with several small, mainstream bands but attracted most attention during a stint with Alan Elsdon's more traditionally oriented group. He gained further experience backing visiting American jazz musicians at various London clubs, and in 1982 joined Humphrey Lyttelton. His work with Lyttelton drew widespread attention to his fine musicianship and subtle swing. His playing on the band's many concert and recording sessions of the late 80s helped to consolidate critical and audience opinion that Macintosh was the best of all the drummers to accompany Lyttelton over the years.

MacIsaac, Ashley

b. c.1974, Nova Scotia, Canada. Although Ashley MacIsaac was raised to the Cape Breton tradition of folk fiddle playing, his eclectic, highly contemporary performances draw on influences ranging from hip hop to grunge. His 1992 debut album, recorded with Joey Beaton (piano) and David MacIsaac (guitar), gave little indication of his later ecleticism, treating various jigs, reels and marches with due respect. Exposure to New York's dance clubs soon opened his ears to contemporary beats. He made his debut for A&M Records in 1995 with "Hi™ How Are You Today?", a record which took 18 months and numerous producers to create, and one which soon became a fixture in the Canadian charts. Within six months of release it had become a platinum (100,000 sales) seller, prompted by the success of the Gaelic ballad 'Sleepy Maggie' when released as a single. As a result, MacIsaac collected two Junos, including one for best solo artist, at the Canadian music business awards in 1996. Although much of the material on the album was traditional fiddle music, MacIsaac skilfully adapted the tunes to a more contemporary context, with the help of contributing musicians such as bassist Chin Injeti (Bass Is Base), singer Mary Jane Lamond and classical group the Quarteto Gelato. As he told the press, 'I'm a Cape Breton fiddle player who happens to play with other styles, but it's not a rock record.' Throughout 1996 his record label made strenuous efforts to translate his popularity in Canada to the American market.

Mack And Mabel

High up on the list of fondly remembered flops - mainly through the medium of its superb Original Cast recording - this show ran on Broadway for only two months. It opened at the Majestic Theatre in New York on 6 October 1974, with what must have seemed a stellar cast. It had David Merrick, the premiere producer of musicals throughout the 60s, director and choreographer Gower Champion, a book by Michael Stewart, a score by Jerry Herman (Mame and Hello, Dolly!), and, best of all, two outstanding performers, Robert Preston and Bernadette Peters, supported by Lisa Kirk and James Mitchell - and it still failed. The story is told in flashback: one of the great comedy silent movie innovators, Mack Sennett (Preston), remembers the early days and his first studio in Brooklyn ('Movies Were Movies'). He takes a sandwich delivery girl, Mabel Normand (Bernadette Peters), and puts her into pictures, but neither their private or professional relationship is satisfactory ('I Won't Send Roses'), and when Mabel gets the offer of a serious part, she walks out on him. The story ends in 1938, with Sennett leaving the movie business for ever. As well as Preston's 'Movies Are Movies' and 'I Won't Send Roses', (which is reprised as 'Who Needs Roses?' by Peters), the delightful and lively score included 'Look What Happened To Mabel', 'Big Time', 'I Wanna Make The World Laugh', 'Wherever He Ain't', 'Hundreds Of Girls', 'When Mabel Comes Into The Room', 'My Heart Leaps Up', 'Time Heals Everthing', 'Tap Your Troubles Away', and 'I Promise You A Happy Ending'. In spite of receiving several Tony nominations (none of which were for Herman), it just did not catch on and closed after 65 performances, losing an estimated $800,000. Two years later a new production, with a revised book, toured with David Cryer, Lucie Arnez, and Tommy Tune, and, since that time, there have been several US provincial presentations, including one at the Paper Mill Playhouse in 1988, with Lee Horsley as Sennett and Janet Metz as Mabel. In the UK, interest was aroused in the show when its overture was used by Torvill and Dean, in their successful bid for a gold medal in the Olympic Ice Dancing Championship in 1984. A BBC Radio 2 disc jockey, David Jacobs, began playing tracks from the album, and 'I Won't Send Roses', in particular, became one of the station's easy-listening favourites. However, it was not until November 1995 that Mack And Mabel travelled to London's West End, via the Leicester Haymarket Theatre. Paul Kerryson's production, which starred Howard McGillin and Caroline O'Connor, had some revisions to the book (which has always been considered to be the problem with this show), including the introduction of a more upbeat ending, and no mention of Mabel's death in 1930. There were also two additional songs, 'Mack And Mabel' and 'Hit 'Em On The Head', which were not on the original album. Critical reviews were mixed, although O'Connor was generally hailed as 'a new star', and the show settled in long enough for McGillin to be replaced by James Smillie.

Mack And Mabel - Original Broadway Cast

As is so often the case, this was an appealing score from a flop show. At least it gives some indication of Robert Preston and Bernadette Peters' fine performances as Mack Sennett and Mabel Normand, and preserves Jerry Herman's lovely songs, which included 'I Won't Send Roses', 'When Mabel Comes Into The Room', and 'I Wanna Make The World Laugh'. In the 80s ice dancers Torvill and Dean used the (partly edited) overture for their Olympic programme, and that exposure, coupled with repeated plays on BBC Radio 2, caused the album to enter the UK Top 40.

Mack, Bobby

b. 19 June 1954, Fort Worth, Texas, USA. Dismissed early in his career as a second-rate Stevie Ray Vaughan, Texan guitarist Mack has begun to develop his own identity with two well-received studio sets, and some tough live appearances with his band Night Train. During the 70s, Mack was playing a mix of blues and rock in a covers band, Thrills, before forming his own Austin-based blues outfit. Austin was at this time the centre of an underground blues movement that included Stevie Ray Vaughan and his brother Jimmy (who went on to form the Fabulous Thunderbirds with Kim Wilson), and the informal atmosphere of impromptu jamming sessions and joint bills provided invaluable experience for a young bluesman. After briefly giving up music, Mack went on to put together Night Train with bass player Danny Turansky, and Thrills drummer Steve Fulton. With various personnel passing through the band, Mack changed the name to Bobby Mack & The Night Train to establish a firmer identity, recording a six-track mini-album under this name in 1985. Following a piecemeal New Zealand-only release, Say What?, which included demo sessions with the Neville Brothers, Mack put out the Red Hot And Humid live album. Recorded for a live radio show in Austin, its success led to a contract with the Dutch label Provogue. Following his Provogue debut, Honey Trap, Mack set up the Palindrome label to release the album in America, and has since worked on several of the label's releases, including production duties for harp player Willie Foster. His latest release, Sugar All Night, was notable for featuring predominantly original material.

Mack, Lonnie

b. Lonnie McIntosh, 18 July 1941, Harrison, Indiana, USA. Lonnie Mack began playing guitar while still a child, drawing early influence from a local blues musician, Ralph Trotts, as well as established figures Merle Travis and Les Paul. He later led a C&W act, Lonnie And The Twilighters, and by 1961 was working regularly with the Troy Seals Band. The following year, Mack recorded his exhilarating instrumental version of Chuck Berry's 'Memphis'. By playing his Gibson 'Flying V' guitar through a Leslie cabinet, the revolving device that gives the Hammond organ its distinctive sound, Mack created a striking, exciting style. 'Memphis' eventually reached the US Top 5, while an equally urgent original, 'Wham', subsequently broached the Top 30. The Wham Of That Memphis Man confirmed the artist's vibrant skill, which drew on blues, gospel and country traditions. Several tracks, notably 'I'll Keep You Happy', 'Where There's A Will' and 'Why', also showed Mack's prowess as a soulful vocalist, and later recordings included a rousing rendition of Wilson Pickett's 'I Found A Love'. The guitarist also contributed to several sessions by Freddy King and appeared on James Brown's 'Kansas City' (1967). Mack was signed to Elektra in 1968 following a lengthy appraisal by Al Kooper in Rolling Stone magazine. Glad I'm In The Band and Whatever's Right updated the style of early recordings and included several notable remakes, although the highlight of the latter set was the extended 'Mt. Healthy Blues'. Mack also added bass to the Doors' Morrison Hotel (1970) and undertook a national tour prior to recording The Hills Of Indiana. This low-key, primarily country album was the prelude to a six-year period of seclusion that ended in 1977 with Home At Last. Mack then guested on Michael Nesmith's From A Radio Engine To The Photon Wing, before completing Lonnie Mack And Pismo, but this regeneration was followed by another sabbatical. He re-emerged in 1985 under the aegis of Texan guitarist Stevie Ray Vaughan, who co-produced the exciting Strike Like Lightning. Released on the Alligator label, a specialist in modern blues, the album rekindled this talented artist's career, a rebirth that was maintained on the fiery Second Sight.

Mack, Warner

b. Warner McPherson, 2 April 1938, Nashville, Tennessee, USA. Warner Mack is one of the few country musicians to be born in Nashville, although at the age of seven he moved to Jackson, Tennessee, and when he was nine, to Vicksburg, Mississippi. Mack, whose father was a minister, tells his story in the song 'Tennessee Born, Mississippi Raised'. He played at various school functions and started performing on the radio show Louisiana Hayride. In 1957, he wrote and recorded 'Is It Wrong (For Loving You)?', which was later a number 1 country hit for Sonny James. In 1964 Mack had success with a Jim Glaser song, 'Sitting In An All Night Cafe', but while it was climbing the country charts, he suffered serious injuries in a car accident. Mack, whose stage name came about through a mistake on a record label, had a US country number 1 with his own composition, 'The Bridge Washed Out', and had further success with 'Talking To The Walls' and 'How Long Will It Take?'. He was the first country artist to record a national commercial for Coca-Cola. His last US country chart entry was 'These Crazy Thoughts' in 1977. Mack has completed successful tours of UK country clubs, always closing with an emotional version of 'He Touched Me'.

Macka B

b. Christopher MacFarlane, Wolverhampton, England. Macka B is one of the most productive, distinctive and talented of MCs to emerge in Britain in the 80s. He first rose to local fame chatting for the Birmingham-based Wassifa hi-fi, with a melodic but gruff voice that perhaps most closely resembled that of Prince Far I, although Macka B was of the new breed and capable of a pace of delivery that made his predecessors look lazy by comparison. His large physique, stunning, topical lyrics and dreadlocked features made him an imposing presence on the mic, and after one local release his fame quickly spread to London, occasioning the release of a well-received single, 'Bible Reader', for Fashion Records in 1985. Perhaps recognizing that Macka B's future did not lie in the dancehall MC trade, Fashion suggested that Macka B try his luck at Ariwa Sounds, their south London rivals. With the help of fellow Wolverhamptonite Macka Dub, Ariwa producer Mad Professor unleashed a monster with Macka B's debut LP, Sign Of The Times, which remains a classic to this day. Mixing comic material with roots anthems such as 'Invasion', drenched in tight horns and heavy dub mixing, the album was a huge hit within the reggae community. Macka B appeared on ITV's Club Mix and was something of a celebrity, but he shunned the limelight, preferring instead to work in the roots market, issuing a series of strong albums over the next five years, among them We've Had Enough, Natural Suntan and Peace Cup. He retains his credibility and goodwill, and has even made the occasional trip to Jamaica to record with producer Black Scorpio on a few tracks, as well as cutting 'DJ Unity' at Penthouse Studio, Kingston, with Jamaican counterpart Tony Rebel.

Mackay, Andy

b. 23 July 1946, London, England. Originally a classical musician, Mackay switched to rock, and while at Reading University, played saxophone in R&B group, the Nova Express. After answering an advertisement placed by Bryan Ferry, Mackay was offered a place in Roxy Music. Within a year and a half, the group were acclaimed as one of the most exciting new prospects on the UK rock scene. Much of their power came from the breathtaking saxophone work of Mackay. Such was his credibility that, in 1974, he was given leave to release a solo album, In Search Of Eddie Riff. With a wealth of backing musicians, including Brian Eno, Phil Manzanera, Eddie Jobson, Paul Thompson and John Porter, Mackay recorded an instrumental album on which he demonstrated his musical talent. It was an idiosyncratic work containing a selection of rock numbers and updated classics such as Jimmy Ruffin's 'What Becomes Of The Broken Hearted?' and the Beatles' 'The Long And Winding Road'. The classical pieces featured an arrangement of Schubert's 'An Die Musik' and a startling adaptation of Wagner's 'Ride Of The Valkyries'. The musical concoction was completed by some self-penned compositions, most notably, 'Pyramid Of The Night (Past, Present And Future)'. When Roxy Music temporarily retired during 1976-78, Mackay composed the music for the television series Rock Follies. He also worked with Mott The Hoople, John Cale and Pavlov's Dog and produced and played on Eddie And The Hot Rods' reworking of 'Wooly Bully'. In 1978, a second album of saxophone instrumentals emerged with Resolving Contradictions. In the wake of Roxy's final split, Mackay formed the Explorers with Phil Manzanera and released an album of the same title, which sold moderately.

Mackel, Billy

b. John William Mackel, 28 December 1912, Baltimore, Maryland, USA. After playing banjo in and around Baltimore, he switched to guitar and also tried his hand at bandleading. In 1944, however, he joined Lionel Hampton's big band where he remained more or less continuously for more than three decades. With Hampton, Mackel's duties were primarily those of a rhythm player, a role at which he excelled. When solo opportunities did present themselves he took them eagerly, displaying a freewheeling style with a strong underpinning which gave his blues performances and R&B colouring. Constrastingly, his occasional arrangements for the Hampton band show a good and confident ear for the nuances of bop.

● ALBUMS: with Lionel Hampton Hamp (GRP/Decca 1942-63)★★★★, with Hampton The Complete Paris Sessions (Vogue 1953)★★★★.

Mackenzie Theory

Formed in Melbourne, Australia in 1971, Mackenzie Theory remain one of the few totally instrumental bands in Australia to achieve recognition in the mainstream rock and pop music industry since the demise of non-vocal rock 'n' roll and surf bands of the early 60s. In 1973, they recorded a fully instrumental album in Australia, which charted. Rob Mackenzie led the band with his inspired, ethereal guitar playing, but the band also owed much of its distinctive sound to the viola playing of Cleis Pearce. The band, which included Andy Majewski (drums) and Mike Leadabrand (bass), folded in mid-1974 when Mackenzie was awarded an Arts Council grant to study guitar in Europe and America. He currently resides in Los Angeles, USA, performing and doing recording sessions with emerging bands, providing guitar solo embellishments on their demo tapes, or recording eastern and other exotic ethnic styles. Pearce turned her talent to folk music and other eclectic work and she has recorded regularly.

● ALBUMS: Out Of The Blue (1973),★★★ Bon Voyage (1974)★★★.

MacKenzie, Talitha

b. New York, USA. MacKenzie began training as a concert pianist at the age of four, before her introduction to Gaelic music via the field recordings album, Heather And Glen. After graduating from the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston with a degree in music history/ethnomusicology, she developed a course at Harvard University titled 'Structure and Form in Music and Movement'. She released an album with Boston-Irish group St. James Gate in 1985 and recorded her first solo album the following year. Shantyman, a collection of traditional maritime songs, was informed by her performances on square-rigged ships in the Boston harbour. In 1987 she moved to Scotland and enrolled on a course of Gaelic music and language studies at Edinburgh University, touring as a dancer and musician with the folk ensemble Drumalban. In 1988 she joined computer-programmer Martin Swan to form Mouth Music, the groundbreaking group fusing modern technology with the traditional Gaelic singing which gave them their name. However, despite critical acclaim she left that group when her partnership with Swan broke down. MacKenzie launched her debut solo album in 1993. Producers Iain McKinna and Chris Burkitt (best known for his work with Buffy Saint-Marie and Sinead O'Connor) provided the music, though this was downplayed to leave MacKenzie's voice centre stage. This was not singing as such, but the use of the voice as instrument, moving from percussion to harmony and melody, imbuing each phrase with a wide range of shading not restricted to the framing of words. As well as original compositions ranging from the unaccompanied 'E Hó Hi' to the spiritual 'Uamh An Oir', MacKenzie also revisited material from her time with Mouth Music. The album was funded by the Arts Council as part of Riverboat Records' Women Of The World series, though given adequate airplay and distribution there was no reason why it could not have prospered in a purely commercial environment. MacKenzie was subsequently profiled in Lucy O'Brien's book She Bop in a chapter addressing 'Women In World Music', and toured Europe with her own band.

● ALBUMS: with St. James Gate St. James Gate (Kells 1985)★★, Shantyman (Islander 1986)★★★, Sólas (Riverboat 1993)★★★.

Mackenzies

One of the more refreshing aspects of the New Musical Express/ICA Rock Week and accompanying C86 cassette compilation was the Ron Johnson camp. This Manchester label threw up a handful of manic guitar acts whose shared sources appeared to be the Fall and Captain Beefheart. The Mackenzies were no exception. 'Big Jim (There's No Pubs In Heaven)' on C86 started as a quirky thrash similar to the Fire Engines, then switched to militant jazz funk groove and back again. Similar ingredients were also found on 'New Breed' in April 1986 and the excellent 'Mealy Mouths' the following February. However, the Mackenzies failed to capitalize on these, and nothing was heard from them, apart from a remix of 'Mealy Mouths' exactly a year later, in February 1988.

MacKillop, Gavin

b. England. Producer Gavin MacKillop is a classically trained pianist and vocalist, but his inhibitions prevented him from taking up a performance-based occupation. He began his career in 1981 at Virgin Records' Manor and Townhouse studios in England. As engineer to Steve Lilywhite, he worked with several acts on the Virgin roster including Simple Minds, as well as other rock/pop acts such as Big Country and Echo And The Bunnymen. His first production project was General Public's All The Rage album, which included the hit single, 'Tenderness'. Subsequent projects for Virgin included Public Image Limited and Do Ré Mi, before he became a freelance producer in 1984. Through the rest of the 80s he worked with a number of groups including Hunters And Collectors, Shriekback and the La's. In 1990 MacKillop moved to the USA and enjoyed huge success with the breakthrough of Toad The Wet Sprocket (producing both their albums of the early 90s) and the Rembrandts. His other credits included rising folk star May Moore.

Mackintosh, C.J.

One of the UK's most widely revered DJs and remixers, to whom major record companies regularly indulge their A&R budgets. Chris 'C.J.' Mackintosh's standard approach, that of radio-friendly, lush garage arrangements, is too MOR for many of the nation's more underground clubbers, but his technique has become the epitome of taste in the mainstream. Clients have included Whitney Houston, Lisa Stansfield and Janet

Jackson. Mackintosh actually started out as a hip hop DJ, going on to win the 1987 finals of the DMC mixing championships. After this initial success he provided hip hop megamixes for labels such as Champion. His first venture into remixing proved even more rewarding. Together with Dave Dorrell, he mixed MARRS' 'Pump Up The Volume', one of dance music's seminal moments. Mackintosh happily continues his daytime job, that of club DJ, and on this basis is one of the first of the UK's 'names' to play in the States. However, it is as a remixer that he has won fame and fortune, although he also sees the dangers inherent in a DJ-led music scene: 'With remixing, everyone's doing it and it's wrong, but I think it'll go on because there's nothing to stop it...All sorts of bands are depending on it, they all want a dance mix... remixing's easy because you're using someone else's ideas. Production, and writing, is a totally different thing.' A list of his credits could fill a small book, but some of the most important include Inner City ('Good Life'), Dina Carroll ('Ain't No Man'), PM Dawn ('Reality'), A Tribe Called Quest ('Bonita Applebum'), De La Soul ('Ring, Ring, Ring'), Digital Underground ('Packet Man'), Simple Minds ('Sign Of The Times), Gang Starr ('Take A Rest'), Whitney Houston ('Queen Of The Night') and Luther Vandross and Janet Jackson ('The Best Things In Life Are Free').

b. 17 October 1946, Enfield, England. 'The Czar of theatrical producers' - that is what the American magazine TheatreWeek called him in 1993 when they rated him number 3 in their list of the 100 Most Powerful People in American Theatre. The son of a Maltese-born mother and a Scottish father, Mackintosh attended a small public school in Bath and became obsessed by the musical theatre at the age of eight after being taken to see a production of Julian Slade's Salad Days at Bristol Old Vic in 1954. After leaving school, where he was known as Darryl F. Mackintosh, he attended the Central School for Speech and Drama for a year before becoming an assistant stage manager at the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane when Camelot was running. His first forays into producing came with some budget-priced touring shows before he moved into the West End in 1969 with a revival of Anything Goes. It proved to be a disaster and was withdrawn after 27 performances. Trelawny (1972) and The Card (1973) fared better, and, after a number of provincial productions of varying degrees of profitability, Mackintosh's breakthrough finally came in 1976 with Side By Side By Sondheim.

During the next few years he mounted successful revivals of Oliver!, My Fair Lady, and Oklahoma!, before his meeting with Andrew Lloyd Webber resulted in Cats in 1981. The show transformed the lives of both men, and became the prototype for future productions which overthrew the old style of musical and provided a simple and vivid theatrical experience that did not rely on big name stars, and was easily exportable. In the 80s Mackintosh went from strength to strength with Song And Dance, Les Misérables, The Phantom Of The Opera, and Miss Saigon (1989). In 1990 the latter show provided an example of just how powerful Mackintosh had become when American Equity initially objected to the casting of Jonathan Pryce in the Broadway production 'because it would be an affront to the Asian community'. After the producer threatened to withdraw the show altogether - and one or two others as well - capitulation was more or less immediate. The incident did nothing to improve the producer's ruthless (he prefers 'relentless') reputation with the New York theatre community, many of whom object to his dictatorial attitude and 'flashy' marketing methods. For some reason he deliberately did not use those ploys when his London hit, Five Guys Named Moe, transferred to Broadway, and that may well be one of the reasons for its relatively poor showing.

In 1992 Mackintosh was involved with a rare flop which some say marked the beginning of his decline. Moby Dick ('a damp squib . . . garbage') is reported to have cost him £1 million and a great deal of pride during its 15-week run, and he hinted at the time that he may be past his peak. However, the highly impressive monetary facts continued to emerge: a personal salary of over £8 million in 1991, the 39th richest man in Britain, and the acquisition of a substantial stake in two West End theatres, the Prince of Wales and the Prince Edward. His love of musicals - that is all he seems to be interested in producing - has caused Mackintosh to divert some of his reported £300 million wealth to a number of extremely worthy causes. As well as numerous donations to small theatrical projects, he provided £2 million to endow Oxford University's first professorship in drama and musical theatre, and his £1 million gift to the Royal National Theatre has enabled it to mount highly acclaimed revivals of Carousel and Sweeney Todd, the first two in a series of five classic musicals.

It is not all philanthropy: Mackintosh is reported to retain the rights to the productions when they are eventually produced in the commercial sector. His kudos have included the 1991 Observer Award for Outstanding Achievement, and the prestigious Richard Rodgers Award for Excellence in Musical Theatre (1992). Previous recipients have been Harold Prince, Julie Andrews and Mary Martin. In 1994, Mackintosh's major revival of Oliver! opened at the London Palladium, starring Jonathan Pryce, and in 1995 his production company, Cameron Mackintosh Limited, earned a Queen's Award for Export Achievement. Two years earlier, for the benefit of an awe-struck journalist, he had attempted to remember all the musicals he had running in various parts of the world. They included six Cats, 20 Phantom Of The Opera, 12 Les Misérables, seven Miss Saigon, four Five Guys Named Moe, two Follies . . . et cetera, et cetera, as Yul Brynner used to say.

Saigon, a third collaboration between Mackintosh and the creative team of Alain Boublil and Claude-Michel Schönberg, entitled Martin Guerre, opened in London. However, it failed to live up to its illustrious predecessors, and folded after a 20-month run. On a rather smaller scale, Mackintosh's The Fix, a 'daring new musical', also incurred the critics' wrath when presented at the Donmar Warehouse in 1997. Mackintosh received an inevitable knighthood for 'services to the musical theatre' in the 1995 New Year Honours List, and three years later was presented with the Bernard Delfont Award by the Variety Club of Great Britain.

Mackintosh, Ken

b. 4 September 1919, Liversedge, West Yorkshire, England. Mackintosh began playing alto saxophone as a child and worked with various bands in Yorkshire in his teens. In 1939, he joined the army and towards the end of the war was playing in military bands. He formed his own unit in 1948 and enjoyed a measure of local popularity in dancehalls and on regional radio. In 1950, his band was booked to open the Wimbledon Palais in London and met with immediate success. The band broadcast regularly and won a recording contract with HMV. The Wimbledon engagement lasted three years. During the last year, Mackintosh had a record hit with 'The Creep', his own composition, and this led to a bill-topping tour of the UK. Throughout the 50s the band toured, recorded, broadcast extensively on radio and television, where it headlined its own show, Flying Standards, and was featured in the film An Alligator Named Daisy (1955). Mackintosh was able to give an early career boost to Frankie Vaughan and Alma Cogan, making records with both artists. Among the band's record successes of the 50s were 'Harlem Nocturne' and 'Raunchy', which reached number 8 in 1958. In 1963, Mackintosh was hired to open the new Empire Ballroom in London's Leicester Square, at the time billed as the world's greatest and most expensive ballroom. This engagement lasted for seven years, after which the band moved to the Hammersmith Palais for a further seven-year stint. Late in the 70s, Mackintosh took his band on the road where he frequently backed touring singers, including Matt Monro, Pat Boone, Tom Jones and Shirley Bassey. Throughout the 80s and into the 90s, Mackintosh continued on the road with his band, playing dances at which he acknowledged contemporary sounds while nostalgically recreating the best popular dance music of earlier years. His son is Andy Mackintosh.

Mackness, Vanessa

b. Christchurch, Hampshire, England. Mackness grew up in Ipswich, Suffolk, and studied painting in the late 70s at the celebrated Camberwell School of Art, London. She later shared a studio with Maggie Nicols and met Phil Minton (then singing with Mike Westbrook, but also exploring freely improvised vocals), who gave Mackness the idea of using her voice. She asked Minton for lessons, some of which were conducted under bridges to gain greater resonance. She later studied with the Hungarian mezzo-soprano Julianna Bethlen and the French composer/singer Gilles Petit, another influence was Indian classical music, through Imrat Khan and the teachings of Pandit Ravi Shankar. The London free improvisation scene embraced her wide-ranging vocal palette and sensitivity. In 1990 and 1991, she sang at Company Week and also broadcast a 'Music In Our Time' programme organized by Derek Bailey for the BBC's Radio 3. Duos with bassist and composer Barry Guy (formed in 1989), violinist Phil Wachsmann, pianist Keith Tippett and saxophonist John Butcher have produced astonishingly varied and powerful music. Mackness remains open to a wide variety of vocal styles and musics - she declares she has an 'endless preoccupation with sound in all contexts, including everyday sounds' - and her cornucopia of vocalism has attracted much attention. In 1991, she initiated a duet with Alexander Balanescu, leader of one of the pre-eminent contemporary classical quartets.

MacLean, Dougie

b. 27 September 1954, Dunblane, Scotland. Before he was two years old, MacLean moved to Butterstone, near Dunkeld, Perthshire, and now lives in the old schoolhouse there. He was formerly a member of both the Tannahill Weavers and Silly Wizard, and an early Euro-band, Mosaic, in the mid-80s. The latter band's impressive line-up included Andy Irvine, Donal Lunny and Márta Sebestyén. MacLean went solo in 1979 and released the excellent Caledonia. He formed his own label, Dunkeld Records, in 1983 as an outlet for his music and the promotion of other Scottish performers. MacLean had one of his own compositions recorded by Kathy Mattea in 1990, for release on her album. Mattea also appears on backing vocals on Whitewash, on what is perhaps MacLean's classic parting song, 'Until We Meet Again'. The Search came out of a commision to write and record music for the official Loch Ness Monster Exhibition. In some ways a departure for MacLean, the album is highly atmospheric. MacLean has also completed music for a BBC television series, MacGregor Across Scotland, and his album Real Estate won a silver disc in 1988. Whether playing guitar, fiddle, bouzouki or didgeridoo, Dougie MacLean's songs combine a love of tradition with the contemporary. Released in 1997, Riof was one of MacLean's most impressive releases.

MacMaster, Natalie

b. 1973, Inverness County, Nova Scotia, Canada. Fiddler Natalie MacMaster gives credit for her emergence in the 90s to the Cape Breton Fiddler's Association, started in the early 70s after a documentary, The Vanishing Cape Breton Fiddler, was screened. It led to a revival in this most dynamic of musical cultures, and MacMaster is just one of several young musicians to be inspired by the new climate. After growing up in a musical family she made her debut in traditional square dances and variety concerts. As is traditional with Cape Breton music, her playing is intrinsically linked to dancing and gaiety. 'The rhythms you use for the feet are the same as you use for the fiddle, the same with the piano. It's all tied in, the language (Gaelic), the dancing, the piano, the fiddle . . . everything matches,' says MacMaster. Indeed, she only began to learn the fiddle after becoming a proficient dancer. She took informal lessons for three years, learning the individual Cape Breton approach to the violin, which includes a distinctive bowing technique, and repetitive structures known as 'cuts' (triplets). She began to play outside Nova Scotia at the age of 12, touring the festival circuit throughout America and Canada. Her first record was issued in 1989, at the age of 16. It was followed two years later by Road To The Isle, which garnered several East Coast Music Awards, including Instrumental Artist Of The Year and the Roots/Traditional category. Her now regular pianist, Tracey Dare, joined her in time for Fit As A Fiddle, and they also toured internationally as a trio with the assistance of guitar player Dave MacIsaac. MacMaster and Dare (who released a solo album in 1995, The Crooked Lake) also perform with a full Cape Breton band with drums, bass and Gaelic singing.

Macon, John Wesley 'Shortstuff'

b. 1933, Crawford, Mississippi, USA, d. 28 December 1973, Macon, Mississippi, USA. In the mid-60s, Macon was brought briefly to public attention by his cousin Big Joe Williams. Although 30 years younger than Williams, he performed a remarkably archaic style of blues, featuring simple, insistently rhythmic guitar, often without chord changes, and mode packed vocals that often recalled the field holler. After the trip north with Williams that resulted in his too few recordings, Macon returned home to undeserved obscurity until his death.

Macon, Uncle Dave

b. David Harrison Macon, 7 October 1870, Smart Station, Warren County, Tennessee, USA, d. 22 March 1952, Readyville, Tennessee, USA. Macon's family moved to Nashville when his father, a Confederate captain in the Civil War, bought the city's Broadway Hotel. Macon learned to play the banjo and acquired songs from the vaudeville artists who stayed at the hotel. He married in 1889 and started the Macon Midway Mule And Wagon Transportation Company, which was later described in the song 'From Here To Heaven'. His mule-drawn wagons carried goods between Murfreesboro and Woodbury. Macon performed at venues along the way. However, the business collapsed following the advent of a motorized competitor in 1920. Although he had worked as a jovial entertainer for many years, he never thought of turning professional until a pompous farmer asked him to play at a wedding. Macon demanded $15, certain that he would be turned down; it was accepted and became his first professional booking. At the age of 52, when Uncle Dave Macon launched his professional career, his songs and humour proved so popular that he was soon known all over the south. He became the first star of the Grand Ole Opry when it was launched in 1925 with material covering folk tunes, vaudeville, blues, country and gospel music. In 1927, Macon formed the Fruit Jar Drinkers with Sam And Kirk McGee and Mazy Todd - their tracks among the finest produced by old-time string bands. In 1931 he was the main attraction of the Opry's first touring show, working with his son, Dorris, and the Delmore Brothers. Between 1924 and 1938, Macon recorded over 170 songs, which makes him among the most recorded of the early-day country stars. Despite the age of the recordings, his whooping and hollering brings them to life, and notable successes included 'Arkansas Traveller' and 'Soldier's Joy'. 'Hill Billie Blues' is possibly the first recorded song ever to use hillbilly in its title. His 1927 recording of 'Sail Away Ladies' was converted into the 50s skiffle hit, 'Don't You Rock Me, Daddy-O'. Macon appeared with Roy Acuff in the 1939 film Grand Ole Opry, which showed that, even at an advanced age, he was a fine showman. Macon stopped touring in 1950 and he made his last appearance at the Opry on 1 March 1952. After his death at Murfreesboro in 1952, a monument was erected near Woodbury by his fellow Opry associates and he was elected to the Country Music Hall Of Fame in 1966.

MacRae, Dave

b. 2 April 1940, Aukland, New Zealand. Following an appearance in 1971 on an album by Mike Maran, MacRae embarked upon a busy period of session activity throughout that decade. His keyboards (usually electric piano) can be heard on recordings by Back Door, the Walker Brothers, and Max Merritt And The Meteors. Additionally, MacRae also found time to join Ian Carr's Nucleus, Robert Wyatt's post-Soft Machine band, Matching Mole, and the equally short-lived Pacific Eardrum. Most recently David MacRae has written music for UK television series, notably the Goodies and Bread.

MacRae, Gordon

b. 12 March 1921, East Orange, New Jersey, USA, d. 24 January 1986, Lincoln, Nebraska, USA. A popular singer on record, radio and in films during the 50s, MacRae was the son of local radio celebrity Wee Willie MacRae, and often worked on radio as a child actor before joining the Millpond Playhouse in New York. There he met actress Sheila Stephens who became his first wife in 1941. After winning an amateur singing contest at the 1939/40 New York World's Fair, he sang for two weeks with the Harry James and Les Brown bands. While working as a pageboy at NBC Radio, he was heard by bandleader Horace Heidt who signed him for two years, during which time he appeared with Heidt, James Stewart and Paulette Goddard in a movie about Heidt's radio giveaway show, Pot O' Gold. After serving in the US Army Air Force Corps in World War II, MacRae returned to New York to take a singing role in the 1946 Broadway revue Three To Make Ready, starring Ray Bolger. In 1947, he signed to Capitol Records and had a string of hits up to 1954, including 'I Still Get Jealous', 'At The Candlelight Cafe', 'It's Magic', 'Hair Of Gold, Eyes Of Blue', 'So In Love', 'Mule Train'/'Dear Hearts And Gentle People' and 'Rambling Rose'. After a four-year gap, he entered the US charts again in 1958 with 'The Secret'. MacRae also made a series of successful singles with ex-Tommy Dorsey singer Jo Stafford. These included 'Say Something Sweet To Your Sweetheart', 'Bluebird Of Happiness', 'My Darling, My Darling' (a US number 1), 'A-You're Adorable', 'Need You', 'Whispering Hope', 'Bibbidi-Bobbidi-Boo' and 'Dearie'. MacRae's film career, mostly for Warner Brothers, started in 1948 with a non-singing role in The Big Punch. This was followed by a series of musicals that included Look For The Silver Lining (1949) and The Daughter Of Rosie O'Grady (1950), both co-starring June Haver, and four films in which he was partnered by Doris Day: Tea For Two (1950), West Point Story (1950), On Moonlight Bay (1951) and By The Light Of The Silvery Moon (1953). Among his other screen appearances were roles in The Desert Song (1953), co-starring Kathryn Grayson, and Three Sailors And A Girl (1953), with Jane Powell. In 1955 and 1956 he had the two most satisfying film parts of his career, when he played opposite Shirley Jones in highly successful adaptations of the Broadway shows Oklahoma! and Carousel. Also in 1956, MacRae appeared in his last film musical as Buddy De Sylva in The Best Things In Life Are Free, a biopic of the 20s/30s songwriting team of De Sylva, Brown And Henderson. In 1979, he made one final film appearance, in a dramatic role in The Pilot. In the mid-50s, MacRae was also popular on US television as the singing host of The Railroad Hour, The Colgate Comedy Hour, and his own Gordon MacRae Show. After divorcing his first wife, he was remarried in 1967 to Elizabeth Lambert Schrafft. In the same year, he made his first Broadway musical appearance since 1946, replacing Robert Preston in I Do! I Do! In the 70s he struggled with alcoholism and, in the early 80s, claimed that he had won the battle. He died from cancer of the mouth and jaw in January 1986.

Macumba

Taking their name from a north Brazilian drumming tradition based on West Africa's Yoruba religion, Macumba's music also draws on the Voodoo sounds of Haiti and the Santa Ria religion of Cuba. They originally formed out of a drum workshop given by John Gilmour to Glasgow art students in the early 90s. So enthralled were the students that Gilmour was invited to put the group on a permanent footing, with the addition of five pipers from the Neilston And District Pipeband Of Barrhead. Since that time, by necessity, the group's membership has been fluid, from as little as three (playing Musica Populaire de Brasil) to a full 30-piece assembly. The combination of samba, particularly the northern Brazilian tradition and the xaxado, frevo and maracatu rhythms, accompanied by highland piping, has produced a unique sound. In performance they are led by Johnny Beaver, and use Brazilian percussion elements such as the pandéro (tambourine), agog bell and chocalho (shaker). Traditional pipe songs are adapted to complement the presence of the percussionists, producing a far more dynamic hybrid than traditional Scottish pipe music. The group have played twice at the Drogheda Samba Festival, and in 1993 performed at the Scottish League Cup final between Rangers and Hibernian. With the addition of singer Lynne O'Neill they recorded the wonderfully upbeat Don't Hold Your Breath.

Mad About Music

Deanna Durbin was only 17 years old when she made this film in 1938, but her 'significant contribution in bringing to the screen the spirit and personification of youth', gained her a special Academy Award in the same year. In Mad About Music she once again plays a character bursting with imagination and energy, who, after being deposited in a swanky Swiss finishing school by her narcissistic actress mother (Gail Patrick), comes up with a father who is simply the product of that same fertile imagination. Invited to produce him for inspection, the youngster offers a rather puzzled visitor (Herbert Marshall) as her partner in the collusion. It was all good fun, and also taking part were Jackie Moran, Arthur Treacher, William Frawley, Helen Parrish, Marcia Mae Jones. The musical highlight was Miss Durbin's spirited rendering of 'I Love To Whistle' with Cappy Barra's Harmonica Band. Harold Adamson and Jimmy McHugh wrote that tune, along with 'Serenade To The Stars', 'Chapel Bells', and 'There Isn't A Day Goes By'. Durbin also joined the Vienna Boys' Choir in a beautiful version of 'Ave Maria' (Charles Gounod). Norman Taurog directed this highly popular feature which attracted several Oscar nominations, two of which went to Marcella Burke and Frederick Kohner, the writers of the story on which Bruce Manning and Felix Jackson's screenplay was based. It received another airing in 1956 when Mad About Music was remade as Toy Tiger starring Jeff Chandler and Laraine Day, with Tim Hovey in the Deanna Durbin part.

Mad Cobra

b. Everton Brown, c.1969, Kingston, Jamaica, West Indies. Brown began his career earnestly following his musical roots - his uncle was an engineer at Bob Marley's Tuff Gong studios. While still at school, Brown chanted on sound systems including the Mighty Ruler and Stereo One. After gaining his qualifications, he pursued a career in the music business. He recorded with a number of producers including Bobby Digital, King Jammy and Donovan Germain. In 1991 Brown recorded 'Tek Him', riding a version of Eric Donaldson's 20-year old Jamaican Music Festival winner, 'Cherry Oh Baby'. The song has since become an anthem and a myriad of versions to the rhythm surfaced, including a remake by Donaldson himself. The hits continued, including 'OPP' (Other Peoples Property), with Conroy Smith, 'Body Basics', 'Be Patient', 'Yush' and 'Gundelero'. His success led to a number of compilations, including Cobra Gold, which featured a variety of tracks from a number of producers, and Ex-Clusive produced by Clive Kennedy. By 1993, following the success of Shabba Ranks, the major labels took an interest in Jamaican performers and Sony signed Brown; he subsequently became known as Mad Cobra. With production credits to Clifton 'Specialist' Dillon and Sly Dunbar, the release of 'Flex' earned him international fame. The success of the tune was eclipsed when the rhythm was used for Buju Banton's infamous 'Boom Bye Bye', but Mad Cobra's earlier homophobic song, 'Crucifixion', was ignored by the media. In Jamaica he recorded 'Fat And Buff' for Jammys and, inspired by the revival of conscious lyrics, 'Selassie I Rules' in 1994, sounding much like the ever popular Bounty Killer. Throughout 1995 his prolific output continued with notable hits such as 'Poor Mans Shoes', 'Live Good', 'Hell Swell', 'Send Them Come' and 'Dun Wife'. He was also the featured DJ on Bunny Rugs' remake of his Third World hit, 'Now That We've Found Love'. At the 1995 Sting concert, promoted by Isaiah Lang, Mad Cobra faced Ninjaman in a clash of the DJs. Unfortunately, on this Boxing Day event Mad Cobra had to accept defeat, but a rematch was scheduled in Montego Bay on New Year's Eve. The clash never took place and the two protagonists embraced, with Ninjaman announcing, 'Cobra ah mi bwoy, we come outa de same camp'.

Mad Lads

From Memphis, Tennessee, USA, the Mad Lads comprised John Gary Williams, Julius Green, William Brown and Robert Phillips. Although not one of the premier Stax/Volt acts, this quartet enjoyed seven R&B hits between 1965 and 1969. After changing their name from the Emeralds, their first single, 'The Sidewalk Surf', flopped, but the group placed three singles in the R&B Top 20 in 1965-66, the best-known being 'I Want Someone'. Their first hit, 'Don't Want To Shop Around', was curiously anachronistic, owing more to doo-wop than southern soul. Later releases, including the perky 'Sugar Sugar', were more typical, but the group was increasingly obscured by its more successful counterparts. In 1966, Williams and Brown were drafted and replaced by Sam Nelson and Quincy Clifton Billops Jnr. A version of the Jimmy Webb standard 'By The Time I Get To Phoenix' proved to be the Mad Lads' last chart entry in 1969, after which they broke up. A new line-up was assembled in 1972, but disbanded after completing one album. Former member Billops joined another Stax group, Ollie And The Nightingales, and from there moved into a re-formed version of the Ovations. A new Mad Lads built around Williams and Gary formed in 1984, with a new Volt album, Madder Than Ever, released in 1990.

Mad Lion

b. Oswald Preist, London, England. The reggae/hip-hop connection has been strengthened with top performers from the two diverse styles recording together: Yellowman with Bill Laswell's Material, Shabba Ranks performing with KRS-1, Shaggy with Grand Puba and Buju Banton alongside Heavy D. In Brooklyn, New York, the Mad Lion (acronym for Musical Assassin Delivering Lyrical Intelligence Over Nations) began performing a combination of ragga and hip-hop in verbal battles fought in parking lots, or any location where opposing rappers could set up their decks, amps and speakers, the equivalent of Jamaica's sound system battles. Mad Lion's reputation spread and he began recording in his own unique style. Kris Parker aka KRS-1 had worked with Shelly Thunder and Ziggy Marley, although it is his association with the Mad Lion that proved to be the most enduring. While the projects with Thunder, Shabba and Ziggy Marley were brief encounters, the partnership with the Lion continued throughout the mid-90s. The Lion's debut, 'Shoot To Kill', was a phenomenal success in New York. The hit was swiftly followed by 'Take It Easy', which became an international hit and led to an album release of the same name. He topped Billboard's reggae chart and introduced female DJ Lady Apache to Nervous Records, with whom he had enjoyed his notable accomplishments. By the end of 1994, with producer Gyasi Addae, he recorded 'Real Lover', which also led to an album of the same name. Notable inclusions were 'Idiot Drumpan Sound', 'Murderah Man', 'Bad Boy Life' and 'Fluffy'. In the summer of 1995 in the Paramount Theatre, a show, Hot 97, was organized by the New York-based radio station featuring legendary hip-hop performers. The aim was to demonstrate that the negative image created by the gangster and drug culture was detrimental to the music's progression. Supporting the show were Doug E. Fresh, Lovebug Starski, the Furious Four, KRS-1, MC Shan and Mad Lion. Also in 1995, the Lloyd Campbell-produced 'Love Woman So' almost crossed over into the international reggae charts. Two years later, 'Carpenter' topped the US reggae chart. Mad Lion has enjoyed tremendous success on the rap scene but has as yet failed to make a significant impression with dancehall devotees.

Mad River

Laurence Hammond (vocals/harmonica), David Robinson (lead guitar), Greg Druian (rhythm guitar), Tom Manning (bass) and Greg Dewey (drums) formed the Mad River Blues Band in 1965. Initially based in Yellow Springs, Ohio, USA, the group subsequently moved to California, by which time Druian had been replaced by Rick Bockner. The quintet, now dubbed simply Mad River, initially struggled to assert themselves, but a privately pressed EP helped secure a series of gigs at prestigious San Franciscan venues. Mad River's debut album was released in 1968. Although mastered too fast owing to a technical error, it remains an enthralling slice of vintage acid rock, where traces of Country Joe And The Fish and Quicksilver Messenger Service blend with Hammond's reedy, quivering voice. A second album, Paradise Bar And Grill, was an altogether different affair. A handful of the tracks echoed the style of that first selection, while others were indebted to C&W, a genre towards which the singer was increasingly drawn. Two haunting acoustic instrumentals and a cameo appearance by the late writer Richard Brautigan completed one of the late 60s most engaging collections. Mad River broke up soon after its release. Dewey later joined Country Joe And The Fish, and has subsequently played with numerous Bay Area groups. Hammond pursued his love of country music with his Whiplash Band and recorded an engaging album, Coyote's Dream, in 1976. The remainder of the group retired from active performance.

Mad Season

Mad Season were formed as a brief offshoot of Pearl Jam when their lead guitarist, Mike McCready, was on holiday in Minneapolis. There he met John Baker Saunder, the bass player with Lamont Cranston. The rest of Mad Season consist of Seattle luminaries Barrett Martin (drums; also Screaming Trees) and Layne Staley (b. 1967, vocals; Alice In Chains). They played their first gig with just three days notice as the Gacy Bunch (a halfway-house name between television serial The Brady Bunch and serial killer John Wayne Gacy) at Seattle's Crocodile Cafe. There had still been no proper rehearsals when they played their second gig two weeks later. By the recording of the album they were called Mad Season, which McCready first heard in Surrey when Pearl Jam were mixing their first album. 'It's the time when the psychedelic mushrooms grow. And it's a Hunter S. Thompson thing, and it certainly describes my years of alcohol, so it had stuck in my mind for a long time.' The group's debut featured Screaming Trees vocalist Mark Lanegan duetting with Staley. The understated performances from the star personnel helped to create an impressive and relaxed album.

Madam X

One of Madam X's more distinctive songs, 'Come One, Come All', contained the line 'We're bad, we're good, that's all we ever wanted'. Unfortunately for them, most people thought they belonged chiefly in the former category. The group were formed in New York in 1983 by sisters Maxine and Roxy Petrucci on guitar and drums, respectively, along with vocalist Bret Kaiser and bassist Christopher 'Godzilla' Doliber. They subsequently moved to Los Angeles where their brand of glam metal was more readily accepted. In February 1985 they released an anthemic single, 'High In High School', backed with a suitably grandiose video. The single was produced by Rick Derringer who also performed the same task on the album. Both, however, were very average affairs and live shows fell short of the expected excitement. In 1986 Roxy departed to form Vixen and Kaiser quit the scene with ego suitably deflated. Mark McConnell took over the drums while vocal duties were handled by Sebastian Bach. Within the year the band disintegrated, with Doliber forming a wild and heavy band called Godzilla (which failed). Maxine remained in the shadow of her sister, but Bach found stardom with Skid Row.

Madame Sherry

With music by Hugo Felix and a book by Maurice Ordonneau, this 'Musical Vaudeville' or 'French Vaudeville', was presented in Paris and Berlin in 1902, and in London a year later. By the time it opened at the New Amersterdam Theatre in New York on 30 August 1910, it had been radically reworked, and had music by Karl Hoschna and a book and lyrics by Otto Harbach. The complicated story involves Edward Sherry (Jack Gardner), whose wealthy uncle Theophilus (Ralph Herz), sets him up in his own Sherry School of Aesthetic Dancing. Edward succeeds in convincing his uncle that his houskeeper, Catherine (Elizabeth Murray), is his wife and two of the dancing pupils are his children. At the time, Edward loves Lulu (Frances Demarest), one of his terpsichorean teachers, but, by the end of the piece he has transferred his affections to Yvonne (Lina Abarbanell), who, fresh from the convent school, accedes to the title of Madame Sherry. Hoschna and Harbach's score contained 'Every Little Movement' ('Has a meaning of its own'), which became an enormous hit and a firm favourite in vaudeville and music halls through the years. The Dorsey Brothers Orchestra had some success with it, and the number was also featured in several 40s film musicals such as Presenting Lily Mars (Judy Garland), Shine On Harvest Moon, and The Jolson Story. The rest of the composers' score included 'The Smile She Means For You, 'I Want To Play House With You', and 'The Birth Of Passion'. Another song, 'Put You Arms Around Me Honey', which was written by Albert Von Tilzer and Junie McCree, and interpolated into the show, became extremely popular. It also turned up in several movie musicals including two Betty Grable vehicles, Coney Island and Mother Wore Tights. Lina Abarbanell was the main star of the piece, but comedienne Elizabeth Murray also made a strong impression, and helped the show enjoy a run of 231 performances. She went on to further success in High Jinks, Watch Your Step, and Sidewalks Of New York.

Madball

Singer Freddy Cricien (b. Florida, USA), brother of Agnostic Front's Roger Miret, was inevitably influenced by his imposing sibling, and his own band, Madball, operated in a similar, all-out hardcore vein. Cricien had made his debut at an Agnostic Front show at the age of seven, when visiting his New York-based brother, climbing on stage to offer a rendition of the Animals' It's My Life'. Eventually, he moved to the US capital, spending much time at the city's home for hardcore, CBGB's. It was Vinnie Stigma of Agnostic Front who gave him his nickname, 'Madball', after provoking the young Cricien to the point where his face resembled such an object. When Madball was formed, it included Stigma on guitar, with brother Roger on bass and Will Shepler on drums. Their first release, 'Ball Of Destruction', was unveiled in 1989 on In-Effect Records, and is now a genuine rarity. However, there was a three-year gap before a second 7-inch, 'Droppin' Many Suckers', this time released with Wreck-age Records. It prefaced a switch to Roadrunner and a long-playing set that, predictably, accented machismo and power over subtlety, but was nevertheless an energizing collection. It saw the debut of the band's current line-up: Cricien (vocals), Shepler (drums), Stigma (guitar), Matt Henderson (guitar) and Hoya (bass).

Madder Rose

Spuriously lauded on their arrival in 1993 as the 'new Velvet Underground', Manhattan-based New Yorkers Madder Rose comprised Billy Coté (b. New Jersey, USA; guitar), Mary Lorson (vocals), Matt Verta-Ray (bass) and Johnny Kick (b. Chicago; drums, ex-Speedball). The initial ripples were caused by singles such as 'Swim', a yearning, slow-burning torch song reminiscent of Lou Reed's craft. However, they could hardly be described as anyone's 'new young thing', with all of the members aged over 30 at this early stage in their career. Each boasted an interesting, mainly non-musical background. Lorson was an ex-busker and film student, while both Verta-Ray and Kick worked at the Andy Warhol silk-screen factory and met the great man several times (a fact that helped to encourage the Velvet Underground comparisons). Coté had additionally spent much of the 80s working in No/New Wave bands Hammerdoll and Coté Coté, while struggling to overcome his heroin addiction. Cover versions of PiL's 'Rise' and the Cars' 'My Best Friend's Girl' on stage further revealed Madder Rose's diversity, while their debut album was trumpeted by Melody Maker magazine as 'the debut album of 1993'. Released on Atlantic Records' independently distributed subsidiary Seed, production was overseen by Kevin Salem of Dumptruck. Matt Verta-Ray left in February 1994 to concentrate on his own project, Speedball Baby, the departure agreed before the band recorded their second album. He was replaced for Panic On by Chris Giammalvo (ex-Eve's Plum), on a set co-produced with Clash/Breeders/Th' Faith Healers veteran, Mark Freegard. This saw Lorson emerge as a songwriting force to rival Coté on some of the album's best numbers, including the appealing 'Foolish Ways'.

Maddox, Rose

b. Roselea Arbana Maddox, 15 December 1926, near Boaz, Alabama, USA, d. 15 April 1998, Ashland, Oregon, USA. In the Depression days of 1933, Charlie and Lula Madox took their five young children (Cal, Henry, Fred, Don and Rose), whose ages ranged from 7 to 16, illegally boarded freight trains and headed for California, eventually settling near Bakersfield. They followed the various harvests, working as 'fruit tramps', and were soon joined by eldest son Cliff. All were musical, and to help their income, they began to play for local dances, with the 12-year-old Rose providing the vocals, even in noisy honky tonks. They first appeared on radio on KTRB Modesto in 1937, but by 1941, when they disbanded owing to Cal, Fred, and Don being drafted, they had become a popular act, due initially to appearances on the powerful KFBK Sacramento station. In 1946, they re-formed as the Maddox Brothers And Rose and became popular over a wide area. Their bright and garish stage costumes earned them the title 'the most colourful hillbilly band in America'. Cliff died in 1948, and his place was taken by Henry. By the early 50s, with an act that included comedy as well as songs, they were regulars on the Louisiana Hayride, played concerts and also appeared on the Grand Ole Opry. In 1947, they recorded for Four Star before moving to Columbia in 1951. Their successes included Rose's stirring recordings of 'The Philadelphia Lawyer' and 'The Tramp On The Street'. Rose also recorded with her sister-in-law, Loretta, as Rosie And Rita. By the mid-50s, Rose was beginning to look to a solo career. In 1957, she signed for Capitol and about that time the Maddox Brothers nominally disbanded. Rose soon established herself as a solo singer and, during the 60s, had several chart hits including 'Gambler's Love', 'Conscience I'm Guilty' and her biggest hit 'Sing A Little Song Of Heartache'. She also had four very successful duet recordings with Buck Owens, namely 'Mental Cruelty', 'Loose Talk', 'We're The Talk Of The Town' and 'Sweethearts In Heaven'. In the late 60s, she suffered the first of several heart attacks that have affected her career, but by 1969 she had recovered and made the first of her visits to Britain. She continued to work when health permitted throughout the 70s, but had no chart success. After leaving Capitol in 1967, she recorded for several labels including Starday, Decca and King. In the 80s, she recorded two albums for Arhoolie Records and her famous Varrick album Queen Of The West, on which she was helped by Merle Haggard and the Strangers and Emmylou Harris. Her son, Donnie, died in 1982 and she sang gospel songs with the Vern Williams band at his funeral. She frequently appeared with Williams, a popular west coast bluegrass musician who also provided the backing on some of her 80s recordings. In 1987, Maddox suffered a further major heart attack which left her in a critical condition for some time. Her situation was aggravated by the fact that she had no health insurance but benefit concerts were held to raise the funds. Rose Maddox possessed a powerful, emotive voice and was gifted with the ability to sing music of all types. Her recordings range from early hillbilly songs and gospel tunes through to rockabilly numbers that have endeared her to followers of that genre. Later she worked with long-time friend and rockabilly artist Glen Glenn, recording the album Rockabilly Reunion with him at the Camden Workers Club, London, in March 1987. Many experts rate the album Rose Maddox Sings Bluegrass as her finest recorded work. On it she is backed by such outstanding bluegrass musicians as Don Reno, Red Smiley and Bill Monroe. In 1995 she was nominated for a Grammy for the last mentioned album.

Made

A cheerless 1972 film, Made starred Carol White (Cathy Come Home, Poor Cow) as a struggling single parent mistreated by those around her. The role of her musician lover was initially offered to Marc Bolan, but it was desolate folk singer Roy Harper who secured the part. Both he and White were excellent in their roles, although the depressing situation of the latter ensures that watching Made, although thought-provoking, is not a pleasurable experience. Harper contributed several songs, marked by de rigueur personal ruminations, but the power of the film is derived from its script and John Mackenzie's sympathetic direction. A minor classic, Made continues the atmosphere of early 60s' 'kitchen sink' drama.

Made In Japan - Deep Purple

Recorded on the Japanese tour of 1972, Deep Purple created the most effortless of great live albums. Labouring under the Machine Head tour and with inter-band relationships that saw both Ian Gillan and Roger Glover feuding with the sometimes difficult Ritchie Blackmore and quitting the band early the following year. The record, for its part, does not suffer from the personnel problems, the band playing what would become, in retrospect, a greatest hits set. The consistency of the material - 'Child In Time', 'Strange Kind Of Woman', 'Space Truckin'' - was, and still is, astounding, matched only by the arch standards of Purple's live performance.

Madison, Bingie

b. Bingie S. Madison, 1902, Des Moines, Iowa, USA, d. 1978. In his late teens and early twenties, he played piano in his hometown and in California but later took up clarinet and saxophones. He played with numerous bands and in the late 20s and early 30s briefly led his own band. In 1931 he joined Luis Russell and was in the unit when it backed Louis Armstrong for tours and records. During his tenure with the band, Madison occasionally wrote very effective arrangements. From 1940 he began another round of bands; usually these were second-rankers but he had brief spells with Edgar Hayes and Ovie Alston. Madison's playing was sometimes less than perfect but he was an able section player. His arranging talents were very good but underused although he did write a number of charts for Earl Hines' big band in its later years.

Madison, Kid Shots

b. Louis Madison, 19 February 1899, New Orleans, Louisiana, USA, d. September 1948. He began playing trumpet, having first played drums in the waif's home band that saw the musical beginnings of Louis Armstrong and Kid Rena. As he gained proficiency as a trumpet player, Madison worked with several New Orleans brass and marching bands. He continued these activities through the 30s and in the early 40s played in bands led by Bunk Johnson. Like so many of his generation of New Orleans musicians, Madison was able to play music only as a sideline to full-time work in other things. He played with drive and vigorous attack.

Madness

This highly regarded UK ska/pop group evolved from the London-based Invaders in the summer of 1979. Their line-up comprised Suggs McPherson (b. Graham McPherson, 13 January 1961, Hastings, Sussex, England; vocals), Mark Bedford (b. 24 August 1961, London, England; bass), Mike Barson (b. 21 April 1958, London, England; keyboards), Chris Foreman (b. 8 August 1958, London, England; guitar), Lee Thompson (b. 5 October 1957, London, England; saxophone), Chas Smash (b. Cathal Smythe, 14 January 1959; vocals, trumpet) and Dan Woodgate (b. 19 October 1960, London, England; drums). After signing a one-off contract with 2-Tone they issued 'The Prince', a tribute to blue beat maestro Prince Buster (whose song 'Madness' had inspired the group's name). The single reached the UK Top 20 and the follow-up, 'One Step Beyond' (a Buster composition) did even better, peaking at number 7, the first result of their new contract with Stiff Records. An album of the same title revealed Madness's charm, with its engaging mix of ska and exuberant pop, a fusion they humorously dubbed 'the nutty sound'. Over the next two years the group enjoyed an uninterrupted run of UK Top 10 hits, including 'My Girl', Work Rest And Play (EP), 'Baggy Trousers', 'Embarrassment', 'The Return Of The Los Palmas Seven', 'Grey Day', 'Shut Up' and 'It Must Be Love' (originally a hit for its composer, Labi Siffre). Although Madness appealed mainly to a younger audience and were known as a zany, fun-loving group, their work occasionally took on a more serious note. Both 'Grey Day' and 'Our House' showed their ability to write about working-class family life in a fashion that was piercingly accurate, yet never patronizing. At their best, Madness were the most able commentators on London life since the Kinks in the late 60s. An ability to tease out a sense of melancholy beneath the fun permeated their more mature work, particularly on the 1982 album The Rise And Fall. That same year Suggs married singer Bette Bright and the group finally topped the charts with their 12th chart entry, 'House Of Fun' (which concerned teenage sexuality and the purchase of prophylactics). More UK hits followed, including 'Wings Of A Dove' and 'The Sun And The Rain', but in late 1983 the group suffered a serious setback when founding member Barson quit. The group continued to release some exceptional work in 1984 including 'Michael Caine' and 'One Better Day'. At the end of that year, they formed their own label, Zarjazz. Its first release was Feargal Sharkey's 'Listen To Your Father' (written by the group), which reached the UK Top 30. Madness continued to enjoy relatively minor hits by previous standards with the contemplative 'Yesterday's Men', the exuberant 'Uncle Sam' and a cover version of the former Scritti Politti success, 'The Sweetest Girl'. In the autumn of 1986, the group announced that they were splitting. Seventeen months later, they reunited as a four-piece under the name The Madness, but failed to emulate previous successes. One of Mark Bedford's projects was a collaboration with ex-Higsons member Terry Edwards in Butterfield 8. Lee Thompson and Chris Foreman later worked under the appellation the Nutty Boys, releasing one album, Crunch, in 1990, and played to capacity crowds in London clubs and pubs. In June 1992 the original Madness re-formed for two open-air gigs in Finsbury Park, London, which resulted in Madstock, a 'live' document of the event. The group's renewed public image was rewarded with four chart entries during the year; three reissues, 'It Must Be Love', 'House Of Fun', and 'My Girl', and 'The Harder They Come'. In 1993, a 'musical about homelessness', One Step Beyond, by Alan Gilbey, incorporated 15 Madness songs when it opened on the London fringe - further evidence, as if any were needed, of the enduring brilliance of Madness's irresistible songcraft.

Madness - Madness

Only available on import in the UK, this was Madness's biggest album in the USA. With a track-listing that reads like a compilation, it is not difficult to see why it was so popular. Now firmly an 'establishment' band, it is easy to forget that the ska sound purveyed by Madness had its share of skinhead supporters and dubious lyrical concerns. Narrative opening lines such as 'Good morning miss/Can I help you son' ('House Of Fun') and 'Father wears his Sunday best' ('Our House') are guaranteed to make you sit back in anticipation. The cleverly barbed lyrics only add to the good-time value of these songs.

Madonna

b. Madonna Louise Veronica Ciccone, 16 August 1958, Rochester Michigan, USA. Madonna excelled at dance and drama at high school and during brief periods at colleges in Michigan and North Carolina. In 1977 she went to New York, studying with noted choreographer Alvin Ailey and taking modelling jobs. Two years later, Madonna moved to France to join a show featuring disco singer Patrick Hernandez. There she met Dan Gilroy and, back in New York, the pair formed club band the Breakfast Club. Madonna played drums and sang with the band before setting up Emmy in 1980 with Detroit-born drummer Steve Bray. Together, Madonna and Bray created dance tracks which led to a recording deal with Sire Records. With leading New York disc jockey Mark Kamins producing, she recorded 'Everybody', a US club hit in 1982. Madonna broke out from the dance scene into mainstream pop with 'Holiday', written and produced by John 'Jellybean' Benitez. It reached the US Top 20 and was a Top 10 hit across Europe in 1984. By now, her tough, raunchy persona was coming across to international audiences and the attitude was underlined by the choice of Tom Kelly and Billy Steinberg's catchy 'Like A Virgin' as a 1984 single. It was the first of ten US number 1 hits for Madonna. Among these was 'Material Girl', the video for which introduced one of her most characteristic visual styles, the mimicking of Marilyn Monroe's 'blonde bombshell' image. By the time of the Live Aid concert, at which she appeared, and her high-profile wedding to actor Sean Penn, Madonna had become an internationally recognized superstar, known to millions of tabloid newspaper readers without any interest in her music. Among the fans of her work were a growing number of 'wannabees', teenage girls who aped her independent and don't-care stance.

From 1985-87, she turned out a stream of irresistibly catchy hit singles. 'Crazy For You' was co-written by ex-Carpenters collaborator John Bettis, while she and Steve Bray wrote 'Into The Groove'. These were followed by 'Dress You Up' and 'Papa Don't Preach', with its message of generational rebellion. 'True Blue', 'Open Your Heart' and 'La Isla Bonita' were later successes. Like an increasing number of her songs, 'Who's That Girl' (1987) was tied-in to a film - in this instance, a poorly received comedy in which she starred with Sir John Mills. Madonna's film career had begun in 1980 with a minor role in the b-movie A Certain Sacrifice before she starred in Desperately Seeking Susan (1985). In Shanghai Surprise (1986), Madonna appeared with Penn, from whom she separated in 1988. In that year, she also appeared on Broadway in the play Speed The Plow by David Mamet. Madonna continued to attract controversy when, in 1989, the video for 'Like A Prayer', with its links between religion and eroticism, was condemned by the Vatican and caused Pepsi-Cola to cancel a sponsorship deal with the star. The resulting publicity helped the album of the same title - co-produced with new collaborator Patrick Leonard - to become a global bestseller.

In 1990, her career reached a new peak of publicity and commercial success. She starred with Warren Beatty in the blockbuster film Dick Tracy, while the extravagant costumes and choreography of the Blond Ambition world tour were the apotheosis of Madonna's uninhibited melange of sexuality, song, dance and religiosity. The tour was commemorated by a documentary film, Truth Or Dare On The Band Behind The Scenes, And In Bed With Madonna, released in 1991. Among the hits of the early 90s were 'Vogue', devoted to a short-lived dance craze, 'Justify My Love' (co-written with Lenny Kravitz) and 'Rescue Me', produced by Madonna and Shep Pettibone. Madonna's reputation as a strong businesswoman, in control of each aspect of her career, was confirmed in 1992 when she signed a multi-million dollar deal with the Time-Warner conglomerate, parent company of Sire. This guaranteed the release of albums, films and books created by her own Maverick production company. The publication of her graphic and erotic book Sex put her back on top of the charts, though this time it was in the bestselling book lists. The book was an unprecedented success, selling out within hours and needing an immediate reprint. On Bedtime Stories she teamed up with Soul II Soul producer Nellee Hooper, who wrote the title track in conjunction with Björk. It was prefaced by the Top 10 performance of 'Secret', and boasted 11 tracks that combined, by her own description, pop, R&B, hip-hop and Madonna. In 1996 her need to shock had mellowed considerably with a credible movie portrayal of Eva Peron in Evita. Later that year she became 'with child' on 14 October with the birth of Lourdes Maria Ciccone Leon. She returned to music with 1998's Ray of Light, one of her finest recordings to date. Collaborating with dance producer William Orbit, Madonna positively revelled in a new-found musical freedom. Her voice had also matured into a rich and expressive instrument.

Madonna - Madonna

Now manufactured as The First Album, this marked the debut of the biggest new star of the 80s, and one that will be remembered throughout her life, regardless of any new music. Madonna was the female pop icon that the world had always sought. As for the music, this is a credible debut of familiar-sounding pop that broke no barriers. Today, the 80s drum machine and synths sound stodgy and dated. More significant was the clear signal that here was a major new artist in the making. Not only was Madonna outspoken and outrageously confident but she wrote all her own songs, and it is the songs that stand out regardless of the production.

Madriguera, Enric

b. 17 February 1904, Barcelona, Spain, d. 7 September 1975. A child prodigy on violin, Madriguera played concerts in Spain and France before studying music with Leopold Auer at Barcelona Conservatory. After emigrating to the USA, he played as soloist with the Boston and Chicago Symphony Orchestras and, while still in his 20s, became conductor of the Cuban Philharmonic, later joining NBC in New York as concertmaster. While visiting Colombia he worked as musical director for the Columbia Records' subsidiary there; as a result Madriguera became interested in dance music, forming his first band for the Havana Casino. Back in New York, he recorded with the group for the parent Columbia company. Madriguera's occupation for the eight years of his popular career was as leading violinist of a society band, which debuted in 1932 at the Commodore, Biltmore and Weylin hotels in New York. Helen Ward was his vocalist in her pre-Benny Goodman days; her place was later taken by Patricia Gilmore, who subsequently married Madriguera. In 1940, his musical policy became almost exclusively Latin-American for recording contracts with RCA and Brunswick as well as for the usual Columbia releases, so much so that he was known as 'Musical Ambassador Of The Americas'. Madriguera compositions include a stage musical The Moor And The Gipsy, a ballet Follies Of Spain, and many popular songs including 'Adios' and 'The Minute Samba'. When the band business had no more to offer, Mr. and Mrs. Madriguera retired to an old inn and country house in Connecticut where they continued to entertain visitors until his death in 1975.

Maestro Fresh Wes

Until the release of his self-proclaiming 1994 album, Fresh Wes had been one of the Canadian hip-hop fraternity's most closely guarded secrets. With production aid from DJ Showbiz (of Showbiz and AG fame), the MC's rhymes were delivered in old school New York style, emphasising a punning ability and freestyle approach, which was competent though hardly innovative. The introduction of jazzy overtones too, was not exactly revolutionary by this stage, though the single 'Fine Tune Da Mic' was well-received.

Maestro, Johnny

b. John Mastrangelo, 7 May 1939, Brooklyn, New York, USA. Maestro led two singing groups to the Top 10: the Crests in the 50s and Brooklyn Bridge in the 60s and 70s. With the Crests, whom he joined in 1956, Maestro's voice was heard on the number 2 doo-wop classic '16 Candles' in 1958, as well as lesser hits 'The Angels Listened In', 'Step By Step' and 'Trouble In Paradise'. (NB: Maestro spelled his stage name Mastro during his tenure with the Crests). Maestro signed as a solo artist to the Coed label, the same for which the Crests recorded, in 1960, while still with the Crests (the group backed him vocally). That year he placed three singles on the charts: the Top 20 'Model Girl', the Top 40 'What A Surprise' and the lesser entry 'My Happiness'. He left the group and the label in 1962 and continued to record singles for Apt Records, Cameo-Parkway Records, Sceptre Records and United Artists Records, some with new line-ups of Crests, but none were successful. He was absent from the national scene until 1968, when he combined two groups from Long Island, New York: the Del Satins (who had backed Dion on some recordings) and the Rhythm Method, into the Brooklyn Bridge. The 11-piece group immediately logged its biggest hit, 'The Worst That Could Happen', followed by six lesser chart entries, including 'Blessed Is The Rain', 'Welcome My Love' and 'Your Husband-My Wife'. The group's chart run stopped in 1970 but Maestro continued to appear with revamped Brooklyn Bridge line-ups into the 90s.

Maffay, Peter

b. Peter Makkay, 30 August 1949, Kronstadt, Romania. This popular Germany-based singer arrived in his adopted country in 1963, beginning his apprenticeship by playing folk clubs in Bavaria. Maffay's debut single, 'Du', charted at number 1 in Germany and went gold. It was accompanied by a debut solo album, Feur Das Maedchen, Das Ich Liebe (For The Girls That I Love), in 1970. The next few years were surprisingly quiet, however, until he teamed up with rock band Sahara in 1974. Three years later he collaborated with Johnny Tame, using English lyrics for the first time in an attempt to broaden his appeal beyond the domestic market. The same year he also formed the Peter Maffay Band with local accomplices. The group's faithful translation of American MOR rock proved immensely popular, with their career receiving a huge upswing when Steppenwolf became a major seller. The band continued to sustain this success throughout the 80s, and by 1987 Maffay had also launched an acting career, appearing in The Joker. His commercial success in Europe continues in the mid-90s.

Mafia And Fluxy

Initially inspired by Sly And Robbie, brothers Mafia (b. Leroy Heywood, 1962, London, England; bass) and Fluxy (b. David Heywood, 1963, London, England; drums) are the UK's foremost rhythm section, and are becoming increasingly well known for their own productions. Early encouragement came via Uncle Wizard's sound system and then Fatman, who released their debut, 'Let's Make Love', after they had formed the Instigators in 1977. By 1985 they had enjoyed several hits and gained valuable experience backing touring Jamaican acts, quickly coming to terms with the new digital technology. In 1987 they visited Jamaica, building rhythm tracks for Bunny Lee, Blacker Dread, King Jammy and Exterminator. That year they started their own self-titled label, producing Cinderella, Billy Melody, Sugar Minott and, later, Private Collection ('Dreamer'). Their debut album, Dancehall Connection Volume 1, featured such diverse talents as General Trees, King Kong and General Levy when released in 1990. That year, Mafia And Fluxy returned to Jamaica, providing many notable hits for Penthouse, Black Scorpio, Jammys, Gussie Clarke, Mikey Bennett, Mr Doo and Roy Francis. In the UK they backed Maxi Priest and Lloyd Brown, and were voted Producers Of The Year, the Instigators winning the Best Reggae Band Award. On their own label, tracks by Tiger ('Winery'), Gregory Isaacs, Johnny Osbourne, Sugar Black, Cornell Campbell, Sanchez ('Whip Appeal') and Sugar Minott were released at regular intervals. In 1992 Mafia issued his debut album, Finders Keepers, while hits by Cobra ('Off Guard'), Dirtsman, Poison Chang ('Do Me A Favour'), Sweetie Irie, Red Dragon, Cutty Ranks ('Armed And Dangerous'), Tenor Fly and Chaka Demus And Pliers ('Wining Machine') witnessed no shortage of success throughout 1992/3. Back in Jamaica, Mafia And Fluxy laid further tracks for Bobby Digital, Penthouse and Stone Love, with whom they won a Jamaican award for 'Best Juggling (mixing) Record'. By 1994 they were remixing the likes of Boy George, Barrington Levy and the Rhythm Kings, Mega Banton's 'First Position' was a number 1 hit and they had become one of the most in-demand rhythm sections in reggae music, even occasionally pairing with Sly (Mafia) and Steely (Fluxy).

Magazine

The Buzzcocks' vocalist Howard Devoto left that group in January 1977, although he continued to be involved on the fringe of their activities for some time. In April he met guitarist John McGeogh (b. 28 May 1955, Greenock, Strathclyde, Scotland) and together they started writing songs. They formed Magazine with Devoto on vocals, McGeogh on guitar, Barry Adamson on bass, Bob Dickinson on keyboards and Martin Jackson on drums. The group played their debut live gig at the closing night of the Electric Circus, Manchester, in the autumn of 1977, as a last-minute addition to the bill. Their moody, cold keyboards and harsh rhythms were in sharp contrast to the mood of the day: 'Everybody was playing everything ultra fast, as fast as they could. I thought we could begin to play slow music again.' They were signed to Virgin Records but Dickinson left in November and as a result, their debut, 'Shot By Both Sides', was recorded by the four remaining members. Dave Formula was recruited in time to play on Real Life. Next to leave was Jackson who departed after their first tour. Paul Spencer came in temporarily before John Doyle was recruited in October 1978. This line-up remained for the next couple of years, although McGeogh was also playing with Siouxsie And The Banshees, and, along with Adamson and Formula, in Steve Strange's Visage. Their albums received universal acclaim but only their first single and 1980's 'Sweetheart Contract' dented the charts. As the latter was released McGeogh left to join Siouxsie full-time and Robin Simon (ex-Neo and Ultravox) was brought in on guitar. A tour of the USA and Australia - where a live album was recorded - led to Simon's departure and Ben Mandelson (ex-Amazorblades) came in for the band's last few months. The departure of Devoto in May 1981 signalled the unit's death knell. The body of work they left behind, however, is surprisingly enduring given its angular and experimental slant. Devoto went on to a solo career before forming Luxuria.

Magellan

Formed in Vacaville, California, USA, in the mid-80s, Magellan was originally a project put together by brothers Wayne (electric and acoustic guitar) and Trent (lead vocals, keyboards) Gardner. Together with Hal Stringfellow Imbrie (bass, vocals), they set out to reinstate the progressive rock tradition of the 70s, which married riffs to jazz and classical flourishes. This combination was finely executed on their 1991 debut, Hour Of Restoration, which added modern, computer-generated possibilities to the equation. August 1993 saw the release of its follow-up, Impending Ascension, which earned comparisons to Dream Theater's crafted electro-rock. Opponents of grandiose musical statements were rewarded with much at which to scoff, including quotes drawn from Shakespeare, Poe and Magellan, the explorer from whom the group drew their name. The subject matter was far from trite mysticism, including topics such as virtual reality and social alienation.

Maggie May

Lionel Bart, who liked to have a hand in most aspects of his shows, concentrated on writing just the music and lyrics for this one which opened at the Adelphi Theatre in London on 22 September 1964. His librettist was the Liverpudlian playwright Alun Owen, an appropriate choice considering that the story was set in and around the Liverpool Docks. Bart's project was inspired by the traditional ballad about a local prostitute, which was sung by the sailors and dockworkers in the area. In Owen's dramatic book dealing with trades union ethics and disputes, the streetwalker, Margaret Mary Duffy (Rachel Roberts), loses her childhood sweetheart, Patrick Casey (Kenneth Haigh), after he dies trying to prevent a shipload of arms going to South America. As in previous shows such as Fings Ain't Wot They Used T'Be, Blitz!, and Oliver!, Bart's score caught the mood and the style of the piece perfectly. The songs ranged from attractive ballads such as 'It's Yourself', 'The Land Of Promises', 'Lullaby', 'I Love A Man', and 'The Ballad Of The Liver Bird', to the more lively 'I Told You So', 'Dey Don't Do Dat T'day', 'Leave Her, Johnny, Leave Her', 'Shine, You Swine', 'We Don't All Wear D'Same Size Boots', 'Maggie, Maggie May', and 'It's Yourself'. The critics were divided, but the public took to the show, partly perhaps because anything to do with Liverpool was of interest while the Beatles, and several other local groups, were constantly storming the pop charts. Maggie May had a highly respectable run of 501 performances, and also introduced a future star to the West End in the shape of Julia McKenzie who took over from Rachel Roberts occasionally. Part of Bart's score reached a wider audience when Judy Garland recorded four of the songs from the show, 'Maggie May', 'There's Only One Union', 'Land Of Promise', and 'It's Yourself', on an EP record. In 1992, nearly 30 years later, the National Youth Theatre of Great Britain mounted an acclaimed production of Maggie May at London's Royalty Theatre. It was a welcome feature of Lionel Bart's UK renaissance.

Magic Carpet

Although the UK progressive rock movement inevitably produced artists of questionable artistic integrity, other groups such as 70s Magic Carpet used the possibilities of improving technology to produce something highly original and imaginative. A quartet featuring Clem Alford (sitar, tamboura, esraj), Jim Moyes (guitar), Keshav Sathe (tabla, percussion) and Alisha Sufit (vocals, guitar), Magic Carpet melded Eastern and mystical influences into delightful quasi-psychedelic rock patterns. Formed at the beginning of the 70s, the most distinctive presence in the group was that of Sufit, whose voice bridged ethnic and domestic approaches with an ease which demonstrated her comfort with either tradition. Alford had travelled to India in his youth to study Indian classical music, specialising in sitar, while Sathe was an accomplished percussionist on a variety of Indian instruments. Moyes's contribution on guitar helped to regulate the group's sound into something dynamic enough for western palates. The group recorded its debut album for Mushroom Records (the Indian music specialist label rather than its better-known Australian pop music counterpart) in 1971. Produced by Vic Keary at Chalk Farm Studios in London, it received excellent reviews from some of the more adventurous members of the music press but by the time it was released a year later, the group had already broken up. Alford concentrated on a solo career, while Sufit continued with her artwork until she returned to the music industry in 1992, recording and self-releasing Alisha Through The Looking Glass.

Magic Christian, The

During his period in the Beatles, Ringo Starr had emerged as the quartet's most natural actor. In his first sideline project, he appeared as a gardener in Candy (1968), which was written by Terry Southern. The Magic Christian was based on a novel by the same US author, who penned the ensuing screenplay with Peter Sellers, star of the film. The latter plays an eccentric millionaire, determined to spend his fortune by compromising the greed of others. Starr relishes his role as the adopted, savant son who helps oversee a variety of loosely satirical 'happenings'. These reach a climax when an assembly wades through a mixture of blood and ordure in order to gain their fortune. A galaxy of co-stars, including Richard Attenborough, Lawrence Harvey, Yul Brinner and Roman Polanski, were cast alongside a host of British actors, notably Spike Milligan, John Cleese, Graham Chapman, John Le Mesurier and Dennis Price. The result is an entertaining period-piece, released in 1970, but fired by the charm and excess of the decade which had passed. The Beatles' connection was furthered by a soundtrack which featured Apple label protégés, Badfinger. 'Come And Get It', written for the quartet by Paul McCartney, reached number 4 in the UK singles chart, and the album also includes 'Something In The Air' a chart-topper in 1969 for Thunderclap Newman.

Magic Lanterns

Formed in the UK and based in the Manchester area, this soft rock band were formed from the Sabres who were in existence around 1962. At one point the Sabres also included Kevin Godley and Lol Creme, later of 10cc and Godley And Creme. After the temporary title of the Hammers, they became the Magic Lanterns. Their founding members were Jimmy Bilsbury (vocals), Peter Shoesmith (guitar), Ian Moncur (bass) and Allan Wilson (drums). While working in a local nightclub they were approached by compere Roy Hastings who liked Bilsbury's songs and introduced them to his publisher, Mike Collier. Collier arranged for the band to record a new version of Artie Wayne's US release 'Excuse Me Baby', on the strength of which CBS signed them and released 'Excuse Me Baby' as a single in June 1966. It was a minor hit and was followed by such misses as 'Knight In Rusty Armour', 'Rumplestiltskin', and 'Auntie Griselda', by which time they were sounding increasingly psychedelic. In 1969, Collier switched their management to American Ronnie Oppenheimer who got Steve Rowland (Family Dogg) and Albert Hammond involved. They co-wrote 'Shame Shame' which became the band's first US hit. Moncur left in 1969 and some time later Shoesmith and Wilson followed suit. The band struggled on for a few more months, but broke up while in Hamburg. The final line-up was Bilsbury, Alistair Beveridge (guitar), Paul Garner (guitar), Mike Osbourne (bass) and Paul Ward (drums). Bilsbury joined the Les Humphries Singers who were popular on the continent and had several singles released in the UK in the 70s. Boney M's Liz Mitchell was a founding member, along with Humphreys.

Magic Mixture

This UK progressive rock group comprised Jim Thomas (guitar/vocals), Jack Collins (drums), Stan Curtis (organ) and Melvyn Hacker (bass). Their sole album from 1968, This Is, is regarded as one of the better examples of the pop-psych genre, featuring engaging instrumental work on tracks such as '(I'm So) Sad', 'Urge To Leave' and 'Slowly The Day'. Attempts at humour, notably on 'Motorbike Song', were less successful. Sadly, in common with many of the acts on Saga Records in the late 60s, the album was poorly pressed and circulated in limited quantities. However, residual interest in the group resulted in a CD reissue by German label Bat Records in 1987, and a UK reissue on Merlin Records in 1993. After the group's demise Thomas went on to session work, his former compatriots dropping out of the music business.

Magic Muscle

Formed in the west country of England in 1969, Magic Muscle mixed classical nuances with Blue Cheer noise levels, thus creating a musical paradox enhanced by the band's peculiar abilities. With so many musicians passing through over the years, Magic Muscle were more of a community than a band, but at the centre of all activities was guitarist and vocalist Rod Goodway (ex-Artwoods, White Rabbit, J.P. Sunshine, Rustic Hinge), Adrian Shaw (later Hawkwind) on bass and drummer Kenny Wheeler. Working with Drachen Theaker (Crazy World Of Arthur Brown) and members of High Tide they began to gig and record, coming to the attention of disc jockey John Peel, who nearly signed them to his Dandelion label. By 1972 they had built a strong cult following and earned themselves the nickname 'Bastard Sons Of Hawkwind' when they joined the latter on their Space Ritual tour (tracks from which are present on Laughs & Thrills). They also started a partnership with Keith Christmas. This brought them to the attention of Island Records - though proprietor Chris Blackwell eventually chose to promote Jamaican music at this stage instead, signing Bob Marley. In 1973 Magic Muscle gigged with the Pink Fairies and for a while were joined by John Perry (Only Ones) and violinist Simon House (High Tide/Third Ear Band/Hawkwind/David Bowie). By the end of the year Goodway was ill in hospital and ended the band. It was 1987 before the name returned, thanks to the surge in interest in the recording activities of many ex-members connected with Hawkwind. After the relative success of Laughs & Thrills Goodway undertook the compilation of an album released in 1988 which featured 1970-1973 recordings. A year later he reformed the band with Gower/Shaw/House and drummer Twink (Pink Fairies/Pretty Things/Tomorrow). Their debut concert was held in Bath on 1 August and was recorded and released as One Hundred Miles Below. Dave Brock of Hawkwind played keyboards at the gig but his contribution did not appear on the finished album. Riding high on their new found fame Goodway released a second compilation set, Living Weeds From Ancient Seeds, some of the tracks therein featuring members of Elias Hulk and Dr. John's band. In 1991 he returned with a new line-up which featured Steve Broughton on drums (Edgar Broughton Band) and guitarist Nick Saloman (aka Bevis Frond). By 1994 Goodway had returned to other pursuits while the rest of the band effectively became the new line-up for the Bevis Frond.

b. Samuel Gene Maghett, 14 February 1937, Grenada County, Mississippi, USA, d. 1 December 1969. Although Sam's immediate family were not musical, he received encouragement from his uncle, 'Shakey Jake' Harris, a popular blues singer on Chicago's west side. Maghett arrived in the city in 1950 and by the age of 20 had secured a recording contract with Cobra Records, an emergent independent label. His debut single, 'All Your Love', a compulsive, assured performance that highlighted Sam's crisp guitar figures, set the pattern for several subsequent releases, but progress faltered upon his induction into the army in 1959. Not a natural soldier, Sam deserted after a couple of weeks' service and was subsequently caught and sentenced to six months' imprisonment. He was given a dishonourable discharge on release, but the experience had undermined Sam's confidence and his immediate recordings lacked the purpose of their predecessors. However, his debut album, West Side Soul, encapsulated an era when Maghett not only re-established his reputation in Chicago clubs, but had become an attraction on the rock circuit with appearances at the Fillmore and Winterland venues in San Francisco. This vibrant record included 'Sweet Home Chicago', later revived by the Blues Brothers. A second collection, Black Magic, confirmed his new-found status but its release was overshadowed by Sam's premature death from a heart attack in December 1969. Only days before, Maghett had agreed to sign with the renowned Stax label. His passing robbed the blues genre of a potentially influential figure.

Magic Show, The

Proof of the unpredictablity of musical theatre audiences, this show, which was merely a series of spectacular set-piece magical illusions linked by a flimsy plot, opened at the Cort Theatre in New York on 28 May 1974, and closed over four-and-a-half years later after an incredible 1,920 performances. Stephen Schwartz, who can usually be relied upon to conjure up something out of the ordinary himself, wrote the music and lyrics, and the book was the work of Bob Randall. The latter dealt with the sad tale of a New Jersey nightspot, The Passaic Top Hat, which is saved from debt and the road to the depths of degradation, by the arrival of a magic act. Doug Henning was the wizard who made everything well, and he really was the star of the show, with a supporting cast made up of Dale Soules, David Ogden Stiers, and Anita Morris. The songs included 'Up To His Old Tricks', 'Lion Tamer', 'Style', 'West End Avenue', and 'The Goldfarb Variations'. 'Goldfarb' is a familiar name in musical comedy history. George and Ira Gershwin immortalised the taxi driver-turned sheriff in Girl Crazy (1930), with their song, 'Goldfarb! That's I'm!'

b. Morris Holt, 7 August 1937, Torrence, Grenada, Mississippi, USA. Blues guitarist and vocalist Magic Slim became interested in music during childhood. He moved first to nearby Grenada, Mississippi, and then to Chicago in 1955, where he worked as bassist for Magic Sam, who gave Holt his name. He obtained a false identity card so that he was able to play bass with Sam in the bars and clubs. After completing that stay, he switched back to guitar and performed with a Chicago band called Mr. Pitiful And The Teardrops. When that band broke up, he moved back to Mississippi before returning to Chicago once again in 1965, where he re-formed the Teardrops with his two brothers (Nick, the bassist, became a permanent member). The band recorded its first single for the local Wes label in 1966, and another for the equally small Mean Mistreater label in 1970. It was not until 1978 that Magic Slim And The Teardrops began recording in earnest, contributing four tracks to an Alligator Records anthology. That was followed by a live album for the small Candy Apple label as well as recordings made in France, which were released in the USA on Alligator as Raw Magic in 1982. That same year he recorded the highly praised Grand Slam for Rooster Blues Records. A live album recorded in Austria, Chicago Blues Session, followed in 1987. Gravel Road, released on the small Blind Pig label in the USA, was issued in 1990. His sound is perhaps the tightest of any Chicago blues band working at the present time. This consistently satisfying blues musician has recorded singles for numerous labels but, recently, has recorded mainly for the Wolf Record label in Austria.

Magical Mystery Tour

Originally made for television and first screened by the BBC on Boxing Day 1967, Magical Mystery Tour was mauled by critics upon release. Yet the film has much to commend it, not least several excellent songs by the Beatles, who wrote, produced and directed the entire proceedings. However, the bulk of responsibility fell upon Paul McCartney, who mooted the idea. Magical Mystery Tour has a very simple premise, that of a coach trip to places unknown, but given the period in which it was filmed, events inevitably take on a psychedelic hue. Indeed, it has been claimed the plot was inspired by Ken Kesey's Merry Pranksters, who traversed the USA in a painted bus consuming hallucinogenics on the way. Given the Beatles' eminent position and the era's penchant for self-indulgence, several scenes meander to little purpose, but equally there are many memorable moments and characters. These include the wonderful outdoor scenes accompanying 'The Fool On The Hill', the cornucopia of images surrounding 'I Am The Walrus' and John Lennon's hilarious role as the waiter serving spaghetti with a spade to Ringo Starr's Aunt Jessie. The Bonzo Dog Doo-Dah Band make an excellent cameo appearance and Scottish raconteur Ivor Cutler is superb as Buster Bloodvessel. Over the years since its release, Magical Mystery Tour has been the subject of re-evaluation and it is now held in greater esteem. Yet if opinion over the film's merits were largely negative in 1967, this was not the case with the soundtrack (double) EP collection which reached number 2 in the UK charts while the Beatles' 'Hello Goodbye' held the top spot. In the USA a proper album was issued, bolstered by the inclusion of strong tracks such as 'Penny Lane', 'Strawberry Fields Forever', 'All You Need Is Love' and 'Baby You're A Rich Man'. It became a huge hit, spending two months at number 1. Imported copies of the album flowed into the UK in sufficient quantities that it also reached the album chart (number 31). Eventually, the obvious dawned on the record company and it got a belated UK release.

Magical Mystery Tour - The Beatles

The Americans saw the sense in making this an album, with a few extra tracks. In the UK it was released as a double EP, highly original but a pain to keep turning over four sides. The CD stopped all that, and we can universally benefit from some high-quality Beatles music. This album deserves better appreciation because it does contain three of John Lennon's finest - the swirling 'Baby You're A Rich Man', the staggering lyrics of 'I Am The Walrus' and the pinnacle, 'Strawberry Fields Forever'. The film may have disappointed but there is enough great material here to keep any dissenter quiet.

Magicians

Formed in New York in 1964, the Magicians comprised Allan Jacobs (lead guitar), Gary Bonner (rhythm guitar), John Townley (bass) and Alan Gordon (drums). They were briefly the houseband at the famed Night Owl Cafe, but despite becoming the subject of a WCBS-television documentary, Four To Go! (1966), the quartet was unable to achieve a commercial breakthrough. They completed four folk-rock/pop singles, including 'An Invitation To Cry' (1965) and 'I'd Like To Know' (1966). The latter was penned by David Blue. The group disbanded following the release of 'Double Good Feeling'. Bonner And Gordon subsequently forged a successful songwriting team whose several hits included 'Happy Together' and 'She'd Rather Be With Me' for the Turtles.

Magidson, Herb

b. 7 January 1906, Braddock, Pennsylvania, USA, d. 5 January 1986, Beverly Hills, California, USA. A leading composer and lyricist in the 30s and 40s, particularly remembered for 'The Continental', which he wrote Con Conrad for the Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers picture The Gay Divorcée. It became the first winner of the 'Best Song' Academy Award in 1934. The team also wrote another good song for Astaire to sing in the film - 'Needle In A Haystack'. Magidson studied journalism at the University of Pittsburg before moving to New York and writing special material for Sophie Tucker. In the late 20s and early 30s he contributed a few numbers to Broadway shows such as Earl Carroll's Vanities Of 1928 and George White's Musical Hall Varieties, but the majority of his output was for movies. Through to 1939 he wrote single songs or complete scores for The Time, The Place And The Girl (1929), Show Of Shows, Little Johnny Jones, No, No, Nanette, I Like It That Way, The Gift Of Gab, George White's 1935 Scandals, Here's To Romance, The Great Ziegfeld, Hats Off, Music For Madame, Life Of The Party, Radio City Revels, and George White's Scandals Of 1939. From these films came songs such as 'The Racoon', 'Somebody To Love', 'Dance Of The Wooden Shoes', 'Singin' In The Bathtub', 'Talkin' To Myself', 'Oh, I Didn't Know', 'According To The Moonlight', 'Here's To Romance', 'Midnight In Paris', 'Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star' (not the nursery rhyme), 'Where Have You Been All My Life?', 'Let's Have Another Cigarette', 'Roses In December', 'Goodnight Angel', 'When The Cat's Away', and 'Something I Dreamed Last Night'. In the 40s, two of Magidson's wartime songs, 'Say A Prayer For The Boys Over There' (written with Jimmy McHugh for Hers To Hold) and 'I'll Buy That Dream' (with Allie Wrubel for Sing Your Way Home) were nominated for Oscars, and he also had numbers in Sleepy Time Gal, Music In Manhatten, Do You Love Me?, and Make Mine Laughs, amongst others. Throughout his career Magidson did not neglect Tin Pan Alley, and several of his best songs, unassociated with either films or shows, have been sung and played by the finest vocalists and bands. Among them are 'Gone With The Wind', 'Music, Maestro Please', '(I'm Afraid) The Masquerade Is Over', 'How Long Has This Been Going On?', 'I Can't Love You Anymore', 'A Pink Cocktail For A Blue Lady', 'I'm Stepping Out With A Memory Tonight', 'I'll Dance At Your Wedding', 'Enjoy Yourself (It's Later Than You Think)', and one of his earliest successes, 'Black-Eyed Susan Brown'. Besides the ones already mention, his many collaborators included Carl Sigman, Michael Cleary, Sammy Fain, Ben Oakland, Sam Stept, and Jule Styne. Like so many of the Old Guard, he seems to have been a casualty of rock 'n' roll, and there is no apparent record of him composing songs after the early 50s.

Magma

This challenging Parisian combo was assembled in the late 60s by classically-trained drummer Christian Vander to perform a lengthy oratorio expressing laudable anxiety about the future of our abused planet. Much of its libretto was in the language of Kobaia, Earth's imaginary rival world. The first fifth of the work filled Magma's first two albums, but by 1973's overblown Mekanik Destrucktiw Kommandoh (for which a choir was hired) the idea was wearing thin. The group's line-up included Vander's singing wife Stella and Klaus Blasquiz, whose bel canto baritone became Magma's most identifiable idiosyncrasy. Apart from Vander, the most representative instrumental line-up during the band's 10-year history was Gabriel Federow (guitar), Didier Lockwood (violin), Jean-Paul Asseline (keyboards), Benoit Widemann (keyboards) and Bernard Paganotti (bass). After transferring from A&M Records to Utopia in the summer of 1975, Giorgio Gomelsky, the new label's supremo, was often heard smiting percussion on subsequent discs, such as an in-concert offering from the French capital's Taverne de l'Olympia.

Rather than individual pieces, it was the sound of Magma's records that mattered. Among the most apparent of stylistic reference points were the John Coltrane/Ornette Coleman end of jazz and the stubbornly chromatic tonalities of Stravinsky, Bartok and Stockhausen - hardly the stuff of hit singles. Musical and lyrical themes and leitmotivs connected each album à la Mothers Of Invention - even if Magma's humour was radically different from that of the US act. Continued repackaging of the band's output has enhanced their reputation.

Magna Carta

Magna Carta were renowned for their gentle ballad style and mythical subject matter. Although they were never purely a folk group, they successfully bridged the gap between folk and folk-rock. They originally formed as a duo, in London, in 1969, with Chris Simpson (b. 13 July 1942, Harrogate, North Yorkshire, England; guitar/vocals), and Lyell Tranter (guitar/vocals). They obtained a deal with Fontana, and then Glen Stuart (vocals) joined them. In August 1970, Seasons made 55 in the UK album charts. Times Of Change was released on Fontana, and the highly regarded Seasons appeared on the Vertigo label. Tranter then returned to Australia. The group played the Royal Albert Hall in 1971, with the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, but the tapes of the recording were lost by Phonogram. Texts from Seasons and Lord Of The Ages, have been used as part of the English syllabus in several European countries. Davy Johnstone (guitar/vocals) then joined the line-up, recording, In Concert and Songs From Wasties Orchard, with them before leaving to work with Elton John and Kiki Dee. The latter album was regarded by many as the group's finest work. Simpson and Stuart were then joined by Stan Gordon (guitar), recording and releasing the much-lauded Lord Of The Ages. Graham Smith (bass), who had been on the sessions for this album, then joined the group. Shortly afterwards both he and Stan Gordon left, so by 1974, it was back to square one as a duo. There followed a period of much change and upheaval, as, in following more of a rock path, they added Mohammed Amin (bass), and a drummer, but Glen Stuart did not feel comfortable with the new direction. This short-lived set-up soon gave way to Simpson and Stuart being joined by Tom Hoy (b. 5 February 1950, Glasgow, Scotland; guitar/vocals). Stuart then left to run a pet shop in Richmond, Surrey.

In 1977, former Natural Acoustic Band member Robin Thyne (b. 1 November 1950, Newcastle Upon Tyne, England; guitar/vocals), joined the group, along with Lee Abbott (b. 21 January 1950, Gravesend, Kent, England; fretless bass/vocals). Soon afterwards, Pick Withers (drums) was added. Withers stayed only briefly, leaving to join Dire Straits. There followed upheavals in 1979, when Thyne and Hoy left to form Nova Carta. There had been much acrimony leading to the split. Tom McConville appeared on the Live In Bergen release, before the line-up changed again to include Al Fenn (b. Alastair Fenn, 9 March 1947, Chingford, Essex, England; guitar/vocals), and George Norris (b. 30 December 1945, Cowes, Isle Of Wight, England; guitar/vocals). Between 1980 and 1982, Doug Morter (electric and acoustic guitar) was added, together with a variety of drummers, one of whom was Paul Burgess (b. 28 September 1950, Stockport, Cheshire, England), who had formerly been with 10cc. The 1981 release, Midnight Blue, contained 'Highway To Spain', a track consistently on radio station playlists around the world. Subsequently, despite much touring and recording, Simpson pursued a solo career, while Norris and Burgess both left.

Eventually, Morter left to join the Albion Band. Simpson's solo release, Listen To The Man came out with Magna Carta now including, in addition to Simpson and Abbott, Linda Taylor (b. 28 June 1953, Halifax, West Yorkshire, England; guitar/vocals), and Willie Jackson (b. 18 February 1954, York, England; guitars). Between 1984 and 1986, Chris and Linda went to the Middle East, running a music club, eventually deciding to return home and re-form Magna Carta. In 1986, the extremely fluid line-up now included, in addition to Simpson, Taylor and Abbott, Glyn Jones (keyboards), John Carey (fiddle), Paul Burgess, again, (drums), and Simon Carlton (lead guitar). In 1987, One To One was finished, for the Tembo record label. The same year, Jones left the group, and the band played the Cambridge Festival, and the album was released in 1988. In 1990, Simpson and Taylor married, and with the semi-retirement of Lee Abbott, they continued as a duo touring worldwide. Phonogram then released the compilation Old Masters/New Horizons, in Europe only. Heartlands followed soon after, released in Holland in 1992, followed by a sell-out tour of Holland, with Will Jackson (keyboards/guitars) and Paul Burgess (drums) returning, together with Jonathan Barrett (b. 16 August 1962, Leeds, West Yorkshire, England; bass). Will's brother Eddie Jackson (b. 23 April 1957, York, England; bass), played on the Heartlands album, and on their January 1992 tour. In January 1994, Mike Bedford took over on drums from Burgess. Simpson and Taylor still work as a duo, as well as with the larger line-up for extensive touring. Over the years, the group has toured over 150 differnet countries.

Magnapop

Based in Watkinsville, Athens, Georgia, USA, Magnapop's personnel is composed of Ruthie Morris (b. Florida, USA; guitar), Shannon Mulvaney (bass), David McNair (drums) and Linda Hopper (vocals). Linda had originally met Michael Stipe (R.E.M.) at art college in the early 80s, where he persuaded her to form a band with his sister (also called Linda), who were titled Oh OK. They lasted three years and briefly included McNair on drums. Mutual friends introduced her to Morris in Atlanta, and they started to write songs together in 1988, with their first demos produced by Stipe. Their debut single, 'Merry', was followed by the Kiss My Mouth EP, which found instant success in Holland and Belgium, their popularity prompting the release of a premature mini-album, essentially of demo tracks, in that area. This celebrity was based in part on an appearance at a Rotterdam festival, where Bob Mould, Nirvana and Frank Black were all playing. Magnapop created such a buzz that the promotor shifted them from a smaller platform to the main stage the following night, and Mould took an interest in the group, agreeing to produce their debut album proper. Mould proved not to be Magnapop's only star fan. Juliana Hatfield spoke highly of them whenever the opportunity arose, and even wrote a song, 'Ruthless', about their guitarist Ruthie Morris ('We're all suckers for a girl who really plays guitar/We're all pining for Ruthie/We all wish we were Ruthie/We're all dying for Ruthie').

Magnetic Fields

The creation of Stephen Merritt, a singer-songwriter, keyboard and guitar player based in New York, USA, Magnetic Fields have established a strong reputation in the US underground without ever achieving that success internationally, though Merritt remains a darling of critics worldwide. As a writer he is, if not unique, certainly unusual. The details of his dealings with others and himself are rarely embellished with anything other than minimalist notation. The simplicity of style gives genuine weight to the impact of his observations on tracks such as 'Lovers From The Moon', 'Smoke Signals' and 'Falling In Love With The Wolfboy' from his first two albums. Both feature Susan Anway as singer, Merritt declaring little faith in his own vocal abilities. Holiday continued in this style but covered Merritt's experiences in various American locations. The travelogue approach was then transplanted to The Charm Of The Highway Strip, with the music now rooted in a blunt country tradition. Afterwards he embarked on new horizons under the name the 6ths - initially recording an album featuring fourteen separate vocal contributions from artists drawn from the American underground (Luna, Superchunk, Sebadoh, and others). He has since recorded with Chris Ewen (ex-Figures On A Beach) as the Future Bible Heroes, but released 1996's suprisingly upbeat and optimistic Get Lost under the Magnetic Fields name.

Magnetic North

This UK techno record label run by Dave Clarke is distinguished by releases by Woody MC Bride ('Rattlesnake'), who also works under the title DJ ESP. The label's first two releases were from the acid-fixated Directional Force and Graphite ('Pure'), in 1993. By 1994 the roster included material by DJ Hell and Christian Vogel.

Magnificent Men

A white R&B vocal septet from York and Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, USA, the Magnificent Men (often abbreviated to the 'Mag Men') drew their members from doo-wop groups called the Endells (who released one single, 'Vicky', in 1963) and the Del-Chords (who released 'Everybody's Gotta Lose Someday' in 1964). From the latter band were culled singers Dave Bupp and Buddy King, with instrumental backing provided by the former Endells (Jim Seville, Bob Angelucci, Tom Hoover, Terry Crousare and Tom Pane). They signed to Capitol Records and 'Peace Of Mind' was released in 1965. The follow-up single was 'Maybe, Maybe Baby', radio exposure for which brought them to the Apollo Theatre in New York. Their legendary performance here drew James Brown up from the audience, joining them in a 45-minute set. However, the group was facing difficulty in outgrowing their local popularity, with 'Stormy Weather' failing and 'I Could Be So Happy' only managing a meagre number 93 in the Billboard charts. Joining the Motortown Revue as its only white act, their next effort was 'The Sweet Soul Medley', a version of the Arthur Conley standard reworked to include nods to their favourite groups of the day. The rest of their Capitol singles failed significantly to embellish their reputation (despite a strong reading of Jimmy Webb's 'By The Time I Get To Phoenix) and in 1969 the Magnificent Men moved to Mercury Records. Both 'Holly Go Softly' and a version of Bob Dylan's 'Lay Lady Lay' also stalled. When Bupp left he was replaced by Stan Sommers (ex-Del-Satins) but the group did not record again.

Magnificents

Formed in 1953 in Chicago, Illinois, USA, the group members were Johnny Keyes, Thurman 'Ray' Ramsey, Fred Rakestraw and Willie Myles. In their up-tempo songs, the Magnificents brought rock 'n' roll to their doo-wop, and in their ballads they stayed true to their R&B roots. Singing as the Tams, they were discovered by disc jockey Magnificent Montague, who gave them their name and became their manager. Their one hit, 'Up On The Mountain' (number 9 R&B), in 1956, has come to be remembered as a golden oldie, but equally outstanding was their great ballad b-side, 'Why Did She Go', led by Ramsey. However, Ramsey left to be replaced by L.C. Cooke (brother of Sam Cooke), and Barbara Arrington was added to the group as lead. The successful sound of the group was subsequently lost on the next record, 'Caddy Bo'. The third single, 'Off The Mountain', deserved to restore the group to prominence, but it was not to be. Keyes and the rest of the group broke from Montague, who then formed a new Magnificents, the identity of whose members remains unknown. Their 'Don't Leave Me' is one of the most beloved of the doo-wop oldies that were never actually hits.

Magnum

This Birmingham, England-based pomp rock group was formed in 1972 by Tony Clarkin (guitar), Bob Catley (vocals), Kex Gorin (drums) and Dave Morgan (bass). They remained unsigned, undertaking various engagements, including acting as Del Shannon's backing band, until 1978, when they were signed by Jet Records. By this time Morgan had departed, to be replaced by Colin 'Wally' Lowe, and Richard Baily had joined as keyboard player. Between 1978 and 1980, Magnum released three albums to a moderate degree of success, and toured relentlessly with Judas Priest, Blue Öyster Cult, and Def Leppard. Chase The Dragon was released in 1982, with new keyboard player Mark Stanway, and gave them their first Top 20 album; it featured the grandiose pomp of 'Sacred Hour' and 'The Spirit', both of which still feature in their current live set. Following the release of Eleventh Hour, problems beset the band: Clarkin became ill, and a dispute with Jet Records ensued. The band fragmented as a result, but the troubles were soon resolved, and a number of low-key club dates persuaded them to continue. FM Revolver Records signed the band in 1985 for On A StoryTeller's Night. Its Top 40 success, along with a highly successful tour of the UK, prompted Polydor Records to offer a long-term contract. Vigilante, which featured new drummer Mickey Barker, was the first release under the new contract, and was produced by Queen's Roger Taylor. The backing of a major label paid immediate dividends with a Top 30 album and a sell-out UK tour. This success was taken one step further with Wings Of Heaven (1988), their first gold album and UK Top 10 hit. Top 40 single success came with 'Days Of No Trust', 'Start Talkin' Love' and 'It Must Have Been Love'. Numerous compilation albums, including Mirador and Anthology, were released, along with reissues of their now extensive back-catalogue from Jet Records. A two-year gap between official releases resulted in the Keith Olsen-produced Goodnight L.A., and again Top 40 success was achieved with a single, 'Rocking Chair', the album also enjoying Top 10 status. Extensive touring promoted Goodnight L.A. and several shows were recorded for a double live set, The Spirit. A new contract with EMI Records began with Rock Art. After years of struggle and setbacks, Magnum's popularity has been achieved the hard way, by dint of constant touring and a series of high-quality albums. Clarkin was working on a new project with Catley in 1996 following their departure from the group.

Magny, Colette

b. 31 October 1926, Paris, France, d. 12 June 1997, Villefranche-de-Rouerge, France. Magny was one of the most striking and politicized of French singer-songwriters to emerge in the 60s. The daughter of a grocery salesman and an actress (though her mother only took up this profession at the age of 57), Magny started work as a bilingual secretary and translator at the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development in 1948, remaining in full-time employment there until 1962. Her interest in English-speaking culture introduced her to the work of blues and jazz singers, including Bessie Smith and Ella Fitzgerald. Having been instructed on guitar and banjo by the French jazz musician Claude Luter, she began to compose her own blues material, performing in and around the French capital. She played regularly at the Contrescarpe cabaret club, where she was spotted by enigmatic promoter Mireille, who booked Magny for her television show, Le Petit Conservatoire De La Chanson, and Magny's version of 'Saint James Infirmary' attracted rave reviews. The next day's edition of the Paris-Presse newspaper proclaimed: 'France has found her own Ella Fitzgerald'. Having left the civil service, she signed a contract with CBS Records and released her debut single, 'Melocoton', which reached the charts. However, she did not dabble with the mainstream French pop charts for long. Subsequent material included quotations from the Bible, Chekhov, Dostoevsky and Lenin set to music, translations of Lewis Carroll and Pablo Neruda and musical readings of French poets Victor Hugo and Rimbaud. She also continued to compose her own material, particularly after becoming politicized by the Algerian conflict of the 50s. Her song, 'Le Mal De Vivre', was banned by state broadcasters. A subsequent album, Répression, reflected angrily on such censorship. She took an active role in the Paris student riots, helping to organize sit-ins and benefit concerts. In the 70s, Magny continued to branch out into new musical territory, working in jazz, rock and contemporary pop formats. Her 1973 album, Feu Et Rythme, won the Grand Prix du Disque from the Académie Charles Cros. In the 80s she moved to the south of France, but thereafter her career was hampered by a chronic spinal disease. Despite this, she remained a huge influence on French political and musical culture, her curmudgeonly persona emphasized by one of her final outbursts, condemning 'the bastards who pretend I'm already dead. I want to prove to them that I'm still alive, still creating.'

Maguire, Alex

b. 6 January 1959, Croydon, Surrey, England. Maguire remembers improvising at the piano before he received any lessons, which began at the age of eight. He studied music at the University of London and gained a BA degree; he also took lessons from Wanda Jeziorska, Andrew Ball and Howard Riley. He names as his inspiration a number of respected figures in the free improvising scene, such as Tony Oxley and Evan Parker, as well as jazz players Cecil Taylor and Eric Dolphy. McGuire says he is interested in 'pre-literate music, anything original rather than imitative (irrespective of idiom)'. He has studied with classical composers John Cage and Michael Finnissy and his arsenal of techniques and figures, which stretch from avant garde classical piano to jazz, from kwela to R&B, has made him much in demand. His sympathy as an accompanist is only matched by his imagination, perverse and frequently humorous. He formed a partnership with drummer Steve Noble and played with him at Company Week 1989. He is also a member of Tony Oxley's Celebration Orchestra and plays with Sean Bergin's MOB groups. In 1989, he toured with his own nine-piece, the Cat O' Nine Tails, which featured drummer Louis Moholo and saxophonist Alan Wilkinson.

Maguire, Sean

b. 18 April 1976, Ilford, Essex, England. Like Michelle Gayle before him, Sean Maguire originally enjoyed fame as a character actor in the UK television soap opera EastEnders before making the transition to a singing career. Unlike Gayle, however, he has continued to undertake a parallel acting career, presenting the O-Zone programme as well as appearing in other television roles. Although he was born in England, many had assumed Maguire to be Irish because of the accent his character employed in EastEnders, his surname and the fact that as a child he was the UK's champion Irish dancer. Undoubtedly due to the popularity of his portrayal of a young vagrant in EastEnders, Maguire's debut single, 1994's 'Someone To Love', was a major success, peaking at number 14 in the UK charts in August. It was followed in November by 'Take This Time', which also entered the UK Top 30, before Maguire embarked on a national tour with Boyzone. A further hit single, 'Now I've Found You', followed in the summer of 1995.

Mahavishnu Orchestra

Led by guitarist John McLaughlin, (b. 4 January 1942, Yorkshire, England), between 1972 and 1976 the Mahavishnu Orchestra played a leading part in the creation of jazz/rock fusion music. Mahavishnu was the name given to McLaughlin by his Hindu guru Snr i Chimnoy, and the group's early work showed the influence of Indian ragas. The first line-up included several musicians who had played on McLaughlin's previous solo album, Inner Mounting Flame. The high-energy electric music created by keyboardist Jan Hammer, ex-Flock violinist Jerry Goodman, bassist Rick Laird and drummer Billy Cobham made Birds Of Fire a Top 20 hit in the USA. After releasing the live Between Nothingness And Eternity, whose lengthy 'Dreams' sequence featured spectacular duetting between the guitarist and Cobham, McLaughlin split the group. A year later he re-formed Mahavishnu with an entirely new personnel. Jean-Luc Ponty replaced Goodman, Narada Michael Walden took over on drums, with Gayle Moran on keyboards/vocals, and there was also a four-piece string section. This group made Apocalypse with producer George Martin. In 1975, Ponty left and keyboardist Stu Goldberg played on the final albums. McLaughlin next decided to pursue classical Indian music more rigorously in the acoustic quartet Shakti, but Cobham and Hammer in particular carried on the Mahavishnu approach to jazz/rock in their later work. Moran played with Chick Corea's Return To Forever while Walden became a noted soul music producer in the 80s.

Mahlathini, Simon Nkabinde

b. 1937, Natal, South Africa. Mahlathini ('The Lion Of Soweto') is the most distinguished of the basso-profundo 'groaners' of black South African vocal music - and the acknowledged originator of a mbaqanga sub-style known as mgqashiyo ('indestructible beat'). After playing at wedding ceremonies he began performing in the late 60s, touring townships in package shows which often featured the Mahotella Queens, with whom he frequently recorded, and using the legendary Makgona Tshole Band for back-up. A dynamic dancer, Mahlathini would create a frenzy of joyous mayhem in beer halls, the venues for many township concerts in the 60s and 70s, and was on several occasions arrested for 'inciting unrest' (despite the apolitical nature of most of his material). His music fused traditional township styles, marabi, kwela and pop, and during the 70s he broke from the Queens to record mbaqanga with another band, Ndlondlo Bashise/The Mahlathni Guitar Band. He toured Europe in 1987, in the wake of the international profile achieved by Paul Simon's Graceland guest artists Ladysmith Black Mambazo, and played more international dates than any other current South African star. As a result Mahlathini also secured Western recording contracts, making his breakthrough with Thokozile, a phenomenally expressive distillation of his many influences. Further albums followed including 1996's Shoki Shoki, which marked their 30th anniversary.

Mahogany

Released in 1975, Mahogany reunited Diana Ross and Billy Dee Williams, co-stars of the Billie Holiday biopic, Lady Sings The Blues. Tamla/Motown founder Berry Gordy produced this rather insubstantial vehicle and assumed the role of director when a disaffected Tony Richardson walked out of the project. The wafer-thin plot - Ross rises from department store secretary to top-line model while falling in and out of love - recalled those of the 'classic' Hollywood era, but the film lacked wit and charm while the actors seemed uninspired. However, the theme from the film, 'Do You Know Where You're Going To', written by Gerry Goffin and Michael Masser, secured an Academy Award as Best Song. It provided Ross with a US chart-topper and an ensuing number 5 hit in the UK, giving commercial boost to a part of her career in temporary abeyance.

Mahogany Rush

Recovering in hospital from a bad drugs experience, Frank Marino (b. 22 August 1954, Canada) claimed he was visited by an apparition of Jimi Hendrix. After leaving hospital he picked up a guitar for the first time and was able to play Hendrix riffs, or so the legend runs. The group was formed in Montreal during 1970 when Marino recruited bassist Paul Harwood and drummer Jim Ayoub to fulfil his wish to work in a power trio format. Their first three albums were derivative in the extreme; every component of Hendrix's unique style had been dismantled, adapted, then rebuilt under new song titles. Nevertheless, they were not dismissed as copyists, but instead revered for paying tribute in such an honest and sincere fashion. By 1976 Marino had started to develop his own style, based on an extension of the Hendrix tricks he had already mastered. This is clearly evident on Mahogany Rush IV and World Anthem, released in 1976 and 1977, respectively. Eventually he outgrew the comparisons as his own style began to dominate the band's material. The name was amended to Frank Marino and Mahogany Rush, then to Frank Marino, following the release of What's Next and the departure of Ayoub.

Mahogany, Kevin

b. *c.*1958, Kansas City, Missouri, USA. Mahogany studied music as a child and at the age of 12 played baritone saxophone in Eddie Baker's New Breed Jazz Orchestra while studying in Kansas City. He sang in a choir while in high school and entered and won a church singing scholarship open to baritone singers, not saxophonists. While studying at Baker University he formed a jazz choir. Later, after post-graduate studies, he began singing in mid-western towns with a trio and was eventually heard by a producer who signed him to Enja Records. The Baronial Baritone, as he was dubbed by jazz writer Whitney Balliett, has a rich melodic voice, singing standards with eloquent ease.

Mahotella Queens

South Africa's leading mbaqanga harmony group in the late 60s and throughout the 70s, the Queens' frequently sing in support of 'groaners' (basso profundos), and have at various times backed the great Mahlathini, Potatoes Mazambane, Mbazo Mkhize and Joseph Mthimkhulu. On most of their 70s records, the Queens were backed by Marks Mankwane and his Makgona Tshole Band, one of mbaqanga's hardest working (and sounding) instrumental outfits. Like Mahlathini, the Queens called their style 'the indestructible beat', a reference to its solid, four-on-the-floor rhythm, dedicated to the spirit of the oppressed township people were are its prime audience.

Maid Of The Mountains, The

A favourite with amateur operatic societies throughout the world, this show was first presented in London at Daly's Theatre on 10 February 1917. The score was mainly by Harold Fraser-Simpson and James Tate (music) and Harry Graham (lyrics), with additional songs by F. Clifford Harris, James W. Tate, and (Arthur) 'Valentine'. Frederick Lonsdale's book was set in the high mountains of 'brigand land', and concerned the lovely Teresa (José Collins) who is arrested by General Malona (Mark Lester), the Governor of Santo, and is promised her freedom if her lover, the outlaw Baldasarre (Arthur Wontner), is captured. Complications arise when Teresa learns that Baldasarre has eyes for another, and in a fit of pique, she exposes him. Whereupon he is captured, and incarcerated on Devil's Island. All ends well when Teresa engineers his release, and they board a small boat and sail to the mainland - and into the sunset. The enchanting score included memorable songs such as Fraser-Simpson and Graham's 'Love Will Find A Way'and 'Live For Today', along with the engaging 'A Bachelor Gay', 'My Life Is Love', and 'A Paradise For Two' by Tate, Harris, and Valentine. the show was an enormous success and ran for a record 1,352 performances - even longer than the other big London hit of World War I, Chu Chin Chow. It made a star of the fiery José Collins, who had already enjoyed a prosperous Broadway career before she appeared in The Maid Of The Mountains, but is always remembered for introducing 'Love Will Find A Way'. Perhaps if she had recreated her role in New York, the 1918 production of The Maid Of The Mountains would have stayed at the Casino Theatre more than 37 performances. In the event Collins did appear in the 1921 London revival, the first of several that were produced through until 1942. Thirty years after that, a revised version, with additional songs by Harry Parr-Davies, Harold Purcell, Rudolph Friml, and Brian Hooker, and starring Lynne Kennington, Gordon Clyde, Neville Jason, Jimmy Thompson, and Janet Mahoney, was presented at London's Palace Theatre. Compared to contemporary musicals such as Jesus Christ Superstar it was considered to be out of place and somewhat old-fashioned. The original concept was nicely captured in the 1932 film with Nancy Brown and Harry Welchman.

Maiden Voyage - Herbie Hancock

Probably the best in Herbie Hancock's series of fine Blue Note albums from the 60s, Maiden Voyage finds him in what is basically the Miles Davis band of the time, with Miles replaced by the young Freddie Hubbard. Hancock has always been a fine composer, but Maiden Voyage contains two classic compositions in particular - the beautiful 'Dolphin Dance', and the atmospheric and popular title track. Saxophonist George Coleman, bassist Ron Carter and drummer Tony Williams play as well throughout as they have ever played, and the whole record is marked with a timeless freshness and sense of creative tension.

Maiden, Sidney

b. 1923, Mansfield, Louisiana, USA. A shadowy figure about whom little has been written, Maiden was evidently influenced by John Lee (Sonny Boy) Williamson when learning the harmonica. At some point during the forties, he made the journey west to work in the shipyards around Richmond, California. There he met K.C. Douglas and the pair began to work clubs in the area. In 1948 he and Douglas recorded for Bob Geddins' Down Town, with his 'Eclipse Of The Sun' becoming a notable performance for collectors. He next recorded in April 1952 for Imperial, an eight-track session with The Blues Blowers, possibly including Douglas and Otis Cherry on drums, from which just one single was released. Moving to Los Angeles the following year, he joined up with drummer B. Brown and guitarist Haskell Sadler to inaugurate the Flash label, each man recording one single. 'Hurry Hurry Baby' was an unsteady boogie piece distantly akin to Jimmy Reed's 'You Don't Have To Go'. In 1957, he recorded 'Hand Me Down Baby' with guitarist Slim Green for the Dig label. Four years later, he was recruited by Arhoolie boss Chris Strachwitz to participate in sessions with Douglas and Mercy Dee, during which he also recorded an album leased to Bluesville. During the 60s, he formed his own group and worked the Fresno area, since when his whereabouts and fate are unknown.

Maiga, Boncana

b. Gao, Mali. Composer Boncana Maiga grew up in Gao, a city on the Niger River in Mali, before attending studies of European classical music. He learnt several instruments, but rather than the great classical composers fell in love instead with the Cuban music he heard over short wave radio and on imported records. 'What attracted me so strongly', he related to Folk Roots magazine in 1993, 'enchanted me really - was the way Cuban musicians had fashioned those wild rhythms and melodies into a modern sound which was always elegant and at the same time very sensual.' Besotted, he appealed to the Cuban Embassy in Bamako and duly secured a scholarship to Cuba, flying to Havana in 1963. Before leaving in 1971, he had mastered both the flute and saxophone, both of which he played in Orquesta Aragón, playing alongside such celebrated local musicians as Félix Chapottin and 'Cachao' Lopez. He and his new Cuban wife returned to Mali in 1972, but he soon moved to Abidjan, the capital of the Ivory Coast, where opportunities for musicians were more plentiful. At the invitation of the national radio and television authorities, he formed an orchestra. As the leader of L'Orchestre Radioffusion Télévision Ivorienne, he became a hugely important figure on the continent, and was recognised throughout Africa. Cameroon saxophonist Manu Dibango travelled to Abidjan to work with him, and in 1980 New York's most celebrated salsa band of the period, the Fania All Stars, invited him to join them for their tour of Africa. Ivorian hit makers Jane Agneimel and Virginie Gaudjie both employed him as musical director, before he was introduced to Nahawa Doumbia and, through her, producer Ibrahima Sylla. Doumbia's 1988 breakthrough album, Didadi, was their first joint venture. Since then they have collaborated on a series of projects, with Maiga happy to leave his own career as a musician on temporary hold. The best of his work with Sylla was undoubtedly the 1993 Africando album, where he marshalled the Cuban rhythms he had so loved as a youth with the sweet voices of Senagalese singers Nicolas Menheim, Medoune Diallo and Papa Seck. Nearly half the compositions were his own, written with African lyrics but clearly rooted in salsa and Latin rhythms.

Main

This UK ambient dance band were formed in the 90s by Robert Hampson, formerly of Loop. Taking the repetitive motifs from that band, Main refined the formula to accentuate the aesthetics of post-rave dance 'chill'. They drew heavily on environmental sounds on which they dubbed guitars, synths and electronically generated effects. Their first EP Hydra was dedicated to the German composer Karlheinz Stockhausen and followed by 'Dry Stone Feed' and 'Firmament'. The six EP box-set's Corona, Maser, Neper, Terminus, Haloform and Kaon enables your imagination to run wild, but no two people will come to the same conclusion.

Main Ingredient

This New York-based trio, Donald McPherson (b. 9 July 1941, d. 4 July 1971), Luther Simmons Jnr. (b. 9 September 1942) and Tony Sylvester (b. 7 October 1941, Panama) made their recording debut in 1965. One of several groups using the name 'the Poets', they decided to become the Main Ingredient and signed with producer Bert DeCoteaux, whose lush arrangements provided the requisite foil for their excellent harmonies. This skill was particularly apparent on such early releases as 'I'm So Proud' (1970), 'Spinning Around (I Must Be Falling In Love)' and 'Black Seeds Keep On Growing' (both 1971). McPherson died from leukaemia in 1971 and, ironically, it was his replacement, Cuba Gooding, who sang on the group's million-seller 'Everybody Plays The Fool'. Although the Ingredient went on to enjoy further commercial success, their work grew increasingly bland and lacked the purpose of those early releases. Gooding embarked on a solo career with Motown in 1977, but reunited with Sylvester and Simmons in 1979, continuing to record under the Main Ingredient name into the 80s. Simmons was replaced by Jerome Jackson in the late 80s, following which the group moved to Polydor.

Main Source

There has been much swapping and shifting in the constantly evolving line-ups of the rap band Main Source, formed in Toronto, Canada, but based in New York. The original MCs were K-Cut and Sir Scratch, though Large Professor (b. Paul Mitchell) excused himself after their first album, which included choice cuts like 'Just A Friendly Game Of Baseball'. Professor would go on to work with A Tribe Called Quest, Nas, who had first arrived on the debut album's 'Live At The BBQ' cut, and others. He was replaced by Mikey D, who was chief rapper on their second set, the invitingly titled Fuck What You Think, on which they were also joined by Shaheem, a female MC straight from high school (on the title-track and 'Set It Off'). Their fresh, jazzy platform was well served by the indignant, often complex lyrical matter they pursued. In the light of delays over the release of their Fuck What You Think set they parted company with label Wild Pitch, and Mikey D also broke ranks - claiming he did not get along with K-Cut and Scratch, looking for a solo deal instead.

Mainer, J.E.

b. Joseph Emmett Mainer, 20 July 1898, in a one room log house in Buncombe County, North Carolina, USA, d. 12 June 1971. Mainer played banjo at the age of nine but later became an accomplished fiddle player. He worked in textile mills from the age of 12 but began playing locally with other musicians in the 20s. He eventually formed Mainer's Mountaineers which consisted of his banjo-playing brother Wade Mainer and guitarists Daddy John Love and Claude 'Zeke' Morris. In 1932, Mainer played regularly on radio in Gastonia but in 1934, sponsored by Crazy Water Crystals, and performing as the Crazy Mountaineers, they became regulars on WBT Charlotte. They later moved to WPTF Raleigh but also played in New Orleans and on the Mexican border stations. Over the years there were various changes of personnel including Steve Ledford, Snuffy Jenkins and Morris's brothers Wiley and George. They first recorded as J.E. Mainer's Mountaineers for Bluebird in 1935 and are still remembered for their recordings of 'Johnsons's Old Grey Mule', 'Take Me In The Lifeboat' and 'Maple On The Hill'. By the end of the 40s, Mainer's RCA recordings exceeded 200 but he later recorded for King and during the 60s, made recordings for the folk music archives of the Library of Congress and a whole series of albums for Rural Rhythm. Mainer's Mountaineers were one of the most important of all the early-day string bands and greatly influenced later bands and musicians. Mainer remained active and regularly appeared at bluegrass and folk festivals until his death from a heart attack.

Mainer, Wade

b. 21 April 1907, near Weaverville, North Carolina, USA. The younger brother of J.E. Mainer and a fine singer and talented banjoist who developed a clever two-fingered style that made his playing readily identifiable. In 1937, after initially playing with his brother's Mountaineers, he formed his own Sons of The Mountaineers, which at times included Wade Morris, Jay Hugh Hall, Steve Ledford and Clyde Moody. He recorded for Bluebird until 1941, being especially remembered for his 1939 recording of 'Sparkling Blue Eyes'. He later made some recordings for King before moving in the 50s to work for Chevrolet in Flint, Michigan. After retirement from that in the 70s, he returned to recording with the Old Homestead label.

Mainieri, Mike

b. 24 July 1938, New York City, New York, USA. Born in the Bronx, Mainieri was playing the vibraphone by the time he was 10 years old and performing publicly at 14. He studied at the Juilliard School and then joined the Paul Whiteman Band before touring with the Buddy Rich Orchestra (1956-62). He left Rich to become a session musician in New York. During the 70s he wrote music for television and films. He played with Jeremy Steig's band Jeremy And The Satyrs at the Café A Go Go, formed a 16-piece rock band and led his own quartet with Steve Gadd on drums. He invented the synthi-vibe, which not only allowed him to treat the sound of the vibes electronically but also to be heard in high-volume situations. In 1979, he brought together a group of session musicians to tour Japan. The unit included Gadd (later replaced by Peter Erskine), Michael Brecker, Don Grolnick (piano), and Eddie Gomez. They were named Steps, later to be Steps Ahead, and were described as 'a contemporary bebop band'.

Mairants, Ivor

b. 8 July 1908, Rypin, Poland, d. 20 February 1998, London, England. An influential guitarist, composer, teacher and author, Mairants moved to England with his parents in 1914, just prior to the outbreak of World War I. His father was a Talmudic scholar, and his mother ran a tobacconist's shop in London's East End. Young Mairants' fascination with dance-band music began when he heard radio broadcasts by the Savoy Orpheans on a primitive crystal set. He saved enough money to buy a banjo, and by his mid-teens was playing in groups such as the Magnetic Dance Band (later the Florentine Dance Band), Fred Anderson's Cabaret Band, and the Valencians. Soon he was doubling banjo and guitar, and it was on the latter instrument that he excelled. He subsequently worked with big-name bands led by Roy Fox, Jack Harris, Lew Stone, Ambrose, Mantovani and Ted Heath. From 1940-52 Mairants served as the featured guitarist with Geraldo, and composed several guitar solos and pieces for the innovative Geraldo Swing Septet, which he led. These included 'Russian Salad', which was inspired by the Russians entering the war in June 1941. For most of his time with Geraldo, Mairants topped the guitar section of the annual Melody Maker poll, and made regular broadcasts with his own quintet on the BBC's Guitar Club. In 1950, he established the Central School of Dance Music in London, and later opened the Ivor Mairants Musicentre. During his long and active life, he published many works for guitar, both jazz and classical. Mairants had a million-seller with his recording of the beautiful adagio from Joaquin Rodrigo's 'Concerto De Aranjuez', and, at the behest of Thomas Beecham, he played the mandolin for Ezio Pinza in the renowned 1938/9 production of Don Giovanni at Covent Garden. As a teacher, he coached two of Britain's top comedians, Benny Hill and Eric Sykes, and appeared on both their television shows. Mairants' acclaimed tutor on flamenco sold consistently over the years. Towards the end of his life he composed 'Jazz Sonatas For Solo Guitar', and was made a Freeman of the City of London. In 1997, the Ivor Mairants Guitar Award was inaugurated, under the auspices of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, of which he was a Liveryman.

Maisonettes

Based in Birmingham, England, this 60s-influenced pop group reached number 7 in the UK chart in 1983 with 'Heartache Avenue' a particularly memorable song with strong influences of 60s soul music. The group consisted of Lol Mason (vocals), Elaine Williams (vocals), Denise Ward (vocals), Mark Tibbenham (keyboards), and Nick Parry (drums). Mason, the driving force behind the band, was no stranger to chart success, having previously been the singer with City Boy. Two follow-up singles, 'Where I Stand' and 'Say It Again', and an album, all for the Birmingham independent label Ready Steady Go!, flopped, and the band broke up.

Major Surgery

A four-piece outfit based in Croydon, Surrey, England, during the latter part of the 70s, Major Surgery comprised Don Weller, Tony Marsh (drums), Bruce Collcutt (bass guitar) and Jimmy Roche (guitar). Roche had a blues background, having been a brief member of an early Colosseum line-up; he subsequently joined East Of Eden, where he played with Weller. This pair also played together in Boris prior to forming Major Surgery. Thus Major Surgery drew on the blues, rock, and avant garde music, reconstituting them as a muscular blend of intellectual electric jazz.

Majors

Formed in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, USA, in 1959, the Majors were an R&B quintet who crossed over to the US pop charts three times in 1962, most notably with their debut, 'A Wonderful Dream'. The group consisted of lead singer Rick Cordo, Ron Gathers, Gene Glass, Idella Morris and Frank Troutt; their recordings were produced by the influential Jerry Ragovoy - 'A Wonderful Dream' was his first Top 40 success. The Majors had their roots in a harmony group called the Premiers. Upon recording their first single, 'Lundee Dundee', for Rocal Records in 1960, they changed their name to the Versatiles. The next time the group entered the studio was in 1962 for the Ragovoy-produced tracks for Imperial Records. During 1963, they recorded eight singles for the label, as well as one album. The group resurfaced with a single on ABC-Paramount in 1966, under the name the Performers. They toured throughout the 60s but split by the end of that decade.

Make Me An Offer

One of that band of typically English musicals that were around in the late 50s, which included Fings Ain't Wot They Used T'Be and Expresso Bongo. The creative team behind the latter came together again for this show which began its life at the innovative Theatre Royal, Stratford East, before opening in the West End at the New Theatre on 16 December 1959. The book was adapted by Wolf Mankowitz from his own slim 1952 novel and the 1959 film starring Peter Finch and Adrienne Corri, and was set in the world of small-time antique dealers based around London's Portobello Road market. Charlie (Daniel Massey), an expert in Wedgwood china, longs to own a beautiful piece for himself. His chance comes when he is involved with an auction (a particularly effective scene) for a complete (fake) Wedgwood room - and he ends up with a valuable (genuine) vase. Charlie's main rival dealer in the saga is the stunning Redhead (Dilys Laye), and his wife, Sally, was played by Diana Coupland. Some 20 songs, by David Heneker and Monty Norman, were skilfully incorporated into the plot, pointing up the various characters and situations as they occurred. They consisted of a blend of amusing and sentimental items, such as 'Make Me An Offer', Redhead's proposal that Charlie gallantly turns down; 'The Pram Song', 'I Want A Lock-Up', 'Portobello Road', 'Business Is Business', 'Whatever You Believe', 'It's Sort Of Romantic', 'If I Was A Man', 'Dog Eat Dog', 'All Big Fleas', and 'Love Him'. Make Me An Offer had decent run of 267 performances, and won the 1959 Evening Standard Award for best musical.

Make Mine Manhattan

Sid Caesar, a comedian who specialized in subjects satirical, was on the brink of television super-stardom when he appeared with a clutch of fellow clowns, including Joshua Shelley and David Burns, in this show which opened at the Broadhurst Theatre in New York on 15 January 1948. It was Caesar's debut on Broadway, and in a format - the revue - that was on its last legs. The music was by Richard Lewine, with lyrics and sketches by Arnold B. Horwitt, and it went for all the usual New York targets in a pleasant and amusing way. The songs included 'Saturday Night In Central Park', 'Subway Song', 'Phil The Fiddler', 'Gentleman Friend', 'My Brudder And Me', and 'I Fell In Love With You'. It is ironic that a fairly simple, lightweight production such as this should run for 429 performances, when Caesar's triumphant return to Broadway 14 years later in Little Me could only manage 257.

Make Time For Love - Keith Washington

Keith Washington is one of the post-Vandross soul singers who have taken the smooth romantic approach to its orgasmic extreme. Quite apart from the fact that he possesses a fantastic vocal range and has one of the best voices in 'new soul', he is able to confidently make love (or sing about it) throughout the length of this superb album. This is the album for late-night dancing before the inevitable happens. Those who thought that romance stopped with Frank Sinatra in the 50s and thought Barry White was soppy should be force fed this music. It would appear that Washington gave too much on this album, and now lies exhausted. Try 'Make Time For Love' and 'Kissing You', for starters.

Make Way For The Motherlode - Yo Yo

Often quoted in Ice Cube's defence when that rapper suffers accusations of misogyny, Yo Yo (Yolanda Whitaker) is his female MC protégée, who had previously contributed to Cube's AmeriKKKa's Most Wanted, duetting on 'It's A Man's World', and representing her gender with admirable gusto. This, her 1991 debut album, played it as rough and rugged as her male counterparts, but amid the assertive, abrasive lyrics lurked a dexterity that might not have been envisaged. The keynote is 'Sisterland', a rallying call to fellow female MCs proffered with sincerity and conviction.

Make-Up

Comprising Ian Svenonius (vocals), James Canty (guitar, organ, vocals), Michelle Mae (bass, vocals, ex-Frumpies) and Steve Gamboa (drums), Washington DC, USA alternative rock band Make-Up formed from the ashes of the highly regarded local group Nation Of Ulysees. All three male members of Make-Up had been in that controversial, highly politicized group, and many of their political aspirations were carried over to the new band - albeit with a more vaudevillian twist. Their debut album, Destination: Love: Live At Cold Rice, was recorded live at a DC venue and featured '16 items, 13 of which are songs'. The other three 'items' were pieces of oratory grandly introducing the band's membership - recalling the melodrama of their stage shows. Roy Wilkinson in Select magazine analogized the contents of their debut as 'Ché Guevara directs Grease'. Musical comparisons on subsequent albums included James Brown, Jon Spencer Blues Explosion and Rocket From The Crypt - the latter band having originally been heavily influenced by Nation Of Ulysees.

Makeba, Miriam

b. 4 March 1932, Johannesburg, South Africa. The vocalist who first put African music on the international map in the 60s, Makeba began her professional career in 1950, when she joined Johannesburg group the Cuban Brothers. She came to national prominence during the mid-50s as a member of leading touring group the Manhattan Brothers, an 11-piece close harmony group modelled on African-American line-ups such as the Mills Brothers. She performed widely with the outfit in South Africa, Rhodesia and the Congo until 1957, when she was recruited as a star attraction in the touring package show African Jazz And Variety. She remained with the troupe for two years, again touring South Africa and neighbouring countries, before leaving to join the cast of the 'township musical' King Kong, which also featured such future international stars as Hugh Masekela and Jonas Gwangwa. By now one of South Africa's most successful performers, Makeba was nonetheless receiving just a few dollars for each recording session, with no additional provision for royalties, and was increasingly keen to settle in the USA. The opportunity came following her starring role in American film-maker Lionel Rogosin's documentary Come Back Africa, shot in South Africa. When the Italian government invited Makeba to attend the film's premiere at the Venice Film Festival in spring 1959, she privately decided not to return home. Shortly afterwards, furious at the international furore created by the film's powerful exposé of apartheid, her South African passport was withdrawn. In London after the Venice Festival, Makeba met Harry Belafonte, who offered to help her gain an entry visa and work permit to the USA. Arriving in New York in autumn 1959, Belafonte further assisted Makeba by securing her a guest spot on the popular Steve Allen Show and an engagement at the prestigious Manhattan jazz club, the Village Vanguard. As a consequence of this exposure, Makeba became a nationally-feted performer within a few months of arriving in the USA, combining her musical activities - major chart hits such as 'Patha Patha', 'The Click Song' and 'Malaika' - with outspoken denunciations of apartheid. In 1963, after an impassioned testimony before the United Nations Committee Against Apartheid, all her records were banned from South Africa. Married for a few years to fellow South African emigré Masekela, in 1968 Makeba divorced him in order to marry the Black Panther activist Stokeley Carmichael - a liaison which severely damaged her following amongst older white American record buyers. Promoters were no longer interested, and tours and record contracts were cancelled. Consequently, she and Carmichael, from whom she is now divorced, moved to Guinea in West Africa. Fortunately, Makeba continued to find work outside the USA, and during the 70s and 80s spent most of her time on the international club circuit, primarily in Europe, South America and Africa. She has also been a regular attraction at world jazz events such as the Montreux Jazz Festival, the Berlin Jazz Festival and the Northsea Jazz Festival. In 1977, she was the unofficial South African representative at the pan-African festival of arts and culture, FESTAC, in Lagos, Nigeria. In 1982, she was reunited with Masekela at a historic concert in Botswana. As was previously the case in the USA, Makeba combined her professional commitments with political activity, and served as a Guinean delegate to the United Nations. In 1986, she was awarded the Dag Hammarskjold Peace Prize in recognition of this work. In 1987, Makeba was invited to appear as a guest artist on Paul Simon's Graceland tour, which included emotional returns to the USA and Zimbabwe (she had been banned from the country, then known as Rhodesia, in 1960). While some anti-apartheid activists, mostly white Westerners, criticized her for allegedly breaking the African National Congress's cultural boycott by working with Paul Simon (whose Graceland album had been part-recorded in South Africa), Makeba convincingly maintained that the Graceland package was substantially helping the anti-apartheid movement by drawing attention to the culture and plight of black South Africans.

Makgona Tshole Band

Primarily a session band for South African mbqanga vocalists, Makgona Tshole also recorded a handful of their own-name 'sax-jive' hits in the late 70s and early 80s, which were later collected on the album Mathaka Vol 1 (1983). The same year, they backed the peerless township solo vocalist Mahlathini and the choral group Mahotella Queens on their Uhambo Lwami album. Among several talented musicians the group employed was its celebrated leader, guitarist, composer and producer Marks Mankwane

Making Movies - Dire Straits

The last album of their career that sounded as if they were trying to play, instead of going through the motions. David Knopfler had already departed from the band and brother Mark had a free rein, clear from any sibling rivalry. Every song stands up, apart from the dreadful 'Les Boys', hardly one of their show-stoppers. 'Solid Rock', 'Tunnel Of Love', 'Romeo And Juliet' and 'Skateaway' would be on any decent greatest hits package. Following this artistic triumph they proceeded to release Love Over Gold, and we all know what album followed after that, don't we? Ho hum.

Makowicz, Adam

b. 18 August 1940, Czechoslovakia. Makowicz's piano teacher mother taught him to play. He studied classical music at the Fryderyck Chopin School in Kracow, but left when he became interested in jazz. His first work was with Tomasz Stanko (trumpet) in one of the first European groups to be influenced by the free style of Ornette Coleman. In 1965, he moved to Warsaw, where he had his own trio and played with Zbigniew Namyslowski (alto) with whom he toured worldwide. Makowicz's interest in composition grew during this period and he became involved with electric keyboards. In 1970, he joined Michal Urbaniak in his new group Constellation and recorded an album with Urbaniak's wife, Urszula Dudziak. Between 1973 and 1976 he played in a group called Unit with Tomasz Stanko and played the piano with the Duke Ellington Orchestra at a concert in Prague (1976). In 1977 he went to the USA as a solo performer, playing in a way which reflected his interest in Art Tatum, Keith Jarrett and romantic piano music. He settled in New York in 1977 and became an American citizen in 1986.

Mákvirág

Formed in 1973, this trio from Hungary and Romania, have reached a wider audience due to the increasing interest shown in European and world music during the late 80s. The group won first prize in 1974 in a folk-jazz competition in Gyor, Hungary. They were subsequently afforded the accolade Young Master Of Folk Art in 1976. Then, in 1978, they won the Lászl Lajtha Award at Szombathely, Hungary. They appeared in Britain in 1988, while undertaking their first major UK and Irish tour. All multi-instrumentalists, Csaba Szijjártó (b. Budapest, Hungary), Zoltán Kátai, and Károly Horváth (b. Romania) have recorded a number of albums, each combining music from their own backgrounds as well as from other Eastern European countries. Instrumentation is supplemented by recorders, ocarina and pan pipes. All three members have spent time in various orchestras and choirs and music conservatories. Mákvirág have since played the UK again on a number of occasions, largely at festivals.

Malaco Records

An independent soul, blues and gospel label based in Jackson, Mississippi, USA, Malaco Records was founded in 1962 by Tommy Couch from Tucombia, Alabama, and by Gerald 'Wolf' Stephenson from Columbia, Mississippi, as a booking agency for local and touring acts visiting Mississippi. It started recording relatively obscure talent and leasing recordings to more established labels, as well as allowing other labels and artists to use their recording studios. Its first release was 'Misty Blue' by Dorothy Moore in 1975. Dave Clark joined the label in 1980, after which Malaco built a formidable roster of soul and blues artists, including Denise Latimore, Johnnie La Salle, Dorothy Taylor, Shirley Moore, Bobby Brown 'Blue Band', Little Milton, Artie 'Blues Boy' White and Poonanny. It has become one of the major labels catering for the audience interested in this form of music. Malaco's biggest hit came with Z.Z. Hill's 'Down Home Blues' in 1982 which sold more than 500,000 copies. Malaco bought the Muscle Shoals Studio in 1985 and so became associated with the Muscle Shoals Sound that spawned musicians such as Jimmy Johnson, David Hood, Roger Hawkins and Harrison Calloway. It has recently established a subsidiary, Waldoxy. The gospel division of Malaco started in 1976 and within a few years it had become the third largest gospel label in the USA. Its subsidiaries also include Savoy and Blackberry records. The Malaco gospel label features 165 artists and 500 releases in its catalogue headed by Jerry Mannery. Its artists include Mississippi Mass Choir, Rev. James Cleveland, Rev. James Moore, Williams Brothers, Dorothy Norwood, Albertina Walker, Florida Mass Choir, Rev. Clay Evans, Sensational Nightingales, Jackson Southernairs, and the Philadelphia Mass Choir.

Malcolm, Carl

b. July 1952, Black River, St. Elizabeth, Jamaica, West Indies. Malcolm learnt to play the keyboard by ear at the local Methodist church and his musical talents were recognized by those around him from an early age. After leaving the St. Elizabeth Technical High School he spent two years working for a shoe company in Kingston and was a reserve for the Jamaica Defence Force. Music remained his passion and in 1965 he became involved in a band called the Volcanoes alongside Al Brown. The two artists shared vocal duties and stayed with the group until they disbanded four years later. Malcolm retired from music and returned to studying. It was in his second year of study that he was involved in a car accident in which he sustained a broken leg and cracked ribs. Returning to music, he joined a band called Big Relations, led by Jo Jo Bennett. Malcolm recorded with Coxsone Dodd on his first tune, 'Father Free Us', before leaving the island for the USA, where he performed at various clubs and house parties. He then returned to Jamaica where he found employment with Rupie Edwards as the branch manager of Success Records, located at Half Way Tree. While working for Edwards he was allowed studio time to record 'Make It When You Try', but, like his earlier effort, it was overlooked by Jamaican music lovers. Accompanied by Skin Flesh And Bones in 1973, he recorded 'No Jestering', and two years later when released in the UK, it held the number 1 position in the reggae charts. Malcolm's career took off with the follow-up, 'Miss Wire Waist', which demonstrated his smooth vocals. In an effort to appease his fans, he also acknowledged his love of larger ladies in the song 'Fattie Bum Bum', which became a UK Top 10 hit in September 1975. The lyrics, 'Hey fatty bum bum, you sweet sugar dumpling, hey fatty bum bum let me tell you something, no not because your so big and fat, don't believe I'm afraid of that, never let the big size fool you', appealed to many, but in the eyes of the British record-buying public he was a one-hit-wonder. The song was covered by a UK-based group, the Diversions, who diverted enough sales from Malcom to enjoy a chart hit alongside the original version. He returned to the reggae charts in the late 70s with the release of 'Repatriation' with Ranking Trevor. In 1992 Scotty reactivated Malcolm's career when he covered 'Miss Wire Waist'. Even though Malcom had a UK Top 10 hit, no album was released to capitalize on his success. DJ Specials (VP 1981) featured both 'No Jestering' and 'Miss Wire Waist', providing the foundation to the DJ tracks.

Malevolent Creation

Formed in Buffalo, New York, USA, in 1987, it took Malevolent Creation four years to secure a contract and release their official debut for Roadrunner Records. This gore-fixated recording, The Ten Commandments, was mixed at Morrisound Studios in Florida by noted extreme metal producer Scott Burns, whose distinctive work had previously more or less defined the death metal sound. Malevolent Creation were initially considered an above average example of an often formulaic genre, and attracted a degree of critical acclaim. They arrived on the death metal scene too late, however, to establish themselves among the front-runners and as its popularity waned, the band found themselves without a contract in 1994. They eventually returned with a new album in 1996, but both Eternal and the subsequent*In Cold Blood* proved to be as lacklustre and dated as previous efforts.

Malice

This Los Angeles band emerged from the local club scene of the early 80s with a sound influenced by European metal, particularly Judas Priest. Indeed, Malice were widely described as Priest clones, not only for their twin guitar-based sound and James Neal's vocal similarities to Rob Halford, but also for their leather-clad image and guitarist Jay Reynolds' distinct resemblance to KK Downing. Malice, completed by Mick Zane (guitar), Mark Behn (bass) and Peter Laufman (drums), recorded a stunning five-track demo, with producer Michael Wagener, that had independent labels clamouring to release it in its own right, but the band instead signed to Atlantic Records. The demo formed half of In The Beginning, with the remaining five tracks produced by Ashley Howe. It was an excellent debut, built on a solid base of power metal guitars, although the Priest comparisons remained obvious. However, cracks were beginning to show by License To Kill, as internal conflicts began to divide the band, and the split came in late 1987, as Malice divided into two warring camps. Reynolds later joined Megadeth for a brief period.

Malicorne

The brainchild of French music genius Gabriel Yacoub, Malicorne was formed after he and his then wife, Marie, spent some time in Alan Stivell's pioneering Breton unit. The original, innovative line-up, used antique instruments to play peasant songs, haunting harmonies and integrated rock rhythms. Pierre De Grenoble (1973), although recorded before Malicorne came into being, set the style and manner of the band. Initially a four piece, the Yacoubs were joined by Laurent Vercambe (violin) and Hugh De Courson (bass/woodwinds). Their finest set in this form was Almanach, a song cycle based on the turning year, and based on rustic folklore. A commercially successful tour of France was followed, in 1978, by the recuitment of a fifth member, Oliver Zdrzalik (bass). Subsequently, an excellent live recording, En Public A Montreal, preceded further fundamental personnel changes, and the birth of a new seven-piece unit, which included ex-Gryphon bassoonist Brian Gulland. Following Le Bestiare, which proved to be an 'animalistic album, a story of French country folk', the band cut one final set before splitting up, but came together again in 1986 when an intended Gabriel Yacoub solo session was reorganized as a Malicorne piece. The Yacoubs, with Oliver Kowalski (bass), Jean Pierre Arnoux (drums) and Michel Le Cam (fiddle), recorded the industrial sounding Les Cathedrales De L'industrie. This line-up became Gabriel Yacoub's own band, and, with the addition of Nikki Matheson (keyboards), played both Malicorne and Yacoub material. Yacoub's own albums are all distinct; ranging from traditional folk and chamber music, to bizarre electronic pieces. Yacoub married Matheson in the late 80s, and they toured as an acoustic duo.

Mallard

This short-lived group was the result of an acrimonious split between Captain Beefheart and the most renowned of his backing groups, the Magic Band. Their split had occurred in 1974, following the release of Unconditionally Guaranteed. Bill Harkleroad (aka Zoot Horn Rollo; guitar), Mark Boston (aka Rockette Morton; bass) and Ed Marimba (aka Art Tripp III; drums) formed Mallard with vocalist Sam Galpin, but although their debut album offered a glimpse of the inspired interplay shown on their previous incarnation, its overall lack of passion justified Beefheart's assertion that he taught the two guitarists by rote. The best thing about the album was the beautiful steam train on the cover (the band were named after the dteam engine Mallard).Tripp was replaced by George Draggota for a second Mallard album, In A Different Climate. This set was an even greater disappointment and the group broke up soon after its release.

Mallett, Dave

b. 1950, Maine, New England, USA. One of country singer Dave Mallett's most poignant songs is 'My Old Man', in remembrance of his father. By the age of 10, Mallett was performing as a country duo with his brother Neil. Following several years as a performer in clubs and coffee-houses, Mallett befriended Paul Stookey of Peter, Paul And Mary and they co-produced his debut, which included 'Garden Song', also recorded by Stookey himself, John Denver, Pete Seeger and Arlo Guthrie. His first albums were issued under the name of David Mallett but he has worked as Dave Mallett since Vital Signs. He has written several songs with Hal Ketchum, notably 'Old Soldiers' and 'Daddy's Oldsmobile'. Ketchum was featured along with Nanci Griffith, Michael Johnson and Kathy Mattea on this town. His compositions include 'Red Red Rose' (Emmylou Harris). He says, 'In your twenties you find your tools; in your thirties, you learn how to use your tools; in your forties, you have your tools and you know how to use them. So I feel glad to be in my forties.' A contented man, he has written about the virtues of middle-age and also contributed to albums of children's songs.

Mallory, Eddie

b. *c.*1905, Chicago, Illinois, USA, d. 20 March 1961. An all-round journeyman musician, he played trumpet and occasionally saxophones, arranged, led bands and worked in various non-playing areas of the music business. In the late 20s and through into the early 30s he played in bands such as the Alabamians, Tiny Parham's and, in New York, played in and occasionally led the Mills Blue Rhythm Band. He also played in a band led by Benny Carter and then, in 1934, formed a band to accompany Ethel Waters to whom he was married at the time. He toured and recorded with Waters throughout the 30s. In the 40s he led bands for club and hotel work, often in his home-town. From the late 40s onwards he worked mostly as an agent and also outside showbusiness. The band Mallory used on some of his wife's recordings included top-flight musicians such as Shirley Clay, Tyree Glenn, Carter and Milt Hinton.

Malmsteen, Yngwie

b. 30 June 1963. This Swedish-born guitar virtuoso was the originator of the high-speed, technically precise, neo-classical style that developed during the 80s. Influenced by Jimi Hendrix, Ritchie Blackmore and Eddie Van Halen, Malmsteen first picked up a guitar at the age of five and had formed his first band, Powerhouse, by the time he entered his teens. At age 14 he formed Rising, named after Rainbow's second album, and recorded a series of demo tapes. One of these was picked up by producer and guitar specialist Mike Varney. Malmsteen was persuaded by Varney to relocate to Los Angeles and join Ron Keel's Steeler as lead guitarist, and went straight into the studio to record the band's debut album. Following this he was approached by Kiss, UFO and Ozzy Osbourne, but declined their offers in favour of teaming up with Graham Bonnet in a new group called Alcatrazz. This association lasted for one studio album and a live set, recorded in Japan. After the dissolution of that band, Malmsteen was immediately offered a solo contract by Polydor Records, just as his reputation and stature were beginning to escalate. He released the self-produced Rising Force, utilizing ex-Jethro Tull drummer Barriemore Barlow, vocalist Jeff Scott Soto and keyboardist Jens Johansson. This comprised a mixture of new songs and reworked demo material that had been available for several years. Deciding to work within a band framework once more, but this time exercising tight control, Malmsteen formed Rising Force with Soto and Johansson, plus bassist Marcel Jacob and drummer Anders Johansson. This basic formation recorded two albums, the second of which, Trilogy, saw Soto replaced by ex-Ted Nugent vocalist Mark Boals, which showcased Malmsteen's amazing virtuosity and ability to combine speed with melody. Following an 18-month break after a serious road accident involving Malmsteen, Rising Force was resurrected with ex-Rainbow vocalist Joe Lynn Turner. Produced by Jeff Glixman and mixed by the Thompson/Barbiero team, Odyssey was released in 1988 to widespread acclaim. At last Malmsteen's guitar pyrotechnics were anchored within commercial hard rock structures. The guitar solos, for once, were economical, and did not detract from the songs. The album reached number 40 on the US Billboard album chart and brought many new fans to the guitarist. Eager to capitalize on this success, Malmsteen then issued a disappointing and self-indulgent live album recorded in Leningrad. The momentum was lost and Joe Lynn Turner was dismissed, to be replaced with a Swedish vocalist, Goran Edman. Eclipse emerged in 1990 with weak vocals and an unusually restrained Malmsteen on guitar, and it appeared that he was suppressing his real desires and talents in the search for commercial success. Fire And Ice debuted at number 1 in the Japanese charts, and introduced new vocalist Mike Vescera. Malmsteen switched back to his old flamboyant style on No Mercy, however, which featured classical material and a string orchestra. In 1996 he joined with Jeff Scott Soto as Human Clay to issue their self-titled debut.

Malo

Lead guitarist Jorge Santana, younger brother of Carlos Santana, formed Malo in San Francisco, California, USA, in 1971. He was initially joined by Richard Kermode (keyboards) and Louis Gasca (trumpet) - two ex-members of Janis Joplin's Kozmic Blues Band - as well as Arcelio Garcia (vocals), Abel Zarate (lead guitar), Roy Murray (trumpet, horns), Pablo Tellez (bass), Raul Rekow (percussion), Richard Spremick (drums) and Pepe Rosales (drums). Malo bore an obvious debt to his brother's band Santana, fusing Latin styles with energetic, rhythmic rock and fluid guitar lines. It yielded a surprise hit single when 'Suavecito' reached the US Top 20. Malo were a popular live attraction in their native city, but a constantly changing personel undermined their initial appeal. Jorge, Garcia and Tellez were the sole survivors from the founding line-up that featured on Ascension. Tellez then joined Santana, where he was later joined by Richard Kermode. Other ex-members formed the similarly-styled Sapo, while Jorge Santana formed the Jorge Santana Band in 1978.

Malombo Jazz

Formed in Pretoria, South Africa, in 1962, the original - and definitive - Malombo Jazz was a three-piece comprising guitarist Philip Tabane (b. Riverside, near Pretoria, South Africa), flautist Abe Cindi and traditional drummer and percussionist Julian Bahula. The group's repertoire drew heavily on the ancient folk music of South Africa's Venda and Pedi peoples, but was also used as an appropriate backdrop for Tabane's exquisite jazz-based improvisations, which were capable of moving through every emotional area from the loud and lascivious to the pastoral and delicate. In a country long racked by tribal rivalries, jazz had served since the 30s to unite various ethnic groups, and Malombo achieved much the same success in the 60s. In 1964, the band won first prize at the prestigious Castle Lager Jazz Festival. Bahula and Cindi left Malombo in the late 60s to base themselves in London, where they formed the short-lived Malombo Jazzmen prior to Bahula setting up his own band, Jabula. Malombo's line-up underwent numerous personnel changes in subsequent years, as Tabane strove to recapture the magic of the original trio. His first replacement for Bahula was Gabriel Thobejani, who later left to join fusion outfit Sakhile. In 1981, Cindi briefly rejoined the band. In 1986, Thobejani returned. In the late 80s, Tabane began leading an occasional big band, the Homeland Symphony Orchestra, re-interpreting Venda and Pedi folk music in jazz-influenced orchestral style. Sadly, the project remains unrecorded.

Malone, Geneva

b. Texas, USA. One of the rising stars of her thriving local country music scene, Malone has been called 'the most listened to country singer in Texas today.' A regular on the honky-tonk circuit, where audiences have responded well to her natural, self-consciously conservative style, she claims to have played 'almost every country venue in the Lone Star State'. This earnest, hard-working singer brought her backing group, the five-piece Southern Rain, to the UK in 1996, headlining a 'Texas Country Music Show', also featuring Shannon McCaw and Dennis Raley.

Malone, J.J.

b. 20 August 1935, Pete's Corner, Alabama, USA. Malone was playing guitar and harmonica before his thirteenth birthday, and he began performing at dances and parties when he was 17. In the mid-50s he spent a year in the Air Force and then formed his first band, the Rockers, later called Tops In Blues. Once out of the armed services in 1957, he formed the Rhythm Rockers in Spokane, Washington, and they worked all over the west coast. In 1966, he settled in Oakland, California, and recorded for the Galaxy label, enjoying a hit with 'Its A Shame' in 1972; he subsequently had records issued by the Red Lightnin', Cherrie, Paris Album and Eli Mile High labels. Malone is a soulful vocalist, adept on both piano and guitar and equally convincing whether turning his hand to straight blues, rocking R&B, or funk-influenced material.

Malopoets

Formed in Johannesburg, South Africa, in 1978 by vocalist Patrick Sefolosha and guitarist Kenny Mathaba, the Malopoets - alongside Sipho Mabuse and Savuka - were, until their demise in 1986, one of the most significant and rewarding groups at the rootsier end of the township pop movement, playing a lighter, more relaxed form of mbaqanga. Sefolosha and Mathaba had served their apprenticeship in the rock and soul-orientated band Purple Haze before, alongside their audience, becoming increasingly frustrated in the mid-70s with imported styles and making a decision to strive for greater authenticity in their music. By 1983, however, the band were close to breaking up, finding it practically impossible to make a living under apartheid, where black bands were denied freedom to tour the country or promote their records on state radio. Sefolosha accordingly left South Africa and teamed up with producer Martin Meissonnier in Paris. A few months later the rest of the group joined him, signed to EMI Records and, in 1984, released the album, Malopoets. The set failed to make any impact on the burgeoning African music scene in Europe, however, being adjudged too pop-orientated by white audiences craving 'roots' sounds. It was followed by an appearance on the 1985 Tam Tam Pour L'Ethiope record and televised show, Africa's indigenous response to Live Aid. Early the following year the Malopoets broke up.

Maltby, Richard

b. 26 June 1914, Chicago, Illinois, USA, d. 19 August 1991, Santa Monica, California, USA. Maltby started playing cornet in his school band, going onto Northwest University Music School, before his first professional experience with 'Little' Jack Little and his band. He was musical director for CBS radio in Chicago (1940-45), and during this period he wrote 'Six Flats Unfurnished' for the Benny Goodman band, and then he spent 10 years working as musical associate for Paul Whiteman at ABC radio in New York. During 1950-65, Maltby was also musical director for SESAC Jazz Classics, recording radio transcriptions with a big band which he took on the road from 1955, encouraged by the success of his 'St Louis Blues Mambo' which had charted the previous year, followed in 1956 by 'The Man With The Golden Arm'. The band recorded prolifically for various RCA labels and Columbia during the 50s, and Maltby was active on many different labels, directing backings for artists Peggy Lee, Giselle Mackenzie, Sarah Vaughan, Gordon MacRae, Johnnie Ray, Vic Damone and Ethel Merman. Downbeat voted his unit 'Best New Swing Band', but, the swing era having long since passed, he found more financial reward, if less musical satisfaction, as Lawrence Welk's arranger and conductor on records and television. Maltby's original compositions (mostly for the SESAC transcriptions) for his own orchestra and big band must number in the hundreds, although few measured-up to the commercial success of his first Goodman hit and its successor, 'Five Flats Unfurnished', for Sy Oliver. Maltby's only venture into 'serious music' was his threnody 'Requiem For John Fitzgerald Kennedy'. He suffered from ill-health in the 80s, enduring five bouts of open-heart surgery until his death in 1991. His son, Richard Maltby Jnr., is a Broadway director and lyricist.

b. 4 January 1962, Kingston, Jamaica, West Indies. Malvo has voiced many hits for a number of Jamaica's top producers in the style of a dancehall singer. His initial hits include 'Come Back To Me' and 'Rain From The Sky', both with Tiger, and 'Take You To The Dance' with Lizard. The combination hits were followed by a solo venture recorded with Bobby Digital, 'Can't Control The Feeling' and 'History Sound'. Malvo is best known for his work with dancehall singer Anthony 'Red Rose' Cameron when his career peaked in 1994. The duo enjoyed individual hits on their How Yu Fi Sey Dat label: Cameron sang about the 'Ganja Man' while Malvo performed 'Sensi' on an identical rhythm in combination with Josey Wales. In the history of reggae, the dancehall has always played an important role in inspiring recording trends. In the early days the selector would play one rhythm and the DJs would take turns to chant over the same tune. By the early 90s the selector would mix various recorded tracks of the same rhythm, creating the impression that a number of performers were taking a turn at the microphone. Although many sound systems would play the rhythm without an apparent interruption, the practice induced the duo to create 'Informer'. As well as producing the song, they performed alongside Frankie Paul, Red Dragon, Snagga Puss, Lizard and Flourgon. The idea proved a success and a number of multi-combination tunes followed. In 1994 the duo performed 'Never Get', which was rendered in a call-and-response style. They also produced a number of Jamaica's top performers, including Red Dragon ('Sweetheart'), Beenie Man ('Name Brand'), Chuckleberry ('Woman You're Hard') and combinations with Merciless, President Brown and Spragga Benz with 'You A Mi Heart', 'Red Alert' and 'Reminiscing', respectively. In 1996, after maintaining a low profile, Malvo released the popular 'Main Ingredient', as well as producing successful hits for How Yu Fi Sey Dat.

Mama Records

Underground house DJ Chris Long first employed his Rhythm Doctor alias at the Rock City club in Nottingham, England, in 1986. In the 90s he established his own label, Mama Records, alongside partner Phillipe Lavena, which specialises in jazz/deep house projects. It was set up after the duo had provided cult US independent label 8 Ball Records with Wave's 'Enjoy Life', which gave 8 Ball its first Top 10 Billboard dance hit. Subsequent hits housed on Mama have included Love Tribe's Sundance EP and Batamania's 'Jazzy Notions' (which featured regularly at the Ministry Of Sound and also on the club's Late Night Sessions album). These records featured Mama's established proclivity for mixing live instrumentation (such as saxophone and flute) with rhythms, as did their late 1995 release, Nature Boys' Drummer EP.

Mama Said Knock You Out - LL Cool J

It might not include any of the earlier classics such as 'I Can't Live Without My Radio', but Mama Said Knock You Out is undoubtedly James Todd Smith's finest album. Producer extraordinaire Marley Marl provided the beats for this 1990 set, where LL's familiar braggadocio was tempered with new-found wisdom. Never before had LL suggested himself capable of calm reflection on the development of anything other than his sexual conquests. Here he waxed lyrical on the hip-hop tradition and its current trajectory. Notable not least because the album arrived at a time when he had been largely written off, it would deservedly go triple platinum in the USA.

Mama's Boys

The three McManus brothers began their musical careers as folk musicians, playing the local dancehall and club circuit in their native Northern Ireland. After seeing the Irish electric folk-rock outfit Horslips in concert in 1978, they decided to abandon their acoustic guitars and tambourines and become a hard rock power trio. John took on vocals and bass, Pat picked up lead guitar and Tommy occupied the drum-stool. Merging traditional Irish influences with blues and heavy rock, they quickly developed a unique style that echoed Thin Lizzy. Their first two albums contained high-energy boogie and driving blues, but from Turn It Up onwards, they began to show a greater awareness of melody and veered towards AOR. Realizing the limitations of John as a vocalist, they expanded to a quartet in 1987, adding ex-Airrace singer Keith Murrell. Growing Up The Hard Way followed and was undoubtedly the band's most accomplished album to date, with a sophisticated approach reminiscent of Foreigner. After four years of recording inactivity, Live Tonite emerged. Recorded on their 1990 European tour, it featured latest vocalist Mike Wilson, plus four brand new songs. On 16 November 1994 drummer Tommy McManus died of a lung infection following a bone marrow transplant, having for several years been ill with leukaemia.

Mama, I Want To Sing

Conceived, so it said, on a beach in Jamaica in 1980, and subsequently showcased at various provincial theatres in the USA, this 'multi-cultural gospel musical' finally opened in New York, Off-Broadway, at the Heckscher Theatre, the former home of Joseph Papp's New York Shakespeare Festival, on 23 March 1983. Set in Harlem in the late 40s and 50s, Vy Higginsen and Ken Wydro's book is based the life of Doris Troy, Higginsen's sister, who emerged from her gospel church choir to become an accomplished R&B songwriter and session singer with one or two substantial hits of her own, including 'Just One Look' in 1963. Early in 1984, Doris Troy herself joined the cast in the role of her mother, and stayed with the company over the years. She is credited, along with Rudolph V. Hawkins, Pat Holley and Stephen Taylor, with composing the music to Higginsen and Wydro's lyrics for the 'rhythmical foot-stomping, hand-clapping score', which is supplemented by some familar gospel tunes. The musical numbers included 'You Are My Child', 'Faith Can Move A Mountain', 'My Faith Looks Up To Thee', 'I Don't Worry About Tomorrow', 'God Will Be', 'Gifted Is', 'What Do You Win When You Win?', 'Precious Lord', 'Know When To Leave The Party', 'The One Who Will Love Me', and the title song. With audiences flocking to see 'this morally uplifting entertainment', by the end of 1984 Time Magazine had selected Mama, I Want To Sing as one of the Top 10 theatrical productions of the year, and 1985 saw the show playing 10 performances a week with two different casts. A year later, while the New York cast was still in residence at the Heckscher Theatre, the first US national tour opened. This was followed over the next few years by productions in Tokyo, Osaka, Athens, Zurich, Munich, Venice, Berlin, Frankfurt, Palermo, Sicily, Istanbul and many other cities around the world. When the New York production closed in 1991 (after playing in repertory for a while with Mama, I Want To Sing Part II) the show had played more than 2,400 performances over eight consecutive years, and become 'the longest-running, best-loved black Off-Broadway musical in the history of the American theatre'. Four years later, when it arrived in London, it was estimated that Mama, I Want To Sing had played to more than 3,000,000 people and grossed £38 million. Doris Troy was still present when the West End production opened at the Cambridge Theatre on 1 February 1995, with Stacy Francis as the young Doris, and soul star Chaka Khan, in the principal role of Sister Carrie, singing 'a couple of real stompers'.

Mamas And The Papas

Formed in Los Angeles in 1965, this enthralling harmony group embodied the city's astute blend of folk and pop. John Phillips (b. 30 August 1935, Parris Island, South Carolina, USA) had been a founder-member of the popular Journeymen, before establishing this new attraction with his wife Michelle Phillips (b. Holly Michelle Gilliam, 6 April 1944, Long Beach, California, USA), and former Mugwumps' members Denny Doherty (b. 29 November 1941, Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada) and Cass Elliot (b. Ellen Naimoi Cohen, 19 September 1943, Alexandria, Virginia, USA, d. 29 July 1974, London, England). Although drawing inspiration from the flourishing milieu of New York's Greenwich Village, the quartet quickly moved to California, where they met producer Lou Adler through the interjection of mutual acquaintance Barry McGuire. The then unnamed Mamas And Papas contributed backing vocals to the latter's second album, which in turn inspired the group's own career. Their debut single, 'California Dreamin'', was originally recorded by McGuire, whose voice was simply erased and replaced by that of Doherty. Penned by Phillips and Gilliam, the song provided a vivid contrast between the cold New York winter and the warmth and security of life on the west coast and effectively established the group as arguably the finest vocal ensemble form their era working in the pop field. The group's bohemian image was reinforced by their compositional skill and distinctive individual personalities. Visually, they seemed eccentrically contrasting: John, a towering 6 foot 4 inches, thin as a rake, and cast in the role of group intellectual; Denny the 'good-looking Canadian' and master of the sarcastic one-liner; Cass, overweight, uproarious and charming; and Michelle, quiet, beautiful and 'angelic when she wants to be'. With 'California Dreamin'' they infiltrated the US Top 5 and the song became a standard, covered by many artists, most notably Jose Feliciano. The richly-harmonic follow-up, 'Monday Monday' reached number 1 in the US and also established the group in the UK. Further timeless hit singles followed, including the soaring 'I Saw Her Again' and a brilliant revival of the Shirelles 'Dedicated To The One I Love'. Michelle's sensual, semi-spoken introduction, backed by a solitary acoustic guitar remains one of the most classic and memorable openings to any pop recording.

The group's albums achieved gold status and while the first was sprinkled with cover versions, the second documented Phillips' development as a songwriter. He was involved in no less than 10 compositions, two of which ('No Salt On Her Tail' and 'Strange Young Girls') were particularly outstanding. Marital problems between John and Michelle eroded the stability of the group and she was fired in 1966 and briefly replaced by lookalike Jill Gibson. The group reconvened for Deliver, another strong album, which was followed by the autobiographical 'Creeque Alley', which humorously documented their rise to fame. During the summer of 1967 Phillips organized the Monterey Pop Festival and helped launch the career of former Journeyman Scott McKenzie by writing the chart-topping hippie anthem 'San Francisco'. In the winter of 1967, the group arrived in the UK for concerts at London's Royal Albert Hall. After docking at Southampton, Cass was arrested by police, charged with stealing blankets and keys from the Royal Garden Hotel in Kensington on an earlier visit. The charges were dropped but the concerts were subsequently cancelled, amid rumours of a break-up. The group managed to complete one last album, The Papas And The Mamas, a superb work that highlighted Phillips' brilliance as a songwriter. 'Safe In My Garden', 'For The Love Of Ivy' and the sublime 'Twelve Thirty' were all minor classics, while 'Rooms' and 'Mansions' incisively documented the spiritual isolation that accompanied their rise to international stardom: 'Limousines and laughter, parties ever after/If you play the game you pay the price/purchasing our piece of paradise'. It was a fitting valediction.

After splitting up in 1968, the quartet embarked on solo careers, with varying success. Three years later, the group briefly re-formed for People Like Us, but their individual contributions were taped separately and the results were disappointing. Cass enjoyed the greatest success as a solo artist but her career was tragically cut short by her sudden death in July 1974. Michelle Phillips continued to pursue an acting career, while John plummeted into serious drug addiction, near-death and arrest. He subsequently recovered and in 1982 he and Denny re-formed the Mamas And Papas. The new line-up featured Phillips' actress daughter Laura McKenzie (McKenzie Phillips) and Elaine 'Spanky' McFarlane of Spanky And Our Gang. Doherty left when the band began touring full-time, and was replaced by the aforementioned McKenzie for an attraction that steadfastly retains its popularity.

Mambo Kings, The

Adapted by Cynthia Cidre from Oscar Hijuelos' Pulitzer Prize-winning novel The Mambo Kings Play Songs Of Love, this 1992 Warner Brothers production tells of two Cuban brothers, trumpet player Nestor and mambo singer and percussionist Cesar Castillo (Antonio Banderas and Armand Assante). In 1952 they leave Cuba for New York where Cesar demonstrates his skills at the swish Palladium club with the renowned Tito Puente Orchestra. After forming their own group The Mambo Kings, fellow Cuban Desi Arnaz - who is played by his real-life son Desi Arnaz Jnr. - hears them singing Nestor's composition 'Beautiful Maria Of My Soul' (Robert Kraft-Arne Glimcher) and invites them to appear on the top-rated I Love Lucy television show. Their subsequent rise to fame and fortune is shattered when Nestor dies in a car crash. Cesar buys a bar of his own, the Club Havana, and on the opening night, at the request of his late brother's girl, Delores Fuentes (Maruschka Detmers), he sings Nestor's lovely bolero 'Beautiful Maria Of My Soul'. The song had been dedicated to Maria Rivera (Talisa Soto) Nestor's former lover in Cuba. Other roles in the large cast went to Cathy Moriarty, Pablo Calogero, Scott Cohen, Mario Grillo, Ralph Irizzary, Pete MacNamara, and Jimmy Medina. The mostly South American songs included 'Mambo Caliente' (Arturo Sandoval), 'Tanga, Rumba-Afro-Cubana' (Mario Bauza), 'Guantanamera' (Fernandez Diaz', 'Perfidia' (Alberto Dominguez), 'Quiereme Mucho' (Gonzalo Roig-Augustin Rodriguez), and 'Cuban Pete' (José Norman). The exotic background score was written by Robert Kraft and Carlos Franzetti. Michael Peters was the choreographer, and the film was photographed in Technicolor by Michael Ballhouse. The director was Arne Glimcher. 'Beautiful Maria Of My Soul' was nominated for the best song Oscar, but, unlike the original book, no other prizes came the way of this brash and colourful film.

Opening at the Winter Garden Theatre in New York on 24 May 1966 to excellent reviews, the stage show Mame was another hit for composer and lyricist Jerry Herman. Robert E. Lee and Jerome Lawrence's book was based on the play Auntie Mame, which was in turn adapted from Patrick Dennis's novel. Mame (Angela Lansbury) is an eccentric lady of indeterminate years but with a decidedly youthful approach to life, and her efforts to impart the elements of her lifestyle and philosophy to her young nephew, Patrick Dennis (Frank Michaels) and her Texan husband, Beauregard Burnside (Charles Braswell), made for a delightful show. There were some memorable songs in a score which included 'Open A New Window', 'The Man In The Moon', 'It's Today', 'We Need A Little Christmas', 'That's How Young I Feel', 'My Best Girl', and the poignant 'If He Walked Into My Life', which later received sympathetic readings from Matt Monro and Scott Walker. The enormously likeable title number was a US hit for Herb Alpert, and Herman won a Grammy for the Original Cast album. Another outstanding number in the show was the amusingly bitchy 'Bosom Buddies', sung by Mame and her lifelong 'chum', Vera Charles (Beatrice Arthur), in which they swopped compliments such as 'If I say that your tongue is vicious, if I call you uncouth/It's simply that who else but a bosom buddy will sit down and tell you the truth?'. Mame ran for 1,508 performances on Broadway and won Tony Awards for best actress (Lansbury), and featured actor and actress (Michaels and Arthur). Hollywood superstar Ginger Rogers played the lead in the 1969 London production, various touring versions of the show have proved convenient vehicles for several other 'maturing' ladies of the stage and screen, including Janis Paige, Jane Morgan, Ann Miller, Rosalind Russell (who had starred in the long-running Auntie Mame and its film version), Dolores Gray, Greer Garson, Eve Arden and Sylvia Sidney. Angela Lansbury reprised her role for the short-lived 1983 Broadway revival. A 1974 film version starred Lucille Ball and Robert Preston.

Mammoth

The prerequisite for joining this appropriately titled UK band was, as legend has it, to weigh in excess of 20 stone. Consequently, potential members were few and far between, but made up in girth what they lacked in number. Vocalist Nicky Moore (ex-Samson) and bassist John McCoy (ex-Gillan) eventually found guitarist Big Mac Baker and drummer 'Tubby' Vinnie Reid large enough for their requirements. The idea behind Mammoth was to present an alternative to 'pouting' rock bands such as Poison and Bon Jovi, with the music, rather than the image, topping the agenda. Unfortunately, due to contractual problems with their record company Jive, their debut album was delayed for 10 months and the interest they generated had evaporated by the time it was released. It comprised a poorly produced but workmanlike selection of hard rock and R&B numbers, with guitarists Bernie Torme and Kenny Cox guesting on a couple of tracks. The single, 'Can't Take The Hurt Anymore', was included on the soundtrack to Nightmare On Elm Street 5, The Dream Child. The band collapsed shortly after the album's release.

Mamonas Assassinas

Brazilian pop quintet Mamonas Assassinas enjoyed massive national success before their untimely collective death in a plane crash in March 1996. The group comprised Alecsander Alves (b. 1972, Brazil, d. 2 March 1996, Brazil; vocals), Alberto Hiroto (b. 1973, Brazil, d. 2 March 1996, Brazil; guitar), Julio Rasec (b. 1968, Brazil, d. 2 March 1996, Brazil; keyboards), Samuel Reoli (b. 1974, Brazil, d. 2 March 1996, Brazil; bass) and Sergio Reoli (b. 1972, Brazil, d. 2 March 1996, Brazil; drums). The group had grown up together as friends in Guarulhos, an affluent town close to Sao Paulo's airport. Each member enjoyed unremarkable middle-class trades prior to the formation of the group - lead member Alves working as a town council assistant. Founded in 1989, the quintet originally called themselves Utopia. Several years were then spent submitting demos to disinterested major labels until EMI Records signed them, shortly after they had changed their name to Mamonas Assassinas ('Killer Tits'). Their debut album was released in January 1995 and by the end of the year had sold 1.7 million copies - a huge success for a Brazilian market still grappling with recession. It was also a hit in Portugal and Argentina. The Mamonas were immensely popular in the teenage market, with their hotels besieged by admirers and their love lives becoming the subject of intense tabloid speculation. Their music was catchy and distinctive, using the bawdy rural style known as 'brega', though like English 'boy bands' they relied more on visual image than song. Concert dates were completed with a wide array of silly hats, convicts' uniforms and pyjamas, while comic accents were also employed to deliver the group's suggestive lyrics. Typical of this approach was their hit single, 'Animal World', about bestiality, and 'Vira Vira', the tale of a woman's adventures at an orgy. There was also a strong element of social satire. However, before the group could truly consummate their popularity a Lear jet carrying all five members as well as two pilots and two technical staff crashed approaching Sao Paulo airport on 2 March 1996. The scenes of national mourning rivalled those accorded to the death of racing driver Ayrton Senna two years previously.

Mamoulian, Rouben

b. 8 October 1898, Tbilisi, Georgia, Russia, d. 4 December 1987, Los Angeles, California, USA. A distinguished stage and film director whose name is particularly associated with two masterpieces of the American musical theatre - Porgy And Bess and Oklahoma!- and a legendary Hollywood movie, Love Me Tonight. Mamoulian spent part of his childhood in Paris before studying at Moscow University, and running his own drama school in Tbilisi. In 1920 he toured Britain with a Russian theatre group and subsequently studied drama at London University. He moved to the USA in 1923 and operettas at the George Eastman Theatre in Rochester, New Jersey, before going to New York where he became a leading light with the prestigious Theatre Guild. His reputation as a theatre director led him to Hollywood at the beginning of the talkie era, and he immediately impressed with his innovative and audacious approach to the medium. His first film, Applause (1929) starring Helen Morgan, was followed by a series of highly acclaimed pictures - sophisticated comedies, dramas, gangster movies - featuring the biggest stars of the day, including Fredric March, Marlene Dietrich, Tyrone Power, and Greta Garbo. Among them were several musicals, such as the charming Love Me Tonight (1932) with Jeanette MacDonald and Maurice Chevalier (which Mamoulian also produced), The Gay Desperado (1936), High, Wide And Handsome (1937), Summer Holiday (1947), and the elegant Silk Stockings (1957) starring Fred Astaire and Cyd Charisse. His relatively small cinema output is said to be due to persistent disagreements and confrontations with producers. He was hired and quickly fired from movies such as Laura, Porgy And Bess, and the Elizabeth Taylor-Richard Burton epic Cleopatra (1963). In parallel with his Hollywood career, Mamoulian directed major works on Broadway, including Porgy And Bess (1935), Oklahoma! (1943), Sadie Thompson (1944), Carousel (1945), St. Louis Woman (1946), Lost In The Stars (1949), and Arms And The Girl (1950). On the latter show, and on Sadie Thompson, he also served as co-librettist, and in later years wrote and adapted several plays and children's stories.

Man

Man evolved from the Bystanders, a Swansea, Wales-based group specializing in close harmony pop. They latterly grew tired of this direction and, by 1969, were performing a live set at odds with their clean-cut recordings. Producer John Schroeder was inclined to drop the unit from his roster, but on hearing this contrary material, renewed their contract on the understanding they pursue a more progressive line. Micky Jones (b. 7 June 1946, Merthyr Tydfil, Mid-Glamorgan, Wales; lead guitar/vocals), Deke Leonard (b. Roger Leonard, Wales; guitar), Clive John (guitar/keyboards), Ray Williams (bass) and Jeff Jones (drums) completed Man's debut, Revelation, a concept album based on evolution. One of the tracks, 'Erotica', became a substantial European hit, but the single, which featured a simulated orgasm, was denied a British release. Man abandoned much of Revelation's gimmicky frills for 2ozs Of Plastic With A Hole In The Middle, which captured something of the group's live fire. Having suppressed the British feel prevalent on that first outing, the quintet was establishing its improvisatory preferences, akin to those associated with America's 'west coast' bands, exemplified by the Quicksilver Messenger Service. The first in a flurry of line-up changes began when Martin Ace (bass) and Terry Williams (drums) joined the group. Man and Do You Like It Here Now, Are You Settling In? contained several established stage favourites, including 'Daughter Of The Fireplace' and 'Many Are Called But Few Get Up', but the band only prospered as a commercial force with the release of Live At the Padgett Rooms, Penarth. This limited-issue set created considerable interest but coincided with considerable internal unrest. With the departure of Deke Leonard in pursuit of a solo career, the 1972 line-up of Micky Jones, Clive John, Will Youatt (b. Michael Youatt, 16 February, 1950, Swansea, West Glamorgan, Wales; bass/vocals), Phil Ryan (b. 21 October 1946, Port Talbot, West Galmorgan, Wales; keyboards) and Terry Williams (b. 11 January 1948, Swansea, West Glamorgan, Wales) released what is generally considered to be Man's most popular album, the live set, Be Good To Yourself...At Least Once A Day, which contained lengthy guitar/keyboard work-outs typified by the classic track 'Bananas'. The next album, Back To The Future gave Man their highest UK album chart position, which was almost emulated the following year with Rhinos, Winos And Lunatics. The latter saw the return of Leonard and found Man at the height of their success. During this period the nomadic habits of various members were unabated due to the comings and goings between variously related groups such as Help Yourself, the Neutrons, Alkatraz and the Flying Aces. Throughout the band's history, Mickey Jones was Man's unifying factor as they lurched from one change to the next. Following the group's success in the USA promoting their well-received album, Slow Motion, an ill-fated project with Quicksilver's John Cippolina resulted in the unsatisfactory Maximum Darkness. The group's demise came in 1976 when, after the release of the Welsh Connection, having lost their momentum, the group ground to a halt. During the late 80s, Jones, Leonard, Ace and drummer John 'Pugwash' Weathers (ex-Gentle Giant), resuscitated the Man name, regularly appearing on the UK pub/club circuit and on the Continent. Terry Williams had in the meantime found security in Rockpile and Dire Straits. In 1993 the unit released their first studio album in 16 years, The Twang Dynasty Road Goes On Forever. Much-loved, the band's activities are still chronicled in Michael Heatley's fanzine, The Welsh Connection.

Man Jumping

Once described by Brian Eno as the most interesting band in the world, Man Jumping evolved out of the cooperative band, Lost Jockey. Lost Jockey had been set up in 1980 to perform the music of American Minimalist/Systems composers (Steve Reich, Philip Glass, Terry Riley), together with works by members of the ensemble, such as Andrew Poppy and Orlando Gough. Growing to over 30 musicians, it became unmanageable and collapsed in 1983 after producing two excellent albums: Hoovering The Beach (1981) and the 10-inch Lost Jockey (1982). Saxophonist Andy Blake, bassist and keyboardist John Lunn and Gough, Schaun Tozer, Charlie Seaward and Glyn Perrin (all keyboards) decided to pull a more viable unit out of the ashes, planning a more varied repertoire with emphasis on original pieces. Martin Ditcham came in on drums (replaced in 1986 by Simon Limbrick, from the Lumiere Theatre Company). They had problems getting their recordings promulgated (A&R people liked their mix of Systems, funk, jazz, Afro and the 'classical' avant garde, but did not know how to label or, consequently, how to market it) and the band started doing live gigs in late 1985. The following summer they opened the Covent Garden Music Festival with a free open-air concert, and took part in the Summerscope season at London's South Bank Centre. The band and individual members have also done much fine work with dance companies such as Second Stride (eg Weighing The Heart) and the London Contemporary Dance Theatre (eg Unfolding Field).

Man Of La Mancha

Staged at the ANTA Washington Square Theater, and hence just a little off-Broadway, Man Of La Mancha opened on 22 November 1965. Dale Wasserman's book combined elements of Miguel de Cervantes's classic novel, Don Quixote, with the troubled life of the author. Wasserman had earlier written a straight dramatic play which was televised in 1959, and was persuaded by producer-director Albert Marre to adapt it into a musical version. With music by Mitch Leigh and lyrics by Joe Darion, the show opened to good reviews and quickly built a following at the comparatively small ANTA Theater. Starring Richard Kiley as Cervantes/Quixote and Joan Diener as Aldonza, the story interweaved episodes in the life of Cervantes, who endured slavery and imprisonment, often for debt, before achieving success with the publication of his masterpiece. It proved to be an unexpected hit and won Tony Awards for best musical, actor (Kiley), score, director (Marre), and scenic design (Howard Bay). The careful integration of songs and lyrics into the development of the plot made it difficult for most of them to gain life outside the show, but there were several admirable numbers, including 'I'm Only Thinking Of Him', 'The Dubbing', 'Little Bird, Little Bird', 'What Do You Want From Me?', and 'I Really Like Him'. Another of the songs, 'The Impossible Dream', did achieve some measure of popularity especially in a recording by Jack Jones. It endured, and became a UK hit in 1992 for the local eccentric band Carter USM. Man Of La Mancha stayed at the ANTA theatre until March 1968 when it transferred to the larger Martin Beck Theatre where it continued its run for a total of 2,328 performances. The London production opened in March 1968 with Joan Diener and Keith Michell; Richard Kiley took over the lead in 1969. A 1992 Broadway revival, which starred Raul Julia and pop singer Sheena Easton, folded after 108 performances. Peter O'Toole appeared in the 'plodding, abysmal' film version in 1972.

Man Parrish

One of the earliest hip-hop acts who broke through in 1983 with 'Hip Hop Be Bop (Don't Stop)'. His only other UK hit was 'Boogie Down (Bronx)' in 1985. However, his biggest slice of success came in 1987 through a joint venture with Man 2 Man, 'Male Stripper'. After heavy exposure in gay clubs, it rose to number 4 in the UK.

● ALBUMS: Man Parrish (1983)★★★.

Man Who Fell To Earth, The

Nicolas Roeg, already responsible for Performance, Walkabout and Don't Look Now, directed this elliptical 1976 feature. His decision to cast David Bowie as Thomas Jerome Newton, an angel/alien on an ill-defined mission, was inspired. The singer's gaunt features and flaxen hair combined well with his chameleon musical persona. Bowie's chillingly austere Station To Station appeared the same year as The Man Who Fell To Earth, and an atmosphere of disengagement permeates both projects. Roeg's camerawork and direction are suitably enigmatic, resulting in one of the era's most perplexing, but absorbing, films. John Phillips, formerly of the Mamas And The Papas, helped assemble the soundtrack selections, which included four of his own performances; 'Hello Mary Lou', 'Boys From The South', Rhumba Boogie' and 'Bluegrass Breakdown', as well as material by Japanese percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, 50s' college-folk act the Kingston Trio and Roy Orbison. This beguiling collection was completed by MOR songs, excerpts from Holtz's Planet Suite and recordings of the humpback whale. The music proved as eclectic as the film itself.

Man, Wu

b. 1963, Hangzou, China. Born into an artistic family, Wu Man began to play the pipa (a Chinese plucked lute) from an early age, starting her formal musical training in 1973. Four years later she won first prize in the entry examination for a place at the prestigious Central Conservatory of Music in Beijing and subsequently graduated with the first ever masters degree in pipa. Moving to the USA in the early 80s, she joined Music From China, a New York-based group dedicated to the promotion of traditional and modern Chinese music. Throughout the 80s she performed concerts as a solo artist, with ensembles and with orchestras. In 1989 the China Record Company released a recording of her solo work, and a series of CDs featuring the Music Of China ensemble, including Wu Man, was released by the Cantable Musical Company of Taiwan in 1992. A year later, Nimbus Records issued Chinese Music For The Pipa, her international debut, which featured solo performances of traditional and modern compositions encompassing a broad range of moods and tempos. In 1994 she performed with the Kronos Quartet and featured on albums by Henry Threadgill and Sola. In the following year she made her debut appearance at the BBC Proms in London. 1996's Chinese Traditional And Contemporary Music featured Wu Man performing with an ensemble of three other US-based Chinese musicians, while Music For The Motherless Child was a critically acclaimed meeting of eastern and western traditional soloists.

Manassas

The multi-talented Stephen Stills founded this highly regarded unit in October 1971, during sessions for a projected album. Chris Hillman (guitar/vocals), Al Perkins (pedal steel guitar), both formerly of the Flying Burrito Brothers, and percussionist Jo Lala joined the singer's regular touring band of Paul Harris (b. New York, USA; keyboards), Calvin 'Fuzzy' Samuels (bass) and Dallas Taylor (drums), although Samuels was latterly replaced by Kenny Passarelli. The group's disparate talents were best displayed in their remarkably accomplished live shows and on Manassas, a diverse double-album selection brilliantly encompassing country, rock, R&B and Latin styles. The septet displayed a remarkable unity of purpose despite the contrasting material, a cohesion which endowed the set with its lasting quality. Down The Road could not quite match the standards set by the debut and Manassas was brought to an end in September 1973, with the sudden departure of Hillman, Perkins and Harris for the ill-fated Souther Hillman Furay Band. Many mourn the fact that Stills seemed at his most creative when fronting this band and those who were lucky enough to have seen them perform during their brief career can testify that they were indeed, a spectacular rock/country/blues band.

Manassas - Manassas

Originally a double album of four distinct sides, it was a well-planned package. Stephen Stills was bursting with ideas during his most prolific period (1970-72), and this supergroup was its real culmination. Chris Hillman added the occasional co-write, but this was sweet Stephen blue-eyes show. Showing he could write, sing and play country, blues, rock and pop, this is a rich and varied collection. Dallas Taylor, Paul Harris, Fuzzy Samuels, Jo Lala and Al Perkins completed the band, who were as great live as they were on record. It lasted only a few rockin' months until Stills went back to Crosby, Stills And Nash, and took a nap for the next twenty-five years.

- Tracks: The Raven: Song Of Love; Rock & Roll Crazies; Cuban Bluegrass; Jet Set (Sigh); Anyway; Both Of Us (Bound To Lose); Fallen Eagle; Jesus Gave Love Away For Free; Colorado; So Begins The Task; Hide It So Deep; Don't Look At My Shadow; It Doesn't Matter; Johnny's Garden; Bound To Fall; How Far; Move Around; The Love Gangster; What To Do; Right Now; The Treasure (Take One); Blues Man.

Mance, Junior

b. Julian Clifford Mance, Jnr., 10 October 1928, Chicago, Illinois, USA. Taught piano by his father, a professional jazz musician, Mance was playing professionally long before he entered his teenage. In the late 40s, still in his teens, he joined a band led by Gene Ammons and in 1950 worked with Lester Young. After military service he became a resident at a Chicago jazz club before becoming Dinah Washington's accompanist. In the mid-60s he played with Cannonball and Nat Adderley, whom he had first met in an army band, then joined Dizzy Gillespie. By the early 60s, Mance had decided on a career as leader and from then onwards worked clubs throughout the USA. Although primarily known for his work in bop and post-bop groups, Mance's playing reveals echoes of his father's early instruction which drew heavily upon the blues piano tradition. A gifted player with a fluent technique and subtle touch, Mance's reputation worldwide is somewhat less than his talent deserves.

Mancha, Steve

b. Clyde Wilson, 25 December 1945, Walhall, South Carolina, USA. Mancha probably achieved his most significant commercial success as lead vocalist of the group 100 Proof Aged In Soul on their big 1970 hit 'Somebody's Been Sleeping'; however, soul fans, and especially Detroit soul fans, remember him from his days as writer and performer Clyde Wilson in Detroit, where his family had settled in 1954. Signing first with Harvey Fuqua, together with friend Wilbert Jackson, Wilson and Jackson performed as the Two Friends for Fuqua's HPC label. Soon, this and other Fuqua labels were incorporated by Berry Gordy into his fledgling Motown empire, and in 1965, Wilson moved to the Wheelsville label, owned by Don Davis, where he recorded 'Did My Baby Call' coupled with 'Whirlpool'. In 1966 he had a hit as a member of the Holidays (other members were J.J. Barnes and Edwin Starr) with 'I'll Love You Forever' (number 7 R&B). That year Clyde Wilson became Steve Mancha, and joined Don Davis's Groovesville Records as a solo artist in 1966, together with J.J. Barnes and Melvin Davis. Mancha recorded five singles for the label, with 'I Don't Wanna Lose You' and 'Don't Make Me A Storyteller' making the national R&B charts. Davis subsequently formed Groove City, for whom Mancha cut just one single, 'Hate Yourself In The Morning'/'A Love Like Yours'. Six of these Groovesville and Groove City sides appeared on the Stax/Volt album Rare Stamps, after Don Davis began leasing his product to the Memphis-based label (the other tracks on the album were Davis-produced items by J.J. Barnes). Mancha then signed for Holland/Dozier/Holland's Hot Wax, which the famous trio had formed on splitting with Motown. Here, Mancha became lead vocalist on all but three of 100 Proof Aged In Soul's recordings, as well as co-writing seven of their sides. When Holland/Dozier/Holland moved to California, Mancha stayed in Detroit and became involved in gospel music, returning to the secular scene in 1986 when UK soul entrepreneur Ian Levine recorded him on 'It's All Over The Grapevine' for EMI.

Manchester, Melissa

b. 15 February 1951, the Bronx, New York, USA. A former staff writer at Chappel Music and back-up singer for Bette Midler, Manchester launched her own career in 1973 with Home To Myself. Her intimate style showed a debt to contemporary New York singer-songwriters, but later releases, including her self-titled third album, were more direct. This collection, produced by Richard Perry and Vini Poncia, yielded the artist's first major hit, 'Midnight Blue' (US Top 10), and set the pattern for her subsequent direction which, if carefully performed, lacked the warmth of those early recordings. Success as a performer and songwriter continued into the 70s and 80s. 'Whenever I Call You Friend', co-written with Kenny Loggins, was a best-selling single for him in 1978, while in 1979 Melissa's second US Top 10 was achieved with 'Don't Cry Out Loud' (composed by Carole Bayer Sager and Peter Allen). Three years later she had another hit with 'You Should Hear How She Talks About You'. Although she has since diversified into scriptwriting and acting, Manchester remains a popular recording artist.

Mancini, Henry

b. Enrico Mancini, 16 April 1924, Cleveland, Ohio, USA, d. 14 June 1994, Los Angeles, California, USA. Prompted by his father, a steelworker who loved music, Mancini learned to play several musical instruments while still a small child. As a teenager he developed an interest in jazz and especially music of the big bands. He wrote some arrangements and sent them to Benny Goodman, from whom he received some encouragement. In 1942, he became a student at the Juilliard School of Music, but his career was interrupted by military service during World War II. Immediately following the war he was hired as pianist and arranger by Tex Beneke, who was then leading the Glenn Miller orchestra. Later in the 40s Mancini began writing arrangements for studios, prompted initially by a contract to score for a recording date secured by his wife, singer Ginny O'Connor (of the Mel-Tones). He was also hired to work on films (the first of which was the Abbott and Costello comedy Lost In Alaska), and it was here that his interest in big band music paid off. He wrote the scores for two major Hollywood bio-pics, The Glenn Miller Story (1954) and The Benny Goodman Story (1956), as well as Orson Welles' Touch Of Evil classic (1958). Mancini also contributed jazz-influenced scores for television, including those for the innovative Peter Gunn series and Mr Lucky. His film work continued with scores and songs for such films as Breakfast At Tiffany's (1961), from which came 'Moon River' (the Oscar winner that year), and the title songs for Days Of Wine And Roses (1962), which again won an Oscar, and Charade (1963). His other film compositions included 'Baby Elephant Walk' from Hatari! (1962), the theme from The Pink Panther (1964), 'Sweetheart Tree' from The Great Race (1965), and scores for Man's Favourite Sport?, Dear Heart, Wait Until Dark, Darling Lili, Mommie Dearest, Victor/Victoria (1982), for which he won an Oscar for 'Original Song Score' with Leslie Bricusse, That's Dancing, Without A Clue, Physical Evidence, Blind Date, That's Life, The Glass Menagerie, Sunset, Fear, Switch, and Tom And Jerry: The Movie, on which he again teamed with Leslie Bricusse. One of the most respected film and television composers - and the winner of 20 Grammy Awards - Mancini acknowledged his greatest legacy to be '. . . my use of jazz - incorporating various popular idioms into the mainstream of film scoring. If that's a contribution, then that's mine'. In addition he also regularly conducted orchestras in the USA and UK in concerts of his music, most of which stood comfortably on its own merits outside the context for which it was originally conceived. In the months prior to his death from cancer, Mancini was working with Leslie Bricusse on the score for the stage adaption of Victor/Victoria.

Mandators

In Africa many performers have been influenced by the music of Jamaica, including Lucky Dube and O'Yaba from South Africa, Alpha Blondy and ex-boxer Waby Spider from the Ivory Coast, along with Majeck Fasheck and the Mandators from Nigeria. The group are fronted by Victor Essiet and though not renowned outside of the dark continent play to large audiences in their homeland. Rounder Records, pioneers of world music, signed the group for Power Of The People, released through their Heartbeat outlet. In spite of the reawakening of African consciousness, these performers mainly appeal to followers of world music and although popular, rarely make an impression on the reggae chart.

Mandel, Harvey

b. 11 March 1945, Detroit, Michigan, USA. This fluent, mellifluous guitarist was one of several young aspirants learning their skills in Chicago blues clubs. A contemporary of Paul Butterfield and Michael Bloomfield, Mandel was a member of both the Charlie Musselwhite and Barry Goldberg blues bands, before moving to the west coast in 1967. His debut album, Christo Redentor, was released the following year. This wholly instrumental set, which included contributions from Musselwhite, Graham Bond, and the Nashville musicians later known as Area Code 615, is arguably the guitarist's definitive release, but Righteous and Baby Batter are equally inventive. Between 1969 and 1971, Mandel was a member of Canned Heat wherein he struck an empathy with bassist Larry Taylor. Both subsequently joined John Mayall for USA Union and Back To The Roots before the guitarist formed the short-lived Pure Food And Drug Act. He also remained a popular session musician, contributing to albums by Love, the Ventures and Don 'Sugarcane' Harris during this highly prolific period. Mandel continued to record his stylish solo albums throughout the early 70s, and was one of several candidates mooted to replace Mick Taylor in the Rolling Stones. The results of his audition are compiled on the group's 1976 album, Black And Blue. This dalliance with corporate rock was Harvey's last high-profile appearance. In 1985 he signed a recording deal with the newly founded Nuance label, but no new release has been forthcoming. Two subsequent releases on other small labels appealed only to his loyal following. The release of the 2-CD box set The Mercury Years once again directed us back to Christo Redentor, a modern classic of psychedelic wanderings and widely regarded as his finest moment.

Mandel, Johnny

b. 23 November 1935, New York, USA. After playing trumpet and trombone while still in his pre-teenage years (a period in which he began to write music), Mandel played with various bands in and around New York, including those led by Boyd Raeburn and Jimmy Dorsey. In the mid- to late 40s Mandel played in the bands of Buddy Rich, Alvino Rey and others, and in the early 50s, he worked with Elliott Lawrence and Count Basie. He began to establish himself both as an arranger, contributing charts to the Basie and Artie Shaw bands, and also as a songwriter. By the mid-50s he was writing music for films and was working less in the jazz field, although his film music often contained echoes of his background. Much respected by singers and jazz instrumentalists, Mandel has a particular facility for ballads. He also orchestrated scores for Broadway and for television specials. His film work, from the 50s through to the 80s, includes music for I Want To Live, The Third Voice, The Americanization Of Emily, The Sandpiper, The Russians Are Coming, Point Blank, MASH, The Last Detail, Escape To Witch Mountain, Freaky Friday, Agatha, Being There, The Baltimore Bullet, Caddyshack, Deathtrap, The Verdict, Staying Alive, and Brenda Starr (1987). He also scored for television movies such as The Trackers, The Turning Point Of Jim Molloy, A Letter To Three Wives, Christmas Eve, LBJ - The Early Years, Assault And Matrimony, Foxfire, Agatha, The Great Escape II - The Untold Story, and Single Men - Married Women (1989). Among his songs are 'Emily', 'A Time For Love' and, perhaps his best-known, 'The Shadow Of Your Smile' (lyrics by Paul Francis Webster), written for The Sandpiper (1965). The latter won a Grammy for song of the year, and the Oscar for best song.

Mandela Day

Mandela Day, staged in England on 11 June 1988, followed on from Live Aid as a platform for popular musicians to express their concern at the events taking place around them. Unlike Live Aid, criticised in some quarters for its decision to flag the problems of Ethiopia as geographical rather than economic, Mandela Day directly addressed a political problem. It is worth remembering that Conservative MPs derided the exercise of publicising the plight of future South African president Nelson Mandela on the grounds that he was 'a terrorist'. The theme tune to the event was 'Free Nelson Mandela', originally a UK chart hit in 1984 for event organiser Jerry Dammers' Specials. Dammers had previously promoted a free concert, Freedom Beat, on London's Clapham Common in 1985, which shared the same objectives. Mandela Day marked the occasion of Mandela's 70th Birthday, at which time he had been imprisoned for 26 years for his leadership of the African National Congress. Midge Ure, co-composer of the Band Aid single 'Do They Know It's Christmas?' with Bob Geldof, played a leading role in organising events. Live Aid had been criticised for its one-dimensional racial mix of performers, given that the event was targeted at solving famine in Africa. The performers at Mandela Day were drawn from a much wider global background. As well as Dire Straits, Eric Clapton, Simple Minds, George Michael and the Eurythmics, political refugees from South Africa including Miriam Makeba and Hugh Masekela were involved. Significantly, most of the major acts appearing from the USA; Al Green, Natalie Cole, Whitney Houston and Stevie Wonder, were black artists. Another, the previously unknown Tracy Chapman, became a major beneficiary of the exposure, with her 'Fast Car' single rising to number 1 in the UK charts shortly after the event. The Labour Party's Neil Kinnock was also in attendance, alongside Bishop Trevor Huddlestone of the Anti-Apartheid Movement and several actors and comedians. The show was transmitted worldwide, though it was banned in South Africa and American networks cut out many of the political references. Mandela was eventually freed from captivity in 1990, at which time he came to Wembley Stadium to thank those who had campaigned for his freedom and against apartheid.

Mandingo Griot Society

Formed in Chicago, USA in 1977 by the Gambian kora player Foday Musa Suso, the Mandingo Griot Society were a flexible line-up of like-minded African, Caribbean and American musicians who played a fusion of rock, funk, reggae and traditional Gambian styles, and who did much to foster the spirit of stylistic eclecticism and multi-cultural collision then emerging amongst avant garde Western musicians and audiences. Their music was both lyrical and irresistibly danceable and, unlike so many subsequent fusion attempts, retained the rough edges of its many constituent styles rather than attempting to make them blandly acceptable to mainstream listeners. In addition to the Western instruments of bass, guitar and kit drums, the group employed a wide range of ethnic instruments, including the West African dusungoni (seven-stringed hunter's harp), bala (xylophone), djembe (hand drum), bolon (three-stringed warrior's harp), dundungo (bass drum), tamo (talking drum) and, of course, Suso's kora (21-stringed harp). North Indian tabla drums and Afro-Cuban timbales, bongos and congas were also employed from time to time.

Aside from Suso, key members of the group included percussionist Adam Rudolph, who had previously played with numerous jazz, latin and new music ensembles including Chevere, Streetdancer, Eternal Wind and Detroit's Contemporary Jazz Quintet. He had also performed in Europe and the USA with trumpeter Don Cherry. Drummer Hamid Drake had been an important part of numerous Chicago jazz and R&B groups, working with Muhal Richard Adams, Douglas Ewart and George Lewis. He had also toured Europe and West Africa with Don Cherry. Bassist Joseph Thomas and guitarist John Markiss had previously worked together in bands led by Sun Ra, Lonnie Liston Smith and Peter Tosh, and in Tower Of Power and Earth Wind And Fire. Mandingo Griot Society recorded two outstanding albums before disbanding in 1983. Suso then moved to New York to work with Bill Laswell and Herbie Hancock, while the other members subsequently pursued solo and guest artist careers on the Chicago jazz and R&B scenes.

Mandinka

Mandinka is a contemporary world music project spearheaded by Malian guitarist Mamadou Doumbia (b. 12 January 1965, Kulikoro, West Mali). Prior to forming Mandinka, Doumbia had been a member of the legendary Rail Band, a group that served as an academy for such aspiring musicians as More Kante and Salif Keita. Like so many West African guitarists, Doumbia soon found himself relocating to Paris, France, at which time he joined Kasse Mady's Band. He was also guitarist and musical director for his cousin, Nahawa Doumbia, and worked regularly with other groups led by Sory Bamaba. He eventually joined Salif Keita's group as lead guitarist in 1988. Touring America in 1990 with Keita, he played alongside long-time hero Carlos Santana in Los Angeles, before he settled in Tokyo, Japan, after the Asian leg of the same tour. There he performed traditional acoustic sets with Guinean percussionist Lamine Youl Diabate. He also performed solo, playing kora and ngoni (banjo) as well as guitar. His acoustic album, Mandinka Acoustic-Sobe, was released in Japan in July 1994. He had formed the group Mandinka in September 1993, with the intention of blending his own electric guitar skills with a full band comprising percussion, drums, horns and keyboards. Regular members of that band include a mix of African and Japanese musicians - Sakurai Yoshiki (guitar), Kaseda Masato (bass), Karasawa Toshiyuki (trumpet), Sugiyama Ryota (tenor saxophone), Kosmas Kapitza (percussion), Matsuda Nobuo (keyboards) and Marty Bracey (drums). An infectious blend of rhythm and harmony, Mandinka soon became one of Tokyo's most popular live attractions. The full group's debut album followed in 1996, Independence, justifiably receiving world-wide distribution through JVC Sounds.

Mandrake Memorial

Formed in 1967 in Philadelphia, USA, Mandrake Memorial was a progressive-rock quartet which helped pioneer the use of electronics in rock music. The group consisted of guitarist Craig Anderton, keyboardist/vocalist Michael Katz, bassist Randy Monaco and drummer Kevin Lally. Using such psychedelic music techniques as feedback, sitars, orchestras and backwards tape loops, the group added the sound of synthesizers, one of the first bands to do so on a regular basis. Signed to Poppy Records, they released their self-titled first album in 1968, after which Katz departed and the group continued as a trio. Two more albums were issued on RCA Records in 1969 and 1970 before the group disbanded. The multi-talented Anderton became a producer, designer of musical electronics and journalist specializing in electronic music and technology.

Mandrake Paddlesteamer

A quartet of Brian Engel (vocals), Martin Hooker (keyboards), Barry Nightingale (drums) and Paul Frolich (bass), Mandrake Paddlesteamer were responsible for recording one of the most cherished singles of the psychedelic era - 'Strange Walking Man'. Subsequently reissued by Bam Caruso in 1988, the song's popularity has continued to revive interest in the group, who were eventually featured on a compilation CD issued by Forgotten Jewels Records in 1991. Unfortunately, Mandrake Paddlesteamer never received a similar level of acclaim in their own era, and issued only one further single. 'Sunlight Guide' was released on Parlophone Records in 1969 but only for the Swedish market. The group subsequently evolved into the less celebrated Prowler, who released a single and an album, Liverpool Echo, for Spark Records in 1973.

Mandrell, Barbara

b. 25 December 1948, Houston, Texas, USA, but raised in Oceanside, near Los Angeles, California. Mandrell comes from a musical family: her father, Irby, sang and played guitar and her mother, Mary, played piano and taught music. At the age of 12, Mandrell demonstrated the steel guitar at a national convention and then worked in Las Vegas with Joe Maphis and Tex Ritter. By her teens, she also played saxophone, guitar, banjo and bass. Her parents formed the Mandrells with herself and two boys, one of whom, drummer Ken Dudney, became her husband in 1967. Their extensive touring schedule included forces bases in Vietnam. Mandrell first recorded in 1966 for the small Mosrite label, and her sobbing 'Queen For A Day', with Glen Campbell on guitar, was reissued with a revised accompaniment in 1984. Mandrell signed with Columbia in 1969, and, for a time, she concentrated on country versions of soul hits - 'I've Been Lovin' You Too Long', 'Treat Him Right', 'Show Me' and 'Do Right Woman - Do Right Man'. Despite her glossy Las Vegas look, she joined the Grand Ole Opry in 1972, switched to ABC-Dot in 1975 and had her first Top 5 country single with 'Standing Room Only'. In 1977 she had her first US country number 1 with 'Sleepin' Single In A Double Bed', which was written by Kye Fleming and Dennis Morgan, who also wrote further number 1 hits, including 'Years' and 'I Was Country When Country Wasn't Cool', which was released during Urban Cowboy's popularity and featured George Jones. Her version of the soul hit '(If Loving You Is Wrong) I Don't Want To Be Right' was another country number 1 and also a US pop hit, leading her to name her band the Do-Rites. Mandrell also covered Poacher's 'Darlin'' for the US country market. Her television series, Barbara Mandrell And The Mandrell Sisters, ran from 1980-82 and was also screened in the UK. There was good-humoured interplay between Mandrell and her sisters, Irlene (b. Ellen Irlene Mandrell, 29 January 1956, California, USA) and Louise Mandrell, and the diminutive Barbara had the same vivacious appeal as Dolly Parton. She had further US country number 1 singles, 'Til You're Gone' and 'One Of A Kind Pair Of Fools', and also fared well with 'To Me', a duet with Lee Greenwood. In 1984 she and her two children were badly injured when her car was hit head-on. She was unable to work for a year, although she had another child, and she lost much credibility when she sued, on her insurer's advice, the late driver's family for $10 million. Her records for Capitol did not see much chart success as her style of music fell out of favour, but she maintained that the accident had strengthened her faith. During the 90s she has published her autobiography and kept up a busy touring schedule. After 25 years as a member, Mandrell played her last Grand Ole Opry in October 1997.

Mandrell, Louise

b. Thelma Louise Mandrell, 13 July 1954, Corpus Christi, Texas, USA. Mandrell began playing guitar, banjo and fiddle as a child and joined her sister, Barbara Mandrell, in the latter's band on bass in 1969. She had a short-lived marriage with Ronny Shaw, who opened for Barbara Mandrell, and her second marriage also failed. She was a featured singer with Merle Haggard's roadshow in the mid-70s. She signed to Epic and had US country hits with 'Put It On Me', 'Everlasting Love' and 'Reunited' (which was a duet with her third husband, R.C. Bannon). She had further success with RCA and was the butt of her sister's jokes on the television series Barbara Mandrell And The Mandrell Sisters. In 1983, she had solo country hits with 'Save Me' and 'Too Hot To Sleep', which led to her own television series. Her 1988 single with Eric Carmen, 'As Long As We Got Each Other', made the US country charts despite only promotional copies being issued.

b. 1946, Farabanah, Guinea. While he was still very young Manfila's family moved to the town of Kankan where he learnt to play traditional tunes on the balafon and guitar. When he was 14 he went to live with his uncle in Abidjan, the capital of the Ivory Coast, where he earned money playing at the weddings and parties of expatriate Guineans. His playing impressed one wealthy Guinean exile enough for him to sponsor Manfila to attend the Abidjan School of Music. On graduating, in the late 60s, he played with various short-lived bands and released a few locally successful solo singles. Going to Mali in 1970, he settled first in Mopti and subsequently in Bamako where, in 1971, he joined Les Ambassodeurs with Salif Keita. He remained as the band leader and guitarist with the various incarnations of this group until they split up in 1985. In the following year he released Musicale Mandingue, his debut album as a solo artist, which received a lukewarm reception and has since been deleted. 1988's Tradition, also now unavailable, was more rootsy and proved popular with the critics. It featured Manfila's cousin, Mory Kanté, playing the kora. Bimiya, released in 1990, was recorded in the hi-tec Afro-Parisian style made popular by Salif Keita's Soro four years earlier. Manfila returned to his roots for the magical Kankan Blues. Based on a recording session from 1987, held in a half-built nightclub in Kankan, the album featured Manfila with family and friends (including Mory Kante), performing a selection of acoustic, traditional tunes. The exception was the title track, a raw, electric, Guinean blues instrumental composed by Manfila. The release of these recordings was delayed because overdubs and re-recordings were required to improve on the poor sound quality of the original tapes. N'na Niwale was subtitled 'Kankan Blues Chapter Two' and featured many of the musicians who played on the earlier album, this time recorded in a studio to ensure acceptable sound quality from the outset. Released in 1995, Ni Kanu reverted to the less intense and more contemporary Parisian sound.

Manfred Mann

During the UK beat boom of the early 60s, spearheaded by the Beatles, a number of R&B groups joined the tide with varying degrees of achievement. Of these, Manfred Mann had the most commercial success. The band was formed as the Mann-Hugg Blues Brothers by Manfred Mann (b. Manfred Lubowitz, 21 October 1940, Johannesburg, South Africa; keyboards) and Mike Hugg (b. 11 August 1942, Andover, Hampshire, England; drums/vibraphone). They became Manfred Mann shortly after adding Paul Jones (b. Paul Pond, 24 February 1942, Portsmouth, Hampshire, England; harmonica/vocals). The line-up was completed by Mike Vickers (b. 18 April 1941, Southampton, Hampshire, England; flute/guitar/saxophone) and Tom McGuinness (b. 2 December 1941, London, England; bass), following the departure of Dave Richmond. After being signed by a talent-hungry HMV Records and following one unsuccessful instrumental, they made an impression with the catchy 'Cock-A-Hoop'. The prominent use of Jones' harmonica gave them a distinct sound and they soon became one of Britain's leading groups. No less than two of their singles were used as the theme music to the pioneering British television music programme, Ready Steady Go. '5-4-3-2-1' provided the breakthrough Top 10 hit in early 1964. By the summer, the group registered their first UK number 1 with the catchy 'Do Wah Diddy Diddy'. Over the next two years, they charted regularly with memorable hits such as 'Sha La La', 'Come Tomorrow', 'Oh No! Not My Baby' and Bob Dylan's 'If You Got To Go, Go Now'. In May 1966, they returned to number 1 with the sublime 'Pretty Flamingo'. It was to prove the last major hit on which Jones appeared. His departure for a solo career was a potential body blow to the group at a time when personnel changes were regarded as anathema by the pop media and fans. He was replaced by Michael D'Abo recruited from A Band Of Angels, in preference to Rod Stewart, who failed the audition. Mike Vickers had previously departed for a lucrative career as a television composer. He was replaced by Jack Bruce on bass, allowing Tom McGuinness to move to lead guitar, a role with which he was happier. Additionally, Henry Lowther (trumpet) and Lyn Dobson (saxophone) enlarged the line-up for a time and Klaus Voorman replaced Bruce on bass. D'Abo's debut with the group was another hit rendering of a Dylan song, 'Just Like A Woman', their first for the Fontana label. He fitted in astonishingly well with the group, surprising many critics, by maintaining their hit formulae despite the departure of the charismatic Jones. Both 'Semi-Detached Suburban Mr. Jones' and 'Ha! Ha! Said The Clown' were formidable Top 5 hits in the classic Mann tradition. Along with America's Byrds, the group were generally regarded as the best interpreters of Dylan material, a view endorsed by the songwriter himself. This point was punctuated in 1968 when the group registered their third number 1 with the striking reading of his 'Mighty Quinn'. They ended the 60s with a final flurry of Top 10 hits, 'My Name Is Jack', 'Fox On The Run' and 'Raggamuffin Man' before abdicating their pop crown in favour of a heavier approach. Their albums had always been meaty and showed off their considerable dexterity as musicians working with jazz and blues-based numbers. Mann went on to form the jazz/rock band Chapter Three and the highly successful Manfred Mann's Earth Band. In the 90s the majority of the band performed regularly as the Manfreds. Without Manfred Mann they could not use the original name, in his place they recruited Benny Gallagher (bass/vocals) and ex-Family drummer Rob Townsend. Jones and D'Abo perform side by side sharing the spotlight, although Jones' ultimately more pushy personality makes him the star. Still highly respected, Manfred Mann remain one of the finest beat groups of the 60s.

Manfred Mann Chapter Three

Following the demise of Manfred Mann, Mike Hugg (b. 11 August 1942, Andover, Hampshire, England; drums/vibraphone) and Mann (b. Manfred Lubowitz, 21 October 1940, Johannesburg, South Africa; keyboards) pursued their jazz/rock path by forming Chapter Three as a sideline to their lucrative career writing successful television jingles. This brave project was originally called Enamel and included Bernie Living (alto saxophone/flute), Steve York (bass), Craig Collinge (drums) and featured sessions from some of the finest contemporary jazz musicians including Harold Beckett, Derek Wadsworth, Chris Pyne and Dave Quincey. They immediately established themselves on the progressive rock circuit, but could not break out of the small club environment. Their two albums were excellent and imaginative but came as a considerable shock to those old fans who expected anything akin to Manfred Mann. The band was blighted with problems due to Mann and Hugg having to support the venture financially, and because of trying to establish themselves as something other than a pop group. Those that supported the endeavour were not disappointed, although Manfred soon returned to a more commercial path with Manfred Mann's Earth Band.

Manfred Mann's Earth Band

The fourth incarnation of Manfred Mann (the second being only a change of singer) has been the longest, surviving for almost 20 years. The original Earth Band was formed after Mann's bold attempt at jazz/rock with Manfred Mann Chapter Three had proved financially disastrous. The new band was comprised of Manfred (b. Manfred Lubowitz, 21 October 1940, Johannesburg, South Africa; keyboards), Mick Rogers (vocals/guitar), Colin Pattenden (bass) and Chris Slade (drums). Their debut was with the Bob Dylan song 'Please Mrs Henry' and following its poor showing they quickly released a version of Randy Newman's 'Living Without You', again to apathy. While the band gradually won back some of the fans who had deserted the Chapter Three project, it was not until their third offering, Messin', that both success and acclaim arrived. The title track was a long, rambling but exciting piece, reminiscent of Chapter Three, but the band hit the mark with a superb interpretation of Holst's Jupiter, entitled 'Joybringer'. It became a substantial UK hit in 1973. From then on the band forged ahead with gradual rather than spectacular progress and built a loyal following in Europe and America. Their blend of rock still contained strong jazz influences, but the sound was wholeheartedly accessible and rock based. Solar Fire featured yet another Dylan song, 'Father Of Day', complete with heavenly choir. Rogers departed in 1976. Just as Bruce Springsteen fever started, the band had a transatlantic hit with a highly original reading of his 'Blinded By The Light' with vocals from Chris Thompson. The record, with its lengthy, spacey instrumental introduction, reached the top spot in the US chart and worldwide sales exceeded two million. The Roaring Silence became the band's biggest album, and featured the most assured line-up to date. Other hits followed, including the Robbie Robertson/John Simon composition 'Davey's On The Road Again' in 1978 and Dylan's 'You Angel You' and 'Don't Kill It Carol' in 1979. Further personnel changes came with Pat King (bass), ex-Wings and East Of Eden drummer Geoff Britton and Steve Waller (ex-Gonzalez). After a lengthy absence, they made the US chart in 1984 with 'Runner', featuring the vocals of the returning Mick Rogers. Mann's homage to his former homeland Somewhere In Afrika was well received that year, although Criminal Tango, a collection of non-originals, Budapest and Masque were commercial failures. The band remain highly popular in Germany and retain the respect of the critics, having never produced a poor album during their long career. Nine years elapsed before the release of Soft Vengeance in 1996.

Manga, Bebe

b. Elizabeth Prudence Manga Bessem, 1948, Mante, Cameroon. Vocalist Manga was already well known in Cameroon and Gabon before she moved to Paris in 1980 and recorded her classic debut album, a tough mix of makossa, funk and soukous musics. The title track sold over one million copies on single release and spawned over 50 cover versions, including the 1985 club hit by Nyanka Bell. Manga had taught herself music before embarking on a professional career in 1973, singing in Douala nightclubs. She settled in Gabon for a while, matching native folk songs with European ballads. During her time in Paris she also toured widely, including stays in the Caribbean and Japan. The success of 'Arnie' (written by Ebanda Alfred of Les Camaroes) led to the award of the French 'Maracas D'Or' in 1983. A move to New York followed later that year, from where she intended to further her international breakthrough. The attempt came to nothing, and Manga has faded into semi-obscurity since, though she is still active in Cameroon.

Mangelsdorff, Albert

b. 5 September 1928, Frankfurt-Am-Main, Germany. From a musical family, Mangelsdorff and his brother, saxophonist Emil, learned about jazz from secret meetings of the Frankfurt Hot Club, since jazz was banned by the Nazis. He has subsequently become one of the most important and distinctive European jazz players. After playing violin and danceband guitar, he took up the trombone at the age of 20 and extended its range with the use of multiphonics (playing more than one note at a time) through his technique of humming and growling while playing, so that the brass-generated note is augmented by the vocal sound. He won awards in Germany in 1954, and in 1958 gained attention in the USA as a member of the Newport International Band. In 1962 he recorded with John Lewis. In 1964 he toured Asia with his own band and at that time began to move towards free jazz. He also recorded an album with Ravi Shankar. In the late 60s he joined the Globe Unity Orchestra. In 1975, he joined the United Jazz And Rock Ensemble. From 1976-82 Mangelsdorff worked with Michel Portal, and in 1981 he co-founded the French/German Jazz Ensemble with J.F. Jenny-Clark. In the mid-70s he augmented John Surman's The Trio (with Barre Phillips and Stu Martin) to create MUMPS. In 1986 he and Surman joined with Elvin Jones and Dave Holland for a tour of Europe.

Mangione, Chuck

b. Charles Frank Mangione, 29 November 1940, Rochester, New York, USA. Mangione began playing trumpet as a child, studying formally at the Eastman School of Music. He gained experience accompanying visiting jazzmen, then in 1960 went to New York where he formed a band with his brother, pianist Gap Mangione. The band, the Jazz Brothers, remained in existence for five years, playing hard bop. In 1965, Mangione played in the trumpet sections of the Woody Herman and Maynard Ferguson bands and later that year he joined Art Blakey, with whom he remained until 1967. After leaving Blakey, Mangione taught at his old school and again formed his own small band. He began making albums with which he achieved considerable popular success. He had started to dabble on flügelhorn and eventually abandoned the trumpet altogether in favour of the more mellow-sounding instrument. Throughout the 70s and into the 80s Mangione continued to capitalize upon his successful recordings, appearing widely in concert and making more records which again appealed to a wide audience. To a great extent, Mangione achieved his popular success by offering melodic and uncluttered music, sometimes with interesting hints of Latin influence. Although much of his popular material failed to excite the hardcore jazz audience, there can be little doubt that he helped to introduce the music to many who might otherwise have passed it by. His compositions have appealed to a wide range of musicians, being played by artists as different as Percy Faith and Cannonball Adderley. Perhaps the best known of his compositions is 'Land Of Make Believe', which has frequently been recorded. Additionally, Mangione has written for films, notably The Children Of Sanchez (1978).

Mangwana, Sam

b. 18 July 1945, Kinshasa, Zaire. A protégé of Rochereau and Franco, vocalist and composer Mangwana is one of Zaire's least conventional stars. He is known as Le Pigeon Voyageur, the travelling pigeon, a musician who constantly travels, side-stepping the usual stereotypes. Big stars have regular bands - Mangwana has none. They buy hotels, houses, clubs - Mangwana places no value on them. In Zaire, he stays with friends. His career has provoked controversy, rumour and violence - plus a new Zairean style which mixes the rumba with beguine to ferment a distinctive Afro-Antillean mixture. He started his career with a five-year stint with Rochereau, before leaving for L'Orchestre Maquisards. In 1969, after several hits, including 'Zelangaina Sala', the band folded. Mangwana formed Vox Afrique, with Dalienst, then went solo, working as musical director and arranger for Rochereau, standing in for him during his absences abroad and recording the harmony parts for him in the studio. In 1972, he changed camps and moved to Franco's OK Jazz. The switch caused unprecedented controversy. Rochereau and Franco were considered to be poles apart: they had their own individual styles, and their own fans in opposing camps. The change was simply unthinkable. Mangwana even received threatening letters, and was forced to hide in a hotel guarded by gendarmes. Finally the furore proved too much for him and, in 1976, he embarked on a tour of Africa which took him from Zaire to Ghana, Nigeria, Cameroon, Togo, Lome and finally Cote D'Ivoire. In the latter country, he formed a band called Amida, with the intention of modernizing Zairean music. When that group fell apart, he formed the African All Stars, with guitarist Syran Mbenza and a large fluctuating membership that included, at various times, Nyboma, Lokassa Ya Mbongo, Syran Mbenza and Bopol (some of whom would later form Les Quatre Etoiles). This band created a hugely influential new style of soukous. Rather than stick to the old Zairean rumba, African All Stars blended it with highlife, Afrobeat and, above all, biguine, to create a formidable Afro-Antilles crossover. The African All Stars, however, ran into problems. When the band performed at a reception for the Zairean Ambassador to Cote D'Ivoire, they were accused of neglecting their own national music and asked to play Zaiko Langa Langa songs. Back in Zaire, the accusation was at first equally pronounced, until the massive hit 'Georgette Eckins' swept such petty-minded nationalism aside and established Mangwana and his band as major stars and stylists. From the post-Cote D'Ivoire music came a string of hits, each mixing Zairean guitars with a solid beat and a singing style - from the sweetest of tenors to the most swaggering of middle registers - that has become Mangwana's hallmark. Throughout the late 70s, Mangwana remained a vital force on the African scene, influencing such musicians as Quatre Etoiles' Bopol and Nyboma and Souzy Kasseya. In 1979, Mangwana arrived in Paris with an abbreviated line-up of Syran, Bopol and Pablo. He re-recorded 'Georgette Eckins' and recorded the album Maria Tebbo, which mixed the tenderness of the title track with the political exultation of 'Chimurenga Zimbabwe' - a celebration of that country's new-found independence. In 1982, Mangwana travelled to southern Africa to throw himself further into the great political struggles of the region. In 1982, he released Co-Operation with Franco, and joined him onstage at a concert in Kinshasa. Politically, Mangwana has shown himself as a strong champion of African liberation, through albums such as 1983's Canta Mocambique, which he recorded as a tribute and an encouragement to the revolution that had ousted the Portuguese in favour of a new, independent Mozambique. He continues his peripatetic career across Africa and Europe, constantly re-energizing his bands with infusions of young, radical musicians. The 90s found him in America, working alongside Brazilian musicians.

Manhattan Brothers

Formed in Johannesburg in 1946 by Joseph Mogotsi, Nathan Mdedle (d. 17 May 1995), Ronnie Majola and Rufus Khoza, the Manhattan Brothers were the greatest South African vocal group of the 50s and 60s, whose jazz-influenced style blazed a trail for later, more traditionally-orientated vocal outfits, such as Ladysmith Black Mambazo. They were also the first South African group, vocal or instrumental, to achieve any significant international profile. Signed by leading South African label Gallo in 1948, the Manhattan Brothers were marketed as the home-grown answer to American vocal outfits such as the Mills Brothers and the Ink Spots, and through sheer musical talent quickly outsold their role models. As well as record releases and radio broadcasts, the group put together elaborate variety shows, and created their own backing band, the Jazz Dazzlers, which was led by Mackay Davashe and went on to feature at various times Hugh Masekela, Dollar Brand (now Abdullah Ibrahim) and Jonas Gwangwa. They also recruited Miriam Makeba as a young singer, launching her career and, in the process, encouraging her to become one of the first women to perform the traditionally male gumboot dance, a staple of Zulu street music. The group's material included covers of popular Ink Spots and Mills Brothers songs usually rewritten in Zulu, Sotho or Xhosa - and traditional African folk songs. Their first records were accompanied by a single, acoustic guitar, but by the early 50s a rhythm section and one or two horns had been added. In 1959, the group, with Makeba, took part in the township musical King Kong, based on the true story of a township boxing champion who, denied by apartheid the opportunity to face his white peers, fell into crime and was eventually executed for murder. The Brothers came to Britain with the show, while Makeba went to America. In 1964, the group recorded a live album at London's Cecil Sharp House (home of the English Folk Song and Dance Society). In 1965, EMI Records released a compilation set featuring some of their greatest hits (notably 'Kilimanjaro', 'Mdube' and 'Thimlela'). By the early 70s, the Manhattan Brothers had all but disappeared from the South African and international scene, though they came together for occasional reunion concerts. Their legacy, however, and the doors they opened for younger South African groups and solo artists, should not be forgotten.

Manhattan Transfer

The original band was formed in 1969, performing good-time, jugband music. By 1972, the only surviving member was Tim Hauser (b. 1940, Troy, New York, USA; vocals), accompanied by Laurel Masse (b. 1954, USA; vocals) Alan Paul (b. 1949, Newark, New Jersey, USA; vocals) and Janis Siegel (b. 1953, Brooklyn, New York, USA; vocals). Although they covered a variety of styles, their trademark was their use of exquisite vocal harmony. Like their Atlantic stablemate, Bette Midler, they were selling nostalgia, and they were popular on the New York cabaret circuit. An unlikely pop act, they nonetheless charted on both sides of the Atlantic. It was symptomatic of their lack of crossover appeal that the hits were different in the UK and the USA. Their versatility splintered their audience. Fans of the emotive ballad, 'Chanson D'Amour', were unlikely to go for the brash gospel song 'Operator', or a jazz tune like 'Tuxedo Junction'. In 1979, Cheryl Bentyne replaced Masse without noticeably affecting the vocal sound. Their stunning version of Weather Report's 'Birdland' remains a modern classic. The power of Manhattan Transfer is in their sometimes breathtaking vocal abilities, strong musicianship and slick live shows.

Manhattans

Formed in 1962 in Jersey City, New Jersey, USA, about 10 miles south of New York City's borough of Manhattan, the Manhattans were a soul group whose greatest success came during the 70s. The original members were lead vocalist George Smith, bass singer Winfred 'Blue' Lovett (b. 16 November 1943), tenor Edward Bivins (b. 15 January 1942), tenor Kenneth Kelley (b. 9 January 1943) and baritone Richard Taylor (b. 1940, d. 7 December 1987). Specializing in smooth ballads, the group recorded first for the Newark, New Jersey-based Carnival label, on which they placed eight singles on the US R&B charts, beginning with 1965's 'I Wanna Be (Your Everything)'. In 1969, they changed to Deluxe Records, on which they recorded their first Top 10 R&B hit, 'One Life To Live', in 1972. In 1971, Smith died, and was replaced by Gerald Alston (b. 8 November 1942). The group left Deluxe for Columbia in 1973, where their now-sweetened soul style resulted in a string of Top 10 R&B hits, including the 1976 number 1 'Kiss And Say Goodbye', which also made number 1 on the pop charts, and 1980's 'Shining Star' (number 4 R&B/number 5 pop). After 1983's number 4 'Crazy', the group's chart popularity waned, although they continued to release recordings for Columbia. Taylor left the group in 1976 and was not replaced; he died in 1987. Alston left in 1988 for a solo career, following which the group switched to the Valley Vue label.

Manhole

A contemporary hard rock group from Los Angeles, California, USA, Manhole are led by the distinctive, brazen vocals and confrontational stage persona of singer Tairrie B. Previously a white protégé of rap producer/svengali Eazy-E, her solo debut stalled in 1990 and she elected to concentrate instead on music with a similar thematic ethos but a more aggressive bent. With Scott Ueda (guitar), Rico Villasenor (bass) and Marcelo Palomino (drums), Manhole work in territory widely analogized as 'post-hardcore metal'. Tairrie B continues to rap as well as sing over the backdrop, which also contains trace elements of hip-hop rhythms, but it is doubtful whether those unacquainted with the singer's past would confuse Manhole with anything other than a ferocious hard rock group. They made their debut with the Victim EP, a taster for their 1996 debut album, which contained an impassioned condemnation of rape and sexual oppression. All Is Not Well followed for Noise International Records in April 1996, with production from Ross Robinson (Korn, Sepultura). It was promoted with support slots on Fear Factory's UK tour. Owing to the prior existence of another group called Manhole, in 1997 the group was forced to change its name to Tura Satana, the name of the leading actress in Russ Meyer's cult film Faster, Pussycat! Kill! Kill!.

Manic Street Preachers

These UK punk revivalists enjoyed a love-hate relationship with the music press that opened with a bizarre encounter in 1991. The catalyst was Richey Edwards, who cut the words '4 Real' into his forearm to the amazement of New Musical Express critic Steve Lamacq, when he dared to call into question the band's authenticity. The group originates from Blackwood, Gwent, Wales, and was originally comprised of James Dean Bradfield (b. 21 February 1969; vocals, guitar), Richey Edwards (b. 22 December 1966; rhythm guitar), Nicky Wire (b. Nick Jones, 20 January 1969; bass) and Sean Moore (b. 30 July 1970; drums). Their calculated insults at a wide variety of targets, particularly their peers, had already won them infamy following the release of their debut New Art Riot EP, and the Public Enemy-sampling 'Motown Junk' (a previous single, 'Suicide Alley', had been a limited pressing distributed at gigs and to journalists only). Their personal manifesto was equally explicit: rock bands should cut down the previous generation, release one explosive album, then disappear. Although the music press pointed out the obvious contradictions and naïveté of this credo, the band polarized opinion to a degree that far outweighed their early musical proficiency. The singles, 'Stay Beautiful' and 'Love's Sweet Exile' (backed by the superior 'Repeat' - 'Repeat after me, fuck Queen and Country') were inconclusive, but the reissued version of 'You Love Us', with its taut, vicious refrain, revealed a band beginning to approach in power what they had always had in vision. Their debut album, too, was an injection of bile that proved perversely refreshing in a year of industry contraction and self-congratulation. Unfortunately, it never quite achieved its intention to outsell Guns N'Roses' Appetite For Destruction, nor did the band split immediately afterwards as stated. The polished, less caustic approach of Gold Against The Soul saw the Manics hitting a brick wall in expectation and execution, though as always, there were moments of sublime lyricism (notably the singles 'Roses In The Hospital' and 'Life Becoming A Landslide'). The Holy Bible returned the group to the bleak world-view of yesteryear, notably on the haunting '4st 7lb', written by an anorexic Richey Edwards before a nervous breakdown that saw him temporarily admitted to a mental facility. Other subject matter was drawn from prostitution, the holocaust and the penal system. Never easy listening at the best of times (despite the ability to write genuinely affecting songs like 'Motorcycle Emptiness'), the Manics had produced enough inspired moments to justify their protracted early claims. However, all that seemed somehow irrelevant following Edwards' disappearance on 1 February 1995, with several parties expressing concern as to his well-being. Early in 1996 the group announced plans for their first album in Edwards' absence. The result was Everything Must Go; although highly commercial it was an outstanding record. Played with power and sung with passion, most of the songs ripped out of the speakers. The confidence and self-assured manner that the band have gained is remarkable given their recent tragic upheaval. They culminated their finest year by winning three BRIT awards, for Best Live Act, Best Single ('A Design For Life') and Best Album.

Manifold, Keith

b. Keith Cyril Manifold, 2 April 1947, Biggin By Hartington, near Buxton, Derbyshire, England. Manifold learned to play guitar and after completing his education, he sought a singing career. He was influenced by such artists as Jimmie Rodgers and Hank Williams. He was also greatly inspired by the recordings and particularly the yodels of Wilf Carter (Montana Slim) and quickly became one of the few British artists to become completely proficient in the art of yodelling. He made his professional debut at a local club in Derbyshire in June 1965. In 1974, he became the first UK country artist to benefit from appearances on television's Opportunity Knocks, eventually finishing second to the series' overall winner Lena Zavaroni. He made his first recordings for the Westwood label in 1974. In 1975, he performed the winning song, 'Who's Gonna Bring Me Laughter', in the 1975 Opportunity Knocks Songwriters Competition, which led him to record for a major label, and he was also voted the Billboard Best British Solo Artist at London's Wembley Festival. In 1977, he recorded for DJM and in September 1978, he was sponsored and taken to the USA to record an album in Nashville, using Nashville musicians. In 1986, he varied his style to record a gospel album, on which he was backed by the Pilling Brass Ensemble. Manifold has maintained his popularity over the years, still tours extensively in the British Isles and has also regularly played in several European venues. Occasionally he is joined onstage by his two daughters. He also owns an entertainments agency and is involved with promotional work and a recording studio.

Manilow, Barry

b. Barry Alan Pincus, 17 June 1946, Brooklyn, New York, USA. An immensely popular singer, pianist and composer from the mid-70s onwards, Manilow studied music at the Juilliard School and worked as an arranger for CBS-TV. During the 60s, he also became a skilled composer of advertising jingles. In 1972 he served as accompanist to Bette Midler, then a cult performer in New York's gay bath-houses. Manilow subsequently arranged Midler's first two albums and gained his own recording contract with Bell. After an unsuccessful debut album, he took the powerful ballad 'Mandy' to number 1 in America. The song had previously been a UK hit for its co-writer Scott English, as 'Brandy'. This was the prelude to 10 years of remarkable hit parade success. With his strong, pleasant tenor, well-constructed love songs and ingratiating manner in live shows, Manilow was sneered at by critics but adored by his fans, who were predominantly female. Among the biggest hits were 'Could It Be Magic' (1975), 'I Write The Songs' (composed by the Beach Boys' Bruce Johnston (1976), 'Tryin' to Get The Feeling Again' (1976), 'Looks Like We Made It' (1977), 'Can't Smile Without You' (1978), the upbeat 'Copacabana (At The Copa)' (1978), 'Somewhere In The Night' (1979), 'Ships' (1979), and 'I Made It Through The Rain' (1980). Two albums, 2am Paradise Cafe and Swing Street, marked a change of direction as Manilow underlined his jazz credentials in collaborations with Gerry Mulligan and Sarah Vaughan. He also appeared on Broadway in two one-man shows, the second of which, Showstoppers (1991), was a schmaltzy tribute to great songwriters of the past. During the 80s, Manilow was invited by the widow of one of those writers, Johnny Mercer, to set to music lyrics unpublished during Mercer's lifetime. A selection of these were recorded by Nancy Wilson on her 1991 album With My Lover Beside Me. In June 1994, the stage musical Copacabana, for which Manilow composed the music and co-wrote the book, opened in London starring Gary Wilmot and Nicola Dawn. In the same year he was the supervising composer, and collaborated on several of the songs, for the animated feature Thumbelina.

Manly, Gill

b. England. A gifted post-bop singer with an eclectic style and repertoire, Manly has attracted much praise in her, thus far, short career. She is particularly admired by Mark Murphy who has drawn attention to 'her rapidly developing gifts'. Like so many young women caught up in the jazz singing explosion of the late 80s and 90s, Manly has yet to establish the widespread following that might well be her due.

Mann, Aimee

Having begun performing with the punk-inspired Young Snakes, Aimee Mann achieved recognition as the lead vocalist of the critically acclaimed 'Til Tuesday. Frustrated with the industry trying to push a more mainstream approach - and suggesting that writers outside the group should contribute material - Mann left for a solo career in 1990. Whatever was a remarkable set, drawing rave reviews and the generous plaudits of Elvis Costello. A literate and skilled composer, Mann attacked the corporate music business on 'I've Had It' and detailed estrangement and heartbreak on 'I Should've Known' and 'I Know There's A Word' (allegedly concerning her former relationship with Jules Shear). Former Byrds guitarist Roger McGuinn was persuaded to contribute distinctive 12-string backing on a set reviving pop's traditions of melody and chorus, while placing them in an unquestionably contemporary context. Mann's second album, I'm With Stupid, still appeared to carry emotional baggage from the Shear relationship. It was a more mellow and relaxed affair, although lyrically as strong.

Mann, Barry

b. 9 February 1939, Brooklyn, New York, USA. One of the leading pop songwriters of his generation. Although trained as an architect, Mann began his career in music following a summer singing engagement in the Catskills resort. He initially composed material for Elvis Presley's publishers Hill & Range, before briefly collaborating with Howie Greenfield. In 1961, he enjoyed a Top 10 hit in his own right with 'Who Put The Bomp?', but thereafter it was as a composer that he dominated the Hot 100. During the same year as his solo hit, Mann found a new songwriting partner in Cynthia Weil, whom he soon married. Their first success together was Tony Orlando's 'Bless You' (1961), a simple but effective love song, which endeared them to their new employer, bubblegum genius Don Kirschner, who housed a wealth of songwriting talent in the cubicles of his Brill Building offices. With intense competition from those other husband-and-wife teams Jeff Berry and Ellie Greenwich, and Gerry Goffin and Carole King, Mann and Weil responded with a wealth of classic songs which still sound fresh and impressive to this day. Like all great songwriters, they adapted well to different styles and themes, and this insured that their compositions were recorded by a broad range of artists. There was the evocative urban romanticism of the Crystals' 'Uptown' (1962) and the Drifters' 'On Broadway' (1963), novelty teen fodder such as Eydie Gorme's 'Blame It On The Bossa Nova' (1963) and Paul Petersen's 'My Dad' (1963), the desolate neuroticism of Gene Pitney's 'I'm Gonna Be Strong' (1964) and the Righteous Brothers' 'You've Lost That Lovin' Feelin'' (1964), and classic mid-60s protest songs courtesy of the Animals' 'We Gotta Get Out Of This Place', Jody Miller's 'Home Of The Brave', 'Only In America' (Jay And The Americans) and 'Kicks' (Paul Revere And The Raiders)

By the late 60s, Mann and Weil left Kirschner and moved to Hollywood. Throughout this period, they continued to enjoy hit success with Bobby Vinton's 'I Love How You Love Me' (written with Larry Kolber in 1968), Jay And The Americans' 'Walking In The Rain' (1969) and B.J. Thomas' 'I Just Can't Help Believing' (1970). Changes in the pop marketplace subsequently reduced their hit output, but there were some notable successes such as Dan Hill's 'Sometimes When We Touch' (1977). Mann himself still craved recognition as a performer and won a recording contract, but his album work, most notably 1977's aptly titled Survivor failed to match the sales of his and his wife's much covered golden hits. Survivor was produced by Bruce Johnson and Terry Melcher, and was regarded as a leading example of the 70s' singer/songwriter oeuvre.They wrote the original songs for the Muppet Treasure Island movie in 1996.

Mann, C.K.

b. Charles Kofi Amankwas Mann, c.1935, Accra, Ghana. Singer, guitarist and saxophonist Mann was a member of the Sweet Talks before setting out on a solo career singing what he describes as 'refined highlife'. He had previously played with Kweku Oppong's band, Kakaiku's, in the 60s, then Carousel Seven (who enjoyed a hit success with 'Edina Brenya'). It was here that he began to compose his first songs, and establish his reputation as a pre-eminent highlife guitarist. However, that reputation diminished as the 80s progressed. One album that soulfully captured highlife music before it was overwhelmed in a fruitless search for international mainstream success was Wamaya. However, 1988's Hi-Life Salsa, recorded in the UK with the help of British, South American and African musicians, was something of a return to form. The second side of this marriage of salsa and highlife was dedicated to Osode Medley, the musician behind the Osode rhythm, which has always been intrinsic to his work. However, the following year the upsurge of interest in Mann had to be held in abeyance when his son and bass player, Kwabena, died. He returned to the road in 1990, hosting shows in Canada, where he is now based.

Mann, Carl

b. 24 August 1942, Huntingdon, Tennessee, USA. Mann was a rockabilly artist who recorded his only two chart singles for the Phillips International label, owned by Sam Phillips, proprietor of the legendary Sun Records. Mann was a singer and pianist whose group, the Kool Kats, was based in Jackson, Tennessee, when they recorded their first tracks for the small Jaxon label, owned by Jim Stewart (who later founded Stax Records). Those songs were published by Knox Music, owned by Phillips, who had started Sun and launched the careers of artists including Elvis Presley, Jerry Lee Lewis, and Johnny Cash. Phillips signed Mann and had him record the standard 'Mona Lisa', which had been a hit for Nat 'King' Cole in the early 50s. It reached number 25 in the USA in 1959 and became Mann's biggest record. Mann recorded a total of seven singles and an album for Phillips International before leaving in 1962, but only one other single, 'Pretend', another Cole song, charted, also in 1959. He toured with fellow rockabilly artist Carl Perkins from 1962-64 and left music between 1967 and 1974, after which he returned on the ABC/Dot Records label, placing a remake of the Platters' 'Twilight Time' at number 100 on the US country charts.

Mann, Herbie

b. 16 April 1930, New York City, New York, USA. After learning to play the clarinet while still a small child, Mann took up the flute. He developed his musical experience during military service. After leaving the US army, he was active in film and television studios as both performer and composer. He played in several small jazz groups during the late 50s, including his own Afro-Jazz Sextet with which he toured internationally. Early in the 60s, his interest in Brazilian music led to a series of profitable recordings, notably 'Coming Home Baby'. Although rooted in bop and recording with leading jazzmen such as Bill Evans, by the late 60s, Mann's writing and playing had broadened to include musical influences from many lands - especially those of the Middle East. He was also open-minded about rock and by the early 70s was a leading figure in jazz-rock fusion. Indeed, his wide acceptance of areas of popular music outside jazz created some difficulties of categorization, especially when he embraced, however briefly, reggae and disco-pop. He has become one of the widest known flautists in jazz, gaining a considerable measure of credibility for an instrument that has always had an uncertain status in jazz circles. In addition to his performing and writing, Mann has also been active as a record producer, running his own label, Embryo, under the Atlantic aegis for a decade. Subsequently, he formed his own independent label, Herbie Mann Music.

Mann, Johnny, Singers

This US male/female vocal group, popular in the 60s, specialized in lively, swinging arrangements, in complete contrast to the prevailing beat music scene. The group released several popular albums, including Roar Along With The Singing 'Twenties and Swing Along With The Swingin' 'Thirties, and also had a US Top 10 chart single in 1967 with Jimmy Webb's 'Up, Up And Away'. Nearly 20 years later, their album The Johnny Mann Singers (1984), featured their interpretations of 60s classics, such as 'Portrait Of My Love', 'A Taste Of Honey', 'Dedicated To The One I Love', 'Yesterday' and 'A World Without Love'.

(see Manfred Mann)

Mann, Peggy

b. Margaret Germano. An excellent band singer, especially on ballads, during the 'Big Band Era'. Mann worked for the outfits of Henry Halstead, Ben Pollack and Enoch Light in the late 30s, and sang with Larry Clinton, Teddy Powell and Gene Krupa in the early 40s before she left to work as a soloist. She sang with the Pollack band just after its prime, but was on recordings such as 'I'm In My Glory', 'If It's The Last Thing I Do' and 'You Made Me Love You'. With Clinton she appeared on several recordings, including 'Because Of You', 'You'll Never Know' and 'Isn't It Time To Fall In Love'. For Teddy Powell's sweet band she duetted with Dick Judge on the hit, 'Goodbye, Mama (I'm Off To Yokohama)' and also sang on 'Somebody's Thinking Of You Tonight' and 'Be Careful, It's My Heart'. Peggy Mann also recorded with Russ Case ('Crying For Joy'), Tommy Dorsey ('Bill'), the Benny Goodman Quintet ('Ev'ry Time We Say Goodbye') and under her own name ('Changeable' and 'When Somebody Thinks You're Wonderful'). She retired from the music business in the early 50s, but made a comeback for a while three years later, despite swimming against the prevailing musical tide.

Manne, Shelly

b. Sheldon Manne, 11 June 1920, New York City, New York, USA, d. 26 September 1984. After switching to drums from saxophone, Manne worked with a number of dance and swing bands of the late 30s and early 40s, including Joe Marsala's big band. He was also active in small groups in New York, accompanying Coleman Hawkins as well as some of the upcoming bebop artists. He first attracted widespread attention in 1946, the year he joined Stan Kenton. On and off, he was with Kenton until 1952, finding time in between stints to work in bands led by George Shearing, Woody Herman and others. From the early 50s, he was resident in Los Angeles, working in the studios by day and gradually becoming one of the most important musicians in the rising west coast school of jazz. In 1951, he had recorded with Shorty Rogers and become a member of the house band at Howard Rumsey's Lighthouse Cafe at Hermosa Beach. During the next few years he took part in many fine record sessions, notably for Contemporary, with Teddy Edwards, Jimmy Giuffre, Art Pepper, Lennie Niehaus, Bud Shank, Bob Cooper, Maynard Ferguson, Hampton Hawes and most of the other west coast stars. Among the most successful of these recordings were those made with Rogers in 1951 and 1955/6, a set he recorded with Russ Freeman and Chet Baker, and an album of tunes from the Broadway Show, My Fair Lady, which he recorded with Leroy Vinnegar and André Previn. This set, the first ever complete album of jazz versions of tunes from a single show, was particularly successful. Almost as popular was another album made by the same trio with visiting guest, Sonny Rollins. Although recording with many different musicians, Manne kept a fairly constant personnel together for his regular working band, and towards the end of 1959 was booked into the Blackhawk in San Francisco. The band comprised trumpeter Joe Gordon, Richie Kamuca, Monty Budwig, who had recently taken over from Vinnegar, and Freeman's replacement, Vic Feldman. It was immediately apparent to Manne that the band he had assembled for this two-week engagement was something special, and he persuaded Les Koenig of Contemporary to travel to San Francisco to record them. The resulting four albums became some of the most successful in Contemporary's catalogue and an outstanding example of the west coast's so-called 'cool' sounds at their smokiest. In 1960, Manne opened his own nightclub, Shelly's Manne-Hole, which remained in existence until the middle of the following decade. In the 60s he recorded with Bill Evans and in 1974 was a founder member of the LA Four, with Shank, Ray Brown and Laurindo Almeida. By the late 70s Manne was a familiar figure on the international jazz festival circuit, appearing at the 1980 Aurex festival in Japan with Benny Carter's Gentlemen of Swing. Although deeply rooted in the swinging tradition of drumming, Manne's sensitive, explorative playing made him an ideal accompanist in almost any setting and one of the finest drummers of the post-war period.

Manners, Zeke

b. Leo Mannes, San Francisco, California, USA. An accordion- and piano-playing vocalist, songwriter and co-founder, with Glen Rice, of the Beverly Hill Billies, who made their debut on KMPC Los Angeles in April 1930. Manners had originally gone to Hollywood in the hope of making a career in films and initially had no interest in country music. With the Hill Billies, he became known as Leo 'Zeke Craddock' Manners, which eventually led to the permanent change of surname. It was Manners who discovered Elton Britt and brought him to the Hill Billies. When the original group split in late 1932, Rice moved to San Francisco forming a new Beverly Hill Billies, while Manners remained on KMPC with a new group, Zeke And His City Fellers, which included Elton Britt. They also recorded transcriptions as the Langworth Hill Billies. Eventually, around 1933, Manners and Britt moved to New York where, under various aliases, they performed and recorded for ARC. They eventually went their separate ways, with Britt going on to solo stardom. Zeke Manners later recorded for several labels, including RCA, but they were reunited in 1959, when Britt recorded an album with Manners' band.

Mannheim Steamroller

Though few may admit to having heard of them, Mannheim Steamroller can boast of being one of the biggest US acts of the 80s and 90s - at least while snow covers the ground and children leave out roasted chestnuts for Santa and his reindeer. Flushed by the success of his collaboration with William Fries, 'Convoy' (credited to C.W. McCall), jingle-writer Chip Davis invested his share of the royalties from the song and attendant film in a home studio and 'sound laboratory' complex. Mannheim Steamroller was created with the help of a few friends, and the group made its debut in 1984 with Mannheim Steamroller Christmas. A reworking of traditional festive fare with rock and classical elements, it became a huge hit, selling over four million copies. Four years passed before Davis decided to repeat the formula with A Fresh Aire Christmas, which duly notched up another four million sales. Buoyed by this success, Davis began to take a working version of Mannheim Steamroller out on tour during November and December of every year for a series of sell-out concerts. In addition, he expanded his record label, American Gramophone, to sign well-known MOR artists such as Mike Post, America and John Denver. He also released a series of solo 'mood' albums, including one that came free with sachets of coffee. The third release in the Christmas trilogy, meanwhile, was Christmas In The Aire. This featured both a children's choir, the Renaissance Ensemble Le Doo Dah, and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. This time it peaked at number 3 in the US charts, with advance sales of three and a half million copies.

Manning, Barbara

b. San Diego, California, USA. Manning was in 28th Day, a critically adored folk rock band based in Chico, California, USA. She enrolled at Chico State College at the age of 16, and met Cole Marquis at a piano lesson, subsequently forming 28th Day with the drummer Mike Cloward. Although they recorded only one mini-album, they are fondly remembered throughout California. Manning moved to San Francisco in June 1986, and her debut solo album, a collection of deceptively simple folk tunes ('Never Park'), saw Manning playing cello, bass and guitar. One song took the form of a musical fan letter to Brix and Mark E. Smith of the Fall. By now she had outgrown psychedelic folk rock and so formed Wednesday Morning, 3.00 AM, with Brandan Kearney; Kearney played clarinet and Manning cello. The group soon became World Of Pooh whose debut album featured a memorable rewrite of 'Lately I Keep Scissors' from her solo record. Tours with Sonic Youth, Blake Babies and Yo La Tengo followed. However, World Of Pooh broke up as soon as they returned to San Francisco. Manning then formed her own band, originally called the Tablespoons, although other names were also adopted, and recruited several musicians including Melanie Clarin (from Harm Farm) and Kim Osterwalder (from Flophouse). Manning was also joined by fellow songwriter Michelle Cernuto and her husband, Lincoln Allen. Manning also collaborated widely, including projects with Robert Scott (Bats), Seymour Glass of Bananafish magazine (Glands Of External Secretion), an album with her sister Terri for Forced Exposure magazine, and a series of eight cover versions of Captain Beefheart songs. Also in 1993 she recorded a three-song CD for Matador Records, with each song dedicated to her baseball heroes ('Joe DiMaggio', 'Denny McLain', 'Dock Ellis'). Nowhere (with Manning's new band the San Francisco Seals) lacked the songwriting strengths of previous releases, with too strong an accent on cover versions, though the occasional track (such as 'Day 12') recaptured former glories. The second SF Seals release, Truth Walks In Sleepy Shadows, was a marked improvement with Manning contributing more original material. The Original Artists album was a loose, good-natured affair with backing from members of the Mekons and Stuart Moxham (ex-Young Marble Giants). 1212 featured some of Manning's strongest material to date, alongside a cover of Richard Thompson's desperately bleak 'End Of The Rainbow', which indicated her penchant for the slightly warped and sinister.

Manning, Bob

b. Manny Levin, 1 February 1926, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, USA. A highly accomplished, but underrated ballad singer, whose career has probably suffered because his voice bore an uncanny similarity to that of the more popular Dick Haymes. Influenced by the singers and bands of the 'Swing Era', Manning sang in Philadephia hotels and had his own show on a local radio station before joining the newly formed Ziggy Elman outfit in 1947. He then worked for short periods with Art Mooney and Tommy Dorsey, and made an impressive appearance on the Arthur Godfrey Talent Scouts programme. Unable to secure a contract with a major record company, Manning persuaded a friend to finance a recording session, out of which came 'The Nearness Of You', a classic performance, and reportedly composer Hoagy Carmichael's favourite version of his song. It was picked up by Capitol Records, and entered the US Top 20 in 1953. The singer had further success with 'All I Desire' and 'Venus De Milo', and also released a tasteful collection of standards entitled Lonely Spell. Most of the tracks on that album were re-released in 1994. Like so many other classy singers, Manning was overtaken by the advent of rock 'n' roll in the late 50s, and faded into the background.

b. Samuel Medoff, 12 June 1912, Gomel, Russia, d. 11 April 1991, Marietta, Georgia, USA. A popular songwriter during the late 40s and 50s, who sometimes wrote both music and lyrics, and was probably best-known for his novelty songs. Born into a theatrical family, Manning was taken to the USA when he was six years old, and studied at the Philadelphia Conservatory and Juilliard. A gifted pianist at an early age, he gave concerts and later served as an accompanist, arranger and music coach for singers, while working in theatre and television as an arranger and conductor. One of his first compositions, with F.D. Marchetti and Maurice De Feraudy, was 'Fascination' (1932). He hosted Sam Medoff And His Yiddish Swing Orchestra on radio station WHN, before changing his name in 1948. In the same year his composition, 'The Treasure Of Sierra Madre', written with Buddy Kaye, was a hit for Buddy Cole and Freddy Martin, and became the title song for John Huston's film starring Humphrey Bogart. Manning's other 40s songs included 'While The Angelus Was Ringing', 'A Carnival In Venice' (a hit for the Mills Brothers), 'Donna Bella' and the jaunty 'One More Dream (And She's Mine)'. It was during the 50s, though, that Manning made his greatest impact, mostly in collaboration with lyricist Al Hoffman. Their novelty songs included 'Takes Two To Tango', which became a hit in the US for Pearl Bailey and Louis Armstrong, and somewhat surprisingly, was recorded in the UK by Hermione Gingold and the grumpy television personality, Gilbert Harding; and 'Papa Loves Mambo' and 'Hot Diggity', both of which were successful for Perry Como. The latter song was also a hit in the UK for Michael Holliday and the Stargazers. Other ballads written by Manning included 'Allegheny Moon' (which Patti Page took almost to the top of the US chart in 1956), 'Hawaiian Wedding Song' (successful for Andy Williams in 1959) and 'The Morning Side Of The Mountain' (a US hit for Tommy Edwards in 1959, and revived by Donny and Marie Osmond in 1975). In the 60s, Manning (with Fred Wise) contributed '(There's) No Room To Rhumba In A Sports Car' to the Elvis Presley movie Fun In Acapulco (1963). Manning' songs, which are said to have been published in 27 languages, also included 'Like I Do' (UK Top 5 for Maureen Evans), 'Festival Of Roses', 'I Still Feel The Same About You', 'I Can't Get You Out Of My Heart', 'Redwood Smoke', 'When You Kiss Me', 'Oh, Oh, I'm Falling In Love Again', 'Torero' (a hit for Renato Carosone and Julius La Rosa), 'Jilted' (popular for Teresa Brewer), 'Underneath The Linden Tree', 'Don't Stay Away Too Long', 'Mama, Teach Me To Dance' and 'Nickelodeon Song'. He also wrote the score for the television production The Boys From Boise, and a symphonic piece for piano and orchestra entitled 'Nightbird'. Among his other collaborators were Kay Twomey and Al Stillman.

Manning, Phil

b. 1948, Tasmania, Australia. Acoustic guitarist and singer Phil Manning came to prominence as part of one of Australia's top-rated rock/blues groups, Chain. Having been frustrated in his original intention to become a geologist he studied classical piano. However, when he heard the Beatles for the first time he switched to pop music, purchasing a Hofner Broadway guitar while still working in his father's electrical store. While at art school in Hobart in 1965 a visiting blues artist, Tony Worsley, arrived in town short of a guitar player for his band the Blue Jays. Manning, having previously played with the appropriately named Anonymous Unlimited, accepted the offer. However, after ill-paid work at showgrounds through Queensland, he formed Chain with Matt Taylor (vocals), Barry Sullivan (bass) and Barry Harvey (guitar). Their 1971 composition, 'Black'n'Blue', became an Australian number 1 for seven weeks. Despite the accompanying Towards The Blues album achieving gold status, the group fell from popularity as they began to experiment with jazz and fusion. Manning left in 1974 to record his debut solo album, I Wish There Was A Way. As well as occasional performances with a reformed Chain he then formed the Phil Manning Blues Band, with Mike Clarke (bass), Greg Cook (guitar) and Bruce Devinish (drums). He returned to solo status in 1986. Since then he has continued to record accomplished delta blues sets from his Brisbane mountain base. He has his own studio, fitted with antique recording equipment such as a 1937 Western Electric cardoid ribbon microphone, and his own record label, Tambourine Records.

Manone, Joseph 'Wingy'

b. 13 February 1900, New Orleans, Louisiana, USA, d. 9 July 1982. Manone lost his right arm in a road accident while still a child, but took up trumpet playing, turning professional in his mid-teens. The 20s were hectic times for Manone. He worked with many riverboat and territory bands, visited St. Louis where he made his first records in 1924, moved on to New York in 1929 to record with Benny Goodman, and settled in Chicago. He led his own band at nightclubs, then took it to New York for a string of successful engagements which were enhanced by the popularity of his recording of 'The Isle Of Capri'. By the early 40s he was in California, appearing in films and becoming a regular on Bing Crosby's radio show, visiting New York and other centres for concerts and record dates with, for example, Sidney Bechet. In the mid-50s Manone moved to Las Vegas, playing there for several years but making occasional trips to New York and visiting Europe for festivals and tours of clubs. Manone's vocal style, although popular with audiences, was filled with rather forced humour. Contrastingly, he played trumpet with a forthright, honest style which compounded his love for the playing of Louis Armstrong with the New Orleans tradition he heard in his childhood. His early recordings are solidly entertaining.

Manowar

This traditionalist heavy metal quartet from the USA (whose motto is 'Death To False Metal') was formed in 1981 by bassist Joey Demaio (a former Black Sabbath roadie) and ex-Shakin' Street and Dictators guitarist Ross The Boss (b. Ross Friedman). Recruiting vocalist Eric Adams and drummer Donnie Hamzik, they decided on an approach that was to be the total antithesis of melodic AOR. Dressed in animal skins, they delivered a brutal series of riffs that were characterized by Adams' barbaric vocals and the dense basswork of Demaio. They debuted in 1982 with Battle Hymns, a milestone in the metal genre. With subject material firmly centred on fighting, bloodshed, death and carnage, they came across as a turbo-charged hybrid of Ted Nugent and Black Sabbath. The album was notable for an amazing version of the 'William Tell Overture', played as an electric bass solo, while the voice of actor Orson Welles appeared on 'Dark Avenger'. Battle Hymns failed to sell, however, and with the press treating the band as an absurd joke, they were dropped by Liberty Records in 1982. They subsequently signed to Megaforce (Music For Nations in the UK), using their own blood on the contract, their veins opened via a ceremonial dagger. Scott Columbus took over the drum-stool on Into Glory Ride, another intensely heavy, chest-beating collection of metal epics. They built up a small yet loyal cult following, but were generally panned by the rock mainstream. Their UK tours in 1983 and 1984 attracted poor audiences, but they had more success in Europe. Sign Of The Hammer, released in 1985, featured some excellent guitarwork from Ross The Boss and contained the band's most accessible compositions to date, including the archetypal metal boast, 'All Men Play On 10'. Once again it flopped, and after a rethink they returned two years later with Fighting The World (in the meantime, they had entered the Guinness Book Of Records for playing live at 160 decibels). On this album they incorporated elements borrowed from Kiss and Judas Priest into their songwriting, but although it was aimed at the rock mainstream, it failed to win many new fans. Kings Of Metal was released the following year and met with a similar fate. Disillusioned, Ross The Boss quit in 1988, with Scott Columbus following suit two years later (Ross was replaced by Death Dealer, aka Dave Shankel, Columbus by Rhino). The future of the group is still uncertain. Manowar are colourful, flamboyant and rather kitsch, but, nevertheless, an essential component in the music industry - the perfect antidote to the sometimes conservative rock fraternity.

Mansun

One of the most hotly touted UK indie bands of the mid-90s, Mansun confirmed the validity of their good press when their 1996 single, 'Stripper Vicar', written about a cross-dressing vicar, entered the UK Top 20. By this time the group had already cultivated a supportive relationship with music papers New Musical Express and Melody Maker by releasing a series of acclaimed EPs, including Egg-Shaped Fred and Take It Easy, Chicken, on their own Sci-Fi Hi-Fi label. By the advent of Attack Of The Grey Lantern early in 1997, the group had become regulars on BBC Television's Top Of The Pops, having come a long way from their humble origins at Wrexham Art College in 1995. After having completed their academic studies, the group reconvened in Chester, and began writing and playing their own material. They were soon offered a publishing contract by PolyGram Records scouts Alan Wills and Mark Lewis, which led them to Parlophone Records. A number of other major labels were said to be interested in the group, but proved unable to meet their demands for a record label to underwrite their 200-gig schedule for 1996. They also demanded from Parlophone the freedom to continue releasing EPs and the right to self-produce their debut album. The only outside influence on Attack Of The Grey Lantern, then, came with slight remixing by Cliff Norrell and Mike 'Spike' Stent. The album, proffering a clash of musical styles ranging from 70s pop to classic rock, was clearly influenced by Radiohead, with vocalist, guitarist Paul Draper's songwriting the outstanding feature. In September 1997, the band released an EP of new material, Closed For Business, and continued with their seemingly endless touring schedule.

Mantaray

Hailed as part of the UK's New Wave Of The New Wave movement in 1994, Mantaray are a mod-influenced trio from Braintree, Essex, whose obvious punk reference point, even down to their suits, was the Jam. Led by Chris Latter (vocals, guitar), their first release was one track, 'Sad', on the Fierce Panda Records' 'Shagging In The Streets' compilation 7-inch. This was followed by 'Insomniac's Dream' and 'Adoration', the latter prefacing the group's debut album, which was filled by poppy but nevertheless highly politicized songs. Two of these, 'Closet Hetro' and 'If You Were A Girl', focused on homophobia and gender prejudice, while 'Greatest Living Soul' attacked pop's transient values: 'I'm the greatest living soul . . . this week.' Their major label debut for Fontana was disappointing, however, leaving many commentators wondering whether the band would survive the backlash against Britpop.

Mantas

This short-lived hard rock quartet from the north of England was formed by Mantas after quitting the demonic thrash metallers Venom. Enlisting the help of vocalist Pete Harrison, second guitarist Al Barnes and Keith Nichol on keyboards, their debut and only release comprised nine new originals penned by Mantas. Moving away from the one-dimensional approach of Venom, they straddled the ground between AOR and the more commercial slant of Rainbow, Saxon and Dio. Winds Of Change featured computerized drums and extensive use of keyboards, but Harrison's vocals lacked distinction and the material was ultimately dull. The album was ignored by mainstream record purchasers aside from diehard Venom fans. Following a careful rethink, Mantas disbanded the group and rejoined Venom in 1989.

Mantler, Michael

b. 10 August 1943, Vienna, Austria. Mantler took up trumpet at the age of 12, and from 14 worked in dance bands, playing stock arrangements with little opportunity for creative jazz. He found more musical freedom after moving to the USA in 1962. After what he regarded as educationally barren years at the Berklee College Of Music in Boston, he moved to New York in 1964 and immediately became involved with musicians such as Paul Bley, Carla Bley (whom he would later marry) and Cecil Taylor. In 1965-66 he toured Europe with Carla Bley and Steve Lacy in the Jazz Realities quintet. In more recent times, he has toured with Carla Bley's Sextet and Charlie Haden's Liberation Music Orchestra, and has recorded several albums of his own pieces. Although a striking trumpet player, he concentrates most of his energy on organizing, producing and composing (often setting the words of Samuel Beckett, Harold Pinter and Edward Gorey to music). He was a co-founder of the Jazz Composers' Guild and the Jazz Composers' Orchestra Association. He also set up two record labels with Carla Bley: Watt, for their own recordings, and JCOA Records, to promote the work of others.

Mantovani

b. Annunzio Paolo Mantovani, 15 November 1905, Venice, Italy, d. 30 March 1980, Tunbridge Wells, Kent, England. A violinist, pianist, musical director, conductor, composer and arranger, Mantovani was one of the most successful orchestra leaders and album sellers in the history of popular music. His father was principal violinist at La Scala, Milan, under Arturo Toscanini, and also served under Mascagni, Richter and Saint-Saens, and subsequently, led the Covent Garden Orchestra. It is said that Mantovani received encouragement to become a professional musician from his mother, rather than his father. He began his musical training on the piano, and later learned to play the violin. After the family moved to England in 1912, he made his professional debut at the age of 16, playing the Bruch Violin Concerto Number 1. Four years later he had installed his own orchestra at London's Hotel Metropole, and began his broadcasting career. In the early 30s he formed the Tipica Orchestra and began a series of lunchtime broadcasts from the famous Monseigneur Restaurant in Piccadilly, London, and started recording for Regal Zonophone. He had two US hits in 1935-36, with 'Red Sails In The Sunset' and 'Serenade In The Night'. In the 40s, Mantovani served as musical director for several London West End shows, including Lady Behave, Twenty To One, Meet Me Victoria, And So To Bed, Bob's Your Uncle and La-Di-Da-Di-Da. He was also involved in Noël Coward's Pacific 1860 and Ace Of Clubs; conducting from the theatre pit for artists such as Lupino Lane, Pat Kirkwood, Mary Martin, Sally Gray, Leslie Henson and many others. His records for UK Decca included 'The Green Cockatoo', 'Hear My Song, Violetta' and 'Tell Me, Marianne' (vocal by Val Merrall). Experimenting with various arrangements with which to target the lucrative US market, he came up with what has been variously called the 'cascading strings', 'cascading violins', or 'tumbling strings' effect, said to be an original idea of arranger Ronnie Binge. It became the Orchestra's trademark and was first used to great effect in 1951, on Mantovani's recording of 'Charmaine', a song originally written to promote the 1926 silent film classic What Price Glory?. The Mantovani recording was the first of several million-selling singles for his orchestra, which included 'Wyoming', (another 20s number), 'Greensleeves', 'Song From Moulin Rouge' (a UK number 1), 'Swedish Rhapsody' and 'Lonely Ballerina'. Mantovani's own compositions included 'Serenata d'Amore', 'A Poem To The Moon', 'Royal Blue Waltz', 'Dance Of The Eighth Veil', 'Toy Shop Ballet' (Ivor Novello Award 1956), 'Red Petticoats', 'Brass Buttons', 'Tango In the Night' and 'Cara Mia', written with UK record producer/manager Bunny Lewis. David Whitfield's 1954 recording of 'Cara Mia', with Mantovani's orchestra accompaniment, sold over a million copies, and stayed at number 1 in the UK charts for a record (at the time) 10 weeks. It also made Whitfield one of the earliest UK artists to break into the US Top 10. Mantovani issued an instrumental version of the number, featuring himself on piano. This was most unusual in that the instrument was rarely a part of his 40-piece orchestral set-up. Singles apart, it was as an album artist that Mantovani excelled around the world, and especially in the USA. He is said to have been the first to sell over a million stereo units, aided in no small measure by the superb quality of sound obtained by Decca. Between 1955 and 1966 he had 28 albums in the US Top 30. Although he toured many countries of the world, including Russia, his popularity in the USA, where his style of orchestral offerings were often referred to as 'the beautiful music', was unique. An indication of the US audience's devotion can be gained from a claim by George Elrick, Mantovani's manager of 21 years, that at the beginning of one tour of the USA, the maestro was taken ill and a few concerts had to be cancelled; the prospective capacity audience at one of them, the University of Minnesota and Minneapolis, refused to claim refunds, preferring to retain their tickets for the following year. Mantovani continued to perform throughout the ever-changing musical climate of the 60s and 70s. He was awarded a special Ivor Novello Award in 1956 for services to popular music.

Mantra, Michael

A California-based musician/experimentalist who has sought to advance on the ambient ethic of Brian Eno and more recent 'chill-out' arists such as the Orb. Mantra describes his methods as 'Brain Hemisphere Harmonic Healing', which spells out his intention to create sound structures that 'induce a meditative state that synchronises brain wave frequencies'. After synchronising the mind and the body, Mantra's work claims to release endorphines (part of the human body's natural pharmacy which work at the level of opiates). To achieve this electronics are combined with field recordings of the Pacific sea, seagulls, and natural instruments such as the didgeridoo. Such experiments in the neural affects of sound could well represent a previously unchartered future for music.

Mantronix

DJ Curtis Mantronik (b. Kurtis Kahleel, 4 September 1965, Jamaica, West Indies, moving to Canada at age seven, then New York as a teenager) is the creative force behind these New York-based hip-hop innovators, a multi-instrumental talent whose knowledge of electronics is instrumental to the band's sound. That sound, electro rap in its purest form, as suggested by the band's name, was highly popular in the mid-80s. Kahleel's use of samplers and drum machines proved.pivotal to the genre's development, not least on tracks like 'Music Madness', which used a snatch of 'Stone Fox Chase' by Area Code 615 (better known in the UK as the theme to The Old Grey Whistle Test). Indeed, the raps of MC Tee (b. Tooure Embden) often seemed incidental to the formula. The duo met at Manhattan's Downtown Record Store in 1985, where Mantronik was mixing records behind the turntables and introducing customers to new releases. A few weeks later, they made a demo tape and started looking for a label. Soon afterwards, William Socolov, the astute founder of independent label Sleeping Bag, was in the store and was sufficiently impressed with the demo tape Mantronik played him to offer a deal. The group's first single, 1985's 'Fresh Is The Word', was a huge street and dancefloor hit, as was their production of Tricky Tee's 'Johnny The Fox'. In late 1985 they released their first album, the adventurous Mantronix, which included the hit singles 'Bassline' and 'Ladies', and took the marriage of street rhyme and electronic studio wizardry to new heights. Mantronix further built their reputation with their production of Joyce Sims' 'All And All' and 12.41's 'Success Is The Word', before going on to record their second album, the competent but relatively disappointing Music Madness. The duo were one of the most popular acts at the historic UK Fresh hip hop festival at London's Wembley Arena in the summer of 1986, but were dropped by Sleeping Bag a year later. Mantronix appeared to have run out of fresh ideas and had been overtaken by a new generation of rappers/studio maestros. In the late 80s Tee signed up to the USAF, to be replaced by two stand-in rappers, Bryce Luvah (b. *c.*1970; cousin of LL Cool J) and DJ Dee (b. *c.*1969, Mantronik's cousin). They did hit the UK charts with This Should Move Ya's promotional single, 'Got To Have Your Love'. The latter featured the vocal sheen of Wondress, while the attendant album featured a cover of Ian Dury And The Blockheads' 'Sex And Drugs And Rock 'n' Roll'. The distinctive Mantronix bass lines were still in place, though by now Kahleel was branching out into soul and R&B horizons. Possibly their best material in this format is 1991's The Incredible Sound Machine, which saw the introduction of singer Jade Trini. Kahleel continues to produce for others, notably English vocalist Mica Paris. In the modern age he composes all his music on an Apple Macintosh computer, a trait he shares with many of techno's leading lights.

Manuel And His Music Of The Mountains

Orchestra leader Geoff Love (b. 4 September 1917, Todmorden, Yorkshire, England, d. 8 July 1991, London, England) initially used the above name pseudonymously. The British-born son of a black American dancer, he took to music at an early age and by the late 50s/early 60s joined Joe Loss and Ted Heath as one of the country's leading bandleaders. Love's Manuel appellation allowed him an artistic freedom to draw influence from South American music and, although early releases did not reveal its creator's identity (Love was 'unmasked' during a cameo appearance on BBC television's Juke Box Jury), such recordings later became the natural outlet for his talents. A prodigious output, notably for EMI's prestigious Studio Two stereo series, ensured that the band remained one of Britain's most popular light orchestral attractions throughout the 60s and 70s.

Manzanera, Phil

b. Philip Targett-Adams, 31 January 1951, London, England. A guitarist at the age of 12, Manzanera gradually progressed to vocals, bass and drums. After forming the avant garde group Quiet Sun, he was recruited to Roxy Music as a guitarist in February 1972. By the mid-70s, he had established himself as one of Britain's most respected rock musicians. Manzanera's guitar virtuosity quickly established him as a sought-after session player. In 1974 alone, he appeared as either guitarist, co-composer or producer on Roxy Music's Country Life, Brian Eno's Here Come The Warm Jets and Taking Tiger Mountain (By Strategy), Bryan Ferry's Another Time Another Place and Nico's The End. Further sessions included John Cale's Slow Dazzle before he was drafted back into Roxy Music for Siren. He then produced the bizarre New Zealand pop group Split Enz, whom he had discovered in 1974. During the Roxy Music hiatus of 1975, he recorded his first solo work, Diamond Head, as well as working on a reunion album with Quiet Sun, Mainstream. Both works were well-received. More work followed, including a major role in the presentation of Stomu Yamash'ta's Go at London's Royal Albert Hall, in conjunction with Steve Winwood. Following the 'devolution' of Roxy Music in 1976, Manzanera formed the eclectic 801 with Bill MacCormick, Simon Phillips, Lloyd Watson, Francis Monkman and Eno. The band was originally for a complete tour but their live performances were wittled down to three shows: a warm-up gig in Norfolk, a guest appearance at the 1976 Reading Festival and a sell-out concert at the Queen Elizabeth hall, London. The latter was recorded for 801 Live. The group then folded with Manzanera re-uniting with Ferry. One year later, the guitarist issued a new 801 recording Listen Now!! Its theme was life in a totalitarian society. The work was notable for the use of Godley And Creme's famous Gizmo gadget, which produced the sound of strings from a guitar. After taking 801 back on the road, Phil issued the less adventurous K Scope. In the wake of Roxy's final split, he teamed up with Andy Mackay in the Explorers before returning to solo work.

Mapfumo, Thomas

b. October 1945, Marondera, Zimbabwe. Mapfumo, known domestically as 'The Lion Of Zimbabwe', is to the music of the Shona people what Fela Kuti is to Nigeria or Franco to Zaire: simultaneously a modernizer and preserver of tradition, and the single most important figure on the local music scene for decades (in Mapfumo's case, since the early 70s). Brought up for the first few years of his life in the small town of Marondera, his family moved to the capital, Salisbury (now Harare), in 1950, where he remained until he left school in 1964. He spent 1965 in neighbouring Zambia, before returning to Harare and starting to sing with local bands such as the Cosmic Dots and the Springfields. As their names suggest, both bands were heavily influenced by imported music, and Mapfumo acquired his early reputation for convincing cover versions of Elvis Presley, Otis Redding and Sam Cooke tracks. His first tentative step towards the musical revolution that he would instigate in the early 70s occurred when he began to translate the lyrics of songs like 'A Change Is Gonna Come' into the Shona language, immediately giving USA-located protest material an added relevance for black Africans languishing under Ian Smith's neo-apartheid Rhodesian regime. In 1973, Mapfumo left the Springfields, no longer prepared to devote his career to even Africanized interpretations of overseas material. Forming the rootsier Hallelujah Chicken Run Band, he started to seriously research traditional Zimbabwean, and in particular Shonan, folk styles. The key instrument in practically all this music is the mbira or 'thumb piano', a gourd soundbox with a set of tuned metal keys which produces a part melodic, part rhythmic effect. Mapfumo, together with the Chicken Run's lead guitarist Jonah Sithole, translated the mbira's complex patterns on to electric guitars, dampening the strings to produce a near-precise copy of the mbira's tonal quality. At the same time, he reappraised the band's kit drum style, changing it to fall in with traditional percussion rhythms and the structured stamping of dancers' feet. At first, these innovations failed to make much impact on local club-goers and record buyers: brainwashed and demoralized by decades of white colonialist supremacy, most indigenous Africans felt their own music to be inferior to imported white styles and found the Chicken Run's championing of it, even through a filter of electric guitars and kit drums, embarrassing. Gradually, however, attitudes changed. As the political situation worsened, Mapfumo's lyrics - thinly disguised criticisms of white supremacy, incomprehensible to white ears through their use of the Shona language - converged with newly emergent nationalist sentiments. By 1975, via singles like 'Morento' (a warning that war was on the way) and 'Ngoma Yarira' (an exhortation to fight for civil rights), Chicken Run were no longer disdained but seen as stylish and innovative. In 1977, after putting together the short-lived Pied Pipers Band, Mapfumo formed the Acid Band and released his first album, Hokoyo! (Watch Out!). The album established him as the most celebrated performer on the national scene. By this time, the white Rhodesian power structure had been alerted to the subversive nature of Mapfumo's material and, failing to persuade his record label, Teal, to stop its release, achieved the next best thing, which was to deny them airplay on state-controlled radio. At the end of 1977, Mapfumo was jailed for three months on charges of subversion. He was not to be intimidated, however, and once free, began releasing a string of chimurenga ('struggle') singles which offered support to ZANU freedom fighters and their supporters throughout Zimbabwe. Airtime continued to be denied, but the records became huge hits nonetheless - championed by club disc jockeys and widely heard on programmes broadcast by the Voice Of Mozambique radio station. In 1978, as the war of liberation reached its climax, Mapfumo renamed the Acid Band as Blacks Unlimited. After 1980, and the birth of independent Zimbabwe, Mapfumo maintained the political orientation of his music, while resisting attempts to have it hijacked by supporters of the rival ZANU and ZAPU parties. The lyrics on albums like Mabasa and Ndangariro were non-sectarian exhortations to the people to rebuild their country and its culture. In 1983, the British label Earthworks released a compilation album, The Chimurenga Singles, and in 1984 and 1985, Mapfumo made his first British and European tours. African music was at the time enjoying a major growth of interest in the West and this, coupled with Mapfumo's dreadlocked appearance and the reggae-ish shangara beat used in many of his songs, gave him an immediate impact amongst black and white music audiences. In 1986, he made what arguably remains his most outstanding work, Chimurenga For Justice, where his updating of traditional Shona music reached full and glorious maturity, with keyboards as well as guitars reinterpreting the ancient lines of the mbira. The political orientation of Mapfumo's lyrics shifted once more in the late 80s, this time to embrace overt criticism of Zimbabwean President Robert Mugabe's regime. On the 1989 album Corruption, he pointedly contrasted the Mercedes-and-swimming-pool lifestyles of Harare bureaucrats and politicians with the still pitiful condition of the urban and rural working classes, suggesting that a one-party state might make such polarization a permanent feature of Zimbabwean life.

Maphis, Joe, And Rose Lee

b. Otis W. ('Joe') Maphis, 12 May 1921, near Suffolk, Virginia, USA, d. 27 June 1986, Nashville, Tennessee, USA. His father taught him to play the fiddle as a child and he was performing at local dances by the age of 10. By the time he was 16, Maphis was a featured musician on WBRA Richmond, where he also played guitar, mandolin and bass. During the 40s, he starred on several top country shows, including Boone County Jamboree (later the Midwestern Hayride) (WLW Cincinnati), National Barn Dance (WLS Chicago) and Old Dominion Barn Dance (WRVA Richmond), where he first met his future wife Rose Lee (b. 29 December 1922, Baltimore, Maryland, USA). She was singing and playing the guitar before she reached her teens and at the age of 15, as Rose Of The Mountains, she had her own show on radio in Hagerstown, Maryland. In 1948, she met Joe and they were soon married. They moved to Los Angeles in 1951, where they became regulars on Cliffie Stone's Hometown Jamboree and later stars of the televised Town Hall Party from KFI Compton. Joe also worked with Merle Travis on occasion and they recorded two duet albums together. In the 50s, apart from their own recordings they worked as session musicians. Joe, with his super-fast picking on his unusual double-necked guitar, was much in demand by both country and pop artists and he recorded with rockabilly singers such as Wanda Jackson and Ricky Nelson, with whom he also toured. Maphis appeared with many of the major country stars, including Jimmy Dean and Jerry Lee Lewis on network television shows. From the 50s, for almost 30 years, he and Rose Lee toured with their own show, joined later by their three children, Jody, Dale and Lorrie. During this time they not only played in every American state but also in Europe and the Far East. They made their home in Nashville in the 60s, where Joe's multi-instrumental skills were much in demand for session work. He played the background music on several films and television series, including Thunder Road, Have Gun Will Travel, The Virginian and The FBI Story. Their abilities won them the nickname of 'Mr & Mrs Country Music'. Over the years, they recorded in their own right for several labels, including Capitol, Starday and CMH. In 1960, Joe gave 11-year-old Barbara Mandrell her first big break in country music when he included her on his show at the Showboat Hotel and Casino, Las Vegas (contrary to many reference books, although Mandrell referred to him as Uncle Joe, he was not her real uncle). Joe Maphis, who was Bert Weedon's favourite picker, became known as the King Of The Strings and ranks alongside the likes of great guitarists such as Merle Travis and Chet Atkins.

Maple Oak

This obscure Canadian group gained short-lived minor fame when former Kinks' bassist, Pete Quaife, joined their ranks in 1969. He contributed to Maple Oak's lone British single, 'Son Of A Gun', but although the ensemble completed an album, Quaife abandoned them for a more conventional life as a commercial artist. Although he initially settled in Denmark, Pete later moved to Montreal, where he made an impromptu live appearance with the Kinks when a 80s tour reached the city. Maple Oak dissolved several years beforehand.

Mar-Keys

Formed in Memphis, Tennessee, USA, and originally known as the Royal Spades, the line-up comprised Steve Cropper (b. 21 October 1941, Willow Spring, Missouri, USA; guitar), Donald 'Duck' Dunn (b. 24 November 1941, Memphis, Tennessee, USA; bass), Charles 'Packy' Axton (tenor saxophone), Don Nix (b. 27 September 1941, Memphis, Tennessee, USA; baritone saxophone), Wayne Jackson (trumpet), Charlie Freeman (b. Memphis, Tennessee, USA; guitar), Jerry Lee 'Smoochy' Smith (organ) and Terry Johnson (drums). Although their rhythmic instrumental style was not unique in Memphis (Willie Mitchell followed a parallel path at Hi Records), the Mar-Keys were undoubted masters. Their debut hit, 'Last Night', reached number 3 in the US Billboard pop chart during the summer of 1961, establishing Satellite, its outlet, in the process. Within months, Satellite had altered its name to Stax and the Mar-Keys became the label's house band. Initially all-white, two black musicians, Booker T. Jones (organ) and Al Jackson (drums), had replaced Smith and Johnson by 1962. The newcomers, along with Cropper and Dunn, also worked as Booker T. And The MGs. A turbulent group, the Mar-Keys underwent several changes. Freeman left prior to the recording of 'Last Night' (but would later return for live work), Nix and Axton also quit, while Joe Arnold and Bob Snyder joined on tenor and baritone saxophone. They, in turn, were replaced by Andrew Love and Floyd Newman, respectively. Although commercial success under their own name was limited, the group provided the backbone to sessions by Otis Redding, Sam And Dave, Wilson

Pickett, Carla Thomas and many others, and were the pulsebeat to countless classic records. Axton, the son of Stax co-founder Estelle, later fronted the Packers, who had a hit with 'Hole In The Wall' (1965). The single, released on Pure Soul, featured a not-inconspicuous MGs. Line-ups bearing the Mar-Keys' name continued to record despite the desertion of most of the original members. Nix later became part of the Delaney And Bonnie/Leon Russell axis while Charlie Freeman was later part of the Dixie Flyers, one of the last traditional house bands. Both he and Axton died in the early 70s, victims, respectively, of heroin and alcohol abuse. Jackson, Love and Newman, meanwhile, continued the Mar-Keys' legacy with releases on Stax and elsewhere, while simultaneously forging a parallel career as the Memphis Horns.

Mara

This Australian group was formerly known as Tensey's Fancy. Danny Thompson (double bass), had earlier been a member of the group. His place was taken by Steve Elphick. The group recorded one album as Tansey's Fancy before changing their name. This new line-up comprised James Llewelyn Kiek (bouzouki, guitar, bass), Jim Denly (flute, alto-saxophone, darrabukka, denleyphone), Mike Haughton (recorder, tenor, soprano saxophone, vocals) and Mara Kiek (vocals, tapan, darrabukka, tambourine). Mara have adopted a highly original style encompassing a whole range of musical influences, including songs and tunes from France, Persia, Greece and Macedonia. Whether performing the 15th-century ballad 'Riturnella' or a more contemporary song, the group successfully displays a clever marriage of European music and jazz influences.

Marathons

The brief history of the Marathons is shrouded in mystery and confusion. Long thought to be a pseudonym for the Olympics, the US R&B group that had recorded 'Western Movies' in 1958, the Marathons was actually a pseudonym for the Vibrations, a Los Angeles vocal group who had a 1961 dance hit with 'The Watusi', and in a previous incarnation, as the Jayhawks who hit the US singles charts in 1956 with 'Stranded In The Jungle'. The convoluted story of the Marathons' only hit, 1961's 'Peanut Butter', is that the Olympics' record company, Arvee, needed a new release from the group while they were on the road. In the Olympics' place, Arvee hired the Vibrations to record 'Peanut Butter', a virtual soundalike of the Olympics' own '(Baby) Hully Gully'. 'Peanut Butter' reached number 20 on Arvee, but when the Vibrations' own label discovered that its group had been moonlighting, it took over distribution of the record, issuing it on both the Chess and Argo labels. With that decision, the career of the non-existent Marathons came to an end. However, an attempt by Arvee to cash in on the success of the group resulted in a bogus version of the Marathons, along with an album and a series of single releases, including 'C. Percy Mercy Of Scotland Yard' and 'Tight Sweater'.

Marauders

Formed in Stoke-on-Trent, England, this superior beat group enjoyed a minor hit in 1963 with 'That's What I Want'. Penned by the prolific Carter And Lewis team, the song boasted an effective hookline, while the quartet's understated, acoustic-based interpretation invoked that of contemporaries, the Merseybeats. When a promising follow-up, 'Always On My Mind', failed to chart, the Marauders tried to redress the balance with two established stage favourites. Their version of Little Richard's 'Lucille' boasted an impressive guitar solo, while its coupling, 'Little Egypt', is arguably the finest British reading of a much-covered classic. The single, sadly, failed to become a hit and the Marauders broke up without realizing their full potential.

Marbles

Trevor Gordan (b. 5 May 1948) and Graham Bonnet (b. 12 December 1947) were cousins from the UK seaside town of Skegness, Yorkshire. The former had moved to Australia, where he worked as a compere and recorded with the Bee Gees. It was this connection which brought Gordan to the attention of manager Robert Stigwood, who agreed to sign the duo when they formed in England in 1968. By further coincidence, Bonnet was a distant cousin of the Gibb brothers. With a name provided by Barry Gibb and a song written by the Bee Gees, the group had an excellent chance of success, and so it proved. The powerful 'Only One Woman' was a Top 10 UK hit in the autumn of 1968, but the group could only scrape the charts once more with the prophetically titled, 'The Walls Fell Down'. In 1979, Bonnet joined Ritchie Blackmore's Rainbow as lead vocalist.

Marc And The Mambas

Formed by Marc Almond (b. Peter Marc Almond, 9 July 1956, Southport, Lancashire, England), Marc And The Mambas was a pseudonym that the singer employed for his more arcane and adventurous work. Weary of the restrictions that came with his pop star role in Soft Cell, the Mambas project enabled him to attempt more daring and original ideas without compromise. With the assistance of Annie Hogan, Almond completed Untitled in which he unveiled spirited revivals of material by artists such as Lou Reed and Jacques Brel. By 1983, Almond was plunging far deeper into the Marc And The Mambas project, despite the continued success of Soft Cell. This phase culminated in the release of a double album, Torment And Toreros. This was unquestionably Almond's most extreme and personal recording, full of melodrama with a burningly revealing glimpse into the singer's darker side. When the album received a poor review in one music paper, Almond was so despondent and incensed that he announced his retirement. What that comment actually meant was the imminent dissolution of Marc And The Mambas and a final return to Soft Cell. When they, too, collapsed at the end of 1983, Almond embarked on a solo career, although his first post-Soft Cell recording, Vermin In Ermine was credited to Marc And The Willing Sinners and featured several musicians who had joined in the Mambas experiment.

Marcellino, Muzzy

b. San Francisco, California, USA. Marcellino studied guitar and violin before joining the Lofner-Harris dance band at the Hotel St. Francis. Among the audience on one occasion was Ted Fio Rito, who recruited Marcellino for a six-year period as his guitarist and featured vocalist. This period saw him appear in films such as The Sweetheart Of Sigma Chi, Broadway Gondolier and Twenty Million Sweethearts as part of Rito's entourage. He launched his own bandleading career in 1938 in San Francisco, with a band who included Gloria De Haven as female accompaniment to his own vocals (he was also a famous 'whistler', appearing on several records and commercials in this role). His group made their name on the west coast circuit, playing ballrooms, hotels and amusement parks. However, by the mid-40s there was not enough work to sustain a full orchestra and its size was reduced for engagements around San Francisco, Las Vegas and Reno. In 1950 he took up a career in radio, as musical director for the Art Linkletter Show. He remained there until the show's close in 1969, before returning to leading small combos in private party engagements.

Marcels

The Marcels were one of several doo-wop-influenced American vocal groups to achieve success in the early 60s, despite the passing of the genre's golden age. Cornelius 'Nini' Harp (lead singer), Ronald 'Bingo' Mundy (tenor), Fred Johnson (bass), Gene Bricker (tenor) and Richard Knauss (baritone), all native to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, USA, achieved fame for their distinctive version of Richard Rodgers/Lorenz Hart's classic 'Blue Moon', previously a UK Top 10 hit for Elvis Presley in 1956, which topped both the US and UK charts in 1961. Johnson's distinctive bass introduction to the song has remained one of the most enduring vocal phrases of the time. The quartet scored a further US Top 10 hit that year with 'Heartaches', but its personnel was unstable, with Allen Johnson (d. 28 September 1995) replacing Knauss, and Walt Maddox replacing Bricker. Mundy walked out on the group during this same period, which did little to prepare them for the ever-changing trends prevalent during the early 60s, and eventually undermined the Marcels' long-term aspirations.

March Of The Falsettos

The second in a series of musicals with music and lyrics by William Finn, all of which began Off Broadway at the experimental and innovative centre, Playwrights Horizons. The first of what is sometimes called 'The Marvin Trilogy', In Trousers, played for 16 performances from 26 March 1985 at the Promenade Theatre in New York, and has rarely been presented since. The third, and last, in the trilogy is entitled Falsettoland, and that piece is sometimes combined with March Of The Falsettos under the title of Falsettos.

March Of The Falsettos, a piece which William Finn himself has called 'a passionate work about being scared to death of love', gave a total of 298 performances at Playwrights Horizons and the West Side Arts Centre from April 1981. It was set in 1979, and told of a Jewish father, Marvin (Michael Rupert), who discovers that he is homosexual, and leaves his wife, Trina (Alison Fraser) and young son, Jason (James Kushner), to go and live with his male lover, Whizzer Brown (Stephen Bogardus). In a neat twist, Marvin's wife marries his psychiatrist, Mendel (Chip Zien), and he is left alone. What has been called 'the most powerful and emotional score of the 80s, (there is no spoken dialogue) included 'Four Jews In A Room Bitching', 'This Had Better Stop', 'The Games I Play', 'The Chess Game, 'I Never Wanted To Love You', 'Trina's Song', 'This Had Better Come To A Stop', 'Love Is Blind', 'My Father's A Homo', and 'The Thrill Of First Love'.

Falsettoland, which opened in 1990, begins two years after March Of The Falsettos. Rupert, Bogardus and Zien recreated their original roles, and added to the cast was a doctor, Charlotte (Heather MacRae), and her lesbian lover, Cordelia (Janet Metz). After the excruciatingly difficult adjustments that all the characters had been forced to make in the previous show, the early mood in Falsettoland is one of 'whimsical goofiness', but that changes swiftly when Whizzer is diagnosed as having a deadly disease soon to be identified as AIDS. The family gather round his bedside, and the show culminates in young Jason's bar mitzvah in Whizzer's hospital room. The songs included 'Falsettoland', 'Year Of The Child', 'The Baseball Game', 'Everyone Hates His Parents', 'What More Can I Say?', 'Something Bad

Is Happening', 'Days Like This', 'Unlikely Lovers,' 'You Gotta Die Sometime', and 'What Would I Do?'. Opinions as to the two shows' merit and value varied widely. To many, March Of The Falsettos was 'not just a musical about gay life in modern times, but a masterly feat of comic storytelling and a visionary musical theatre work', while others dismissed both March Of The Falsettos and Falsettoland as 'overrated Off Broadway cult items'. Falsettoland won Tony Awards for best book (Finn and James Lapine, who also directed) and score, and ran for a total of 245 performances. After over a decade on the Fringe, Finn and Lapine's audacious and original concept finally graduated to Broadway in April 1992, when March Of The Falsettos and Falsettoland were presented under the title of Falsettos at the John Golden Theatre for nearly 500 performances, and was rewarded with Tony Awards for book and score. A London production of March Of The Falsettos, with Simon Green, Paddy Navin, Barry James, Martin Smith, and Damien Walker, played 29 performances at the Albery Theatre in 1987.

March Violets

This rock band with definite 'gothic' leanings was formed in England during 1982. Loz Elliott (bass) met Simon Denbigh (vocals) in Leeds, and the latter recruited an old friend, Tom Ashton (guitar). Together with hastily recruited female singer, Rosie Garland, they entered the studios to record an EP that brought them subsequent exposure on BBC disc jockey John Peel's show. After further releases on the fashionable Merciful Release label, they acquired the services of Travis when he replaced the original drum machine in late 1984. Vocalist Cleo Murray replaced Garland for their 'Snakedance' single in 1983, and then Denbigh left owing to a 'mutual decision' to form the Batfish Boys. By this time the band behind her only retained Tom from the original line-up, with Loz the latest recruit on bass. In 1986, they signed to London Records, releasing 'Turn To The Sky', which just failed to scrape the charts. By this time they were trying to shake off the taint of the 'goth' tag, emphasizing that their influences were bands like Z.Z. Top, Led Zeppelin and the Pretenders. Critics used Cleo's blonde hair as justification for comparisons to Blondie.

March, Little Peggy

b. Margaret Battavio, 7 March 1948, Lansdale, Pennsylvania, USA. A child prodigy, at the age of five, March was a regular cast member of Rex Trailer's television show. She subsequently won a talent contest, before securing a recording deal with RCA Records. The singer secured her sole million-selling disc in 1963 when 'I Will Follow Him' topped the US charts. At the age of 15 she became the youngest person at that time to reach number 1. This memorable song had been adapted from 'Chariot', a gold disc in France for British vocalist Petula Clark the previous year. March enjoyed other minor chart entries, most notably with 'Hello Heartache, Goodbye Love', her sole UK hit, but she is forever linked to her major success. Moving to Germany in the late 60s, she sang frequently on television shows; as a songwriter, she is credited to two European number 1 hits: 'When The Rain Begins To Fall (Jermaine Jackson and Pia Zadora) and 'Manuel Goodbye' (Audrey Landers). She returned to the USA in the 80s. She performed 'I Will Follow Him' in the 1987 John Waters film, Hairspray, a tongue-in-cheek homage to pre-Beatles 60s America.

b. 30 April 1930, Youngstown, Ohio, USA. Marchan was a New Orleans entertainer who had moderate success both as a rock 'n' roller and soul singer. His long-time career as a female impersonator reflected a time-honoured tradition in black entertainment, originating in medicine shows. He began performing in Ohio as a comic drag singer, and in 1954 made his way to New Orleans as a member of a drag-queen troupe called the Powder Box Revue. Also in that year, he made his first records for California-based Aladdin Records. In 1957, he joined Huey 'Piano' Smith and the Clowns as lead vocalist and, with his distinctive vocals and pianist Smith's boogie-woogie stylings, recorded a succession of infectious rock 'n' roll hits, notably 'Rocking Pneumonia And The Boogie Woogie Flu' and 'Don't You Just Know It'. Marchan left the Clowns in 1960 after leaping onto the charts with a melodramatic version of 'There Is Something On Your Mind' (number 1 R&B and number 31 pop), a cover version of Big Jay McNeely's hit of the previous year. Marchan's version made an impact through its impassioned recitation involving sexual jealousy and murder, lifted from an earlier New Orleans hit, Larry Darnell's 'I'll Get Along Somehow' from 1949. Marchan had a moderate hit in 1966 with 'Shake Your Tambourine' (number 14 R&B). He continued to record into the mid-70s, but with no further success. In-between singing engagements, Marchan worked as a female impersonator on New Orleans' Bourbon Street, and was a master of ceremonies at many clubs.

Marcus Garvey - Burning Spear

One of the most distinctive and original talents in the history of reggae, Burning Spear - né Winston Rodney - was launched internationally with this striking album.

His deep, preaching vocal is immediately arresting, a characteristic enhanced by a dense and brooding accompaniment. Taking cues from Rastafarian chants, Spear subtly builds an intensity, locking each track into a seamless whole. His knowledge of black history brings a chilling realism to the album's lyrics, resulting in what is incontestably a milestone in the development of reggae. Listening to it is an education itself. The CD reissue has the bonus of the dub version Garvey's Ghost.

b. 18 September 1939, New York, USA. Marcus studied at the Berklee College Of Music in Boston (1959-61) before joining Stan Kenton's Orchestra in 1963. From 1967-70 he played with the Herbie Mann Group as well as for bands as diverse as those of Woody Herman and the Jazz Composers Orchestra. In the early 70s, he played with Larry Coryell (1971-73) before forming his own Count's Rock Band (1973-75). He joined Buddy Rich in 1975, and played with him regularly over the next 10 years. His tenor playing blends R&B stylings with the influence of John Coltrane in much the way Sal Nistico, another Rich tenor, does: it is a style which can punch its way through the ebullient backings of the big band in full swing.

Mardi Gras

Pop crooner Pat Boone forged his career by recording antiseptic cover versions of R&B hits. He became the clean-cut face of rock 'n' roll, acceptable to a moral majority fearful of black musicians and the ebullient talent of, for example, Elvis Presley and Jerry Lee Lewis. Boone was thus quickly embraced by Hollywood, but his ventures into pop films proved equally insubstantial. Mardi Gras, released in 1958, co-starred aspiring singers Gary Crosby (the son of Bing Crosby) and Tommy Sands, the first husband of Nancy Sinatra. Boone portrays a cadet who wins a date with a movie star; the film's title is inspired by footage of the New Orleans festival which provides momentary relief from this anodyne plot. The soundtrack includes the risible 'A Fiddle, A Rifle, An Axe And A Bible', the last of which Boone grasped in real life when he opted to record religious material.

b. Paul Joseph Mares, 15 June 1900, New Orleans, Louisiana, USA, d. 18 August 1949. Mares began playing trumpet as a boy and although self-taught, he quickly gained sufficient expertise to work with musicians such as Leon Roppolo and Tom Brown. Shortly after the end of World War I he moved to Chicago, playing in several bands and then helping to form the Friars Society Orchestra. The Friars included Georg Brunis, Elmer Schoebel and Roppolo and quickly became popular both in clubs and on record. In 1923 the band was renamed the New Orleans Rhythm Kings, a name reused by Mares and Roppolo in 1925 in New Orleans. Mares recorded in later years, again using the NORK name; however, from the mid-20s onwards he played only part-time. Through his short-lived popularity alone, Mares helped spread the jazz word to audiences and also to fellow trumpeters who took heed of his crisp playing.

b. 21 April 1939, Bronx, New York, USA. Maresca's one hit was the rousing rock 'n' roll tune, 'Shout! Shout! (Knock Yourself Out),' from 1962, which went to number 6 on the US chart. With great support from the vocal group, Del Satins, Maresca created a piece that epitomized the spirit of early rock 'n' roll with its sense of fun and enthusiasm for dance. But he was mainly a behind-the-scenes talent, writing and producing acts for the Laurie label in New York City. The songs he composed included 'No One Knows' for Dion And The Belmonts; 'Runaround Sue' and 'The Wanderer' for Dion, and 'Runaround' for the Regents. Most of the acts he worked with were hard-hitting, Italian-American, doo-wop groups who came from the Bronx, notably the Belmonts, Regents, Camelots, Del Satins, Nino And The Ebbtides, and the Five Discs. In the UK, 'Shout! Shout' (Knock Yourself Out)' was remade in 1982 by Rocky Sharpe And The Replays, who took it to number 19.

b. Margaret O'Donnell, 6 February 1951, Kincasslagh, County Donegal, Eire. Influenced by Patsy Cline and while still at school, she began her own musical career in 1964 as a member of a local showband, the Keynotes. Her first success came with her recordings of 'Bonny Irish Boy' and 'Road By The River' in 1968, which led to appearances on major television shows. In the early 70s, she formed her own band, Country Folk, topped the Irish charts with an old Irish ballad, 'I'll Forgive And I'll Try To Forget', and registered a very successful appearance at the 1972 Wembley Festival. Margo was the victim of a road accident in the mid-70s, which saw her hospitalized for months and inactive for over a year. In 1976, she fronted the Country Blue Boys, toured extensively and enjoyed a major duet hit, 'Hello Mr Peters', with Larry Cunningham. Since that time, she has continued to entertain audiences, not only in the UK but also in the USA and Australia. Her major achievements include appearances at Carnegie Hall, New York and London's Royal Albert Hall, plus a very successful series on RTE Television. In 1983, her younger brother, Daniel O'Donnell, joined her band and gained some experience before launching his own solo career. In 1988, after joining the Ritz label, Margo recorded 'Two's Company' with Daniel. In 1989, she was honoured, in Kincasslagh, at an event that included a surprise appearance from her brother, in recognition of her 25 years in showbusiness. In 1991, she formed a new band, Sweet Dreams, which featured John Glenn as her co-vocalist, but she later reverted to using her original band name of Country Folk. In 1994, Ritz released New Beginnings, which included her hit single 'The Eyes Of My Child', as well as a new version of her old hit 'I'll Forgive And Try To Forget', but in 1995, she joined the Hazel label. Once asked for a comment on her successful longevity in the business, she is quoted as saying, 'Keep your head very level and stay away from the drink at all costs.' A very accomplished entertainer, she has never strayed far from her early influences, in either her concert appearances or her recorded output of almost 30 albums, which has led many people to affectionately call Margo 'The Queen of Country and Irish'.

Margolin, Bob

b. 9 May 1949, Brookline, Massachusetts, USA. Margolin's right of passage to the blues came through Chuck Berry, who sparked his interest in the guitar and introduced him to the music of the classic Muddy Waters band. After working in local blues groups, Margolin worked alongside Luther 'Georgia Boy' Johnson, who had been in Waters' band during the 60s. In 1973, he received the call to join Muddy Waters and played with the band until the early 80s, appearing on seven albums for Chess and Blue Sky and backing Waters on his appearance in The Last Waltz, the Band's farewell concert film. He had begun to front his own band by that time, and when Waters died in 1983 he took up a full-time solo career. Now calling himself Steady Rollin' Bob Margolin, his first two albums pay more than ample tribute to his former boss and to post-war Chicago blues, and feature men such as Jimmy Rogers, Pinetop Perkins and Willie Smith. Down In The Alley, with guest vocalists Nappy Brown and John Brim, broadened its perspective, but in his live performances Margolin remains a sincere recreator of his primary influences.

Margolis, Kitty

b. California, USA. Raised in San Francisco's Bay Area, Margolis was surrounded by music from early childhood. At the age of 12 she taught herself to play guitar and played and sang in folk-rock and blues groups through high school. She studied at Harvard University and San Francisco State where she turned to jazz under the tutelage of saxophonist John Handy II. She formed her own groups and often performed at San Francisco's Keystone Korner playing and singing with numerous visiting jazzmen including Stan Getz, Dexter Gordon, Art Blakey and Cedar Walton. In the early 90s, Margolis formed her own recording company in collaboration with fellow singer Madeline Eastman and her first releases alerted the jazz world to the fact that an important new vocalist had arrived on the scene. Margolis's second album reached the Top 10 on US radio jazz charts and features guest saxophonist Joe Henderson. Her third set features Roy Hargrove and R&B veteran Charles Brown. Singing with great zest and vitality, Margolis brings to her work a well-defined sense of purpose and a total commitment to jazz. Her voice is a rich contralto and she uses it with warmth and wit, intelligently interpreting lyrics and sensitively observing the intentions of the songwriters. She has also written a number of lyrics, including those for Walton's 'Firm Roots' and Wayne Shorter's 'Ancient Footprints'. She frequently writes her own arrangements, drawing from the jazz and standards repertoires. Widely praised by critics and fellow musicians, including Jon Hendricks and Lionel Hampton, Margolis is an important singer for the 90s.

Mariano, Charlie

b. 12 November 1923, Boston, Massachusetts, USA. One of many fine students to emerge from Boston's Berklee College Of Music, Mariano gained most of his early experience in and around his home town. Among the musicians with whom he played in the formative years of the late 40s and early 50s were Herb Pomeroy, Nat Pierce, Gigi Gryce, Quincy Jones and Jackie Byard. In 1953, he joined Stan Kenton for a two-year spell and then worked in Los Angeles with Shelly Manne. By 1958 he was back in Boston, this time teaching at Berklee College Of Music. The following year he was briefly with Kenton again, then met, married and formed a band with Toshiko Akiyoshi. This association lasted into the mid-60s, with part of that time spent in Japan. During the 60s Mariano also played with Charles Mingus, spent more time teaching at Berklee, travelled extensively in the far-east, and led his own jazz-rock group. In the 70s and 80s Mariano lived mostly in Europe, leading bands with Philip Catherine and others, continuing to explore eastern music and playing many kinds of fusion music with, among other groups, the United Jazz And Rock Ensemble and Eberhard Weber's Colours. Throughout his career, Mariano has displayed a striking ability to encompass many diverse musical forms and incorporate them into jazz without losing the emotional intensity of his early bebop-orientated playing style. Through his continued exploration of ethnic musical forms, particularly those of eastern origin, Mariano has established a secure and significant place as a truly international jazz artist.

Mariano, Torcuato

b. 1963, Buenos Aires, Argentina. A powerful and talented advocate of Brazilian instrumental jazz, Mariano moved to that country from his native Argentina at the age of 14. By this time already a fluent, self-taught performer, under the tutelage of guitarist Claudio Gabis he studied music theory and harmony. By 1980 he was a regular at various night clubs, performing alongside bossa nova legends including Johnny Alt. However, his other influences were drawn from a wide musical vocabulary, and he delighted in mixing his South American heritage with the rock, blues, jazz and funk traditions of the USA. Numbering Santana, Pat Metheny, Jeff Beck, Ivan Luis and Djavan among his primary influences, he was pleased to oblige when the opportunity arose to accompany the last named pair in the studio. They were impressed enough by his emerging technique to invite Mariano to join their respective touring bands. Further sessions in Brazil's music capital, Rio de Janeiro, confirmed his new-found status, and brought him into harness with names such as Sergio Mendez, Xuxa, Cal Costa and Leo Gandelman. The first to use his own compositions was saxophonist Gandelman, before he teamed up with lyricist Claudio Rabello to produce a powerful songwriting partnership, benefiting the careers of Xuxa, Angelica, Rosana and others. These successes awoke the interest of VISOM Records, and they duly released a debut solo album, Paradise Station. Written, arranged and co-produced by Mariano, it became a welcome addition to the artist's growing legacy and furthered Brazil's discourse with other musical forms and countries. His growing professionalism in producing and composing material with Brazil's major record companies was reflected on Last Look. The most poignant track, 'Everything I Couldn't Say With Words', saw him combine his guitar with the flute of Marcelo Martins. Just as affecting was the hip hop-based 'In The Rhythm Of My Heart'.

Marie, Donna

Donna Marie was born in the UK, although her formative years were spent in Jamaica. It was while living in Jamaica that she demonstrated her talent singing lead in her local Pentecostal Church choir. After leaving the choir she joined a band performing lead and backing vocals. By 1989 Marie began recording as a soloist with the Pioneers, heralding her emergence in the UK as a lovers rock singer. She released her first single, 'On The Outside', which was a cover version of the theme to the Australian soap opera Prisoner Cell Block H. She then released four neglected albums with the group before concentrating on sessions with Delroy Wilson, which resulted in the enticing 'Dance With Me'. Marie maintained a credible profile within the industry for a number of years, including notable sessions with vocalist Don Campbell. By July 1994 her performance at the Intermezzo nightspot in London inspired Jeff Peart of the Boiler Room production team to sign the singer. With Peart and the crew she recorded Now, which featured the chart-topping song 'Think Twice', a version of the Celine Dion hit. Marie's interpretation of the song sold particularly well in South America, topped the Italian charts and held the number 1 position in the reggae charts. In 1995 she continued to maintain a high profile, appearing alongside Bunny Wailer at his prestigious concert in Finsbury Park, London, as well as performing with Beres Hammond in the UK and Shabba Ranks in Jamaica. In 1997 Marie toured Brazil and other parts of South America, where her arrival was greeted with rapturous enthusiasm. She featured on television shows, the streets were adorned with banners detailing her tour and her face appeared on the front of the daily nationals. The unprecedented welcome showed Donna Marie as the Queen of Reggae in South American eyes.

Marie, Kelly

b. Jacqueline McKinnon, 23 October 1957, Paisley, Scotland. The disco/Hi-NRG singer Kelly Marie won the Opportunity Knocks talent competition on British television at the age of 15, but it was in France that she first enjoyed any success on vinyl when 'Who's The Lady With My Man?' was awarded a gold disc. However, 'Feels Like I'm In Love' topped the UK singles chart in 1980. The song, written by former Mungo Jerry leader Ray Dorset, had originally been intended for Elvis Presley who died before he could record it. Minor hits followed with 'Loving Just For Fun', 'Hot Love' and 'Love Trial', before Kelly's chart career came to an end. She made a part-time return to the club circuit in the 90s generally to appreciative gay Hi-NRG audiences, such as those at the G.A.Y. venue. Her last record was a cover of Billy Fury's 'Halfway To Paradise' in 1989.

Marie, Teena

b. Mary Christine Brocker, 1957, Santa Monica, California, USA. A singer, songwriter, multi-instrumentalist, arranger and producer, Teena Marie is one of the few white artists to sustain a consistent career in the US soul market. Spotted by Motown Records' Berry Gordy in the 70s, he linked her up with funk star and labelmate Rick James, and her early career strongly reflected their joint influences. The highly commercial Wild And Peaceful saw her backed by James and the Stone City Band on a set that included their hit duet, 'I'm A Sucker For Your Love'. She returned the favour by partnering James on 'Fire And Desire' on his Street Songs album in 1981. Afterwards, Marie took increasing control of her career and songwriting, singing both ballads and funk. Both 'I Need Your Lovin'' and 'Square Biz' reached the Top 20 of the US Billboard charts in 1980 and 1981, respectively. In the UK, 'Behind The Groove', a surprise disco smash at number 6 in the singles chart, led to confusion in public minds over her and the similarly titled Kelly Marie (it also, accidentally, picked up on the prevalent UK disco trend for songs with 'Groove' in the title). However, her greatest success followed her move to Epic Records, which some saw as an assertion of her independence, with the number 4-peaking US hit, 'Lovergirl'. Afterwards, her chart career declined. Emerald City was a funky outing, notable particularly for Stevie Ray Vaughan's guitar solo on 'You So Heavy'. Demonstrating her talent for modernizing her technique with the advent of each new instalment in R&B's development, Ivory was produced by Soul II Soul's Jazzie B.

Marillion

Front-runners of the short-lived UK progressive rock revival of the early 80s, Marillion survived unfavourable comparisons with Genesis to become a popular melodic rock group, notching up several successful singles plucked from their grandiose concept albums. The group formed in Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire, originally as Silmarillion, a name taken from the novel by J.R.R. Tolkien. The group featured Doug Irvine (bass), Mick Pointer (b. 22 July 1956; drums), Steve Rothery (b. 25 November 1959, Brampton, South Yorkshire, England; guitar) and Brian Jelliman (keyboards). After recording the instrumental demo, 'The Web', the band recruited Fish (b. Derek William Dick, 25 April 1958, Dalkeith, Edinburgh, Scotland; vocals) and Diz Minnett (bass), and began building a strong following through almost continuous gigging. Before recording their debut, 'Market Square Heroes', Jelliman and Minnitt were replaced by Mark Kelly (b. 9 April 1961; keyboards) and Pete Trewavas (b. 15 January 1959, Middlesbrough, Cleveland, England; bass). Fish wrote all the lyrics for Script For A Jester's Tear and became the focal point of the group, often appearing on stage in garish make-up, echoing the style, both visually and vocally, of Genesis's singer Peter Gabriel. In 1983 Pointer was sacked and replaced for brief stints by Andy Ward of Camel, then John Marter and Jonathan Mover, before the arrival of Ian Mosley (b. 16 June 1953, London, England), a veteran of many progressive rock bands, including Curved Air and the Gordon Giltrap band. Marillion's second album embraced a more straightforward hard rock sound and yielded two hits, 'Assassin' and 'Punch And Judy'. 1985's Misplaced Childhood was Marillion's biggest-selling album - surprisingly so, as it featured an elaborate concept, being virtually one continuous piece of music based largely on Fish's childhood experiences. 'Kayleigh', a romantic ballad extracted from this mammoth work, reached number 2 in the UK charts. By 1988 Fish was becoming increasingly dissatisfied with the group's musical development and left to pursue a solo career. The live double album Thieving Magpie was his last recorded contribution, and provided a fitting overview of the group's past successes. Marillion acquired Steve Hogarth (b. Doncaster, Yorkshire, England), formerly of the Europeans, who made his debut on Seasons End, proving himself equal to the daunting task of fronting a well-established band. The 90s have found Marillion as popular as ever, with the ghost of Fish receding into the background. With Hogarth fronting the band, consistent success has continued, including chart status for 'Sympathy', 'The Hollow Man' and 'Alone Again In The Lap Of Luxury'. Afraid Of Sunlight tackled the subject of fame, with references to the recently deceased Nirvana vocalist, Kurt Cobain, John Lennon and O.J. Simpson, the former American footballer who at the time was on trial for murder. Unusually, for a band rooted in the progressive rock subculture, a genre dominated by the album, Marillion continue to be distinguished as much for their singles as their album releases.

Marilyn

b. Peter Robinson, 3 November 1962, Kingston, Jamaica, West Indies. Marilyn launched his UK singing career on the coat-tails of his friend Boy George as England's second cross-dressing pop star. Much photographed in the teenage press, he became a major celebrity in 1983 with the release of 'Calling Your Name', which became a number 4 hit in the UK charts (many critics suggested it sounded like a Culture Club offcut). The tabloids turned on him with barely-concealed venom. As Marilyn complained later 'You just expect that, after Danny La Rue and Quentin Crisp and God knows who else, that people would be able to accept someone with a bit of make-up. England is like such a bunch of old drag-queens anyway. If you pick up a history book . . . I'm quite tame compared to a lot of people.' Afterwards, however, a succession of further singles for Mercury Records attained ever decreasing chart positions. The gospel-flavoured 'Cry And Be Free' reached 31 in February 1984. Exactly a year later 'You Don't Love Me' reached UK number 40. His record company dispatched him to Detroit, Michigan, to work with producer Don Was of Was (Not Was). However, when he arrived there he found nobody had paid for a room for him to stay in. Without personal funds, he cut his famous blonde hair (which gave him his name) and ceased to wear make-up, abandoning the image which had brought him his initial success. Despite this, 'Baby You Left Me' (one of two tracks recorded with Was) failed to re-ignite his career.

Marilyn Manson

Controversial by design rather than accident, Florida group Marilyn Manson were formed in 1990 with the express intention of 'exploring the limits of censorship'. In keeping with this image, they were the first band to be signed to Trent Reznor (Nine Inch Nails) and John A. Malm Jr's Nothing label. Support slots with the likes of Suicidal Tendencies, Meat Beat Manifesto, Murphy's Law and the Genitorturers brought them considerable local recognition, in the form of the 1993 'Slammy' awards (taking the song of the year nomination for 'Dope Hat') and sundry other baubles (not least, short-heading Gloria Estefan for the Best Local Musician category in South Florida Magazine). Reznor also acted as guest musician and executive producer on the group's 1994 debut album, with half of the tracks mixed at the house of the infamous Tate murders by the Manson family (where Nine Inch Nails also recorded). The group comprises Mr Manson (b. Brian Warner; vocals, tape loops), Daisy Berkowitz (guitar), Twiggy Ramirez (bass), Madonna Wayne Gacy (Hammond organ, samples) and Sara Lee Lucas (drums). Berkowitz departed in June 1996 (he later sued the band for unpaid royalties and breach of contract) and was replaced by Zim Zum. Antichrist Superstar included the American hit single 'The Beautiful People', and reached number 3 on the Billboard album charts.

Marine Girls

This UK quartet was formed by four Hertfordshire schoolfriends: Jane Fox (b. *c.*1963; bass, vocals), her sister Alice (b. *c.*1966; vocals, percussion), Tracey Thorn (b. 26 September 1962; guitar, vocals) and the soon-to-depart Gina (percussion, vocals). The Marine Girls recorded their home-made Beach Party in a garden shed. Musically competent, within limitations, their lyrics showed remarkable strength and eloquence in dealing with the age-old problems of difficult boyfriends, new love and loneliness, often using the symbolic context of the sea and all its mysteries. With initial encouragement from the Television Personalities, the album was released by the Whaam! label and was later picked up by Cherry Red Records, who signed the group for a second album. By this time, Thorn had left school to go to Hull University, where she struck up a romantic and artistic relationship with Cherry Red stablemate Ben Watt. They recorded the Cole Porter song 'Night And Day' under the name of Everything But The Girl. Thorn had also released a solo album in 1982, A Distant Shore, which was well received by the critics and public. Pursuing a parallel career as a Marine Girl and as a duettist with Watt at first proved comfortable, but with the increasing popularity and media attention of Everything But The Girl, an amicable split with the Fox sisters came in late 1983, after the release of the successful Lazy Ways. Continuing their seaside/oceanic fixation, the sisters formed Grab Grab The Haddock, which produced two fine EPs on CherrGrab Grab The Haddocky Red before folding in 1986. The line-up of was notable for the inclusion of Lester Noel, who later joined Norman Cook in Beats International.

Mariners

This four-piece gospel group consisted of two white and two black singers and was formed in 1942 at the Coast Guard in Manhattan Beach in New York, USA. The group consisted of Thomas Lockard, James O. Lewis, Nathaniel Dickerson and Martin Karl (who had previously performed with the Chicago Opera). The group toured the New York State area and visited several Pacific force bases during 1945. Radio broadcasts brought them to the attention of Arthur Godfrey, and they were regulars on his radio show for several years after the war. They recorded 'On The Island Of Oahu' for Columbia Records in 1949, but their first hit was 'Sometime' in 1950. The run of successes continued with 'They Call The Wind Mariah' and 'I See The Moon', their last and biggest hit, at number 14 in 1952. Still best known through their appearances on Godfrey's shows, they moved to the Cadence label in the late 50s, to diminishing acclaim. By the advent of the 50s more contemporary outfits had seized their mantle, and they disappeared from both the charts and the New York radio scene which had been their most effective medium.

Marino, Frank

b. 22 August 1954, Canada. This formidable guitarist obsessively based his style on Jimi Hendrix. Forming Mahogany Rush in 1970 (later known as Frank Marino And Mahogany Rush), he decided to work solely under his own name from 1980 onwards. Playing the Heavy Metal Holocaust Festival in Port Vale during 1981, he was the surprise success of the day, upstaging headliners Triumph with a truly dazzling display of guitar pyrotechnics and showmanship. The Power Of Rock 'N' Roll was the first release under Marino's own name and featured a more aggressive style, coupled with lyrical references to sensitive social and political issues of the time. Juggernaut built on this success, but increased the tempo and introduced a greater degree of melody to the material. A four-year break from recording ensued, owing to business and management setbacks, before Full Circle appeared in 1986. A stunning double live album was issued two years later, but nothing further appeared until a single-track contribution to the Guitar Speak Vol.2 album was released in 1990.

Marion

Macclesfield, England quintet comprising Jaime Harding (b. *c.*1975; vocals), Anthony Grantham (guitar), Phil Cunningham (guitar), Julian Phillips (bass) and Murad Mousa (drums), who created an immediate stir in 1994 with the release of two independent singles ('Violent Men' and 'The Only Way'). This brace of fierce, anthemic songs, together with the fact that they were represented by ex-Smiths manager Joe Moss, helped ensure a frenzied A&R chase in the summer of that year, which was eventually concluded at the In The City seminar in September when they were signed by London Records. However, there was a degree of longevity to Marion's pursuits that might not have been suggested by their average age of 20 - Harding, Cunningham and Grantham had been in youthful bands together for nine years before this current incarnation. Their new label sent them to work with Stephen Street, provoking further Smiths comparisons, which were hardly deflated by the news that Morrissey had attended two of their early gigs (he subsequently invited them to support him on UK dates). Their single 'Sleep' was subsequently used in a Citröen advertisement, and was followed by the debut album, which was not entirely successful in capturing the band's live sound. Following Harding's recovery from a sustained period of drug abuse, the band recorded their second album, The Program, with Johnny Marr on production duties.

Marionette

Formed in the early 80s in Islington, London, Marionette were a four-piece group in the tradition of the New York Dolls and Faces. The main strength of the band, fronted by vocalist Ray Zell, along with Dave Veal on guitar, KK (b. Kevin Matthew) on bass and Pig (b. Adam Honey) on drums, was in their live performances, which at times recalled the punk gigs of the mid- to late 70s. Their first release was Provocatively Trashy, a live cassette, after which they ventured into the recording studio for 'My Baby Sucks', which was a proposed single at the time, but did not materialize. By 1985 Zell was making a name for himself as a journalist in the music press, eventually working for Kerrang! magazine where he created the long-running cartoon character, Pandora Peroxide. Heavy Metal Records did release one album by them, but UK glam had long since given way to American imports. Zell revived the band at the request of the Quireboys' Spike, who invited Marionette to open for them at the London Dominion in 1988. Zell now seems content to concentrate on writing. Pig married and moved abroad, and Veal works as a school caretaker. KK worked at Wessex Studios as assistant to Bill Price, and later became a freelance engineer and producer, working with EMF, Catherine Wheel, Nymphs and the Wildhearts.

Marionettes

Based in London, England, this Gothic rock band were formed by singer Sean Cronin in February 1986, and were originally titled the Screaming Marionettes. The full line-up consisted of Paul Newton (drums), Barry Downes (bass; ex-Weapon) and Vile Gold (guitar). After embarking on a tough gigging schedule, the band signed to the record label Lambs To The Slaughter. 'Obsession' was released in April 1988, along with a video made by cult film director David McGillivery. Despite the media paying no attention whatsoever, the Marionettes had no troubling building a live following. 'Goth' audiences had, after all, been largely deserted by old favourites such as the Mission and Cult, whose style the Marionettes revisited, and the band were easily able to attract 1,500 fans to a gig at Hammersmith Palais, London, in August 1988. A second single, 'Like Christabel', made the UK independent charts in July of the following year. Rainer Hensal invited them to record their debut album for his Maze Music label (through Virgin Records). Germany proved to have a great affection for the group, and after playing three festivals under the auspices of the Zillo magazine, the group signed to the inter-connected Mephisto's Mob label. Book Of Shadows, produced by John McGowan (Metallica and Ozzy Osbourne) was released in late 1992, after which they hit the European festival trail, playing shows with Pearl Jam and the Sisters Of Mercy to audiences of over 50,000.

Mark IV

This rock 'n' roll group from Berkhampsted, Hertfordshire, England was formed in 1961, around a nucleus of William Rawlinson and Beverly Brown. However, during 1963 - the exact circumstances are unclear and lost even to the memory of some of the protagonists - members of the group Jimmy Virgo And The Bluejacks seemed to take over Mark IV squeezing the old members out. The line-up evolved into Kenny Pickett (b. 3 September 1947, Ware, Hertfordshire, England; vocals), Eddie Phillips (b. 15 August 1945, Leytonstone, London, England; guitar), Mick Thompson (rhythm guitar), John 'Nobby' Dalton (bass), and Jack Jones (b. Northampton, England; drums). Initially managed by Robert Stigwood, they released two singles on Mercury ('Rock Around The Clock'/'Slow Down' and 'Crazy Country'). Their third single, this time released on Decca Records, was 'Hurt Me If You Will', and offered the first evidence of Phillips' overdriven feedback guitar style - presumed by many commentators to have been influenced by the growth of 'mod' culture. It was during the Mark IV days that Phillips first conceived the idea of playing his guitar with a violin bow after previous attempts with a fret saw had damaged the instrument. 'Work All Day (Sleep All Night)' saw them transfer to Fontana Records, though this too did not become a hit. Mark IV later came under the managerial auspices of Tony Stratton-Smith and on 6 June 1966 played their last gig under that name. Dalton left to join the Kinks, Thompson left the music business completely and the remaining members went on to form Creation.

Mark, Louisa

b. 1960, Shepherds Bush, London, England. Mark first ventured into showbusiness through the regular talent competitions held at the Four Aces Club in London, where she won for 10 consecutive weeks. Competitors would sing over acetates provided by Lloyd Coxsone, who, impressed with her popularity, took her into Gooseberry Studios for a recording session. The result was a cover version of the soul hit by Robert Parker, 'Caught You In A Lie'. With backing provided by Matumbi it was an instant hit, almost breaking through into the pop charts. The second release with Coxsone was 'All My Loving' but it lacked the original winning formula. As Mark was only 15 years old and attending Hammersmith County School at the time, she became a celebrity among the pupils. After leaving school, further releases surfaced, including the Clement Bushay-produced 'Keep It Like It Is', which was later used by Trinity for his hit 'Step It Brother Clem'. Her preference for lyrics relating to infidelity continued unabashed when she released 'Six Sixth Street'. The song, comparable to her debut outing, was beautifully crafted and resulted in another hit. In 1980 Bushay released Markswoman, although Mark felt that the album was rush-released and improperly mixed; she did not record during the following year as a result. By 1982, she had resolved these disagreements and recorded a version of the Jones Girls' 'Mum And Dad', arranged by Sly And Robbie. As one of the forerunners of lovers rock, before the phrase was inaugurated by Dennis Harris, Mark is still held in high esteem, as demonstrated by the popularity of her debut single, which is still played in dancehalls 20 years after its initial release.

Marketts

This Hollywood, California-based instrumental group rose to prominence during the surfing craze of the early 60s. Ben Benay (guitar), Mike Henderson (saxophone), Ray Pohlman (bass), Gene Pello (drums) and Richard Hobriaco, then Tom Hensey (keyboards), enjoyed two minor US hits with 'Surfer's Stomp' and Balboa Blue' (both 1962), before scoring a million-seller the following year with the pulsating 'Out Of Limits'. They secured another US Top 20 entry in 1966 with the then-popular 'Batman Theme', but were usurped by newer styles of Californian music. A unit dubbed the New Marketts surfaced during the 70s, by which point Benay was established in Los Angeles session circles. Pohlman pursued a similar career, working with, among others, Emmylou Harris, while Hensey became Neil Diamond's keyboard player.

Markham, Pigmeat

b. Dewey Markham, 1904, Durham, North Carolina, USA, d. 13 December 1981. Best known as a comedian, Markham began his long career in 1917, dancing in travelling shows. He travelled the southern 'race' circuit with blues singer Bessie Smith and later appeared on burlesque bills with Milton Berle, Red Buttons and Eddie Cantor. By the 50s, Markham was one of black America's most popular entertainers through his shows at the Regal in Chicago, the Howard in Washington and, in particular, New York's famed Apollo. Despite being black, he applied burnt cork make-up to his face, a device that caused many of his fans to believe he was actually white. He later made several successful appearances on the influential Ed Sullivan television show and was signed by Chess during the 60s. The Chicago-based label issued several in-concert albums and his 1968 novelty hit, 'Here Comes The Judge'. This tongue-in-cheek recording was inspired by the artist's catchphrase, which was used extensively on the American television comedy series Rowan And Martin's Laugh-In. Although hampered by a competitive version by Shorty Long, Markham enjoyed a Top 20 hit in the USA and UK. Although this was a one-off achievement, Pigmeat Markham remained a well-known figure until his death in December 1981.

Marks, Gerald

b. 13 October 1900, Saginaw, Michigan, USA, d. 27 January 1997, New York, USA. A songwriter and bandleader, Marks has co-written several numbers which have endured for over 60 years. He was playing the piano by the time he was 10 years old, and led a dance band in the late 20s. However, it was not until 1931 that he made an impression on Tin Pan Alley with 'All Of Me' (written with Seymour Simons). Although it was later sung up-tempo by artists such as Frank Sinatra, who has recorded the song several times and included in his film Meet Danny Wilson, it was orginally offered to publishers as a ballad. They turned it down on the grounds that the lyric was too suggestive, but recapitulated after the popular singer Belle Baker (wife of Lew Leslie, producer of the Blackbirds Of 1928 and other revues), sang it constantly. It has since been recorded hundreds of times, and was sung by Diana Ross in the Billie Holiday biopic Lady Sings The Blues. Mark's chief collaborator was lyricist Irving Caesar, and two of their most popular songs were '(Oh Suzanna) Dust Off That Old Pianna' (1935), which was popularized by Ozzie Nelson and his band, and 'Is It True What They Say About Dixie?' (1936), a number always associated with Al Jolson. Also credited on those last two hits was songwriter-librettist Sammy Lerner. During the 30s Marks contributed to various stage shows, including the 1935 edition of Earl Carroll's Vanities ('Let The Man Who Makes The Gun'), and wrote 'That's What I Want for Christmas' for Shirley Temple to sing in the 1936 movie Stowaway. During the 40s he had songs in two more Broadway musicals, My Dear Public (1943, 'Rain On The Sea') and Hold It! (1948, 'Always You'), and wrote the catchy War Bond song, 'Dig Down Deep'. He also composed the music for numerous other US Government and charity songs, as well as several religious works such as 'The Ten Jewish Holidays', 'Ten Catholic Holy Days', and 'The ABC Of Jesus'. As with so many other songwriters of his kind, Marks was overtaken by the rock 'n' roll revolution of the 50s. 'All Of Me' remains one of the classic popular songs having been recorded by hundreds of artists. Other credible interpretations worthy of mention are those by Count Basie, Louis Armstrong, Erroll Garner, Jimmy Dorsey, Billie Holiday and Willie Nelson. He was a member of ASCAP's board of directors for a time, and in October 1995, The New York Sheet Music Society paid tribute to him on his 95th birthday, and 85th year in show business. He continued to work right up to his death in 1997.

Marky Mark And The Funky Bunch

The younger brother of New Kids On The Block's Donald Wahlberg, Mark Wahlberg (b. *c.*1971, Boston, Massachusetts, USA) was once proclaimed as the 'thinking rapper's Madonna' upon his entrance into the music industry in the early 90s. Also employed as an underwear model for Calvin Klein, Marky Mark's two albums did little to dispel his image as a clothes horse for white rap, even though all of his Funky Bunch (who include DJ Terry Yancey and five mixed gender dancers) are black. One notable hit came with 'Wildside', a revision of Lou Reed's urban mantra, 'Walk On The Wild Side'. The cover treatment brought further rewards when 'Good Vibrations' topped the charts in the USA. The attendant debut album, Music For The People, achieved platinum sales in 1991. He was subsequently widely attacked in the UK by gay activists for what they described as a conspiratorial silence during Shabba Ranks' homophobic outbursts on The Word. Marky Mark would go on to star in his first film, alongside Danny DeVito and Wesley Snipes, titled Renaissance Man, and completed a rap/reggae crossover single with Prince Ital Joe, 'United'. However, his second album failed to provide significant sales and like New Kids On The Block, Marky Mark's association with the Billboard charts had ended by the mid-90s. He received excellent reviews for his starring role in Paul Thomas Anderson's acclaimed Boogie Nights, a 1997 homage to the 70s porn industry.

Marlene, Das Musical

Originally titled Sag Mir Wo Die Blumen Sind (Where Have All The Flowers Gone?), this musical is based on British author Laurence Roman's biography of the legendary entertainer Marlene Dietrich. It opened at the small (785-seater) Theatre am Kurfürstendamm, Berlin, Germany, on 7 April 1993, almost a year after her death. Somewhat optimistically, in the light of subsequent events, the show's producer, Friedrich Kurz, booked the theatre, where Dietrich herself had performed in 1928, until the year 2000. Reportedly capitalized at between £1.5-2 million and directed by Terry Hands, formerly Artistic Director of the Royal Shakespeare Company, the production 'fast-frames 40 years of Dietrich's life, interspersed with a contemporary sub-plot about a troupe of drama students planning a tribute to her'. Along with the 'clumsy political allegories', there is a scene in which Dietrich romps in bed with her husband and his mistress, and, towards the end, Edith Piaf, played by a man wearing a white wedding dress, is brought on in a wheel chair. The 'charming, slightly plump' Jutta Habicht plays Dietrich in a cast of six which is accompanied by seven musicians. Most of the 20 songs are by Frederick Hollander, and include his bitter-sweet 'Falling In Love Again' from the memorable Dietrich film, The Blue Angel. Two months after the show opened it was retitled Marlene, Das Musical and drastically revised so that it became a more straight forward chronological life story, while still retaining plenty of sex and innuendo. More songs were added, but the enormous helium-filled Dietrich model which almost seemed to fill the stage was now missing. In any event, the changes were to no avail, and the show, which it was hoped would go some way towards re-estabishing Marlene Dietrich's reputation in a city that once reviled her, closed on 30 June 1993. Nearly four years later, a play, entitled Marlene, by Pam Gems (Piaf), starring Siân Phillips, was presented to appreciative audiences for an extended season at London's Lyric Theatre. Marley Marl

b. Marlon Williams, 30 September 1962, Queens, New York, USA. Widely revered for his considerable production skills, notably for his cousin MC Shan, Big Daddy Kane, Master Ace, Roxanne Shanté and Biz Markie, Marl's work is inhabited by a spirit of accessible, old school gusto. He has been widely congratulated for his innovative sampling techniques, using the SP1200 on hip-hop landmarks like Eric B For President. He also acts as host on the weekly Rap Attack radio programme on the WBLS-FM station in New York. The selected albums listed below sample some of this work, including contributions from Shanté and Kane, plus Kool G. Rap, Chuck D., LL Cool J, King Tee and Chubb Rock.

Marley, Bob

This legendary singer's vocal group, the Wailers, originally comprised six members: Robert Nesta Marley (b. 6 February 1945, St. Anns, Jamaica, West Indies, d. 11 May 1981, Miami, Florida, USA), Bunny Wailer (b. Neville O'Riley Livingston, 10 April 1947, Kingston, Jamaica, West Indies), Peter Tosh (b. Winston Hubert McIntosh, 19 October 1944, Westmoreland, Jamaica, d. 11 September 1987, Kingston, Jamaica), Junior Braithwaite, Beverley Kelso and Cherry Smith. Bob Marley And The Wailers are the sole Jamaican group to have achieved global superstar status, together with genuine penetration of world markets. The original group was formed during 1963. After extensive tuition with the great vocalist Joe Higgs, they began their recording career later that year for Coxsone Dodd, although Marley had made two singles for producer Leslie Kong in 1962 - 'Judge Not' and 'One Cup Of Coffee'. Their first record, 'Simmer Down', released just before Christmas 1963 under the group name Bob Marley And The Wailers, went to number 1 on the JBC Radio chart in January 1964, holding that position for the ensuing two months and reputedly selling over 80,000 copies. This big local hit was followed by 'It Hurts To Be Alone', featuring Junior Braithwaite on lead vocal, and 'Lonesome Feeling', with lead vocal by Bunny Wailer. During the period 1963-66, the Wailers made over 70 tracks for Dodd, over 20 of which were local hits, covering a wide stylistic base - from cover versions of US soul and doo-wop with ska backing, to the newer, less frantic 'rude-boy' sounds that presaged the development of rocksteady, and including many songs that Marley re-recorded in the 70s. In late 1965, Braithwaite left to go to America, and Kelso and Smith also departed that year.

On 10 February 1966, Marley married Rita Anderson, at the time a member of the Soulettes, later to become one of the I-Threes and a solo vocalist in her own right. The next day he left to join his mother in Wilmington, Delaware, returning to Jamaica in October 1966; the Wailers were now a vocal trio. They recorded the local hit 'Bend Down Low' at Studio One late in 1967 (though it was actually self-produced and released on their own label, Wail 'N' Soul 'M'). This and other self-produced output of the time is among the rarest, least reissued Wailers music, and catches the group on the brink of a new maturity; for the first time there were overtly Rasta songs. By the end of that year, following Bunny Wailer's release from prison, they were making demos for Danny Sims, the manager of soft-soul singer Johnny Nash, who hit the UK charts in April 1972 with the 1968 Marley composition, 'Stir It Up'. This association proved incapable of supporting them, and they began recording for producer Leslie Kong, who had already enjoyed international success with Desmond Dekker, the Pioneers and Jimmy Cliff. Kong released several singles and an album called The Best Of The Wailers in 1970. By the end of 1969, wider commercial success still eluded them. Marley, who had spent the summer of 1969 working at the Chrysler car factory in Wilmington, Delaware, returned to Jamaica, and the trio began a collaboration with Lee Perry that proved crucially important to their future development. Not only did Perry help to focus more effectively the trio's rebel stance, but they worked with the bass and drum team of the Barrett brothers, Aston 'Family Man' (b. 22 November 1946, Kingston, Jamaica) and Carlton (b. 17 December 1950, Kingston, Jamaica, d. 1987, Kingston, Jamaica), who became an integral part of the Wailers' sound.

The music Bob Marley And The Wailers made with Perry during 1969-71 represents possibly the height of their collective powers. Combining brilliant new songs such as 'Duppy Conqueror', 'Small Axe' and 'Sun Is Shining' with definitive reworkings of old material, backed by the innovative rhythms of the Upsetters and the equally innovative influence of Perry, this body of work stands as a zenith in Jamaican music. It was also the blueprint for Bob Marley's international success. The group continued to record for their own Tuff Gong label after the Perry sessions and came to the attention of Chris Blackwell, then owner of Island Records. Island had released much of the Wailers' early music from the Studio One period, although the label had concentrated on the rock market since the late 60s. Their first album for the company, 1973's Catch A Fire, was packaged like a rock album, and targeted at the album market in which Island had been very successful. The band arrived in the UK in April 1973 to tour and appear on television. In July 1973 they supported Bruce Springsteen at Max's Kansas City club in New York. Backed by an astute promotional campaign, Catch A Fire sold well enough to warrant the issue of Burnin', adding Earl 'Wire' Lindo to the group, which signalled a return to a militant, rootsy approach, unencumbered by any rock production values.

The rock/blues guitarist Eric Clapton covered 'I Shot The Sheriff' from this album, taking the tune to the number 9 position in the UK chart during the autumn of 1974, and reinforcing the impact of the Wailers in the process. Just as the band was poised on the brink of wider success, internal differences caused Tosh and Livingston to depart, both embarking on substantial solo careers, and Lindo left to join Taj Mahal. The new Wailers band, formed in mid-1974, included Marley, the Barrett brothers and Bernard 'Touter' Harvey on keyboards, with vocal harmonies by the I-Threes, comprising Marcia Griffiths, Rita Marley and Judy Mowatt. This line-up, with later additions, would come to define the so-called 'international' reggae sound that Bob Marley And The Wailers played until Marley's death in 1981. In establishing that form, not only on the series of albums recorded for Island but also by extensive touring, the band moved from the mainstream of Jamaican music into the global market. As the influence of Bob Marley spread, not only as a musician but also as a symbol of success from the so-called 'Third World', the music made locally pursued its own distinct course. 1975 was the year in which the group consolidated their position, with the release of the massively successful Natty Dread and rapturously received concerts at the London Lyceum. These concerts attracted both black and white patrons - the crossover had begun. At the end of the year Marley achieved his first UK chart hit, the autobiographical 'No Woman No Cry'. His first live album, comprising material from the Lyceum concerts, was also released in that year. He continued to release an album a year until his death, at which time a spokesman for Island Records estimated worldwide sales of $190 million. Marley survived an assassination attempt on 3 December 1976, leaving Jamaica for 18 months in early 1977. In July he had an operation in Miami to remove cancer cells from his right toe.

His albums Exodus and Kaya enjoyed massive international sales. In April 1978, he played the One Love Peace Concert in Kingston, bringing the two leaders of the violently warring Jamaican political parties (Michael Manley and Edward Seaga) together in a largely symbolic peacemaking gesture. The band then undertook a huge worldwide tour that took in the USA, Canada, Japan, Australia and New Zealand. His own label, Tuff Gong, was expanding its interests, developing new talent. The album Survival was released to the usual acclaim, being particularly successful in Africa. The song 'Zimbabwe' was subsequently covered many times by African artists. In 1980, Marley and the Wailers played a momentous concert in the newly liberated Zimbabwe to an audience of 40,000. In the summer of 1980, his cancer began to spread; he collapsed at Madison Square Garden during a concert. Late in 1980 he began treatment with the controversial cancer specialist Dr. Josef Issels. By 3 May, the doctor had given up. Marley flew to Miami, Florida, where he died on 11 May. Marley was rightly celebrated in 1992 with the release of an outstanding CD box set chronicling his entire career, although his discography remains cluttered due to the legal ramifications of his estate. His global success had been an inspiration to all Jamaican artists; his name became synonymous with Jamaican music, of which he had been the first authentic superstar. His contribution is thus immense: his career did much to focus the attention of the world on Jamaican music and to establish credibility for it. In addition, he was a charismatic performer, a great singer and superb songwriter - an impossible act to follow for other Jamaican artists.

Marley, Cedella Booker

b. Cedella Malcom, Nine Miles, Jamaica, West Indies. Cedella Marley, the sixth of nine children, gave birth to reggae's foremost emissary. In the early 40s, still in her teens, she began a clandestine relationship with Norval Sinclair Marley, a white patriarchal figure whom she married in June 1944. Her husband left for Kingston following the wedding and visited Cedella twice while she was carrying their child. Bob was born on 6 February 1945, and was brought up by Cedella and her father, Omeriah, with only occasional visits from Norval. Years later, Cedella moved with Bob to Kingston to join her boyfriend, Toddy Livingston, and the latter's son, Bunny, who joined them in 1955. Cedella's estranged husband had married bigamously and following a legal battle, he died of a heart attack. In 1962 Cedella accompanied Bob to Montego Bay where he performed his debut, 'Judge Not'. In 1964 Cedella was carrying her second child and decided that the USA offered better opportunities. In Wilmington, Delaware, she gave birth to her daughter Pearl, followed by sons Richard and Anthony. In 1966 Cedella encouraged Bob to join her in the USA, unaware that he married Rita Anderson on the day before he left Jamaica. Bob stayed with Cedella for six months before the draft board necessitated a hasty return to Jamaica. Bob's career came to fruition, and throughout, he maintained a loyal relationship with his mother, providing the family with a new home in Miami. In 1981 Cedella supported her son during his infirmity and continued his works after his death. Cedella's other sons, Richard and Anthony, formed the band Copasetic, who in 1988 released Five And Dime. The boys also supported their mother in her musical endeavours through to 1990, when Anthony played his last concert at a Bob Marley birthday celebration in Kingston, before being shot dead in a Miami shopping mall. Cedella has since recorded a series of Rastafarian-influenced melodies, remaining majestically impassive in the face of the inevitable criticism. She has also organized and performed at a number of Bob Marley Festivals, earning the nickname of 'Mother B'. She was still active within the industry in 1997, working on the eagerly awaited My Altar.

Marley, Rita

b. Rita Anderson, Jamaica, West Indies. Wife of Bob Marley, Rita has enjoyed a successful solo career in her own right, both before and after her husband's death.

She had originally worked with the Soulettes, a Studio One trio, where she first met Bob. She subsequently enjoyed several solo hits in Jamaica, among them 'Pied Piper'. Prophetically, she would back the Wailers on several early recordings before linking up with Marcia Griffiths and Judy Mowatt to form the I-Threes. Perhaps her most poignant statement is the album Who Feels It Knows It, recorded while Bob was dying of cancer. Rita's biggest hit came with 'One Draw', a pro-marijuana lyric recorded in 1981, shortly after Bob's death. However, she continued to enjoy single successes with 'Many Are Called' and 'Play Play'. By the mid-80s she was largely retired, concentrating on untangling Bob's legal estate, and fostering the career of her children, Ziggy Marley And The Melody Makers.

Marley, Ziggy, And The Melody Makers

b. David Marley, 1968, Kingston, Jamaica, West Indies. 'Ziggy' Marley, one of Bob Marley's four children with his wife Rita Marley, started his career as one of the Melody Makers with siblings Sharon, Cedella and Stephen, whose appearance at their father's funeral in 1981 marked their introduction to the rest of the world. The following year, 'What A Plot', released on Rita's label, was a big hit, and Ziggy's lead vocals sounded uncannily similar to his late father's. The Melody Makers were allowed the time and space to mature and practise before committing themselves needlessly to vinyl - unlike so many of their Jamaican counterparts, where recording activities were an economic necessity - and by the late 80s they were a headline act, especially in the USA. Their Play The Game Right debut, the only album to be credited simply to the Melody Makers, included one notable excerpt from their father's songbook, 'Children Playing In The Street', which he had originally written for them. Despite their tender years, the record stands up to repeated listening and suggests that Marley's maturity and wisdom were hereditary. The album to confirm this was Conscious Party. Produced by Chris Frantz and Tina Weymouth from Talking Heads, and featuring an inspired selection of backing musicians, the set boasted high-calibre material such as 'Tomorrow People' and 'We Propose', which would not have disgraced any Wailers album. One Bright Day is a similarly delightful collection, comprising slick dance reggae with articulate rebuttals of the South African apartheid system. The Melody Makers have resisted the obvious temptation to re-record too many of their father's songs, and instead have forged a career in their own right. In his excellent book Bob Marley - Conquering Lion Of Reggae, Stephen Davis illustrates the group's popularity in America by detailing a short exchange between two youngsters after seeing Bob Marley on video; one's question, 'Who's that?', is met with the cursory response, 'Ziggy Marley's father'. In his own lifetime, Bob and the Wailers did not break the American market with the same level of success as the Melody Makers. They are also very popular in Jamaica - and not just because of Ziggy's lineage, though his ability to sing over his father's songs as 'specials' for some of Kingston's top sound systems, adapting the lyrics for each particular system, has made him widely popular. Ziggy And The Melody Makers have transcended the 'famous parent' tag to become stars in their own right, following on from their father's tradition without ever leaning on it too heavily. As Bob once remarked: 'All a my family are music'.

Marmalade

Originally known as Dean Ford And The Gaylords, this Glasgow-based quintet enjoyed considerable success on the Scottish club circuit between 1961 and 1967. Eventually, they were signed by agent/manager Peter Walsh and, after moving to London, changed their name to Marmalade. The line-up then comprised: Dean Ford (b. Thomas McAleese, 5 September 1946, Coatbridge, Glasgow; lead singer), Graham Knight (b. 8 December 1946, Glasgow, Scotland; vocals/bass), Pat Fairley (b. 14 April 1946, Glasgow, Scotland; rhythm guitar), Willie Junior Campbell (b. 31 May 1947, Glasgow, Scotland; lead vocals) and Alan Whitehead (b. 24 July 1946, Oswestry, Shropshire, England; drums). Unpretentious and irresistibly commercial, the group reached the UK charts in May 1968 with 'Lovin' Things' and enjoyed a number 1 with an opportunist cover of John Lennon/Paul McCartney's 'Ob-La-Di, Ob-La-Da'. After several successes with CBS, Walsh negotiated a deal with Decca via Dick Rowe and Marmalade became the first New Musical Express UK chart toppers of the 70s by displacing Rolf Harris' 'Two Little Boys' with the moving 'Reflections Of My Life', a more serious work which ably displayed their underused compositional skills. In 1971, the group suffered a severe setback when Campbell, their producer and main songwriter, quit to attend the Royal College of Music. With replacement Hugh Nicolson (formerly of the Poets), they enjoyed several more hits, including 'Cousin Norman', 'Radancer' and 'Falling Apart At The Seams'. The latter proved a prophetic title, for the group were dogged by line-up changes during the 70s. Changes in the pop marketplace lessened their appeal, and a saucy 'sex on tour' story in the salacious Sunday papers caused them considerable embarrassment. With Knight and Whitehead surviving from the original line-up, Marmalade was resuscitated for cabaret purposes later in the decade.

Marmarosa, Dodo

b. Michael Marmarosa, 12 December 1925, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, USA. After formal studies and gigging with local bands, Marmarosa played piano with a succession of name big bands of the early and mid-40s, including those of Gene Krupa, Tommy Dorsey and Artie Shaw. In 1946, he settled in Los Angeles, playing and recording with several leading jazz musicians, including Barney Kessel, Lester Young and Charlie Parker. His affinity with bebop made him, briefly, one of the outstanding exponents of the form, but ill-health drove him from the scene around 1948. Marmarosa returned to music in 1961, recording alone and with Gene Ammons. Within a couple of years he was again forced into retirement.

Marquee Moon - Television

New York's 70s punk was markedly different to that of Britain. Rather than reject the past, American groups deconstructed its forms and rebuilt them with recourse to the music's strengths. Television's leader, Tom Verlaine, professed admiration for Moby Grape and the folk rock of early Fairport Convention. Elements of the latter appear on this album's title track, which offers a thrilling instrumental break, built upon a modal scale. Verlaine's shimmering guitar style provides the set's focus, but his angular compositions are always enthralling. A sense of brooding mystery envelops the proceedings, and Marquee Moon retains its standing as one of the era's pivotal releases.

Marrero, Lawrence

b. Laurence Henry Marrero, 24 October 1900, New Orleans, Louisiana, USA, d. 6 June 1959. Marrero was born into a highly musical family. His father and two brothers played bass and another brother played banjo, the instruments he settled upon. He first played professionally in a dance band in which his father also played. Later he worked with several leading New Orleans dance and early jazz bands including those led by Chris Kelly, Kid Rena, John Robichaux and, in the late 30s, George Lewis. He played regularly with Lewis, helping provide a steady foundation for the band which brought late fame to Lewis during the Revival. After leaving Lewis he worked mostly in his home-town, sometimes leading his own small band. A solid player with an ability to produce a clear, bell-like tone from his instrument, Marrero was a master of a tradition which faltered in the face of advances by the guitar.

b. 30 January 1947, London, England, d. 20 April 1991, Arkesden, Essex, England. As a child actor, Marriott appeared in The Famous Five television series in the late 50s and made a West End theatre debut as the Artful Dodger in Lionel Bart's Oliver! in 1961. That same year, Decca engaged him as an Adam Faith soundalike for two unsuccessful singles. Next, as singing guitarist in the Moments, he had another miss with a sly cover of the Kinks' 'You Really Got Me' for the USA market. Then followed Steve Marriott and the Frantic Ones (amended to just the Frantics). This venture was, however, less lucrative than his daytime job in an East Ham music equipment shop where, in 1964, he met fellow mod Ronnie Lane (bass) with whom he formed the Small Faces after recruiting Kenny Jones (drums) and Jimmy Winston (keyboards). Knock-kneed and diminutive, Steve emerged as the outfit's public face, attacking the early smashes with a strangled passion revealing an absorption of R&B, and an exciting (if sometimes slipshod) fretboard style that belied the saccharine quality of such songs as 'Sha-La-La-La-Lee' and 'My Mind's Eye'. With Lane, he composed the unit's later output as well as minor hits for Chris Farlowe and P.P. Arnold.

On leaving the Small Faces in 1969, Marriott, as mainstay of Humble Pie, acquired both a solitary UK Top 20 entry and a reputation for boorish behaviour on BBC's Top Of The Pops before building on his previous group's small beginnings. In North America, by 1975, he earned a hard-rock stardom accrued over 22 USA tours when Humble Pie disbanded. He put himself forward as a possible replacement when Mick Taylor left the Rolling Stones, played concerts with his All-Stars (which included Alexis Korner) and recorded a patchy solo album before regrouping the Small Faces, but poor sales of two 'comeback' albums blighted their progress. A link-up with Leslie West was mooted and a new Humble Pie released two albums but, from the early 80s, Marriott was heard mostly on the European club circuit, fronting various short-lived bands, including Packet Of Three, with a repertoire that hinged on past glories. Shortly before he perished in a fire in his Essex home in April 1991, Marriot had been attempting to reconstitute Humble Pie with Peter Frampton. Frampton was among the many famous friends attending the funeral where the Small Faces' 'All Or Nothing' was played as Steve Marriott's requiem. Since his death his standing has steadily increased, cruel irony for a man who found it hard to get a recording contract for much of the past decade.

MARRS

A collaboration between two 4AD bands, Colourbox and AR Kane, which, though a one-off, was enough to set the independent, dance and national charts alight during autumn 1987. 'Pump Up The Volume' was augmented on the a-side by UK champion scratch mixer C.J. Mackintosh and London disc jockey/journalist Dave Dorrell. Primarily aimed at the dance market, the record was originally mailed to the 500 most influential regional club and dance DJs on an anonymous white label, in order that it received exposure six weeks prior to its stock version. On official release it entered the charts at number 35, a figure attained on 12-inch sales only. Daytime radio play ensured the single was the next week's highest climber, rising 24 places to number 11. The following two weeks it stayed at number 2 before reaching the number 1 spot on 28 September 1987. Originally the idea of 4AD supremo Ivo, the single featured samples of James Brown, a practice already common in hip-hop that would soon come into vogue for an avalanche of dance tracks: 'We've used a lot of rhythms and time signatures from old records, classic soul records, but mixed that with modern electronic instruments and AR Kane's guitar sound', was how the single was described. The single was never followed up, apparently due to acrimony between the involved personnel over finance, which was a great shame. As such, the MARRS discography is a brief but blemishless one. Dorrell would go on to manage Bush while Mackintosh returned to the club circuit.

Mars

Led by Sumner Crane and completed by China Burg, Nancy Arlen and Mark Cunningham, US punk band Mars made their debut in the late 70s on No New York, the pivotal compilation of New York's leading 'no-wave' acts, produced by Brian Eno. Even more dissonant than contemporaries Teenage Jesus And The Jerks, Mars rampaged their way through four contributions with no regard for melody or formal musical training. Briefly signed to the Ze label, the quartet completed a single, '3E'/'11,000 Volts', before imploding. A 1978 appearance at CBGB's, recorded by Arto Lindsay, was issued as the Live EP, but this was superseded by 78. Jim Foetus Thirwell took both sides of the Ze 45, remixed the contributions to No New York and added all but one track from the previous EP to create the definitive Mars collection. In 1981 Crane recorded a version of Don Giovanni, John Gavanti, with the aid of sundry like-minded musicians. It has been dubbed the most unlistenable record ever made.

b. USA. Formerly drummer with the Replacements, by the time Mars left that groundbreaking band he had also left behind his drinking and drug-taking excesses. 'I got a little constipated with the Replacements, and it's been a release to get out a lot of ideas I've had,' he commented at the time. He left his former employers in 1990 with no idea of what to do, until his wife sent some of his home-recorded demo tapes to Island Records subsidiary Smash. The result was Horseshoes And Hand Grenades, the first of his albums to boast his distinctive caricature drawings in its artwork. The title of his second album, 75% Less Fat, meanwhile, was taken by some analysts as an indication of his diminished circumstances. The intention was to tour with the album while also displaying his paintings in local galleries. Tenterhooks was his first collection for Hoboken, New Jersey independent Bar/None Records. Written, performed, produced and engineered by Mars himself, this was the first collection to see Mars put distance between himself and the Replacements, focusing instead on the strong pop hooks that propelled songs such as 'Forkless Tree'. His contract with the label came with the invitation to build his own 24-track studio in lieu of an advance, which suited Mars, who was keen not to tour again following over ten years on the road with the Replacements. In a novel marketing coup, Bar/None sent out another of its roster, the Wallmen, to tour performing cover versions of the Mars songs, with a cardboard cut-out of the artist erected centrestage.

b. 7 December 1942, Laurens, South Carolina, USA. During his youth, his family moved around the southeast, and Mars began playing harmonica before he was in his teens, influenced by older local players and his sister's collection of blues records. He moved to New Paltz, New York, in 1958 and joined a high school band. In 1961, he was in the Train Riders and a few years later in Burning Bush (as bass guitarist and occasional harmonica player). In 1967, Mars settled in San Francisco, where he led his own band, then moved to England in 1972, working as a singer and harmonica player. He has subsequently recorded for the Big Bear, JSP, Ace, Sundance, President, and Lamborghini labels, sometimes with guitarist Ray Fenwick. Mars is a fine vocalist and a modern, adventurous, blues harmonica player.

Marsala, Joe

b. 4 January 1907, Chicago, Illinois, USA, d. 4 March 1978. After playing locally, Marsala's first name-band job was with Wingy Manone in 1929. In the early 30s he gigged in Chicago and elsewhere, returning several times to Manone, with whom he appeared at a number of leading New York nightspots. In 1935, he played and recorded with Adrian Rollini's Tap Room Gang before yet another spell with Manone, this time at the Hickory House. Taking over the band on Manone's departure in 1936, Marsala became one of the first bandleaders on 52nd Street to regularly front a racially-mixed band which included Red Allen. The Hickory House engagement was another long-running affair, extending into the mid-40s, but interspersed with leading bands on cruise ships he also briefly led a big band which played charts commissioned from Don Redman. In some of these bands, Marsala was joined by his brother, trumpeter Marty Marsala (b. 2 April 1909, d. 27 April 1975). In 1938, Marsala married harpist Adele Girard with whom he recorded and later collaborated on the composition of a number of songs, including such popular hits as 'Little Sir Echo' and 'Don't Cry, Joe'. During the early 40s, the bands Marsala led at the Hickory House included not only swing era veterans but also several younger musicians in transition to bebop and the mainstream, among them Buddy Rich, Charlie Byrd and Shelly Manne. He was also instrumental in giving an early career boost to Frankie Laine. The Hickory House job finally ended in 1947; thereafter, Marsala redirected his career to songwriting and administrative work in music publishing and related businesses. During the 60s, he sometimes played on recording sessions, on one occasion teaming up with Bobby Hackett to accompany Tony Bennett. Although he deliberately ended his full-time playing career while still at his peak, Marsala left some very good recordings featuring his Jimmie Noone-inspired clarinet playing.

Marsala, Marty

b. Mario Salvatore Marsala, 2 April 1909, Chicago, Illinois, USA, d. 27 April 1975. As a young man Marsala first played drums but then switched to trumpet. He played this instrument in various bands in and around Chicago in the late 20s and early 30s. In the middle of the decade he came to New York to team up with his brother, Joe Marsala, who led a band there. With side visits to other bands, he stayed with his brother into the early 40s, then joined Chico Marx and also led a band of his own before military service intervened. After the war he was briefly back with his brother and also played in bands led by Miff Mole and others but mainly led his own bands into the middle of the next decade. On the west coast he played occasionally with Kid Ory and Earl 'Fatha' Hines and also led his own bands through into the 60s. From this date onwards Marsala's career was constantly interrupted by illness. Marsala played with a rich, gutsy tone, delivering pungent solos with wit and fire. His long periods spent in Chicago and San Francisco, allied to his latter-day poor health, kept him in undeserved obscurity.

Marsalis, Branford

b. 26 August 1960, Breaux Bridge, Louisiana, USA. With their father, Ellis Marsalis, a bop pianist, composer and teacher, it is not surprising that his sons Branford, Delfeayo and Wynton Marsalis all took up music in childhood. Branford Marsalis's first instrument was the alto saxophone, which he played during his formative years and while studying at Berklee College Of Music. In 1981, he played in Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers and the following year began a spell with a small band led by Wynton. During this period Marsalis switched instruments, taking up both soprano and tenor saxophones. He also played on record dates with leading jazzmen such as Miles Davis and Dizzy Gillespie. After three years in his brother's band, he began a period of musical searching. Like many young musicians of his era, Marsalis often played in jazz-rock bands, including that led by Sting. He also formed his own small group with which he toured and recorded. By the late 80s he had established a reputation as a leading post-bop jazz saxophonist, but also enjoyed status in fusion and even classical circles (Romances For Saxophone). Like most jazzmen, Marsalis drew early inspiration from the work of other musicians, amongst them John Coltrane, Ben Webster, Wayne Shorter, Ornette Coleman and especially Sonny Rollins. In some of his recordings these influences have surfaced, leading to criticisms that he has failed to build a personal style. Closer attention reveals that these stylistic acknowledgements are merely that and not an integral part of his musical make-up. His 1993 outing with I Heard You Twice The First Time showed a strong leaning towards the blues, both John Lee Hooker and B.B. King are featured in addition to his brother. Perhaps of more significance to Marsalis's development as a musician is the fact that his career appears fated to be constantly compared to and contrasted with that of his virtuoso brother Wynton. If this should result in his long-term overshadowing it will be, at least, unfortunate, because by the early 90s Branford Marsalis had proved himself to be an inventive soloist with considerable warmth. His best work contains many moments of powerful emotional commitment.

b. *c.*1963, New Orleans, Louisiana, USA. The third of four musician sons of pianist Ellis Marsalis, he began studying trombone when he was 12 years old, then went to Berklee College Of Music. His professional career as a performer was delayed because he took up record production, working on albums by his father, his brothers Wynton and Branford Marsalis and Courtney Pine. An eclectic taste incorporates classical music and many areas of jazz. While he has expressed admiration for trombonists Tommy Dorsey and Jack Teagarden, his instrumental idol is J.J. Johnson. Marsalis's playing experience has all been at a very high level, including spells with bands led by Ray Charles, Fats Domino, Abdullah Ibrahim and Art Blakey. As he explained to Derek Ansell in an interview for Jazz Journal International, he is eager to develop his own playing style and to expand his own career which has hitherto been overshadowed by his more famous brothers.

b. 14 November, 1934, New Orleans, Louisiana, USA. Although he has never really been a revolutionary band-leader or pianist, Ellis Marsalis' influence on the American mainstream jazz scene cannot be over-estimated. As an inspirational figure to a new generation of artists, and an educator and spokesman, this New Orleans-born pianist is unrivalled. Marsalis' professional music career began on tenor saxophone while still in high school, but he changed to piano a few years later, performing with such New Orleans-based modern jazz luminaries as clarinettist Alvin Batiste and drummer Ed Blackwell. He spent a brief spell on the west coast (he accompanied Blackwell out there, who was going out to meet up with Ornette Coleman), before signing up for military service with the marines in the mid-50s. His musical career was hardly interrupted by the services, and he soon found himself accompanying singers on CBS television, on the Marine-sponsored Dress Blues show. Back in New Orleans during the early 60s, Marsalis' reputation as a sensitive and versatile accompanist led to a job fronting the house trio at the Playboy Club, where he accompanied stars vocalists such as Ernestine Anderson and Jimmy Rushing. He joined trumpeter Al Hirt's showboating trad band during the late 60s, and appeared with the group on many popular American television shows, before leaving to join Bob French's Storyville Jazz Band in 1970, continuing the all-round jazz education and understanding that has made him such a unique figure on the current scene. He went on to lead his own highly successful modern jazz band with drummer James Black, enjoying a residency at one of New Orleans' premier jazz clubs for a year and a half. In the mid-70s, Marsalis began to turn his attention toward furthering his involvement in education. He had been teaching since the mid-50s, but now he began working in earnest on a jazz curriculum, and was taken on by the New Orleans Centre for the Creative Arts (NOCCA) in 1975. As a teacher, Marsalis' students have included many of the new generation of New Orleans-based modern jazz stars, including saxophonist Victor Goines, bassist Reginald Veal, flautist Kent Jordan, trumpeter Terence Blanchard, pianist/vocalist Harry Connick Jnr. and, of course, his stellar progeny Wynton Marsalis (trumpet), Branford Marsalis (saxophones), Delfeayo Marsalis (trombone) and Jason Marsalis (drums), who have affected the US jazz scene permanently, with their emphasis on craftsmanship and learning. Ellis Marsalis is head of jazz studies at the University of New Orleans and a panellist, grant evaluator and board member for the National Endowment for the Arts and the Southern Arts Federation.

Marsalis, Wynton

b. 18 October 1961, New Orleans, Louisiana, USA. Marsalis took up the trumpet at the age of six, encouraged by his father, Ellis Marsalis, a pianist, composer and teacher. His brothers, Delfeayo and Branford Marsalis are also musicians. Before entering his teenage years he was already studying formally, but had simultaneously developed an interest in jazz. The range of his playing included performing with a New Orleans marching band led by Danny Barker, and playing trumpet concertos with the New Orleans Philharmonic Orchestra. Marsalis later extended his studies at two of the USA's most prestigious musical education establishments, Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood and the Juilliard School of Music in New York City. By the age of 19, he was already a virtuoso trumpeter, a voracious student of jazz music, history and culture, and clearly destined for great things. It was then that he joined Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers, perhaps the best of all finishing schools for post-bop jazzmen. During the next two years he matured considerably as a player, touring and recording with Blakey and also with other leading jazzmen, including Herbie Hancock and Ron Carter. He also made records under his own name and, encouraged by his success, decided to form his own permanent group. In this he was joined by his brother Branford. During 1983, he again worked with Hancock. The following year he recorded in London with Raymond Leppard and the National Philharmonic Orchestra, playing concertos by Hayden, Hummell and Leopold Mozart - a side-step which led to his becoming the unprecedented recipient of Grammy Awards for both jazz and classical albums. He next toured Japan and Europe, appearing at many festivals, on television and making many recording sessions. By 1991, and still only just turned 30, he had become one of the best-known figures on the international musical stage. Insofar as his classical work is concerned, Marsalis has been spoken of in most glowing terms. In his jazz work his sublime technical ability places him on a plateau he shares with very few others. Nevertheless, despite such extraordinary virtuosity, the emotional content of Marsalis's work often hints only lightly at the possibilities inherent in jazz. Sometimes, the undeniable skill and craftsmanship are displayed at the expense of vitality. If compared to, say, Jon Faddis, eight years his senior, or Clifford Brown, who died at the age of only 26, then there is clearly some distance to go in his development as a player of emotional profundity.

Marsden, Bernie

This masterly UK guitarist rose to prominence during his stints with Babe Ruth, UFO and Whitesnake. At the turn of the 70s Marsden took time out between Whitesnake projects to record solo material. He was assisted by several noteworthy musicians who included Ian Paice, Cozy Powell, Simon Phillips, Don Airey, Neil Murray and Jack Bruce. The albums featured melodic hard rock, with Marsden successfully handling the vocals as well as some extended guitar workouts. He subsequently formed Bernie Marsden's S.O.S., which later became known as Alaska. Marsden remains an accomplished musician, able to offer enormous variety and depth to heavy rock, although the solo trail was never his most rewarding enterprise.

Marsden, Beryl

b. Beryl Hogg, 1947, Liverpool, England. One of a handful of female singers to emerge during the Mersey boom, Marsden made her debut in January 1963 with the powerful 'I Know'. A vivacious performance earned her the title 'Britain's Brenda Lee', but subsequent releases showed an empathy with soul material and included versions of 'Whenever The Lovelight Starts Shining Through His Eyes' (originally recorded by the Supremes), and 'Break-A-Way', an Irma Thomas song later revived by Tracey Ullman. In 1966, Marsden joined the Shotgun Express, a revue-styled act which initially featured Rod Stewart and Peter Bardens. Beryl appeared on both of the group's singles before joining the She Trinity. She then retired from music for several years but resumed performing in the 70s as a member of Sinbad, a Liverpool group which also featured Paddy Chambers (of Paddy Klaus And Gibson). She later recorded two Peter Bardens' songs, 'I Video'/'Hungry For You', appeared regularly as a Vandella with Martha Reeves and joined fellow-Buddhist Sandie Shaw at several charity concerts.

Marseille

This band was formed in London, England, in 1976, ostensibly to record the soundtrack to the Jane Birkin film The French Way. The original line-up consisted of Paul Dale (vocals), Neil Buchanan (guitar), Andy Charters (guitar), Steve Dinwoodie (bass) and Keith Knowles (drums). Signing to the now-defunct Mountain Records label, the band released their debut album in 1978. Red, White And Slightly Blue was a subtle blend of melodic rock and pop. A couple of tours followed, supporting UFO among others, on whom the band later modelled themselves. This was most noticeable on Marseille, where a more traditional hard rock sound was embraced. The group then encountered difficulties when Mountain Records went bankrupt.

This left Marseille in limbo, but they resurfaced in 1983 with new personnel and a record contract. The new line-up consisted of ex-Savage Lucy vocalist Sav Pearse, Mark Hays (guitar), Neil Buchanan (guitar), Steve Dinwoodie (bass) and Keith Knowles (drums). They went on to record the band's third and final album, Touch The Night, which appeared on the Ultra Noise Records label in 1984. Still failing to make any real impact with either press or public, the band folded soon afterwards.

b. USA. Based in Texas, Marsh is frequently associated with a contemporary big band, the Creative Opportunity Orchestra, which was formed in 1979 and which records in Austin. In addition to singing with the band, she also composes original material and is responsible for many of their adventurous arrangements.

Marsh, Warne

b. 26 October 1927, Los Angeles, California, USA, d. 18 December 1987, Los Angeles, California, USA. Tenor saxophonist Marsh first played professionally in the early 40s with the Hollywood Canteen Kids, later working with Hoagy Carmichael's Teenagers. By the end of the decade, he had spent time in Buddy Rich's band and had also begun an important association as student and sideman of Lennie Tristano. In the late 40s and early 50s, he made a number of milestone recordings with temporary musical partners such as Lee Konitz, among them 'Wow', 'Crosscurrent' and 'Marshmallow'. The 50s and 60s saw Marsh active mainly in teaching and there were only occasional forays into playing and recording with, among a few others, Art Pepper and Joe Albany. In the 70s he became rather more prominent, working with Supersax, Lew Tabackin and Konitz. He also toured overseas, attracting considerable attention from the more discerning members of his audiences as well as from among his fellow musicians who held him in highest regard. Also in the 70s, he recorded rather more extensively, including material from an especially successful engagement in London with Konitz. A meticulously accurate yet free-flowing improviser, Marsh was comfortable in most bebop-orientated settings. His ballad playing was especially attractive, replete with clean and highly individual phrasing which constantly and consistently demonstrated his total command of instrument and genre. He died on-stage at Donte's, a Los Angeles jazz club, in December 1987.

Marshall Hain

This UK pop duo consisted of Julian Marshall and Kit Hain, b. 15 December 1956, Cobham, Surrey, England, who enjoyed a hit in 1979 with the memorable 'Dancing In The City'. The equally smooth and emotional follow-up 'Coming Home' was also a minor hit. Their only album enlisted the credible support of Frank Ricotti (percussion), Dave Olney (guitar), Harold Fisher (drums) and Glen Nightingale (guitar). However, as their grip on the pop charts slackened the duo's record company cancelled their second album. Marshall left to play piano for the Flying Lizards and following the break-up of their personal relationship his partner embarked on a solo career. Hain's first release was 'The Joke's On You', for Harvest, before she signed to Decca and subsequently Mercury for several singles and albums. Kit Hain moved to the USA in 1985 and has forged a successful career as a songwriter. Her portfolio includes 'Fires Of Eden' for Cher, 'Back To Avalon' for Heart, 'Rip In Heaven' and 'Crash And Burn' for Til Tuesday, 'Further From Fantasy' for Annie Haslam, 'Remind My Heart' and 'Every Time We Fall' for Lea Salonga (Miss Saigon). Her songs have also been recorded by Roger Daltrey, Kiki Dee, Barbara Dickson, Nicki Gregoroff, Cheryl Beattie and Kim Criswell.

Marshall Law

This Birmingham, England-based heavy metal quintet comprised Andy Pike (vocals), Dave Martin (guitar), Andy Southwell (guitar), Rog Davis (bass) and Mick Donovan (drums). Following in the tradition of UK rockers such as Judas Priest, Saxon and Iron Maiden, they transposed melody onto infectious, circular power-riffs, cleverly avoiding any monotony by the injection of twin lead guitar solos between rousing choruses. Signing to the Heavy Metal Records label, they released their self-titled debut in 1989 to considerable critical acclaim. Touted as the spearhead of a new revival in traditional UK heavy rock, there was nevertheless a lengthy eight-year gap before the release of Metal Detector.

Marshall Tucker Band

Formed in 1971 in South Carolina, USA, the Marshall Tucker Band was a 'southern-rock' style group which maintained modest popularity from the early to late 70s. The band consisted of Toy Caldwell (b. 1948, Spartanburg, South Carolina, USA, d. 25 February 1993, Moore, South Carolina, USA; lead guitarist), his brother, Tommy Caldwell, (b. 1950, Spartanburg, South Carolina, USA; bass), vocalist/keyboardist Doug Gray, rhythm guitarist George McCorkle, saxophonist/flautist Jerry Eubanks and drummer Paul Riddle. There was no member named Marshall Tucker; the group was named after the owner of the room in which they practised their music. Like the Allman Brothers Band, Wet Willie and several others, the band signed with Capricorn Records and established the southern rock style, which emphasized lengthy improvisations built around soul-influenced rock and boogie songs. Prior to the formation of the Marshall Tucker Band, from 1962-65, Toy Caldwell had played with a local group called the Rants. He was in the Marines from 1965-69, and then the Toy Factory, which also included Gray and Eubanks. McCorkle (another ex-Rant), Riddle and Tommy Caldwell were then added in 1972, and the new name was adopted. The group's first Capricorn album was self-titled and reached number 29 in the USA in 1973. The following year A New Life and Where We All Belong were released, a two-album set featuring one studio and one live disc. Their highest-charting album, Searchin' For A Rainbow, came in 1975. Their first single to chart was 'This Ol' Cowboy', also in 1975. Most of the group's albums were gold or platinum sellers through 1978, and the 1977 single 'Heard It In A Love Song' was their best-selling, reaching number 14 (although they were primarily considered an 'album' band). Following their 1978 Greatest Hits album, the band switched to Warner Brothers and released three final chart albums through 1981. The group continued to perform after the death of Tommy Caldwell in an auto crash on 28 April 1980, but never recaptured their 70s success. (Caldwell was replaced by Franklin Wilkie, ex-Toy Factory) By the early 80s they had largely disappeared from the national music scene. They released new albums, first on Mercury Records in 1988, and then on Sisapa Records in 1990, with no notable success. Their Capricorn albums were reissued on the AJK Music label in the USA in the late 80s.

Marshall, Amanda

b. *c.*1972, Toronto, Canada. Singer Amanda Marshall first entered the music business with an amateur performance at a Toronto nightclub which was overheard by singer/guitarist Jeff Healey. She was just 18 years old, but under Healey's influence she began backtracking into her musical heritage and discovering the blues. However, this was mixed with an appreciation of the rhythmic Caribbean records her mother brought to Canada from her native Trinidad, and her father's taste for contemporary pop artists. She began touring as opening act for Healey, then Tom Cochrane, and it was not long before highly appreciative reviews encouraged Sony Music Canada to make her a prestige signing. Her first recorded output was a version of 'Don't Let It Bring You Down' on the Neil Young tribute album, Borrowed Tunes. Her debut album was produced alongside occasional co-writer David Tyson (who had previously worked with Alannah Myles and Hall And Oates). The veteran musicians involved included Lee Sklar (bass), Tommy Byrnes (guitar), Tim Pierce (guitar) and Kenny Aronoff (drums). As Marshall told the press on its 1996 release, 'I wanted to make a record that would do more than just comment on one specific circumstance - love and loss. They're all relationship songs. But I wanted to have at least a couple of songs that told a discernible story. 'Birmingham' and 'Last Exit To Eden' do that. 'Promises' is about the L.A. riots. 'Dark Horse' is somewhere between the two - a story that's more personal.'

Marshall, Carla

b. Kingston, Jamaica, although she grew up in Toronto, Canada, when her mother emigrated. Inspired by Sister Nancy's rendition of 'No Borrow, No Lend' in the mid-80s, Marshall began her quest as a contender for the crown of the queen of the DJs. A notable recording, 'Champion', was also her biggest hit when released on Sly And Robbie's Fourth And Broadway outlet. By 1995 she had worked with Diana King who had an international hit with 'Shy Guy', although her own career came first. In the winter of 1995 she released 'Puny Puny' for Columbia, with little impact. Undeterred, the record company followed it with her version of Marvin Gaye's 'Sexual Healing' (co-written with author David Ritz). Marshall has as yet been unable to equal the success of other female dancehall DJs, although by 1996, her reputation had grown internationally and her debut album was issued.

b. 29 July 1923, Kensington, London, England. The legendary amplifier manufacturer began his career as a vocalist and became a successful drummer in the 50s. Additionally, he founded his own drum school, teaching up to 65 pupils a week. In 1960, capitalizing on the rock 'n' roll craze, he opened his first retail music shop, and it was through this that he started making speaker cabinets in his garage to fulfil requests from his customers. Marshall paid great attention to the sound that guitarists wanted, and tailor-made the units. The first Marshall amplifier went into production in 1962 and, following his design of a 4x12 speaker cabinet, he was swamped with orders. By 1964, he had opened his first factory since Marshall had already become a considerable name with the beat boom of the early 60s. The Who were early converts; it was Pete Townshend who wanted more power from his amplifier to increase the feedback sound. Jim Marshall responded to his request and produced a 100-watt version. Similarly, when Townshend asked for a cabinet containing eight speakers, this impractical request led to the birth of the famous Marshall stack: two 4x12 speakers on top of each other. The astonishing success over the next decade resulted in the Marshall amplifier becoming the rock world's most famous piece of equipment, endorsed by Cream and Jimi Hendrix. The original facia shape and design has barely changed in almost 30 years - the dated facia is still part of the charm. In 1984 and 1992, Marshall received the Queen's Award for Export, with thousands of his units being sold worldwide. The benchmark of most heavy metal groups is a Marshall, which gives a loud, dirty sound from within the famous black and gold box.

Marshall, John

b. 28 August 1941, London, England. Marshall is one of the most impressive drummers Britain has produced, equally powerful, flexible and reliable in rock, jazz or fusion. He played at school, but became more heavily involved with music while reading psychology at university. He studied drums privately with Allan Ganley and Philly Joe Jones, and worked with Alexis Korner's Blues Incorporated (1964), Graham Collier (1965-70), Nucleus (of which he was a founder member with Ian Carr in 1969, and to which he returned in 1982), Mike Gibbs, Jack Bruce (1971-72), and, in February 1972, he began his long-term membership of Soft Machine. On leaving the band he joined Eberhard Weber's Colours (1977-81). He has been a regular associate of John Surman over many years, and has also worked with Michael Garrick, Keith Tippett, Chris McGregor, John McLaughlin, John Taylor, Graham Bond, Mike Westbrook, Tubby Hayes, Jaspar Van't Hof, Kenny Wheeler, Gil Evans, Alan Skidmore, Ronnie Scott and many others, including those in the contemporary classical field and in session work.

Marshall, Kaiser

b. Joseph Marshall, 11 June 1899, Savannah, Georgia, USA, d. 3 January 1948. While he was still a child Marshall's family moved to Boston, Massachusetts, where he began playing drums, tutored by George L. Stone. In 1923, by now in New York, he joined Fletcher Henderson's band during its rise to fame and prominence but left in 1930 just as Henderson entered his headiest period. In the late 20s, Marshall made some landmark recordings with Louis Armstrong's small studio groups. A solid reliable drummer, in the late 30s and early 40s he found regular work, playing and recording with many leading figures of the jazz world including Duke Ellington, Cab Calloway, Wild Bill Davison, Art Hodes, Sidney Bechet and Bunk Johnson. Marshall's work was thought of sufficiently highly for him to be called upon to deputize for Chick Webb when the more famous drummer was too sick to play all night with his own band.

Marshall, Keith

Marshall was originally the guitarist for UK glam rock band Hello. When the band finally collapsed, he turned to singing and walked straight into a successful solo career in Germany with his first single 'Remember Me'. It was followed by another three chart contenders including the 1981 worldwide hit, 'Only Crying'. While Germany continued to hold him dear, Marshall was not content to spend the rest of his career rewriting his greatest hit and has continued to move on musically, releasing records mainly in Europe, leaving the UK with only the occasional single.

Marshall, Larry

b. *c.*1945, St. Anns, Jamaica, West Indies. In 1963, Marshall had minor hits with 'Too Young To Love' for E Henry, and 'Please Stay' for Coxsone Dodd's Studio One label. He subsequently enjoyed a big hit with 'Snake In The Grass', a Top Deck production, and, in 1967, recorded 'I've Got Another Girl' and 'Suspicion' for Prince Buster. However, he had his greatest successes at Studio One where, in addition to singing in a duo with Alvin Leslie, he also worked as an engineer. Larry And Alvin had a massive hit with 'Nanny Goat' (1968), and followed with 'Hush Up' (1968), 'Your Love' (1969) and 'Mean Girl' (1969). Another of their songs, 'Throw Me Corn', became hugely popular at dances through 1969-70 when played on acetate, and was eventually released in 1971. Marshall then recorded solo, and had a further hit with 'Thelma'. A compilation of his Studio One recordings, Presenting Larry Marshall, was issued around 1973. By this time, he was also doing production work at Studio One. He left around 1974, and had success with his self-produced 'I Admire You' (1975), with a strong album of the same name following. Since then, he has issued a steady stream of singles, and had moderate hits with remakes of 'Throw Me Corn' (1984) and 'I Admire You' (1985), both Gussie Clarke productions.

Marshall, Wendell

b. 24 October 1920, St. Louis, Missouri, USA. He took up the bass thanks to the example of his cousin, Jimmy Blanton, who was also his first tutor. Although Wendell played regularly in his younger years, including brief stints with Lionel Hampton, Stuff Smith and others, he did not fully enter the bigtime until the late 40s when he moved to New York. Briefly with Mercer Ellington, he joined Duke Ellington in 1948 where he remained until 1955. During the rest of the 50s he worked with many important jazz artists including Carmen McRae, Hank Jones and Art Blakey. By the end of the decade, however, he was turning more and more to work in New York theatre pit bands where he remained until his retirement from regular playing in the late 60s. A gifted soloist with a full tone, Marshall's solid rhythmic playing and adaptable style made him a valuable member of any band in which he played.

Martell, Lena

A much-loved British cabaret singer, her polished interpretations of contemporary, easy-listening items popularized by others - with a bias towards country-tinged material - filled many Pye albums that rose successively higher in the national list throughout the 70s to culminate with 1979's prosaically-titled Lena's Music Album. The latter included Kris Kristofferson's 'One Day At A Time'. Produced, like all her output, by her bandleader, George Elrick, it was issued as a single and, blessed by many spins on BBC Radio 2, spent three weeks at number 1 - her sole entry in the UK singles chart. An ill-advised attempt at 'Don't Cry For Me Argentina' and the title track of 1980's Beautiful Sunday - a revival of a Daniel Boone hit - were among subsequent misses, but her albums still reached the Top 50 until her retirement in the late 80s.

Martell, Linda

b. Leesville, South Carolina, USA. Initially a R&B singer who included some country material in her repertoire. In 1969, while working the clubs and military bases in her home state, she attracted the attention of Shelby Singleton, who signed her to his Plantation label. In 1969 and 1970, she registered three Billboard country hits, namely 'Color Him Father', her version of the Freddy Fender hit 'Before The Next Teardrops Falls' and 'Bad Case Of the Blues'. Further chart success eluded her but she is credited with being the first black female country singer to appear on the Grand Ole Opry after her appearance there in August 1969.

Marterie, Ralph

b. Ralph Martin, 24 December 1914, Accerra, near Naples, Italy, d. 10 October 1978, Dayton, Ohio, USA. While Marterie was still a child his parents emigrated to the USA, where his father joined the orchestra of the Chicago Civic Opera. Ralph was still a teenager when he started playing trumpet with Dan Russo's Otriole Orchestra. He went on to play in local theatres and with other bands in Chicago, which was at that time the country's largest musical centre outside New York. Consequently, Marterie never had to leave the city to find work, joining the NBC staff orchestra where he played under conductors such as Percy Faith and André Kostelanetz. During World War II Marterie led a US Navy band, then after the war he returned to Chicago as a leader with ABC radio. In 1949 he started recording for Mercury with his own band, which featured his brassy open trumpet. He did not achieve instant success but in 1952 the band spent 10 weeks in the US charts with 'Caravan', earning a second Gold Disc the following year with 'Pretend'. His album and singles output varied between swing standards, novelties and pop instrumentals that highlighted his trademark of trumpet and guitar voiced together (compare his temporary partnership with guitarist/musical director Al Caiola on a cover version of 'Acapulco 22'). There were moderate hits with 'Guaglione', 'Skokiaan' and 'Tequila', which were successful enough to maintain his reputation and keep him working through changing fashions in pop music. Marterie was still touring with a band until his death in Dayton, where he had just played a one-nighter in October 1978.

Martha And The Muffins

The roots of this Canadian new wave band lie in the mid-70s, when Martha Johnson was the organist with Oh Those Pants, a 10-piece 60s covers/send-up band that also included future members of the Cads. This was followed by a spell in another Toronto band, the Doncasters, who specialized in revamping 60s garage band material. In 1977, Johnson joined up with Mark Gane (guitar), Carl Finkle (bass), Andy Haas (saxophone) and Tim Gane (drums) to form Martha And The Muffins. They were later joined by Martha Ladly, who initially played guitar but later moved to keyboards and trombone. The group sent a tape to New York journalist Glenn O'Brien, who referred them to the fledgling DinDisc Records label. This led to the release of their debut single, 'Insect Love'. Success followed in March 1980 with 'Echo Beach', which was a number 10 hit in the UK charts. Its escapist verses ('From 9 to 5 I have to spend my time at work/My job is very boring I'm an office clerk/The only thing that helps me pass the time away/Is knowing I'll be back at Echo Beach someday') remain popular to this day. Follow-ups, including 'Saigon' (with its double groove b-side - playable both backwards and forwards) fared less well. This resulted in Martha And The Muffins becoming denigrated as 'one-hit-wonders', when in actuality all their albums, particularly Trance And Dance, are deeply resonant collections of songwriting which endure as well as any 'pop new wave' of the period. In 1981, Ladly left to work with the Associates and later formed the Scenery Club who released two singles on DinDisc. (Ladly now runs Real World Records' design department.) Finkle was then replaced by Jocelyn Lanois, Daniel Lanois's sister. The Muffins signed to RCA Records and session player Clara Hurst played keyboards temporarily but joined the Belle Stars in 1982. Following Haas' departure the band released Danseparc, before wife and husband team Johnson and Mark Gane formed M+M, who enjoyed a major US hit with 'Black Stations White Stations' They later released two albums as a duo (Mystery Walk, with production from Daniel Lanois, and The World Is A Ball), before moving to the UK. Following soundtrack work in Toronto for the film Modern Gravity, a further album, Modern Lullaby, was released in 1992, but their label went bankrupt shortly after its release. They have also recorded a children's album together, Songs From The Treehouse. The rest of the band work as a driver for the Canadian Automobile Association (Tim Gane), architect and swimming pool designer (Finkle), graphic designer (Ladly), and art museum guard (Haas).

Martha And The Vandellas

Martha Reeves (b. 18 July 1941, Alabama, USA), with Annette Sterling Beard, Gloria Williams and Rosalind Ashford, formed the Del-Phis in 1960, one of the scores of female vocal groups then operating in Detroit, Michigan, USA. After Reeves began working as a secretary at Motown Records, they were offered a one-off single release on the label's Melody subsidiary, on which they were credited as the Vels. Gloria Williams left the group when the single flopped, but the remaining trio were allowed a second opportunity, recording 'I'll Have To Let Him Go' in late 1962, when the artist for whom it had been intended, Mary Wells, failed to arrive for the session. Renamed Martha And The Vandellas, the group divided their time between backing other Motown artists and recording in their own right. They were featured on Marvin Gaye's 1962 hit 'Stubborn Kind Of Fellow', before the US Top 30 success of their own release, 'Come And Get These Memories', brought their career as second-string vocalists to an end. Their next single, the dynamic 'Heat Wave', was masterminded by the Holland/Dozier/Holland production team, and epitomized the confidence and verve of the Vandellas' finest work. 'Quicksand' repeated the hit formula with a US Top 10 chart placing, while it was 'Dancing In The Street' that represented the pinnacle of their sound. The song, co-written by Marvin Gaye and Mickey Stevenson, was an anthemic invitation to party, given added bite by the tense political situation in the black ghettos. Holland/Dozier/Holland's production exploited all the potential of the music, using clunking chains to heighten the rhythmic feel, and a majestic horn riff to pull people to their feet. 'Dancing In The Street' was the most exciting record Motown had yet made, and it was a deserved number 2 hit in America.

Nothing the Vandellas recorded thereafter reached quite the same peak of excitement, although not for want of trying. 'Nowhere To Run' in 1965 was an irresistible dance hit, which again was given political connotations in some quarters. It introduced a new group member, former Velvelette Betty Kelly, who replaced Annette Sterling Beard. This line-up scored further Top 10 hits with 'I'm Ready For Love' and the infectious 'Jimmy Mack', and celebrated Motown's decision to give Reeves individual credit in front of the group's name with another notable success, 'Honey Chile'. Reeves was taken seriously ill in 1968, and her absence forced the group to disband. By 1970, she was able to resume her career, recruiting her sister Lois and another former Velvelette, Sandra Tilley, to form a new Vandellas line-up. No major US hits were forthcoming, but in Britain they were able to capitalize on the belated 1969 success of 'Dancing In The Street', and had several Top 30 entries in the early 70s. When Motown moved their headquarters from Detroit to Hollywood in 1972, Reeves elected to stay behind. Disbanding the group once again, she fought a lengthy legal battle to have her recording contract annulled, and was eventually free to begin an abortive solo career. Her sister Lois joined Quiet Elegance, while Sandra Tilley retired from the music business, and died in 1982. Motown retained the rights to the Vandellas' name, but chose not to sully the memory of their early 60s hits by concocting a new version of the group without Martha Reeves.

b. Marta Marrero, 18 May 1969, California, USA. This pop singer grew up in California, her parents having fled Cuba shortly after the revolution. Her first experiences in show business came early, with an appearance as a dancer in the film Annie. Moving on to music, her debut single was the self-penned 'Toy Soldiers'. Although she has done little to please critics ('Love . . . Thy Will Be Done' was cited by one journalist as being 'sub-Tiffany'), her singles became a fixture of the charts in the early 90s. Her profile was also bolstered by consistent rumours of romances with pop stars (Nuno Bettencourt of Extreme, Prince). With the latter she co-wrote the hit single 'Martika's Kitchen', and he also helped out with several tracks on the album of the same name. She appeared in the US television show Wiseguy as a jazz singer.

Martin Guerre

The debut of this much-hyped third collaboration, following on from Les Misérables and Miss Saigon, between producer Cameron Mackintosh and the creative team of Alain Boublil and Claude-Michel Schönberg, was postponed for three weeks in order 'to develop the special choreographic style of the production'. This delay hardly seemed significant in view of the fact that it had already taken six years to prepare the '£3.5 million' mega-musical for the West End ('Six years!' exclaimed one critic. 'Good grief, Irving Berlin wrote Annie Get Your Gun in six days.'). Martin Guerre finally opened at London's Prince Edward Theatre on 10 July 1996. The true story of the sixteenth-century French husband who abandoned his young wife only to be replaced by an imposter seven years later, had previously inspired the 1982 French film The Return Of Martin Guerre starring Gerard Depardieu, and the 1993 remake Sommersby with Richard Gere and Jodie Foster. However, both movies kept audiences guessing about the identity of the man who appeared out of the blue claiming to be the real Martin Guerre, and was eventually accused of impersonating him, found guilty and executed. In Boublil and Schönberg's book, when Arnaud de Thil (Iain Glen) turns up in the village of Artigat posing as Guerre, Bertrande de Rols (Juliette Caton) sees through him right away (cue the big number 'All I Know'). This implausible reunion, along with an overwhelming emphasis on religious bigotry and a generally confusing plot, was supplemented by typically soaring Schönberg music and ordinary lyrics by Edward Hardy (additional lyrics: Boublil and Herbert Kretzmer). As well as 'All I Know', and another dramatic duet, 'Tell Me When To Go', the score also contained 'When We Were Young', 'Here Comes The Morning', 'Martin Guerre'; and 'Why Won't You Love Me?', amongst others, but no obvious hits. Choreographer Bob Avian staged some spirited stomping pagan dance rituals, and the director and co-adaptor was Declan Donnellan. Royal Shakespeare Company star Glen, making his first appearance in the musical theatre, headed a cast which included Jérôme Pradon (Guillaume), Matt Rawle (Martin Guerre), Michael Matus (Benoit), Ann Emery (Hortense), Sheila Reid, Julia Sutton, Susan Jane Tanner, and Martin Turner.

Despite a set of decidedly unenthusiastic reviews, Martin Guerre soldiered on, with receipts sometimes dropping below the break-even mark, until October when Mackintosh closed the show for three days so that extensive changes could be introduced. On 7 November Martin Guerre (Mark II) faced the critics again, and they pronounced the patient cured - well almost. Some inherent faults remained, and there was still a lack of humour to contrast with the overall darkness of the piece, but the general opinion seemed to be that this was about as good as it was going to get. The reported sum of £500,000 had been spent on re-writing 50-60% of the production and incorporating a completely revised first act and extra songs. These included a new opening number, 'Working On the Land', and involved yet another lyricist, Stephen Clark. A far more romantic story was now refocused around Bertrande, whose role was expanded to such an extent that it was to be shared between Juliette Caton and Rebecca Lock. Martin Guerre had been given a second chance, but in spite of winning Laurence Olivier Awards for Best New Musical and Best Theatre Choreographer, it failed to attract a consistent audience, and closed in February 1998, 'a $7 million write-off'.

By the mid-90s the Guerre legend had been the basis for at least two other stage musicals: Martin Guerre, with book and lyrics by Laura Harrington and music by Roger Ames, starring Patrick Cassidy, Judy Kuhn, Peter Samuels, and Beth Fowler, played at the Hartford Stage, Connecticut, USA, early in 1993; and The House Of Martin Guerre, with music and lyrics by Leslie Arden, who co-wrote the book with Anna Theresa Cascio, which originated in Toronto, Canada, and won the 1994 Dora Mavor Moore Award for Best New Musical. It was subsequently presented to much acclaim at Chicago's Goodman Theatre in the summer of 1996, and gained the Joseph Jefferson Award for Best Musical. The show returned to its Toronto roots in 1997 under the title of Martin Guerre. Ironically, Arden's mentor is Cameron Mackintosh, who several years ago gave her the opportunity to attend an Oxford masterclass with Stephen Sondheim.

b. 28 June 1900, Winchester, Clark County, Kentucky, USA, d. 15 August 1979. Martin learned to play guitar as a child (later adding musical saw) and gained his first professional work in vaudeville and minstrel shows. He recorded for Gennett with Doc Roberts and for some years from the late 20s, he worked as a duo with young James Roberts (Doc's son). Between 1928 and 1934, they recorded a mixture of old-time songs, new numbers and parodies, on some sessions being accompanied by Roy Hobbs (mandolin). Roberts tired of the music, in 1937, and joined the navy but later, he rejoined Martin, who had a band at WLAP Lexington on Martin's popular Morning Roundup. Amongst his musicians were Stringbean and the Amburgey Sisters; one of them, Irene, married Roberts and they performed as James And Martha (Carson). Martin, who also worked on WHAS Louisville and WLW and WCKY Cincinnati, made further recordings, mainly comedy numbers, for Vocalion Records in 1938. Throughout the 30s, Martin appeared on countless recordings for Paramount, Gennett and ARC. He once even recorded a sketch ('The Beer Party') with some friends to celebrate the end of prohibition. In 1940, he relocated to WCMI Ashland but during World War II, he withdrew from full-time performing and moved to Ohio, where he worked in a steel plant. He retired in the mid-60s and settled near Irvine, Kentucky, where he formed and played locally with his Cumberland Rangers. In 1971, Martin and Doc and James Roberts (the original Fiddlin' Doc Roberts Trio) were reunited to play a reunion concert at Berea College. In 1974, Martin and the Cumberland Rangers recorded an album for Rounder Records, but sadly, little of his immense recorded output is available, except for occasional tracks on some old-time compilations. He continued to make concert appearances with his group, sometimes beyond his own state and even, on one occasion, to Japan. Martin, a fine vocalist and a much respected rhythm guitarist, has helped many young musicians. In later years, his brilliant memory made him a source of knowledge on the early days of the music. On 15 August 1979, Martin, after spending the morning and afternoon fishing, returned to his garden to collect cucumbers for tea; his daughter-in-law subsequently found him dead, the victim of a heart attack.

Martin, Benny

b. 8 May 1928, Sparta, Tennessee, USA. Martin grew up in a musical family (his father and two sisters played as the Martin Family) and he was taught to play the guitar, mandolin and fiddle as a child - receiving tuition on the latter from Lester Flatt's father. After making his radio debut on WHUB Cookeville around 1939, he became a member of Big Jeff And The Radio Playboys on the Mid-Day Merry-Go-Round at WNOX Knoxville, and in 1942, moved with them to WLAC Nashville. They relocated to Chattanooga, playing WDOD and WAPO, and toured with Bisby's Comedians tent show, where they worked with Rod Brasfield. In 1946, they returned to WLAC and Martin left the band and joined WSM. He worked briefly as a member of the Musical Millers on the Martha White Show before his musical talents as a fiddle player and vocalist found him in demand. During the late 40s and 50s, he played with many famous acts, including Bill Monroe, Roy Acuff, Lester Flatt and Earl Scruggs (he also played on their Columbia recordings made between November 1952 and August 1953) and Johnny And Jack. He toured extensively, particularly during his time with Roy Acuff with whom he visited Germany in 1949. He made some solo vocal recordings for Mercury Records in the early 50s, and from 1953-60, he was a member of the Grand Ole Opry. He had minor US country hits in the 60s, with 'Rosebuds And You' and a duet with bluegrass musician Don Reno on the patriotic offering 'Soldier's Prayer in Viet Nam'. Martin, always a popular entertainer, continued to play with various acts throughout the 70s and 80s and has recorded albums with several other top instrumentalists, as well as appearing as a guest on other artists' albums. The Tennessee Jubilee album, made with John Hartford and Lester Flatt, includes his tribute to the early days of bluegrass, 'Lester, Bill And Me'. It is interesting to remember that, during the 50s, he worked on perfecting an unusual eight-string fiddle, which he often used on the Opry; he was inspired to develop the instrument after playfully using his fiddle bow on Bill Monroe's mandolin.

Martin, Bill

b. William Wylie, 9 November 1938, Glasgow, Scotland. A prolific and highly successful songwriter, record producer, and music publisher. Although he came from a musical family, and studied at the Royal Academy of Music, Martin first made his mark as a professional footballer for Partick Thistle. He subsequently played abroad in South Africa for three years, before returning to England intent on making a career as a songwriter. After being introduced to the Irish musician and arranger Phil Coulter by American lyricist Buddy Kaye, Martin and Coulter formed a publishing company in 1965. They had their first success with 'Hi Hi Hazel', which the Troggs and Geno Washington took into the UK chart. From then on, during the next 10 years, they wrote and/or produced a string of hit records for artists ranging from the Bay City Rollers to Elvis Presley. In 1967, Sandie Shaw won the Eurovision Song Contest with their infectious 'Puppet On A String' (UK number 1), which earned an Ivor Novello Award for 'Most Performed Work'. There was another 'Ivor' in the following year for 'Congratulations', with which Cliff Richard just failed to make it two Eurovision wins in a row for the songwriters, although it was another chart-topper. After providing Cilla Black with 'Surround Yourself With Sorrow' (UK number 3), Martin and Coulter came up with the immensely popular 'Back Home' for the 1970 England World Cup Squad. It too topped the chart (as did the associated album), and more or less took over as the UK 'National Anthem' for a few weeks, until the football team lost to Germany. A year later, Martin and Coulter wrote the English words to 'My Boy' (music by Jean Bourtayre and Claude Francois), which was popularized by Richard Harris, and revived in 1975 by Elvis Presley who took it into the US Top 20. Martin and Coulter had another US hit (a number 1) in the following year with the Bay City Rollers' 'Saturday Night'. By that stage, they had already given the Rollers several UK Top 20 entries, including 'All Of Me Loves All Of You', 'Remember (Sha-La-La)', 'Shang-A-Lang', and 'Summer Love Sensation'. Two of the other acts to enjoy success with Martin/Coulter songs in the 70s were, by a strange coincidence, both called Kenny. The Irish singer of that name went to number 11 with 'Heart Of Stone', while Kenny, the male vocal/instrumental group, had four Top 20 hits in a row with Martin and Coulter's 'The Bump', Fancy Pants', 'Baby I Love You OK', and 'Julie Ann'. Another UK group, Slik, also topped the UK chart in 1976 with the songwriters' 'Forever And Ever'. As a songwriter, music publisher, and record publisher Martin's worldwide sales have been estimated at over 35 million, and he is said to have had a number 1 record in every country in the Western world. Artists whom Martin has recorded, published or produced include Elton John, Elkie Brooks, Rod Stewart, the New Seekers, Van Morrison, Buddy Greco, Billy Connelly, the Dubliners, B.A. Robertson, Isaac Hayes, Dana and many more. He has also written for films and television. After selling his music business to EMI, he is now involved in television productions, character licensed merchandise and music publishing. A member of the Variety Club of Great Britain, a Freeman of the City of Glasgow and of London, and a director of the PRS, in 1975 Martin was the co-recipient - with Phil Coulter - of the Ivor Novello Award for 'Songwriter of the Year'.

Martin, C.F.

b. Christian Frederick Martin, 31 January 1796, Saxony, Germany. Martin established his guitar factory in 1833 at 196 Hudson Street, New York. By the time the company relocated to Nazareth, Pennsylvania, six years later, the organization was already on its way to becoming as synonymous to handmade acoustic guitars as Stradivarius was to violins. Its continued success was due to a refusal to change, cheapen or speed up the method in which the instrument was produced. During the folk boom of the early 60s, demand was such that the factory was taking 36 months to fulfil orders. The most famous of Martin's many styles of guitar is the Dreadnought. First manufactured in 1931, this guitar set the standard which is copied by most other manufacturers. Today, it remains a popular instrument for bluegrass, folk, blues and rock artists. The Dreadnought is renowned for its booming bass sound, and for some, an uncomfortably high string action. However, such action provides a beautiful tone and arguably the finest in pure acoustic guitars. In addition to regular guitars, Martin has also been a leading maker of ukuleles and mandolins, applying similar painstaking standards to each instrument. During the acoustic rock boom of the 70s, the guitar to be seen with was a D45, with its beautiful pearl inlay. On the first D45, made in 1933, one of the Martin craftsmen inlaid Gene Autry's name onto the fingerboard. This luxury is now particularly popular with US country singers. In recent years the company has adapted to changing demands by integrating an electro-acoustic device to amplify sound, competing with companies like Ovation, which pioneered this method. People will always pay more for the finest piece of craftsmanship, and Martin continues to lead the field.

Martin, Carl

b. 15 April 1906, Big Stone Gap, Virginia, USA, d. 1978. Like his father, the multi-instrumentalist Martin played in a string band, although he is also known for his work in the blues field. In his teens he met Howard Armstrong and, in 1930, the two musicians, along with Martin's brother Roland, recorded under the name of the Tennessee Chocolate Drops. It gives some indication of their sound that the record was also issued in the company's country music series (under a different credit). A couple of years later, Martin moved to Chicago and joined the blues circuit, recording under his own name and accompanying artists as diverse as Tampa Red and Freddie Spruell. In the 60s, Martin and Armstrong, with guitarist Ted Bogan, brought the old string band sound to a new audience.

Martin, Claire

b. 6 September 1967, Wimbledon, London, England. In 1982, after spending 10 years at stage school, Martin became resident singer at the Savoy Hotel in Bournemouth. In 1987 she sang on cruise liners for Cunard, including the QE II. In 1990 she visited the USA where she studied with Marilyn J. Johnson in New York. In 1991 she returned to the UK to form her own band, playing many prestigious London jazz venues including Ronnie Scott's, the 100 Club and the Pizza On The Park, and also toured extensively. In 1992 she played a return engagement at Ronnie Scott's and also appeared at the Glasgow and Sheffield Jazz Festivals. In addition to leading her own band, Martin also works regularly with Mick Hutton's group, Straight Face, which includes Steve Argüelles and Iain Ballamy, with Ray Gelato's Giants Of Jive, and with a free-music band led by John Stevens. She has also recorded with Bobby Wellins. A remarkably versatile singer, Martin's repertoire ranges happily from R&B to free music, incorporating along the way the great standards of which she is an accomplished interpreter. Despite her youth, Martin's work displays exceptional maturity which, allied to her warm, sensual sound, makes her performances a constant delight. Her choice of musical associates (her own group comprises pianist Jonathan Gee, bassist Arnie Somogyi and Clark Tracey) reveals her commitment to jazz. Although still at the beginning of her career, Martin has already made it clear that she is one of the most important new singers to emerge on the jazz scene in recent years.

b. Dino Paul Crocetti, 7 June 1917, Steubenville, Ohio, USA, d. 25 December 1995. An extremely popular ballad singer and light comedian with a relaxed and easy style, who developed into an accomplished dramatic actor. After leaving school in the 10th grade, he worked as a shoe-shine boy and a gas station attendant before becoming an 'amateur' welterweight boxer, 'Kid Crochet', earning 10 dollars a fight. When he retired from the boxing arena, he became a croupier at a local casino. His first singing job is said to have been with the Sammy Watkins band in 1941, when he was initially billed as Dino Martini, but the name was soon changed to Dean Martin. His earliest recordings were for the Diamond label, and included 'Which Way Did My Heart Go'/'All Of Me' and 'I Got the Sun In The Morning'/'Sweetheart Of Sigma Chi'. He also recorded some tracks for the Apollo label, well known for its impressive roster of black talent. The Martin recordings included 'Walkin' My Baby Back Home', 'Oh Marie', 'Santa Lucia', 'Hold Me', 'Memory Lane' and 'Louise'. In 1946, Martin first worked with comedian Jerry Lewis at the 500 Club in Atlantic City. Together they developed an ad-libbing song and comedy act that became very popular on US television and radio in the late 40s. In 1949, they appeared in supporting roles in the film My Friend Irma, and in the sequel, My Friend Irma Goes West, the following year. The team then starred in another 14 popular comedies, with Martin providing the songs and romantic interest, and Lewis contributing the zany fun. These films included At War With The Army (1950), Jumping Jacks (1952), Sailor, Beware!, The Stooge, Scared Stiff (1953), The Caddy (1953), Living It Up (1954), Pardners (1956) and Hollywood Or Bust (1956). Their parting was somewhat acrimonious, and it was widely felt that Martin would be the one to suffer most from the split. In fact, they both did well. After a shaky start in the comedy movie Ten Thousand Bedrooms (1957), Martin blossomed as a dramatic actor in The Young Lions (1958), Some Came Running (1958), Rio Bravo (1959), Ada (1961), Toys In The Attic (1963), The Sons Of Katie Elder (1965) and Airport (1970). He still retained his comic touch in Who Was That Lady? (1960) and What A Way To Go (1964), but made surprisingly few musicals. The most notable were Bells Are Ringing (1960), with Judy Holliday, and Robin And The Seven Hoods (1964).

Meanwhile, Martin had signed to Capitol Records in 1948, and for the next 10 years had a series of US Top 30 chart entries, including 'That Certain Party' (duet with Jerry Lewis), 'Powder Your Face With Sunshine', 'I'll Always Love You', 'If', 'You Belong To Me', 'Love Me, Love Me', 'That's Amore', 'I'd Cry Like A Baby', 'Sway', 'Money Burns A Hole In My Pocket, 'Memories Are Made Of This' (number 1), 'Innamorata', 'Standing On The Corner', 'Return To Me', 'Angel Baby' and 'Volare' ('Nel Blu Dipinto Di Blu'). Martin's version of 'That's Amore' resurfaced when it was featured in the 1987 hit movie Moonstruck.

Although Martin was still a big attraction on film and in nightclubs, his records found difficulty in making the singles charts during the early part of the 60s. In 1961, Frank Sinatra, who had also been with Capitol Records, started his own Reprise Records. Martin, who was a member of Sinatra's 'Clan', or 'Ratpack', was one of the first recruits to the new label. In 1964, Martin returned to the US singles charts with a bang. His recording of 'Everybody Loves Somebody', produced by Jimmy Bowen, had a commercial country 'feel' to it, and knocked the Beatles' 'A Hard Day's Night' off the top of the chart. Martin's subsequent Top 30 entries were all in the same vein - records such as 'The Door Is Still Open To My Heart', 'You're Nobody Till Somebody Loves You', 'Send Me The Pillow You Dream On', 'Houston', 'In The Chapel In The Moonlight' and 'Little Ole Wine Drinker, Me'. The latter number was a fitting selection for an artist whose stage persona was that of a man more than slightly inebriated. 'Everybody Loves Somebody' became the theme song for The Dean Martin Show on NBC TV which started in 1964, ran for nine seasons and was syndicated worldwide. As well being a showcase for Martin's singing talents, the show gave him the opportunity to display his improvisational skills in comedy. He continued to be a big draw in clubs, especially in Las Vegas, and played the London Palladium in the summer of 1987 to favourable reviews. Later that year, he joined ex-Rat Pack colleagues Sinatra and Sammy Davis Jnr. in the 'Together Again' tour, involving 40 performances in 29 cities, but had to withdraw at an early stage because of a kidney ailment. In the autumn of 1993 it was reported that Martin had lung cancer and he died on Christmas Day 1995.

Martin, Eric

b. USA. The members of San Francisco, California, USA rock group the Eric Martin Band were drawn from an earlier collective who recorded an independently released album for the local Californian rock underground. With their new billing, giving greater prominence to singer/guitarist and songwriter Eric Martin, they secured a recording contract with CBS Records, which resulted in the release of Sucker For A Pretty Face in 1983 - a consummate example of melodic west coast metal. Afterwards, however, Martin took sole billing and dismissed his former colleagues to pursue a solo career with Capitol Records. After a disappointing self-titled solo album in 1985 he returned to form with the release of I'm Only Fooling Myself in 1986, though some considered the title to be an accurate reflection of his long-term prospects within the music industry.

Martin, Fiddlin' Joe

b. 8 January 1900, Edwards, Mississippi, USA, d. 21 November 1975, Walls, Mississippi, USA. Martin learned guitar and trombone as a boy, later adding mandolin and bass fiddle (hence his nickname). He switched to washboard and drums in the 40s after damaging his hands in a fire. He worked with many Delta blues singers, including Charley Patton, Willie Newbern, Johnnie Temple, Memphis Minnie, Willie Brown and Son House, recording with the last two for the Library of Congress in 1940. Martin played drums for Howlin' Wolf until Wolf moved north, but his most enduring association was with Woodrow Adams; he appeared on all Adams' recordings, and they worked Mississippi juke joints together until Martin's death.

b. 9 December 1906, Cleveland, Ohio, USA, d. 30 September 1983. After starting out on drums and C-melody saxophone, Martin switched to playing tenor saxophone. He led his own band while still at high school, then became a sideman in various local bands. After a few years, he began attracting attention for his smooth and competent musicianship. Guy Lombardo and his brothers heard and encouraged him and, in 1931, Martin formed his own band. He took the unit into a succession of engagements at prestigious hotels, including the Roosevelt Grill in New York's Manhattan Hotel, and was heard on the radio. He made his breakthrough into popular success with an arrangement the theme from the first movement of Tchaikovsky's B-flat piano concerto. This was followed by other arrangements of popular classics, usually featuring the band's current pianist - a role taken by, amongst others, Jack Fina and Barclay Allen. The Tchaikovsky piece was later re-recorded, this time with lyrics by Bobby Worth and retitled 'Tonight We Love', and became a hit all over again. Martin and his band appeared in a handful of films, including Stage Door Canteen (1943). Martin had a good ear for singers and at one time or another employed Helen Ward, Merv Griffin, Buddy Clark and Terry Shand. In the 50s and 60s Martin continued to perform on the radio and also appeared on television shows. Untroubled by changing musical tastes, he continued to work at major venues and was musical director for Elvis Presley's first appearance in Las Vegas. Still in demand for hotel work, he entered the 70s with an engagement at the Ambassador in Los Angeles. Martin continued leading his band until shortly before his death in 1983.

b. 3 January 1926, London, England. Martin became the world's most famous record producer through his work with the Beatles. Classically trained at London's Guildhall School of Music, he joined EMI in 1950 as a junior A&R man. Five years later, Martin was given charge of the Parlophone label where he produced a wide variety of artists. Among them were ballad singers (Shirley Bassey and Matt Monro), skiffle groups (the Vipers), jazz bands (Temperance 7, Johnny Dankworth, Humphrey Lyttelton) and numerous comedy artists. Chief among these were Peter Sellers and Bernard Cribbins, whose 'Right Said Fred' and 'Hole In The Ground' were hits in 1962. By this time, Martin had signed the Beatles to Parlophone and begun a relationship which lasted until their demise in 1970. Apart from insisting that drummer Pete Best be replaced, Martin's main contribution to the group's music lay in his ability to translate their more adventurous ideas into practical terms. Thus, he added classical music touches to 'Yesterday' and 'For No One' and devised the tape loops and studio manipulations that created the stranger sounds on Revolver and Sgt Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band. Martin also made two orchestral albums of Beatles tunes. As Brian Epstein signed Cilla Black, Gerry And the Pacemakers and Billy J. Kramer And the Dakotas to Parlophone, Martin supervised their recordings.

In 1965, he left EMI and set up his own studios, AIR London with fellow producers Ron Richards (Hollies) and John Burgess (Manfred Mann). He continued to work with several new EMI artists, notably the Action. In the 70s he produced a series of hit albums by America. During this period he worked with Neil Sedaka, Ringo Starr, Jimmy Webb, Jeff Beck and Stackridge, while producing the soundtrack to the 1978 film of Sgt Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band. He also maintained the Beatles connection and prepared the 1977 release of the live recording At The Hollywood Bowl and produced two of Paul McCartney's solo efforts, Tug Of War (1981) and Pipes Of Peace (1983). He also produced the soundtrack to McCartney's film musical Give My Regards To Broad Street. In the late 70s, AIR was purchased by Chrysalis and Martin became a director of the company. He opened a second studio on the Caribbean island of Montserrat, which became a favoured recording centre for artists, including McCartney, Dire Straits and the Rolling Stones, before the island was devastated by a hurricane in 1989. Those artists were among the musicians donating tracks for After The Hurricane, a benefit album organized by Martin.

During the late 80s, Martin was less prolific as a producer, but created a version of Dylan Thomas' Under Milk Wood in 1988 and worked with ex-Dexys Midnight Runners member Andy Leek on his debut solo album. In 1990, Martin announced plans to replace AIR Studios with a 'state of the art' audio-video complex in north London. Martin's quiet and intelligent persona has masked an extraordinary talent. His work with the Beatles cannot be overstated. His punctilious attention in remastering the Beatles' entire work for compact disc is demonstrated in the quite remarkable results he achieved. In 1992, he was instrumental in producing a television documentary to mark the 25th anniversary of the Beatles' Sgt. Pepper album. In the mid-90s he was a major part of the Beatles Anthology series, although he was disappointed not to have been asked to produce the two new singles, 'Free As A Bird' and 'Real Love'. This task went to Jeff Lynne, who received some criticism for his production, leading to a number of 'if only George Martin had produced it' comments. Martin has no worries: his name is firmly in the history books, with an unimpeachable record. He received the Grammy Trustees Award in 1995. In addition to his chairmanship of AIR Studios he is a director of Chrysalis Group plc and is chairman of the London radio station Heart FM. Martin was rightly awarded a knighthood in 1996 for his services to music, for being such a consistent ambassador of music and for hardly ever putting a foot wrong. In 1998 Martin released his final album, In My Life, a collection of Beatles' cover versions by guest 'vocalists' from music and film including Celine Dion, Jim Carrey, Goldie Hawn and Sean Connery.

b. Thomas Grady Martin, 17 January 1929, Chapel Hill, Marshall County, Tennessee, USA. As a boy, Martin was obsessed with both the fiddle and guitar, and he attended all the shows he could in order to watch and learn. When aged only 15, he was taken to Nashville to play with the Bailes Brothers on the Grand Ole Opry. He and his friend, Jabbo Arrington, travelled to Chicago to play on 1946 recordings by fiddler Curly Fox and his wife, Texas Ruby. He became a resident musician on the Grand Ole Opry, but in 1949, he and Arrington joined a band formed by Little Jimmy Dickens. Their twin guitars can be heard on Dickens' country hits, 'A-Sleepin' At The Foot Of The Bed' and 'Hillbilly Fever'. Martin formed a group of session musicians, the Slewfoot Five, who recorded in their own right and were credited on hit records by Bing Crosby ('Till The End Of The World') and Burl Ives ('The Wild Side Of Life'). Martin played on sessions for Red Foley, Bobby Helms, Webb Pierce and Marty Robbins ('El Paso'). He also played on Buddy Holly's Nashville sessions, including 'Love Me' and 'Modern Don Juan', and the distinctive introduction to Johnny Horton's 'Battle Of New Orleans'. A failure in electrical equipment led to him 'inventing' feedback on Marty Robbins' US hit, 'Don't Worry'. Martin and Chet Atkins are the only musicians to have accompanied both Hank Williams and Elvis Presley. Martin played on Presley's recording sessions from 1962-65, and he became a mainstay of the so-called Nashville sound. He also worked with Joan Baez, J.J. Cale, Kris Kristofferson ('Why Me Lord'), Roy Orbison ('Oh Pretty Woman') and Leon Russell. Martin has also toured with Jerry Reed and latterly with Willie Nelson, and can be seen in his film Honeysuckle Rose. Nelson says, 'Grady Martin has been my hero forever. There's nobody to have in the studio than Grady Martin, because not only does he play great guitar, he knows what everybody else is supposed to be doing too.'

Martin, Horace

Martin was an underrated singer who released a large number of recordings but received little recognition. He began his recording career in 1980 with Robert Palmer's Negus Roots, releasing 'Zuggy Zuggy' and 'Sweet Something', while with the fiercely unconstrained Big Ben label he released 'Africa Is Calling', 'We Are All One', 'Beautiful Dream' and 'Jah Jah Children'. Throughout the 80s he maintained a high profile as a singles artist, although he was unable to achieve crossover success. In 1985 his fortunes changed when he recorded 'War', produced by veteran DJ Jah Thomas over the legendary Stalag rhythm. The song led to sessions with Prince Huntley, whose print shop Modernize Printery led to the formation of his Modernize Music and Greedy Puppy labels. Huntley had recorded 'Pressure In A Babylon' but found greater success as a producer. Martin recorded a succession of hits for Huntley, including 'Na Fry No Fat', 'Sonia' and 'Mi Rule'. The popularity of Patrick Andy's 'Sting Me A Sting' led Martin to respond with 'Shock Me A Shock'. In 1987 he recorded for Harold McLarty the hit 'Type Of Loving', which featured the fledgling DJ skills of Tiger, supported by the Riddim Kings Band. The release gave Martin the wider exposure he deserved, although this was overshadowed by the unprecedented demand for the newly acclaimed DJ. Martin followed his hit with the less successful 'Can't Get Used To Losing You', which heralded a return to anonymity.

b. 11 August 1914, Birmingham, Alabama, USA. From the age of five Martin took piano lessons and attended local public school, and also studied at Birmingham Southern College. Despite his classical training, however, he was inspired by the music of George Gershwin and gravitated towards the popular music of the day. In 1937 he appeared in a singing role in Hooray For What! on Broadway, where he met another young singer, Ralph Blane. Together with Blane, he and two others formed a vocal quartet named the Martins, who were distinguished by their jazzy harmonizing. Martin and Blane appeared with their group on Fred Allen's popular radio show at the end of the decade, but most of Martin's time and energies were directed towards Broadway, and he was active onstage and increasingly involved with offstage activities in the musical theatre. Among the shows with which he was associated were Irving Berlin's Louisiana Purchase, for which he was vocal director and arranger, Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart's The Boys From Syracuse, Cole Porter's DuBarry Was A Lady, Vernon Duke's Cabin In The Sky, and High Button Shoes, Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, and the Phil Silvers vehicle, Top Banana. Martin was eager to write music for Broadway and in Blane he had found an ideal partner. The nature of their collaborations was unusual, as Martin explained: 'Ralph and I both wrote music and we both wrote lyrics. Almost always, each of us wrote songs unassisted by the other and simply pooled our work.' In 1941 they were commissioned by Rodgers, who was involved in the production of George Abbott's Best Foot Forward, a show that starred Nancy Walker, to write songs. Among their songs for this show were 'Buckle Down, Winsocki', a big hit of that year, and the now lesser known 'Ev'ry Time'. The following year, Martin and Blane joined the long procession of Broadway songsmiths lured by Hollywood. At MGM they worked with other songwriters on several films, including Broadway Rhythm (1943), for which they wrote 'Brazilian Boogie', performed by Lena Horne, Thousands Cheer (1943) and Ziegfeld Follies (1944), writing 'Love', memorably sung by Horne. That same year they had their first largely unassisted venture, the hugely popular Judy Garland film, Meet Me In St. Louis. For this film the duo wrote 'The Trolley Song', which was nominated for an Academy Award, 'The Boy Next Door' and 'Have Yourself A Merry Little Christmas'. After wartime service, during which Martin served in Europe, he returned to Hollywood and Broadway. In the film Good News (1947), he and Blane received another Oscar nomination, together with Roger Edens, for 'Pass That Peace Pipe', and in 1948 Martin wrote music and lyrics for Look, Ma, I'm Dancin'!, which starred Walker on Broadway. His score included 'Gotta Dance' and 'I'm The First Girl In The Second Row'.

In 1950 Martin was vocal arranger for a James Cagney movie, West Point Story, and he also wrote the music for a movie short about the primitive artist Grandma Moses. This music was later adapted by the composer for the 'New England Suite', orchestrated by Alec Wilder, who was given co-composer credit because, as Martin says, he 'brought so much new beauty and enhancement to it'. The following year Martin was again responsible for music and lyrics, this time for Make A Wish, from which came 'What I Was Warned About', 'Suits Me Fine' and 'When Does This Feeling Go Away?'. In 1952 he was in London's West End for Love From Judy, which starred Jeannie Carson, and later in the decade worked on Hollywood's Athena, with Blane, The Girl Rush, for which he and Blane wrote 'An Occasional Man', The Girl Most Likely, also with Blane, and in 1954 was vocal director and arranger for Garland's A Star Is Born. He also appeared with Garland as her piano accompanist, notably at her first New York Palace Theatre show, and he accompanied Eddie Fisher at the London Palladium. Martin also worked in television, including the series Washington Square, with Ray Bolger, and the Patrice Munsel Show. During his years in Hollywood he acted as vocal coach for several artists, including Garland, Horne, Bolger, Rosalind Russell and Nanette Fabray. In 1963, Martin and Blane worked on a revival of Best Foot Forward, adding a new song, 'You Are For Loving', which Wilder, in his book, American Popular Song, ranked 'among the best theatre ballads ever written'. The following year, in collaboration this time with Timothy Gray, Martin wrote the music for High Spirits, including 'If I Gave You' and 'You'd Better Love Me'. In 1979 Martin was musical director for Sugar Babies, starring Mickey Rooney and Ann Miller, which played on Broadway and in London and which used music written by Jimmy McHugh. In 1989 Martin and Blane again collaborated, this time to write 10 new songs for a stage version of Meet Me In St. Louis, which opened at the Gershwin on 2 November and ran for seven months. Among numerous recordings of Martin's work are excellent albums by him and Blane, Michael Feinstein Sings the Hugh Martin Songbook, and Marlene VerPlanck's You'd Better Love Me. In 1998 Martin was living in retirement in California where, far from being idle, he was preparing a book about his life and career, and in particular, his long and fruitful relationship with Blane. Martin should not be confused with composer, arranger and singer Hugh E. Martin (1929-76).

b. James Henry Martin, 10 August 1927, on a farm near Sneedville, Tennessee, USA. Martin learned to play the guitar as a boy and first appeared on radio in Morristown in 1948. He joined Bill Monroe in 1949 and remained with him (except for a short break) until 1954. Many rate Martin to be the finest lead singer and guitarist ever to work with Monroe. He played on some of Monroe's best recordings and sang notable duets with him, including 'Memories Of Mother And Dad'. In the mid-50s, he worked with the Osborne Brothers, with whom he recorded '20-20 Vision', before forming his own Sunny Mountain Boys. Martin went on to become a legend of bluegrass music, playing the WJR Detroit Barn Dance, Louisiana Hayride and all major venues. His band has contained some great bluegrass musicians, including J.D. Crowe, Doyle Lawson and Alan Munde. He recorded for Decca and had some chart successes including 'Rock Hearts' (1958) and 'Widow Maker' (1964). He also achieved acclaim for his work on the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band's legendary 1972 album Will The Circle Be Unbroken. Many experts believe that Martin has never been afforded full credit for his contributions over the years. It may be that his frankness and the perfection that he expects from his musicians have at times worked against him.

Martin, Judy

b. Eva Alaine Overstake, 16 July 1918, Decatur, Illinois, USA, d. November 1951. She learned to play guitar as a child and first sang at Salvation Army gatherings with her elder sisters, Evelyn (b. 1913) and Lucille (b. 1915, d. 1978). In 1931, singing as the Three Maids, they became regulars on WLS Chicago, where they worked with Red Foley. In 1933, after she married Foley, the act broke up (Evelyn and Lucille went on to work as solo acts, with Lucille later achieving lasting country music fame as singer-songwriter Jenny Lou Carson). Eva became a regular on the WLS National Barn Dance programme until 1947. During this time, she and Foley raised three children; the elder, Shirley Lee, later married singer Pat Boone and is the mother of pop singer Debbie Boone. Eva also brought up Betty Foley, whose mother, Foley's first wife Axie Pauline (Cox), had died in childbirth. In the late 40s, Eva followed a solo career, performing as Judy Martin, but in November 1951, she ended her life with an overdose of sleeping tablets. Her reasons were unclear but reports indicated that it was mainly because of Foley's friendship with Sally Sweet, who later became his third wife. She made some recordings with Foley and may be heard on Red Foley (Vocalion 1966).

Martin, Mac, And The Dixie Travelers

b. William D. Colleran, 26 April 1925, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, USA. Colleran began his career as a teenager singing with Ed Brozi in a touring medicine show, and was influenced by acts such as the Monroe Brothers and the Blue Sky Boys. After World War II, he became interested in bluegrass music. In 1949, he and his band played regularly on WHJB Greensburg, Pennsylvania, and since there were three members of the band called Bill, he decided he would become Mac Martin. In the early 50s, he was noted for his banjo playing and fine vocal work, and in 1953, was playing with a band on WHOD Homestead, Pennsylvania, which was likened to that of Lester Flatt and Earl Scruggs. In 1957, he and his band took a residency at Walsh's Lounge in Pittsburg where they played weekly for the next 15 years. In 1963, the Travelers recorded two albums for Gateway records, although only one was released. A few years later, they recorded four albums for Rural Rhythm. Noted mandolin specialist Bob Artis (b. 26 July 1946, Santa Monica, California, USA) joined the band and when Mac Martin left for a time in 1972, Artis took over. In 1974, when the band recorded for County, Martin had returned. In addition to his playing, Artis wrote many articles for publications such as Bluegrass Unlimited and Muleskinner News, and his book Bluegrass was published in 1975.

Martin, Mary

b. Mary Virginia Martin, 1 December 1913, Weatherford, Texas, USA, d. 3 November 1990, Rancho Mirage, California, USA. A legendary star of the Broadway musical theatre during the 40s and 50s, and one of its most charming, vivacious and best-loved performers. Her father was a lawyer, and her mother a violin teacher. She took dancing and singing lessons from an early age, married at 16, and eventually ran a dancing school herself before moving to Hollywood where she auditioned constantly at the film studios, and worked in nightclubs and on radio. After being spotted by the producer Lawrence Schwab, her first big break came on Broadway in 1938 when she won a secondary role, as Dolly Winslow, in the Cole Porter musical Leave It To Me. Almost every night she stopped the show with her 'sensational' rendering of 'My Heart Belongs To Daddy' while performing a mock striptease perched on top of a large cabin trunk at a 'Siberian' railway station. On the strength of her performance in that show she was signed to Paramount, and made 10 films over a period of four years, beginning with The Great Victor Herbert in 1939. Although her delightfuly warm personality and theatrical star quality, were not so effective on film, she did have her moments, particularly in Rhythm On The River (with Bing Crosby and Oscar Levant) and Birth Of The Blues, in which she joined Crosby and Jack Teagarden for 'The Waiter, And The Porter And The Upstairs Maid'. She also sang the title song in Kiss The Boys Goodbye, which became a big hit for Tommy Dorsey, and duetted with Dick Powell on 'Hit The Road To Dreamland' in Star Spangled Rhythm. Other film appearances included Love Thy Neighbour, New York Town, Happy-Go-Lucky, True To Life, and Main Street To Boradway (1953). While on the west coast, she married for the second time, to a Paramount executive Richard Halliday, who became her manager. In 1943 she returned to the stage, and, after failing to reach Broadway with Dancing In The Streets, scored a great success with One Touch Of Venus which ran for 567 performances. The role of a glamorous statue that comes to life and falls in love with a human had originally been intended for Marlene Dietrich, but it fell to Martin to sing the haunting 'Speak Low,' and the show established her as a true star. She followed it with Lute Song, the show which introduced Yul Brynner to Broadway, before returning to Hollywood to reprise 'My Heart Belongs To Daddy' for the Cole Porter biopic Night And Day. A trip to London in 1947 for an appearance in Noël Coward's Pacific 1860, proved an unsatisfactory experience, and Martin returned to the USA to play the lead in a touring version of Annie Get Your Gun. Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein's smash hit South Pacific was next, and Martin's memorable performance, funny and poignant in turns, won her a Tony Award. Starred with opera singer Ezio Pinza, she introduced several of the composers' most endearing numbers, including 'I'm Gonna Wash That Man Right Out Of My Hair' (sung while she shampooed her hair on stage), 'A Wonderful Guy', 'A Cockeyed Optimist', and the hilarious 'Honeybun'. South Pacific ran for 1,925 performances in New York, and Martin recreated her role for the 1951 London production at Drury Lane where she was equally well received. During the rest of the 50s Mary Martin appeared in several straight plays, two highly regarded television spectaculars - one with Ethel Merman (which included a 35-song medley), and the other with Noël Coward - as well as starring on Broadway with Cyril Ritchard in a musical version of Peter Pan (1954) which was taped and shown repeatedly on US television. In November 1959 Martin opened at the Lunt-Fontanne Theatre in New York in what was to prove yet another blockbuster hit. Rodgers and Hammerstein's musical about the Trapp family of Austrian folk singers, The Sound Of Music, immediately produced reactions ranging for raves to revulsion, but it gave Martin another Tony Award and the chance to display her homespun charm with songs such as 'My Favourite Things' and 'Do-Re-Mi'. From the 'hills that were alive with music', Mary Martin plummeted to the depths in Jennie (1963), her first real flop. Thereafter, she and her husband spent more time at their home in Brazil, but in 1965 she was persuaded to embark on a world tour in Hello, Dolly! which included a visit to Vietnam, and a five-month stay in London. Her final appearance in a Broadway musical was in 1966 with Robert Preston in the two-hander I Do! I Do! which ran for 560 performances. In the 70s she did more straight theatre and won a Peabody Award for the television film Valentine. After her husband's death in 1973, Martin moved to Palm Springs to be near her friend Janet Gaynor, but returned to New York in 1977 to star with Ethel Merman in a benefit performance of Together Again. In the early 80s, Martin and Janet Gaynor were severely injured in an horrific taxicab crash in San Franciso which took the life of her long-time aide Ben Washer. Martin recovered to receive the applause of her peers in Our Heart Belongs To Mary, and to make her final US stage appearance in 1986 with Carol Channing in a national tour of James Kirkwood's comedy Legends. For much of the time she had to wear a shortwave radio device to prompt her when she forgot her lines. Mary Martin made her final appearance on the London stage in the 1980 Royal Variety Performance when she performed a delightful version of 'Honeybun', and then had to suffer the embarrassment of watching her son from her first marriage, Larry Hagman (the notorious J. R Ewing from the television soap opera, Dallas), forget his lines in front of the celebrity audience.

Martin, Moon

b. John Martin, 1950, Oklahoma, USA. Emerging in 1979 with a style somewhere between new wave and nouveau 50s rock 'n' roll, Martin was nicknamed 'Moon' because he frequently employed lunar imagery in his songs. He began playing lead guitar in a straight C&W band Cec Wilson And The Panhandlers, then joined a Beatles-imitation group followed by a rockabilly unit called the Disciples. After moving to Los Angeles in the late 60s, he undertook session work for Del Shannon and Jackie DeShannon. In the meantime, the Disciples changed their name to Southwind and recorded three albums, all in a country rock vein. Martin continued his extra-curricular work, contributing to Linda Ronstadt's Silk Purse, Jesse Ed Davis's Ululu and some unreleased tracks by Gram Parsons. In 1974 Martin teamed-up with producer/arranger Jack Nitzsche, who took one of his songs, 'Cadillac Walk' to Mink DeVille. The song was a minor hit and DeVille recorded Martin's 'Rolene' on their second album. Martin next made a surprise appearance on Michelle Phillips' Victim Of Romance, for which he wrote three songs including the title track. After contributing two songs to an album by Lisa Burns, Martin worked on his debut solo album. Shots From A Cold Nightmare, an unusual sythesis of 50s/80s musical styles, was widely praised. After reaching the US Top 30 with 'Rolene', Martin released his second album, Escape From Domination, which had a stronger band feel with the inclusion of backing ensemble, the Ravens. Martin's homogeneous style lost some of its charm and bite by the third album and his subsequent work proved anti-climactic. He ended his association with Capitol Records and returned to songwriting.

Martin, Ray

b. Raymond Stuart Martin, 11 October 1918, Vienna, Austria, d. February 1988, South Africa. A composer, arranger, musical director and author, after studying violin, composition and orchestration at the State Academy for Music and Fine Arts in Vienna, Martin moved to Britain in 1937. He joined the Carroll Levis Discoveries show as a solo violin act, touring the UK variety circuit, and was then chosen as the 'New Voice' in the popular BBC radio series Bandwaggon, which starred Arthur Askey and Richard Murdoch. After appearing in several editions of Sidney Torch's Half Hour, he enlisted in the British Army in 1940 and worked in the Intelligence Corps, aided by his fluency in German, French and English. Later, he became musical director of the Variety Department for the British Forces Network in Hamburg, Germany. He started broadcasting his Melody From The Sky programme from there, with a German string orchestra culled from the Hamburg Philharmonic Orchestra, and transferred the show to the BBC in December 1946, where it ran for over 500 broadcasts. Martin was also instrumental in founding the BBC Northern Variety Orchestra, and, from 1949-51, conducted at least six shows a week. He started recording for Columbia Records in 1949 with his own Concert Orchestra accompanying other artists including Julie Andrews, Steve Conway and Jimmy Young. Eventually he became the company's recording manager. His 50s instrumental hits included Leroy Anderson's 'Blue Tango', 'Swedish Rhapsody' and 'Carousel Waltz'. Some of his many compositions and film scores are difficult to locate because, besides his own name, he wrote under several pseudonyms, such as Tony Simmonds, Buddy Cadbury, Lester Powell and Marshall Ross. In 1956 he wrote the background score, and served as musical director, for a British musical film called It's Great To Be Young, starring John Mills. In addition to the title track, written under his own name, the film contained Martin's (as Marshall Ross) 1952 composition 'Marching Strings'; and his (as Lester Powell) romantic ballad 'You Are My First Love' (in collaboration with Paddy Roberts). Martin's other compositions included 'Melody From The Sky', 'Once Upon A Winter Time', 'Muriella', 'Begorra', 'Parlour Game', 'Blue Violins' (a US hit for Hugo Winterhalter's Orchestra), 'Any Old Time', 'Waltzing Bugle Boy', 'Airborne', 'Ballet Of The Bells', 'Tango Of The Bells', 'Big Ben Blues', 'Never Too Young' and 'Sounds Out Of Sight'. He composed the incidental music for over 20 BBC Sound cartoons, and wrote the scores for several films, including Yield To The Night, a prison melodrama in which ex-'glamour girl' Diana Dors gave a highly acclaimed dramatic performance, and the 1956 version of My Wife's Father. In 1957 Martin moved to America to work in New York and Hollywood. His US film scores included The Young Graduates and The Hoax. In 1972 he returned to work in the UK and, in 1980, appeared as himself in The Baltimore Bullit. During the 80s he settled in South Africa, and died there in 1988.

Martin, Sara

b. 18 June 1884, Louisville, Kentucky, USA, d. 24 May 1955, Louisville, Kentucky, USA. A melodious but rather inflexible singer, Martin appears nevertheless to have been a popular success, recording over 120 tracks for OKeh between 1923 and 1928. These include the first recorded blues with guitar accompaniment (by Sylvester Weaver), and the first with a jug band (that of Clifford Hayes, billed as 'Sara Martin's Jug Band'). Although Chicago-based, Martin maintained close connections with Louisville, from where Hayes and Weaver also originated. She worked in vaudeville from 1915-31, thereafter devoting herself to the church and to running a nursing home in Louisville from the 40s until her death.

Martin, Tony

An extremely popular singer from the 30s until the late 50s, with a powerful voice and an easy, romantic style. As a teenager, Martin became proficient on the saxophone and formed his own band, the Clarion Four. For some years he worked in the San Francisco area at the Palace Hotel, playing saxophone and singing with bands such as Anson Weeks, Tom Coakley, and Tom Guran, whose outfit included Woody Herman. Morris drove across country with Herman and other members of the band to the 1933 Chicago World Fair, and afterwards played the city's Chez Paree Club. In 1934 he changed his name to Tony Martin, and tried to break into films, without success. Two years later he landed a 'bit' part in the Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers hit movie Follow The Fleet, along with two other young hopefuls, Lucille Ball and Betty Grable. Later, in 1936, he signed for 20th Century-Fox, and sang 'When I'm With You' in Poor Little Rich Girl, and 'When Did You Leave Heaven?' in Sing, Baby, Sing. The following year he married one of the film's stars, Alice Faye.

During the late 30s he achieved star status, thanks to film musicals such as Pigskin Parade, with Judy Garland and Betty Grable; Banjo On My Knee, with Barbara Stanwyck and Joel McCrea; The Holy Terror and Sing And Be Happy, with Leah Ray; You Can't Have Everything and Sally, Irene And Mary with Alice Faye; Ali Baba Goes To Town, starring Eddie Cantor; Kentucky Moonshine and Thanks For Everything. When Martin left Fox he appeared with Rita Hayworth in Music In My Heart, and introduced Robert Wright and George Forrest's 'It's A Blue World' which was nominated for an Academy Award in 1940. In 1941, Martin appeared with the Marx Brothers in the Big Store, and sang what was to become one of his 'identity songs', 'The Tenement Symphony', described in some quarters, somewhat unkindly, as the comedy highlight of the film. Martin's other movie that year was Ziegfeld Girl, with some spectacular Busby Berkeley production numbers, and starring, amongst others, Judy Garland, Hedy Lamarr and Lana Turner. After the attack on Pearl Harbour in December 1941, Martin enlisted in the US Armed Forces, serving first in the Navy, and then with the Army in the Far East. He also sang for a time with the Army Air Forces Training Command Orchestra directed by Glenn Miller. While in the Services, Martin received several awards, including the Bronze Star and other citations. At the end of World War II he returned to showbusiness, and starred in the Jerome Kern bio-pic, Till The Clouds Roll By (1946), which was followed by Casbah (1948), thought by many to have been his best role. The songs were by Harold Arlen and Leo Robin, and included another Martin all-time favourite, 'For Every Man There's A Woman'. In the same year Martin, having divorced Alice Faye, married dancer-actress Cyd Charisse, and later starred with her in Easy To Love (1953). Martin's other films during the 50s included Two Tickets To Broadway (with Janet Leigh), Here Come The Girls (with Bob Hope and Rosemary Clooney), the all-star Sigmund Romberg bio-pic Deep In My Heart, the 1955 MGM re-make of Hit The Deck, and a guest appearance in Meet Me In Las Vegas (which starred Cyd Charisse and Dan Dailey). In 1957 Martin starred with Vera-Ellen in Let's Be Happy, an unsuccessful British attempt to recreate the Hollywood musical. In addition to his film work, Martin has had a very successful recording career. His first hits, 'Now It Can Be Told' and 'South Of The Border', came in the late 30s, and continued through to the mid-50s with songs such as 'It's A Blue World', 'Tonight We Love', 'To Each His Own', 'Rumours Are Flying', 'It's Magic', 'There's No Tomorrow', 'Circus', 'Marta (Rambling Rose Of The Wildwood)', 'I Said My Pyjamas (And Put On My Prayers)' and 'Take A Letter, Miss Smith' (both duets with Fran Warren), 'La Vie En Rose', 'Would I Love You (Love You Love You)', 'I Get Ideas' (adapted from the Argentine tango 'Adios Muchachos' and thought to be quite racy at the time), 'Over A Bottle Of Wine', 'Domino', 'Kiss Of Fire', 'Stranger In Paradise', 'Here', 'Do I Love You (Because You're Beautiful)' and 'Walk Hand In Hand'. He was also very active on radio in the 30s, 40s, and into the 50s on shows such as Walter Winchell's Lucky Strike Hour, and others featuring Burns And Allen, André Kostelanetz and David Rose, along with his own programmes. In the 50s and 60s Martin appeared frequently on television, and in 1964 formed a night club act with his wife. For many years they continued to tour the cabaret circuit in the USA and abroad. In 1986 Martin accompanied Charisse to London when she re-created the role first played by Anna Neagle over 20 years earlier in the David Heneker-John Taylor stage musical Charlie Girl at the Victoria Palace. The couple had first been in London in 1948 on their honeymoon when he was playing the first of several London Palladium seasons. Martin has come a long way since then, and is still regarded as one of the most accomplished and stylish vocalists of his era. He returned to London yet again in 1994 for a spell in cabaret at the Café Royal.

Martin, Vince

A folk singer who first surfaced in the mid-50s on the east coast club circuit, little is known about Vince Martin's background. His major claim to fame was as the singer on the 1956 Top 10 hit 'Cindy, Oh Cindy', on Glory Records. The folk song, written by Bob Baron and Burt Long, featured Martin backed by the folk group the Tarriers, which included Alan Arkin (who went on to become a successful actor), Erik Darling (who became a member of the folk group the Rooftop Singers) and Bob Carey. Martin made other recordings into the 70s, including singles for ABC Paramount and Elektra Records, and he recorded a self-titled album for Capitol Records in 1973.

Martindale, Wink

b. Winston Martindale, 1933, Jackson, Tennessee, USA. A 1959 revival of T. Texas Tyler's 'Deck Of Cards' monologue is as synonymous with this ex-Memphis radio presenter as the pyramids are with Egypt. While studying speech and drama at the state university, he had moonlighted at a city station, working his way up from music librarian. A meeting with Dot Records executive Randy Wood led to the release of 'Deck Of Cards' - a soldier answering a charge of playing cards in church by explaining each one's religious significance - an opus that appealed to Martindale, a former chorister and regular church-goer. Its worldwide success brought far-flung television appearances on Australia's Bandstand and UK's Sunday Night At The London Palladium, and also caused the artist to migrate to Hollywood, where he hosted the Teenage Dance Party television series in the early 60s. 'A Deck Of Cards' has been extraordinarily successful in the UK, re-entering the charts on several occasions in the 60s and in 1973. It peaked behind a more recently recorded rival recitation from Max Bygraves.

Martino, Al

b. Alfred Cini, 7 October 1927, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, USA. The son of Italian immigrants, a fact that was evident in his style and manner, Martino worked as bricklayer in his father's construction business before being encouraged to become a singer by his friend Mario Lanza. After singing in local clubs, and winning Arthur Godfrey's Talent Scouts, he recorded 'Here In My Heart' for the small BBS record label. It shot to number 1 in the US chart, and reputedly sold over a million copies. This disc was also the first ever record to top the New Musical Express UK listings, inaugurated in 1952. Martino's success led to a contract with Capitol Records, and more hits in 1953 with 'Take My Heart', 'Rachel' and 'When You're Mine'. For several years after that, the US record buyers apparently tired of Martino's soulful ballads, although he remained popular in Europe for a time - particularly in the UK, where he made the Top 20 with 'Now', 'Wanted', 'The Story Of Tina' and 'The Man From Laramie'. After some telling performances on US television, he made his recording comeback in 1963 with country singer Leon Payne's 'I Love You Because', followed by 'Painted, Tainted Rose', 'Living A Lie', 'I Love You More And More Every Day', 'Tears And Roses', 'Always Together', 'Think I'll Go And Cry Myself To Sleep' and 'Mary In The Morning'. His second million-seller, 'Spanish Eyes' (1965), was originally an instrumental piece, 'Moon Over Naples', written by the popular German orchestra leader, Bert Kaempfert. With lyrics by Charles Singleton and Eddy Snyder, Martino's version became, particularly in Europe, a dreamy dance favourite to rival Charles Aznavour's 'Dance In The Old Fashioned Way'. In 1964, Martino sang the title song for the Bette Davis/Olivia De Havilland film Hush...Hush Sweet Charlotte, and this led to his playing singer Johnny Fontane in the smash hit movie The Godfather (1972). In the film, Martino sang the Italian number 'O Marenariello' ('I Have But One Heart'). He also recorded the film's love theme, 'Speak Softly Love', and had chart success with further Italian songs, 'To The Door Of The Sun' ('Alle Porte Del Sole') and the old Dean Martin hit, Domenico Modugno's 'Volare'. In vogue once more, Martino played top nightclubs and theatres, and continued to record with Capitol who have reissued many of his early albums on CD. In 1992 he played some UK dates, mixing selections from Cats and The Phantom Of The Opera with much requested favourites such as 'Granada'.

Martino, Pat

b. 25 April 1944, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, USA. Martino's singer father encouraged him to play guitar and he received some instruction from his cousin. He was a professional guitarist at the age of 15, playing with saxophonists Gator Jackson and Red Holloway. He played in all the leading organ combos of the 60s: with Don Patterson, Jimmy Smith, Brother Jack McDuff, Richard 'Groove' Holmes and Jimmy McGriff. In 1966, after four months with Sonny Stitt's band, he worked with John Handy's rather more avant garde quintet. In the late 60s, Martino had his own bands with Cedar Walton, Richard Davis (bass) and Billy Hart. Main influences on Martino were Wes Montgomery and eastern music, but during the 70s he became interested in the music of composers such as Stockhausen and Elliott Carter. He taught and published a book called Linear Expressions with T. Baruso (1983). Martino had suffered a seizure in 1980 which led to a temporary loss of memory. He recovered and returned to playing in 1984. Martino's playing is characterized by fleet fingerwork and virtuoso flourishes, while his improvisations involve passages in octaves like Wes Montgomery, and are often influenced by his choice of the 12-string guitar. The trick of his dark and chunky sound is that he tunes the treble strings down and the bass strings up.

Martyn, Barry

b. Barry Martin Godfrey, 23 February 1941, London, England. Martyn began playing drums in his early teens and was soon leading his own band and making records. Playing in the New Orleans tradition, Martyn's musical interest led him to visit New Orleans in the early 60s where he studied with Josiah 'Cié' Frazier. Martyn recorded in New Orleans with many leading local jazzmen and also organized and led international tours by major figures such as George Lewis and Albert Nicholas. Resident in the USA since the early 70s, Martyn has continued to play and record New Orleans jazz to a very high standard with the likes of Barney Bigard and the Eagle Brass Band. In addition to bands under his own name Martyn was also leader of the Legends Of Jazz, a group of elderly but still musically active New Orleans jazzmen. Deeply committed to preserving the great tradition of New Orleans jazz, over the years Martyn has done much more than play and record. He formed his own recording company, writes extensively, and, perhaps most importantly, has recorded for archive purposes numerous interviews with New Orleans jazz survivors.

Martyn, Beverly

b. Beverly Kutner, Coventry, England. This underrated artist first attracted attention in 1966 when her anonymous demo tape solicited an inquiry by Decca employee Tony Hall in his Record Mirror column. She was subsequently signed to the label and, as Beverly, launched its Deram Records subsidiary with 'Happy New Year', an excellent Randy Newman composition. The singer appeared at the famed Monterey Pop Festival, and enjoyed an uncredited cameo part on Simon And Garfunkel's 'Fakin' It', prior to forming a duo with her husband, folksinger John Martyn. The couple recorded two superb albums, Stormbringer and The Road To Ruin, the latter of which featured Beverly's evocative song, 'Primrose Hill'. Their professional relationship was severed in 1971, and the couple were divorced later in the decade. As she told Folk Roots magazine in 1995: 'I remember he used to say to me I could be creative staying at home rearing our children rather than making music.' She did so, though she continued to write and collaborate with 'soul-mate' Nick Drake. By the the mid-90s she had begun to play shows regularly once more, with her three children now all grown up. As she commented: 'It's rather frightening to be away 25 years, but so many remembered me and before I knew it there was so much warmth and good feeling coming from the audiences.'

Martyn, John

b. Iain McGeachy, 11 September 1948, New Malden, Surrey, England, to musically-minded parents. At the age of 17, he started his professional career under the guidance of folk artist Hamish Imlach. The long, often bumpy journey through Martyn's career began when he arrived in London, where he was signed instantly by the astute Chris Blackwell, whose fledgling Island Records was just finding major success. Martyn became the first white solo artist on the label. His first album, the jazz/blues tinged London Conversation (1968), was released amidst a growing folk scene which was beginning to shake off its traditionalist image. The jazz influence was confirmed when, only nine months later, The Tumbler was released. A bold yet understated album, it broke many conventions of folk music, featuring the flute and saxophone of jazz artist Harold MacNair. The critics began the predictable Bob Dylan comparisons, especially as the young Martyn was not yet 20. Soon afterwards, Martyn married singer Beverly Kutner, and as John and Beverly Martyn they produced two well-received albums, Stormbringer and Road To Ruin. The former was recorded in Woodstock, USA, with a talented group of American musicians, including Levon Helm of the Band and keyboard player Paul Harris. Both albums were relaxed in approach and echoed the simple peace and love attitudes of the day, with their gently naive sentiments. Martyn the romantic also became Martyn the drunkard, and so began his conflict. The meeting with jazz bassist Danny Thompson, who became a regular drinking companion, led to some serious boozing and Martyn becoming a 'Jack the Lad'. Hard work in the clubs, however, was building his reputation, but it was the release of Bless The Weather and Solid Air that established him as a concert hall attraction. Martyn delivered a unique combination of beautifully slurred vocals and a breathtaking technique using his battered acoustic guitar played through an echoplex unit, together with sensitive and mature jazz arrangements. The track 'Solid Air' was written as a eulogy to his friend singer/songwriter Nick Drake who had committed suicide in 1974. Martyn was able to pour out his feelings in the opening two lines of the song: 'You've been taking your time and you've been living on solid air. You've been walking the line, you've been living on solid air'. Martyn continued to mature with subsequent albums, each time taking a step further away from folk music. Inside Out and the mellow Sunday's Child both confirmed his important musical standing, although commercial success still eluded him. Frustrated by the music business in general, he made and produced Live At Leeds himself. The album could be purchased only by writing to John and Beverly at their home in Hastings; they personally signed every copy of the plain record sleeve upon despatch. Martyn's dark side was beginning to get the better of him, and his alcohol and drug intake put a strain on his marriage. One World, in 1977, has subtle references to these problems in the lyrics, and, with Steve Winwood guesting on most tracks, the album was warmly received. Martyn, however, was going through serious problems and would not produce a new work until three years later when, following the break up of his marriage, he delivered the stunning Grace And Danger produced by Phil Collins. This was the album in which Martyn bared all to his listeners, a painfully emotional work, which put the artist in a class of his own. Following this collection Martyn ended his association with Chris Blackwell. Martyn changed labels to WEA and delivered Glorious Fool and Well Kept Secret, also touring regularly with a full-time band including the experienced Max Middleton on keyboards and the talented fretless bassist, Alan Thompson. These two albums had now moved him firmly into the rock category and, in live performance, his much- revered acoustic guitar playing was relegated to only a few numbers, such as his now-classic song 'May You Never', subsequently recorded by Eric Clapton. Martyn's gift as a lyricist, however, had never been sharper, and he injected a fierce yet honest seam into his songs. Just one line from 'May You Never' speaks volumes; 'May you never lay your head down without a hand to hold'. On the title track to Glorious Fool he wrote a powerful criticism of the former American president, Ronald Reagan (in just one carefully repeated line Martyn states, 'Half the lies he tells you are not true'). Following another home-made live album Philentropy, Martyn returned to Island Records and went on to deliver more quality albums. Sapphire, with his evocative version of 'Somewhere Over The Rainbow', reflected a happier man, now re-married. The world's first commercially released CD single was Martyn's 'Angeline', a superbly crafted love song to his wife, which preceded the album Piece By Piece in 1986. With commercial success still eluding him, Martyn slid into another alcoholic trough until 1988, when he was given a doctor's ultimatum. He chose to dry out (for a while) and live, returning in 1990 with The Apprentice. Cooltide was a fine album, expertly produced but contained songs that tended to last too long, as was the case with Couldn't Love You More in 1992. The latter was a bonus for loyal fans as it was an album of re-recorded versions from Martyn's exquisite back catalogue. Perplexingly No Little Boy a year later was a re-recording of many of the songs on the former album. Martyn was unhappy with some of the tracks on Couldn't Love You More, and his tolerant record company allowed him the luxury of further re-recording. Interestingly many of the versions were better, especially a moody and lengthy return to 'Solid Air'. Following a move to Go! Discs in 1996 he recorded And, (featuring Martyn's attempt at Thelonius Monk, with a cover art pose almost identical to In Italy) an album of new songs which featured the cryptical 'Downward Pull Of Human Nature', an honest and sadly accurate observation of the attraction of infidelity with a strangely devastating punch line ('did you ever look sideways at your best friend's wife'). The Church With One Bell was a disappointment, especially for those awaiting new material. Cover versions of material by diverse artists including Portishead and Rev. Gary Davis seemed inappropriate for an artist with such good ideas of his own.

Martyn has retained his loyal cult following for almost 30 years, and remains a critics' favourite. It is difficult to react indifferently to his challenging and emotional work. He now possesses a slurred voice (due to the barley wine) that is a good octave lower than the young curly haired freshman of the 60s folk club circuit. He is a shambling genius of great originality, and is by definition a major artist, although he will never receive major commercial success.

Marvelettes

The Marvelettes' career epitomized the haphazard progress endured by many of the leading girl-groups of the early 60s. Despite enjoying several major US hits, they were unable to sustain a consistent line-up, and their constant shifts in personnel made it difficult to overcome their rather anonymous public image. The group was formed in the late 50s by five students at Inkster High School in Michigan, USA: Gladys Horton, Georgeanna Marie Tillman (d. 6 January 1980), Wanda Young, Katherine Anderson and Juanita Grant. They were spotted at a school talent show by Robert Bateman of the Satintones, who introduced them to Berry Gordy, head of the fledgling Motown organization. Bateman co-produced their early releases with Brian Holland, and the partnership found immediate success with 'Please Mr Postman' - a US number 1 in 1961, and Motown's biggest-selling record up to that point. This effervescent slice of pop-R&B captivated teenage audiences in the USA, and the song was introduced to an even wider public when the Beatles recorded a faithful cover version on their second album. After a blatant attempt to repeat the winning formula with 'Twistin' Postman', the Marvelettes made the Top 20 again in 1962 with 'Playboy' and the chirpy 'Beechwood 4-

5789'. The cycle of line-up changes was already underway, with Juanita Grant's departure reducing the group to a four-piece. The comparative failure of the next few singles also took its toll, and by 1965, Tillman had also left. The remaining trio, occasionally augmented by Florence Ballard of the Supremes, was paired with producer/writer Smokey Robinson. He tailored a series of ambitious hit singles for the group, the most successful of which was 'Don't Mess With Bill' in 1966 - although 'The Hunter Gets Captured By The Game' was arguably a more significant achievement. Gladys Horton, the Marvelettes' usual lead singer, left the group in 1967, to be replaced by Anne Bogan. They continued to notch up minor soul hits for the remainder of the decade, most notably 'When You're Young And In Love', before disintegrating in 1970. Wanda Young completed the group's recording commitments with an album, The Return Of The Marvelettes, which saw her supported by session vocalists. In 1989 original members Wanda Rogers and Gladys Horton, plus Echo Johnson and Jean McLain, recorded for Motor City, issuing the disco-sounding 'Holding On With Both Hands' and Now. Johnson and McLain were replaced by Jackie and Regina Holleman for subsequent releases.

Marvellos

An R&B vocal group from Los Angeles, California, USA, comprising Jesse Harris, Milton Hayes, Harold Harris, Willie Holley and Lance Porter. The group was formed in 1963 and first found success locally with 'She Told Me Lies' for Exodus. It raised enough interest for Warner Brothers to pick it up and release it on its Reprise label. The formation of Warner Brothers' R&B subsidiary, Loma, saw the Marvellos joining that label in 1965. The group immediately succeeded with 'We Go Together', styled after the Temptations' 'It's Growing'. Nothing more happened after 'We Go Together' had run its course and members of the Marvellos spent many years as background session singers. However, in 1975, Jesse Harris and Milton Hayes found new success in a highly respected vocal group, Street Corner Symphony, which had evolved out of the session group in which they were working. The outfit released Harmony Grits (1975) and Little Funk Machine (1976), reprising old songs and singing new material in a neo-doo-wop style.

Marvelows

Formed in Chicago Heights, Illinois, USA, in 1959, Melvin Mason, Willie 'Sonny' Stevenson, Frank Paden and Johnny Paden were originally known as the Mystics. They became the Marvelows in 1964, following the addition of Jesse Smith. The group was then signed to ABC Records, and enjoyed a hit the following year with the euphoric 'I Do', which combined equal traces of doo-wop and Chicago soul (this excellent song was later revived in 1977 by the J. Geils Band). The Marvelows replaced Jesse Smith with Andrew Thomas in 1967, and the following year hit with a soft ballad, 'In The Morning'. The Marvelows broke up in 1969, but reformed briefly in 1974.

Marvin And Johnny

From Los Angeles, California, USA, Marvin Phillips (b. 23 October 1931, Guthrie, Oklahoma, USA) and Emory 'Johnny' Perry (b. 1 March 1928, Sherman, Texas, USA) made a brief impact on the rock 'n' roll scene when Los Angeles was a major centre of the R&B recording scene during the late 40s and early 50s. Phillips and Perry had known each other since 1949, when they both played saxophones in the Richard Lewis Band. When Phillips formed the Marvin Phillips And His Men From Mars combo, Perry joined him. Phillips had gained his first success in the recording business when he teamed with Jesse Belvin in a duo called Marvin And Jesse, reaching the charts with the dreamy ballad 'Dream Girl' (number 2 R&B) in 1952 for Specialty Records. After Belvin was drafted into the army in 1953, Phillips, at the behest of Specialty, recruited a new partner, his old friend Perry, to form Marvin And Johnny. The duo immediately had a hit with 'Baby Doll' (number 9 R&B) in 1953. They moved to Modern in 1954 and released 'Tick Tock' (number 9 R&B). However, they are best remembered for 'Cherry Pie', the b-side to 'Tick Tock', which, although not making any national charts, possibly achieved more radio airplay. The song was revived by Skip And Flip in 1960, putting it high on the pop charts.

Marvin, Hank B.

b. Brian Rankin, 28 October 1941, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, England. Marvin's metallic, echoed picking on a red Fender Stratocaster (with generous employment of tremelo arm) was the inspirational source of the fretboard pyrotechnics of Jeff Beck, Ritchie Blackmore and many other lead guitarists who began in groups imitating the Shadows, of whom Marvin, in his black, horn-rimmed glasses, was the principal public face. After teaching himself guitar, banjo and boogie-woogie piano at school, Marvin's father presented him with a Hofner Congress on his 16th birthday. When his Crescent City Skiffle Group won a South Shields Jazz Club talent contest, he was asked to join Bruce Welch's Railroaders. On moving to London, Marvin and Welch operated briefly as the Geordie Boys before enlisting in an outfit called the Drifters, which evolved into the Shadows. While backing and, later, composing songs (such as 'The Day I Met Marie') for Cliff Richard, the quartet recorded independently and became generally acknowledged as Britain's top instrumental act.

After their first disbandment in 1968, Marvin's subsequent solo career commenced with 'Goodnight Dick', but poor sales of this and two further singles were only surface manifestations of the deeper groundswell of support that hoisted 1969's Hank Marvin to number 14 in the UK album chart. Yet despite contrasting moods and styles, the album was not far removed from the Shadows with its Norrie Paramor arrangements and composing contributions by Brian Bennett, the group's drummer. Marvin's affinity with Richard continued via their hit duets with 'Throw Down A Line' and 'Joy Of Living', as well as Hank's residency as instrumentalist and comedian on Cliff's BBC television series. In the early 70s, seeking a fresh artistic direction, Marvin amalgamated with Welch and John Farrar for two albums (Marvin, Welch And Farrar and Second Opinion) dominated by vocals and another (Marvin And Farrar) with Farrar alone ('a bit like Frankenstein meets the Beach Boys', concluded Marvin) before this project was abandoned partly through Marvin's personal commitments - notably his indoctrination as a Jehovah's Witness in 1973, and the gradual reformation of the Shadows. After moving to Australia, Marvin turned out for the group's annual tour and studio album, while also recording albums such as The Hank Marvin Guitar Syndicate, on which he led nine noted session guitarists. In 1982, he charted with 'Don't Talk' - intended initially for Richard - from Words And Music, which contained only one instrumental ('Captain Zlogg'). Hank B. Marvin has long been assured a place in pop history and is unquestionably one of the major influences on many rock guitarists, throughout the world, over the past 30 years. It is his stellar work with the Shadows in the 60s which made him such a legend.

Johnny (b. John Senator Marvin, 11 July 1897, Butler, Oklahoma, USA, d. 20 December 1945, Hollywood, California, USA) and brother Frankie (b. Frank James Marvin, 27 January 1904, Butler, Oklahoma, USA). Around 1913, Johnny (who played guitar and banjo and had previously left home at the age of 12 to join a circus) joined a travelling show called the Royal Hawaiians, where he learned the steel guitar and ukulele. After naval service in World War I, he moved into vaudeville and as Honey Duke And His Uke, he worked his way to New York where, for five years, he had a daily radio show on network NBC. He made records and even appeared on Broadway in the musical Honeymoon Lane. In 1928, he was joined by Frankie (also a good steel guitarist) and using several differing names, he was soon recording for several labels. The Marvins befriended and arranged auditions for the young Gene Autry, when he first visited New York seeking a recording contract. Autry never forgot their help and from that time he began to provide work for them. In the late 20s, Frankie also worked with the Duke of Paducah (Benjamin Francis 'Whitey' Ford, b. 12 May 1901, DeSoto, Missouri, USA, d. 20 June 1986, Nashville, Tennessee, USA) in a comedy duo known as Ralph And Elmer (Ford also later worked as MC on Autry's radio show before becoming a long-time regular on the Grand Ole Opry). The Marvins moved to Hollywood with Autry in 1934, and for about 20 years, Frankie's distinctive steel guitar was an important part of the Autry sound on recordings and radio shows. He also worked on Autry's films, both in acting roles and as a stuntman - a job that he reckoned paid better than acting. Although Johnny recorded for Decca in the mid-30s, the Depression had basically ended his solo career. He worked with Autry as a writer and producer on the Melody Ranch Show and wrote around 80 songs for Autry's films, including 'Dust'. During World War II, Johnny made several tours to the South Pacific to entertain army personnel and in 1943, in the Papuan jungles, he contacted dengue fever, which ultimately led to his death from a heart attack in 1945. In the mid-50s, when the Melody Ranch Show was taken off air, Frankie become something of a recluse. However, when the television version of Melody Ranch appeared on Autry's own KTLA station, Frankie worked on it both on and off camera. In the early 70s, he retired to Frazier Park, California, and underwent open heart surgery. He was not a prolific songwriter like his brother but he co-wrote the well-known song 'Cowboy's Heaven' with Autry in 1934. He was an avid angler all his life and when once asked why he never tried to resume his own recording career, he replied, 'Heck, I ain't got time. I'd rather go fishing'.

Marx, Richard

This Chicago, Illinois, USA bred singer/songwriter began his career at the age of five, singing on US advertising jingles. This became his professional vocation until he moved on to become a backing singer for Lionel Richie. Afterwards, Marx embarked on a solo career in his own right. A string of hits began with

'Don't Mean Nothing' before he put together a run of three successive US number 1 hits with 'Hold On To The Nights', 'Satisfied' and 'Right Here Waiting'. He also wrote the Kenny Rogers hit 'What About Me'. Seemingly unable to fail with his big ballad formula, Marx looked assured of continued success in the US market. He married Cynthia Rhodes of Animotion in August 1989.

Marxman

Irish/marxist rap crew whose political stance, in the final analysis, won them more fans than their music did. Yet for a period in late 1992/early 1993, they mounted an effective bid as supercharged champions of ultra left hip-hop. Fronted by rappers MC Hollis and Phrase, plus musician Oisin, if Marxman's political motives weren't already guaranteed to stoke controversy, then the subject of their debut single, 'Sad Affair', was. Discussing Northern Ireland, with the explicit statement that English troops should be withdrawn, it was naturally banned by the BBC (one DJ attempted to play it but had it edited from his show - objections were made to the fact that the lyrics contained the IRA slogan 'tiocfaidh ar la' - 'Our Time Will Come'). Both sides of the debut used traditional Irish instruments (three quarters of the band are Irish-born), and the follow-up, 'Ship Ahoy', featured Sinead O'Connor. Other guest contributions have included the tin whistle of traditional Irish musician Davy Spillane. Contrastingly, both 45s emerged on Gilles Peterson's laid-back Talkin' Loud empire. A third, 'All About Eve', actually made the UK Top 30, before 'Ship Ahoy' was re-released. The sleeve of their debut LP confirmed their allegiances: 'Marx, Engels, Lenin, Rosa Luxemburg, Bobby Sands . . . and all those who have devoted themselves to the overthrow of the bourgeoisie'. Though they were allied to a major (PolyGram), Marxman still set their sights on the death of capitalism. In the final analysis, however, there was simply too much analysis.

Mary Poppins

There have been many occasions when performers who have triumphed in Broadway shows have been overlooked when the movie adaptations came along. While Julie Andrews would have no doubt dazzled as Eliza Doolittle in the film version of My Fair Lady, it was not to be. Instead, Andrews made up for the disappointment in a big way by making her first screen appearance in this 1964 Walt Disney classic. With supreme irony, Andrews won the best actress Oscar for her debut performance, while Audrey Hepburn, who 'took her place' in the film of Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe's masterpiece, was not even nominated. With a screenplay by Bill Walsh and Donald Da Gradi, adapted from the children's story by Pamela Travers, the action of Mary Poppins evolves around the Banks family, residents of 17 Cherry Tree Lane, London. Mr George Banks (David Tomlinson) is a banker by name, nature and occupation. He rules his house with a rod of iron, while Winifred, his wife (Glynis Johns), spends most of the time fighting for the Suffragettes' cause (the year is 1910). Both spend little time with their children Michael (Matthew Garber) and Jane (Karen Dotrice). Many nannies have come and gone (six in four months), and as the film begins, the time has come to employ another one. The children draw up their own advertisement, outlining what they want most in the new employee. In disgust Mr Banks throws the piece of paper into the fireplace, and unbeknown to him, it travels up the chimney, and, before you can say 'Mary Poppins', she floats down to earth, carrying her trusty umbrella, and appoints herself as the new nanny, giving the family a week's trial! Before long Mary has won the hearts of the children, tidying up by magic, and taking them on many an adventure. During one such trip she bumps into an old friend, Bert (Dick Van Dyke) who plays a number of different roles in the film), entertaining with his one-man band and drawing pictures on the pavement. As if by magic, Mary, Bert and the children escape from reality and step into the street painting. Here the movie really comes into its own as humans mix with all kinds of animated characters and animals. It is great fun to watch, as we see the group being waited on by penguins, and wooden horses galloping with freedom. Only when the pavement picture is washed away by rain, do the happy foursome have to return home. However, fun is frivolous to Mr Banks, and he decides to take the children along to his workplace to see what the real world is all about. Here Michael and Jane meet the bank president, Mr Dawes, (Dick Van Dyke again), but the trip turns into a disaster, and as a result their father is sacked. By the time he eventually gets his job back, the family have become much happier and tolerant of each other. Mary Poppins sees that her job has been accomplished and flies back to her cloud. Also among the cast were Hermione Baddeley, Ed Wynn, Arthur Treacher, Elsa Lanchester, Reginald Owen, and Reta Shaw.

Directed by Robert Stevenson, this is an enchanting fairy tale, never losing its musical and comic pace for a moment. Richard M. and Robert B Sherman's outstanding score included 'A Spoonful Of Sugar', 'Feed the Birds', the infamous 'Supercalifragilisticexpialidocious', 'The Perfect Nanny', 'Sister Suffragette', 'The Life I Lead', 'Fidelity Feduciary Bank', 'Lets' Go Fly A Kite', and 'Chim Chim Cheree' which won the Oscar for best song. One of the film's highlights comes when the energetic Dick Van Dyke (complete with an amusingly artificial Cockney accent) leads a band of chimney sweeps in a dance to 'Step In Time' over the rooftops of London. The scene is a joy, and a credit to choreographers Marc Breaux and DeeDee Wood. Mary Poppins won Academy Awards for its music score and (predictably) for special effects and film editing. Photographed in Technicolor by Edward Colman, it went on to become the third-highest grossing musical of the 60s.

Maschwitz, Eric

b. 10 June 1901, Birmingham, England, d. 27 October 1969, Ascot, Berkshire, England. A librettist, lyricist, author and producer. After studying at Cambridge University, Maschwitz joined the BBC in the late 20s, and was editor of Radio Times from 1927-33. For the next four years he served as BBC Radio's first Director of Variety. While with the Corporation he often used the pseudonym, Holt Marvell, for his songwriting activities. In 1932, his radio play Goodnight Vienna, written with composer George Posford, was turned into a musical film, and gave its star, Jack Buchanan, one of his biggest record hits. In the following year, again with Posford, Maschwitz wrote The Gay Hussar, which was staged in the West End. Revised, and with a new title, Balalaika, and an additional composer, Bernard Grun, it ran for 570 performances from 1936-38. It became the first British Musical to be filmed in Hollywood, and starred Nelson Eddy singing the hit song, 'At The Balalaika'. In 1936, together with Jack Streachey and Harry Link, Maschwitz wrote the all-time standard, 'These Foolish Things', which was interpolated into the show Spread It Abroad. In the same year he received the OBE, and three years later was nominated for an Academy Award for co-writing the screenplay for the MGM classic Goodbye, Mr Chips. During World War II, Maschwitz served in the Intelligence Corps, but still found the time to write songs, including some of the era's most potent numbers, such as 'A Pair Of Silver Wings' (with Michael Carr), 'Room Five Hundred And Four' (Posford), and 'A Nightingale Sang In Berkeley Square' (with Jack Strachey and Manning Sherwin). The latter song turned up in the revue, Strange Faces (1940). Maschwitz's other stage shows included Paprika, Magyar Melody (Paprika revised), Waltz Without End, Flying Colours, Evangeline, Starlight Roof, Carissima and Belinda Fair (1949). In the 50s Maschwitz wrote the songs, with Posford, for George Formby's first, and last, West End Musical, Zip Goes A Million (1951-53), and contributed librettos to Love From Judy (1952-54), and Romance In Candlelight (1955). His last London production, in 1956, was Summer Song, with music by Bernard Grun and Dvorak. In 1958 Maschwitz returned to the BBC as Head of Light Entertainment in television, and was partly responsible for the long-running Black And White Minstrel Show.

Masekela, Hugh

b. Hugh Rampolo Masekela, 4 April 1939, Witbank, Johannesburg, South Africa. South Africa's leading émigré trumpeter and bandleader was born into a musical family which boasted one of the largest jazz record collections in the city. One of Masekela's earliest memories is of winding up the household gramophone for his parents; by the age of 10, he was familiar with most of the 78s issued by Duke Ellington, Count Basie, Cab Calloway and Glenn Miller. Other early influences were the traditional musics of the Swazis, Zulus, Sutus and Shangaan, all of which he heard at weekend musical gatherings in the township and neighbouring countryside. A difficult and rebellious schoolboy, Masekela was frequently given to playing truant. On one such occasion, he saw Kirk Douglas in the Bix Beiderbecke bio-pic Young Man With A Horn - and decided there and then that he wanted to become a trumpeter and bandleader when he grew up. His teacher, the anti-apartheid activist and Anglican priest Trevor Huddlestone, welcomed this enthusiasm and gave Masekela his first trumpet, a battered old instrument owned by a local bandleader. A year later, in 1955, Huddlestone was expelled from South Africa. In New York, he met Louis Armstrong, and enthused to him about Masekela's talents and persuaded Armstrong to send a trumpet over to Johannesburg for the boy. With trombonist Jonas Gwangwa, Masekela dropped out of school in 1955 to form his first group, the Merry Makers. His main influences at this time were the African-American bop trumpeters Dizzy Gillespie and Clifford Brown and by 1956, the Merry Makers were playing nothing but bop. By 1958, apartheid had tightened up to the extent that it was very difficult for black bands to make a living - they were banned from the government-controlled radio and were not allowed to travel freely from one town to another. Masekela was obliged to leave the Merry Makers and join the African Jazz and Variety package tour (which also included his future wife, Miriam Makeba). Operated by a white man, Alfred Herbert, the troupe was able to circumvent some of the travel restrictions imposed on blacks and continued to tour the country. In 1959, with Makeba, Masekela left Herbert to join the cast of the 'township musical', King Kong. The same year, he formed the pioneering band, the Jazz Epistles, with Gwangwa and pianist Dollar Brand (now Abdullah Ibrahim). They became the first black band in South Africa to record an album, all previous releases having been 78s.

In 1960, the year of the Sharpeville massacre, the government extended the Group Areas Act to ban black musicians from working in inner city (that is, white) clubs. The move effectively ended the Jazz Epistles' ability to make a living, and Masekela decided the time had come to emigrate to the USA. With the help of Trevor Huddlestone and Harry Belafonte in New York, he obtained a passport and, after a brief period in London at the Guildhall School of Music, won a scholarship to New York's Manhattan School of Music. Initially aspiring to become a sideman with Art Blakey, Masekela was instead persuaded by the drummer to form his own band, and put together a quartet which debuted at the Village Gate club in 1961. A year later, he recorded his first album, Trumpet Africa, a considerable critical success. In 1964, Masekela married Miriam Makeba, another of Belafonte's protégées (who divorced him a few years later to marry Black Panther activist Stokeley Carmichael). Continuing to lead his own band, Masekela also wrote arrangements for Makeba and toured with her backing group. Husband and wife became prominent critics of the South African regime, and donated part of their touring income to fund scholarships that enabled black musicians to leave South Africa. In 1964, Masekela also released his second solo album, The Americanization Of Ooga Booga, and appeared at the first Watts, Los Angeles, California Jazz Festival. In 1966, he linked up with old Manhattan School of Music classmate Stewart Levine to form the production company Chisa. The original idea was for Levine to be the artist and Masekela the producer, but the success of Chisa's debut release, an album called The Emancipation Of Hugh Masekela, led to a role-reversal. (The Levine-Masekela partnership continued throughout the 60s, 70s and 80s.)

In 1967, Masekela appeared at the legendary Monterey Jazz Festival and released two more albums, Promise Of A Future and Coincidence. Unable to find top-quality South African musicians with whom to work in the USA, Masekela became drawn into the lucrative area of lightweight jazz/pop. His first chart success in the genre was an instrumental version of 'Up Up And Away' in 1967, which reached number 71 in the US charts. In 1968, he had a number 1 hit with 'Grazin' In The Grass', selling four million copies. The follow-up, 'Puffin' On Down The Track', disappointingly only reached number 71. Not surprisingly, given the mood of the times, the latter two singles were widely perceived to carry pro-marijuana statements in their titles and, in autumn 1968, Masekela was arrested at his home in Malibu and charged with possession of the drug. Despite the urging of the record business, Masekela refused to capitalize on the success of 'Grazin' In The Grass' with a lightweight album in the same vein, and instead recorded the protest album Masekela, which included track titles such as 'Fuzz' and 'Riot'.

In 1970, Masekela signed with Motown Records, who released the album Reconstruction. Also that year, he formed the Union of South Africa band with fellow émigrés Gwangwa and Caiphus Semenya. The band was short-lived, however, following the lengthy hospitalization of Gwangwa from injuries sustained in a car crash. Frustrated in his attempt to launch an American-based, South African line-up, Masekela visited London to record the album Home Is Where The Music Is with exiled South African saxophonist Dudu Pukwana. Deciding to reimmerse himself in his African roots, Masekela set off in late 1972 on a 'pilgrimage' to Senegal, Liberia, Zaire and other countries. He worked for a year in Guinea (where his ex-wife Makeba was now living) as a music teacher, and spent some months in Lagos, Nigeria, playing in Fela Anikulapo Kuti's band. He finally ended up in Ghana, where he joined the young highlife-meets-funk band Hedzolleh Soundz. Between 1974 and 1976, Masekela released five albums with the group - Your Mama Told You Not To Worry, I Am Not Afraid, The Boys Doin' It, The African Connection and Colonial Man. By 1975, however, leader and band had fallen out, with Hedzolleh accusing Masekela of financial mistreatment. In fact, the cost of supporting Hedzolleh in the USA during loss-making tours had drained Masekela's resources, and in 1976, he and Levine were obliged to wind up Chisa. Short of money, Masekela signed to A&M Records, where he recorded two lightweight albums with label boss Herb Alpert - The Main Event and Herb Alpert/Hugh Masekela.

In 1980, with Makeba, Masekela headlined a massive Goin' Home outdoor concert in Lesotho. In 1982, in a similar venture, they appeared in neighbouring Botswana. Both concerts were attended by large numbers of black and white South Africans, who gave the duo heroes' welcomes. Masekela decided to settle in Botswana, 20 miles from the South African border, and signed to the UK label Jive, who flew over to him in a state-of-the-art mobile studio. The sessions resulted in the albums Technobush and Waiting For The Rain. In 1983, he made his first live appearance in London for over 20 years, at the African Sounds for Mandela concert at Alexandra Palace. In 1986, Masekela severed his links with Jive and returned to the USA, where he signed with Warner Brothers Records, releasing the album Tomorrow, and joining label-mate Paul Simon's Graceland world tour. In 1989, he co-wrote the music for the Broadway show Sarafina, set in a Soweto school during a state of emergency, and released the album Up Township.

Maskman And The Agents

An R&B vocal group from Washington, DC, USA, Maskman And The Agents achieved success based on the nexus of two popular culture phenomena: soul music and the spy craze. The group members were Harmon Bethea, Tyrone Gay, Paul Williams and Johnny Hood. Bethea was a 25-year veteran of the R&B business, having been in the group the Cap-Tans; in 1967, he formed from the remnants of his old group Maskman And The Agents. The outfit sang novelty soul songs and Bethea appeared masked, reflecting the period when I Spy and Get Smart were popular US television spy shows, and James Bond films were highly successful. In the same period Edwin Starr had a hit with 'Agent Double-O Soul' and Jamo Thomas with 'I Spy (For The F.B.I.)'. Mask Man And The Agents succeeded with two moderately sized hits, 'One Eye Open' (number 20 R&B) in 1968, and 'My Wife, My Dog, My Cat' (number 22 R&B) in 1969. They never charted nationally again.

Maslak, Keshavan

b. 26 February 1947, Detroit, Michigan, USA, into a Ukrainian family. As a child, Keshavan 'spoke Ukrainian around the house, and Russian and Polish to the neighbours' and was regularly beaten up by his all-American contemporaries at elementary school for being different. He started playing saxophone at the age of eight. An early enthusiasm for polkas and mazurkas was soon replaced by an obsession with John Coltrane's music, and some of Coltrane's yearning, burning passions infuse Maslak's best work (eg Big Time). The saxophonist has been a stylistic jack-of-all-trades, having performed with Philip Glass, the Temptations, and Sam Rivers, and rechristening himself Kenny Millions in a futile attempt to crack the punk/rock market. He has toured and performed extensively in Eastern Europe and Russia: 'I'm like Mick Jagger over there, I'm telling you.'

Mason Dixon

Jerry Dengler (b. 29 May 1955, Colorado Springs, Colorado, USA), Frank Gilligan (b. 2 November 1955, Queens, New York, USA) and Rick Henderson (b. 29 May 1953, Beaumont, Texas, USA). Mason Dixon is the brainchild of three graduates of Lamar University in Beaumont, Texas. They recorded their mixture of folk and country for several small labels in the 80s and then signed with Capitol Records in 1988, releasing two albums. Their most successful singles were '3935 West End Avenue', 'When Karen Comes Around' and 'Exception To The Rule'. Henderson was replaced by Terry Casburn in 1989.

Mason Proffit

Led by brothers Terry and John Talbot, country-rockers Mason Proffit formed in Chicago, Illinois, USA, in 1969 from the ashes of groups called the Quinn Chords and Sounds Unlimited. The other members were Tim Ayers (bass), Ron Schetter (guitar/vocals) and Art Nash (drums). Originally called Mason Proffit Reunion, the group recorded its first album, Wanted, in 1969 for Happy Tiger Records. Mixing country, folk, bluegrass and rock touches, the group eventually placed three albums in the charts - on Happy Tiger, Ampex and Warner Brothers - before the Talbot Brothers left to pursue successful careers (both together and individually) performing religious songs.

Mason, Barbara

b. 9 August 1947, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, USA. Mason first recorded for Crusader Records in 1964, but did not achieve success until she began recording for the Philadelphia-based Artic label the following year. With her voice sounding young and innocent in its thinness and flatness, Mason reached the US charts with the marvellous 'Yes, I'm Ready' (R&B number 2, 1965), and excellent follow-ups, 'Sad, Sad Girl' (R&B number 12/pop Top 30, 1965), 'I Need Love' (R&B number 25, 1966) and 'Oh, How It Hurts' (R&B number 11, 1968). A brief stay at the National Records label yielded one moderate hit, 'Raindrops Keep Fallin' On My Head' (R&B number 38, 1970), a cover version of the B.J. Thomas hit. In 1972, Mason signed with Buddah Records and moved into recording more mature material, such as 'Give Me Your Love' (R&B number 9/pop Top 40, 1972), a Curtis Mayfield song from the movie Superfly, 'From His Woman To You' (R&B number 3/pop Top 30, 1974), and 'Shackin Up' (R&B number 9, 1975); however, she sounded much less interesting as a singer. She still had her thin-sounding voice, but what was fetching in an 18-year-old sounded weak and undeveloped for a woman in her late 20s. Additionally, her habit of including recitations ('raps') in songs about man-woman relationships strongly dated her later material, most typically on 'She's Got The Papers (But I Got The Man)' (R&B number 29, 1981). Mason's last chart record was 'Another Man' (R&B number 68, 1984), which was the singer's only UK chart entry, reaching number 45 the same year.

Mason, Dave

b. 10 May 1944, Worcester, England. Mason, the former guitarist of local bands the Hellions and Deep Feeling with Jim Capaldi, met Steve Winwood when he was employed as a road manager for the Spencer Davis Group. This legendary 60s R&B band was weakened in 1967 when Winwood, together with Mason, formed Traffic. They found instant success as one of the leaders of progressive pop in the late 60s, and went on to develop into a highly regarded unit in the 70s. Mason joined and left the band on numerous occasions. He subsequently settled in America in 1969 and enjoyed considerable success as a solo artist. His excellent debut album on Blue Thumb records, Alone Together, proved to be his most critically acclaimed work, and featured strong musical support from Leon Russell, Rita Coolidge and former Traffic colleague Jim Capaldi on well-crafted songs such as 'You Shouldn't Have Took More Than You Gave', 'Only You Know And I Know' and 'World In Changes'. Mason's melodic flair and fine guitar playing came to the fore on all eight tracks. The original record package was a triple-fold, cut-out, hole-punched cover that attempted to encourage the listener to hang it on the wall. His second venture without Traffic was a collaboration with 'Mama' Cass Elliot. The record suffered from Blue Thumb's poor marketing and indifferent reviews and was shortly offloaded as a cut-out. His next album Headkeeper also suffered, but this time Mason disowned it and referred to it as a bootleg. The content was dubious and consisted of poor live recordings and half-finished studio takes. In the court proceedings that followed Mason filed for bankruptcy and was able to be released from his contract. By 1973, Mason had permanently settled in America, and he signed a long-term contract with Clive Davis at CBS. The first record, It's Like You Never Left, was a return to the format of the debut, although reviews were mixed and erred on the side of average. The recruitment of a number of name LA musicians gave the album a full and varied sound. Graham Nash, Greg Reeves, Jim Keltner, Carl Radle, Lonnie Turner and Stevie Wonder were just some of the artists who participated. Mason found limited success in his adopted country, and produced a series of reasonably successful records in the 70s. He built a considerable following in the USA by constant touring and had a stable touring unit. The regular line-up included Rick Jaeger (drums), Mike Finnigan (keyboards/vocals), Jim Krueger (b. 1950, USA, d. 29 March 1993; guitar/vocals) and Bob Galub (bass), later replaced by Gerald Johnson from the Steve Miller Band. The CBS albums formed a steady pattern that contained mostly Mason originals, regularly sprinkled with versions of oldies. 'All Along The Watchtower', 'Bring It On Home To Me', 'Crying, Waiting, Hoping' were just three of the songs he sympathetically interpreted. Following a surprise US hit single with 'We Just Disagree' Mason's albums predictably became dull and Old Crest On A New Wave was the nadir. Mason kept a relatively low profile during the 80s playing acoustic gigs with Krueger, making one poor album in 1987 and another forgettable release on MCA in 1988. He was also heard on American television singing on Miller beer commercials. In 1993 after having lived on Mick Fleetwood's estate in California for a while he joined the latest version of Fleetwood Mac. He contributed a number of songs to their badly received album Time. Mason looked back over his career in a lengthy 1995 interview in Goldmine and philosophically accepted all the mistakes he has made with regard to bad business arrangements, drugs and alcohol; he has at least survived with his sanity.

Mason, Harvey

b. 22 February 1947, Atlantic City, New Jersey, USA. Mason began playing the drums when he was four years old. He studied at the Berklee College Of Music in Boston and later gained a degree in education at New England Conservatory. He worked with pianists Errol Garner, George Shearing and Jan Hammer before moving to Los Angeles in 1971, where he worked as a studio musician covering music such as jazz, pop/rock and orchestral. He played with a wide range of bandleaders and musicians, including Duke Ellington, Quincy Jones, Gunther Schuller, Donald Byrd, Gerry Mulligan, Grover Washington, George Benson and Lee Ritenour. His clear, strong rhythm playing was perfect for Herbie Hancock's Headhunters in 1973, which also highlighted several of Mason's expert arrangements.

b. Nicholas Berkeley Mason, 27 January 1945, Birmingham, England. It was while studying architecture at a London polytechnic in 1965 that Mason joined what was to become Pink Floyd as drummer. Sixteen years later, he was the last member of the group to issue a solo album, Nick Mason's Fictitious Sports, a collection that bore the indelible jazz-pop mark of its pianist and composer, Carla Bley. Other contributors included Robert Wyatt, Chris Spedding and Bley's husband, Michael Mantler. Records, however, were of less importance to Mason than Formula 1 racing and vintage cars. These interests infiltrated 1985's Profiles with Rick Fenn (ex-10cc), which included a revival of the Crew-Cuts' 'Sh-boom' (sung by 10cc's Eric Stewart) and other items that had already featured in Life Could Be A Dream, a half-hour film documentary (directed by Mike Shackleton) about Mason's pastimes. The founders of Bamboo Music, Fenn and Mason also scored Donald Cammill's White Of The Eye as well as advertising jingles for Barclays Bank and the HMV record shop chain. As a producer, Mason has ministered to albums by Gong, Steve Hillage and the Damned. In 1985, David Gilmour appeared on Mason's 'Lie For A Lie' (from Profile). The following year, Pink Floyd reformed.

Mason, Rod

b. 28 September 1940, Plymouth, Devon, England. Mason worked first in 1959 with Cy Laurie before spending four years (1962-66) with the band of Monty Sunshine. When he contracted Bell's palsy, he had to adjust his embouchure which, luckily for him, improved his range. In 1970, he joined Acker Bilk's band, but in the late 70s, was leading his own ensemble and playing all over Europe. He spent some time with the Dutch Swing College Band in the early 80s, but resumed leading his own outfit in 1985. His wide range and exceptional stamina make him a natural lead trumpeter who seems effortlessly to recreate the sound of Louis Armstrong in the 30s.

● ALBUMS: Rod Mason/Ian Wheeler Band (1974),★★★ Great Having You Around (1978)★★★, Six For Two (1979)★★★.

Mason, Wood, Capaldi And Frog

This short-lived group, aka Wooden Frog, was formed in January 1969 from the remnants of Traffic. Ex-members Dave Mason (guitar/vocals), Jim Capaldi (drums/vocals) and Chris Wood (saxophone) were joined by organist Mick Weaver, who had previously enjoyed a solo career under the pseudonym Wynder K. Frog. The new quartet lasted a mere three months, completing a handful of live dates and a radio session before disintegrating. Despite their potential, the group was overshadowed by Traffic's powerful legacy, and lacked the focus its former leader, Steve Winwood, provided. Mason and Weaver then resumed their independent solo pursuits while Capaldi and Wood reverted to session work before re-convening Traffic.

Mass Order

A Baltimore-based duo of Mark Valentine and Eugene Hayes, who grew up listening to the O'Jays and soul standards. Mass Order scored a huge Autumn 1991 'hit' with their gospel house cracker, 'Take Me Away', a popular but elusive disc. It was actually a bootleg which had been pirated from a DAT tape at New York's New Music Seminar. It was eventually given a proper release (under its full title, 'Lift Every Voice (Take Me Away)') with remixes from the Basement Boys and Tony Humphries. As a footnote the bootlegging incident went to court, but the miscreants, David Cooper and William Lynch, still escaped justice. They were acquitted because they 'did not know they were breaking the law'.

● ALBUMS: Maybe One Day (Columbia 1992)★★★.

Massacre

Formed in the USA in the mid-80s, Massacre were one of the earliest extreme thrash metal bands, acting as pioneers of a style that was a popular underground phenomenon long before gaining public attention and widespread success. Founder-members Kam Lee (vocals) and Rick Rozz (guitar) had been two-thirds of the first Death line-up with Chuck Schuldiner. When Schuldiner relocated to California, the duo put together Massacre with Terry Butler (bass) and Bill Andrews (drums). Like other early thrash/death metal bands from Florida, they spread their name by recording demo tapes that were sent around the world and traded with various contacts. In the late 80s death metal and extreme thrash were becoming increasingly popular, and bands were much more widespread than when Massacre was formed. After a period of non-activity (with Rozz, Butler and Andrews again joining Leprosy-era Death), this new attention provided an opportunity for Massacre to resume work, and they succeeded in gaining a record contract with UK label Earache, whose specialism in extreme music was well established. Their debut album saw Lee and Rozz reunited with Butler and Andrews to record From Beyond, a set primarily based on original demo material that had never been given official release. Successful touring in the USA preceded the April 1992 launch of a 12-inch, 'Inhuman Condition', which included a cover version of the Venom standard, 'Warhead', with guest vocals from that band's Cronos. The recording of a second album introduced a new rhythm section in Pete Sison (bass) and Syrus Peters (drums).

Massey, Cal

b. 11 January 1928, Philadelphia, USA, d. 25 October 1972, New York City, New York, USA. Despite having played trumpet in the big bands of Jay McShann and Jimmy Heath, Massey's interests were firmly in the field of composition by the mid-50s. Between 1956 and 1958, he led a group of distinguished musicians, including McCoy Tyner, Jimmy Garrison, and Al Heath, playing solely his own compositions. His tunes have since been recorded by countless musicians from Philly Joe Jones to Archie Shepp. When he died, Massey had just completed a musical play about Billie Holiday.

● ALBUMS: compositions featured on John Coltrane Coltrane (1957)★★★★, Freddie Hubbard Here To Stay (1962)★★★★.

Massey, Louise, And The Westerners

b. Victoria Louise Massey, 10 August 1902, Hart County, Texas, USA, d. 22 June 1983. The family relocated first to Midland and then to the K Bar Ranch, near Roswell, Lincoln County, New Mexico, to an area still influenced by the legacy of Billy the Kid. The Masseys became a very popular vocal and instrumental family band of the 30s and 40s and one of the first to adopt elaborate cowboy outfits as their stage attire. The band originally comprised Henry 'Dad' Massey and three of his eight children, namely Louise (d. 22 June 1903, San Angelo, Texas) and brothers Curt (b. 3 May 1910) and Allen. 'Dad' taught his children to play various instruments, although Curt usually played fiddle, but in later years, he also played trumpet and piano. When Louise was 15, she married Milton Mabie who then became the fifth member of the group. The Massey Five's career began in the 20s, when they played and sang at local shows and church socials. This led to a two-year tour of the USA and Canada, as well as a radio show on KMBC Kansas City. In 1930, 'Dad' retired to his ranch and a Californian, Larry Wellington, replaced him. In 1933, they became regulars on the National Barn Dance on WLS Chicago, before moving to New York in 1935, where they featured on the NBC-networked Show Boat, and the following year, they gained their own networked Log Cabin Dude Ranch on NBC-WJZ. They had, by this time, first become the Westerners but when Louise, with her flamboyant Spanish-style costumes, became more and more the focal point of the act, she received lead billing. They made popular personal appearances over a wide area and even returned to WLS to star on Plantation Party and other shows. In 1938, they made a film appearance in Tex Ritter's Monogram B-western Where The Buffalo Roam. They recorded for several labels including Vocalion, OKeh and Conqueror and are best remembered for their fine version of 'My Adobe Hacienda'. Louise wrote the song, based on a house that she and Milt were building in 1941. She needed the music properly transcribed for publication before it could be used on NBC and this was done by a family friend, Lee Penny. He had no professional connection with the band or with the writing of the song but Louise credited him as co-writer for his work. After the group disbanded, Curt became the musical director and theme songwriter for the television shows Beverly Hillbillies and Petticoat Junction (which he actually sang).

Massiah, Zeitia

b. *c.*1974, Barbados. Dance vocalist Zeitia Massiah initially rose to prominence singing alongside Kim Wilde as live support to Michael Jackson. Her powerful vocals subsequently saw her signed by Virgin Records in the UK. Her debut single, 'This Is The Place', was playlisted by BBC Radio 1 and became a club hit in 1995. Her second release, 'Sexual Prime', was released in March 1996 and featured remixes from Tony De Vit and production duo Sharp (George Mitchell and Steven React). Both showcased her expressive and animated delivery. She also toured as backing vocalist to Tom Jones.

Massive Attack

This loose Bristol collective has grown to become one of the premier UK dance/rap outfits. The group features the talents of rapper '3D' Del Najo (b. *c.*1966), and Daddy G (b. *c.*1959) and Mushroom (b. *c.*1968, Knowle West, Bristol, England). They started in 1988 having spent several years working on various mobile sound systems, as well as releasing records under the Wild Bunch moniker ('Fucking Me Up', 'Tearing Down The Avenue'). Nellee Hooper, a former member of the Wild Bunch, left to work with Soul II Soul, while another original member, Milo Johnson, began work in Japan. 3D is also a well-respected graffiti artist, having had his work exhibited in art galleries and included in a television survey on Channel 4. Liaisons with Neneh Cherry eventually led to a meeting with Cameron McVey, who produced Massive Attack's debut album. The resultant Blue Lines boasted three hit singles; 'Daydreaming', 'Unfinished Sympathy' (which also featured an orchestral score) and 'Safe From Harm'. The blend of rap, deep reggae and soul was provocative and rich in texture, and featured singing from Cherry and Shara Nelson. An outstanding achievement, it had taken eight months to create, 'with breaks for Christmas and the World Cup'. 'Unfinished Sympathy' was particularly well received. Melody Maker magazine ranked it as the best single of 1991, and it remains a perennial club favourite. One minor hiccup occurred when they were forced, somewhat hysterically, to change their name during the Gulf War in order to maintain airplay. It was duly shortened to Massive. Their philosophy singled them out as dance music's new sophisticates: 'We don't ever make direct dance music. You've got to be able to listen and then dance.'

That status was confirmed when U2 asked them to remix their single 'Mysterious Ways'. Despite Blue Lines being widely acclaimed, the band disappeared shortly afterwards. Shara Nelson pursued a solo career, with Massive Attack put on hold until the mid-90s. Another early contributor, Tricky, launched himself to considerable fanfare, with Massive Attack widely credited as an influence on fellow-Bristolians Portishead. A second Massive Attack album finally arrived in 1994, with former collaborator Nellee Hooper returning as producer. The featured singers this time included Tricky, Nigerian-born Nicolette, Everything But The Girl's Tracey Thorn and Horace Andy (who had also contributed to the debut) on a selection of tracks that sadly failed to recapture the magic of Blue Lines. Many critics suggested that others had now run so far with the baton handed them by the collective that the instigators themselves were yet to catch up. Apart from a dub remix of Protection recorded with the Mad Professor, little was heard from Massive Attack until 'Risingson' was released in autumn 1997. The single's menacing atmosphere was a taster for the downbeat grooves of Mezzanine, which was released to wide critical acclaim in April 1998.

Massive Dread

b. Dennis James, c.1960, Trenchtown, Jamaica, West Indies. James began his career in 1982 touring with Byron Lee And The Dragonaires, which led to an appearance at the Jamaican Reggae Sunsplash show. His live appearances culminated in the Crazy Jim show, where he introduced the new DJ style that became known as 'bubbling' to an ecstatic audience. A adherent of the concept of leaving the audience 'wanting more', he withdrew from appearing on the live circuit. His reputation grew and he was soon recording for a number of Jamaican producers, including Tommy Cowan's first wife, Valerie, at Music Mountain. He enjoyed his greatest achievements as a recording artist with Winston 'Pipe' Matthews and Lloyd 'Bread' McDonald of the Wailing Souls. The vocal group, like so many other reggae performers, focused their aims towards both artistic and financial independence by establishing their own record label. The Upfront Organisation released his version of the Wailing Souls' 'Things And Time' as 'Nice Dem Up' as well as 'One Way', 'Just Cool Melba' and the Jamaican chart-topping 'This Is Massive'. The Wailing Souls were asked to perform 'Things And Time', for Tyne Tees Television, which was included in a documentary of Jamaican music for the Tube. The programme also featured a rare performance from Massive Dread in his riding hat, worn in recognition of the then current craze of the jockey-ride dance. He performed at the Valentines dance alongside Yellowman, Eek A Mouse, Buro Banton and Billy Boyo at Aces. The DJs appeared as a showcase of the Volcano sound system's top performers under the guiding light of Henry 'Junjo' Lawes. In 1984 the hits continued with 'Young Gal No Sell Your Body' and 'Justice Love And Harmony' lifted from his second album. Following his association with Volcano, Massive Dread joined the Metro Media sound where he performed alongside Peter Metro and Zu Zu.

Masso, George

b. 17 November 1926, Cranston, Rhode Island, USA. Coming from a musical background, Masso began on trumpet, then became a competent multi-instrumentalist, playing piano and vibraphone. However, it was hearing a Lou McGarity trombone solo on Benny Goodman's recording of 'Yours' which determined his final choice of instrument. Despite his background, and a two-year stint with Jimmy Dorsey in the late 40s, Masso opted for a career as a teacher of music. In 1973, with his family grown up, he decided to return to playing after persistent needling from Bobby Hackett. He spent a year and a half with Goodman's Sextet, played with the World's Greatest Jazz Band and on some of Buck Clayton's later Jam Sessions. Since then, Masso has toured extensively, usually as a single, sometimes in harness with Scott Hamilton, Warren Vaché, Spike Robinson, Bobby Rosengarden and other mainstream artists, playing clubs and festivals around the world.

Master Ace

Raised in Brooklyn, Master Ace (aka Masta Ace) became a hip-hop DJ in the 70s before adjusting to MC status by 1983. He won a rapping competition two years later which earned him studio time with producer Marley Marl, before a collegiate interlude followed. He contributed to the In Control Volume 1 set by Marl, and the latter's label, Cold Chillin', offered him a deal. His debut album, Take A Look Around, was fuelled by Marley Marl's funk throb and was to include a duet with Biz Markie. Biz never made it to the recording session for 'Me And The Biz' and Ace mimicked Biz for what should have been his part on the track. Songs like 'Brooklyn Battles' attempted to look through the blood and rage circus of urban decadent rap. He had earlier contributed to the Brand New Heavies' Heavy Rhyme Experience. His second album was better yet, the title-track, 'Slaughtahouse', a clever parody on the absurd machismo of gangsta rap: '99 rappers wanna kill to sound ill, You couldn't find their brains with a drill'. However, the graphic presentation of the video failed to impress MTV who banned it. He enjoyed more success with the Crooklyn Dodgers project (alongside Special Ed and Buckshot of Black Moon), scoring with the Spike Lee soundtrack single, 'Crooklyn'. He describes himself as a hip-hop purist, and certainly his wordy, considered narratives owe a debt to Gil Scott-Heron.

Master Musicians Of Joujouka

Drawn from the Attar clan of music makers near Morocco's Rif mountains, Joujouka is a small hilltop village growing figs and olives which boasts unexpected musical treasures. The members of the deeply religious enclave specialise in the lira, a seven hole flute constructed from cane, and rhaita, a reeded horn, much like the oboe, played via a cyclic breathing or 'zkir' technique which produces unbroken lines of sound. They are eight quite elderly practitioners (or m'allem, which translates as master), and only blood relatives of the Attar clan are allowed entry in to their circle. Instead of working the fields as their neighbours do, they are paid by surrounding hamlets to play during Friday prayers. These performances are stated by custom to bring a deity's pleasure and a panacea for sickness and poor crops. They are currently led by hereditary spokesman Bachir (son of 60s/70s leader Hadj Abdaslam Ahmed Al-Attar), though they do not actively seek or encourage contact with the wider world. However, they have been actively sought themselves. They were discovered in the early 50s by Brian Gysin, who brought them to his Tangiers restaurant, 1001 Nights, as house band. There they were introduced to William Burroughs and Timothy Leary, both of whom were startled by their music and tradition. In 1968 Gysin brought Brian Jones to the village with portable recording equipment. The villagers greeted him as a prophet who brought good fortune and blessings, and willingly recorded Brian Jones Presents The Pipes Of Pan At Joujouka. This bred collaborations with Ornette Coleman (Dancing In Your Head), and the Rolling Stones track, 'Continental Drift', from Steel Wheels. Following international tours and soundtrack work on the films Apocalypse Across The Sky and The Next Dream their new prosperity engendered an alien factionalism within the musicians, resulting in a break-off group. Bachir reunited them during his tenure as leader, bringing the group to the 1995 WOMAD festival in a burst of international activity. This looked sure to be a rare departure for a group still dedicated to their religious imperative to summon the spirit of goat god, Bal Jaloud, in cathartic village ceremonies. Nevertheless, in 1995 the group released an internationally distributed album, Joujouka Black Eyes, featuring their tribute to Jones, 'Brahim Jones, Joujouka Very Stoned'. Elsewhere the flutes played unaccompanied, weaving an intricate, layered sound of great depth and resonance, despite its utterly alien stylistic properties.

Master Of Puppets - Metallica

Metallica's irresistible rise to the top continued with this enigmatic 1986 album. A constant touring unit by this point, their combination of light and dark and their deft staccato delivery, especially on the title track, came brusquely through. Their lengthy arrangements, bolstered by the precise snap of Hetfield's vocals, testified to their undeniable power. The striding 'Battery', the darkly lit 'Welcome Home (Sanitarium)', as well as the complex instrumental, 'Orion', all gave powerful testament to their ever-developing skill and vision.

Master Of Reality - Black Sabbath

Black Sabbath's third album and their first real international breakthrough, peaking in the Top 10 in both the UK and USA. Following on the heels of their much vaunted Paranoid album, they surprised initially with the cool 'Sweet Leaf', but retained their insightful (if not truly realizing it themselves at the time) and unique stranglehold on what is now seen as the original and traditional sound of near-classic heavy metal, best exemplified in the eerie 'Children Of The Grave' and the expressive reaches of 'Into The Void'. A remarkable piece of work.

Master's Apprentices

Formed in Adelaide, Australia, in 1965, the Master's Apprentices have often been regarded by many observers of the Australian music scene as one of that country's most outstanding bands. Because Australian music was influenced by both the American and the British music scene, there were occasions when local Australian trends swung between the two. This was particularly true in the late 60s, when pop/soft rock was the main radio fodder, and yet there was the heavy blues influence from the UK, as well as the US west coast psychedelic phenomenon bubbling underground. The Master's Apprentices took notice of the latter two and created a unique sound which encompassed both styles. Thus their material is disjointed but individual, and their albums have stood up well since then, in addition to becoming collectors items. They evolved from the instrumental-surf band the Mustangs who, comprising Mick Bower (guitar), Gavin Webb (bass), Rick Morrison (guitar) and Brian Vaughton (drums), took on a lead vocalist, Jim Keays, adopted their new name and started playing raucous, energetic R&B-based songs written by Bower. The band moved to Melbourne in early 1967 to capitalize on the success of the first single, 'Undecided'. By mid-1967, the second single, 'Dead And Buried', and their debut album had been released, but the music scene had moved on and psychedelia now being in vogue. Like many others, the band followed suit and released the 'Living In A Child's Dream' single, their most successful yet. Several line-up changes had taken place, but the departure of songwriter Bower was a setback. More changes followed, and it was not until early 1968, with the arrival of guitarist Doug Ford, that the band got back into gear, with the Keays/Ford team providing songs for the rest of the band's existence. A couple of catchy singles followed, and the group was joined by former Bay City Union member Glen Wheatley (b. 23 January 1949, Australia) on bass. The band continued its success through 1969-70, with further Australian hit singles featuring their distinctive guitar riffing. The band journeyed to the UK in 1970, but fame eluded them. They returned to Australia and released Choice Cuts, which was released in the UK as the Masters Apprentices, to favourable critical reviews. The band returned to England, but by the time of its arrival, interest had waned. Nevertheless, the members stayed on, releasing A Toast To Panama Red, to limited success. Keays and Wheatley departed in early 1972; Ford kept the name going with a trio for another year before the band faded out, an ignominious end to what had been one of Australia's best and most adventurous bands. Jim Keays continued with a lengthy and patchy solo career, while Wheatley became the most successful rock entrepreneur in Australia. The band later reformed in 1989.

Mastercuts Series

A Beechwood subsidiary UK record label masterminded by Ian Dewhirst, Mastercuts was launched in 1991 to document some of dance music's most essential moments, in all its myriad forms. Initial releases such as Jazz Funk 1 sold 25,000 copies, while New Jack Swing climbed as high as number 8 in the Music Week compilation chart, showing well against much better-funded, television-advertised albums. The first record in the series had been Classic Mix, but other formats were explored in the following order: Jazz-Funk, Mellow, New Jack Swing, Funk, Salsoul, Rare Groove, P-Funk, 80s Groove, Electro and House. Each came complete with insightful sleevenotes and anecdotes, in a manner which suggested that at last dance music might be taking its history as seriously as other forms of music. In 1994 the label also reluanched the legendary Streetsounds label.

Masterminds

The Masterminds, a Liverpool group, formed in 1964 consisted of the stringbending Joey Molland (guitar, vocals), Chris Findley (b. 10 October 1948; keyboards, vocals), George Cassidy (bass, vocals), Joey Rathbone (drums, vocals) and Dougie Meakin (guitar, vocals). Meakin was a Bob Dylan fanatic who encouraged them to perform his quirky 'She Belongs To Me'. Findley recalls, 'The Rolling Stones came into the Blue Angel in Liverpool when we were doing 'She Belongs To Me'. Their manager, Andrew [Loog] Oldham, was taken with the way we were doing it, so he signed us to his new Immediate label.' The b-side was an original song, 'Taken My Love', which shows the influence of the Righteous Brothers. The single sold moderately well and Oldham asked them to cover a Beach Boys' song for the follow-up. However, the Beach Boys decided to release it themselves and that put an end to their recording career. Molland, Findley and Cassidy joined the Fruit Eating Bears and backed the Merseys. Findley, who is now involved in video production, says, 'We should have kept at it. At the time we didn't realise how good the band was.'

aka Lil' Louie Vega and Kenny 'Dope' Gonzalez, who marked the inception of their partnership by releasing 'Ride On The Rhythm' in 1991. On the back of that and their well established personal reputations (appearances as extras in Spaghetti Westerns notwithstanding), they subsequently undertook a vast array of remix projects. These began with St Ettienne ('Only Love Can Break Your Heart'), plus Chic, Debbie Gibson, Melissa Morgan, BG The Prince Of Rap ('Take Control Of The Party'), Lisa Stansfield, Deee-Lite ('Bittersweet Loving') plus legendary Latin jazz player Tito Puente's 'Ran Kan Kan'. In turn Puente contributed three times to Louie's 1992 album with singer Marc Anthony. They also recorded, in their own right, material like 'Can't Stop The Rhythm (with Jocelyn Brown) for US label Cutting. Widely regarded as the cream of the profession, not everybody was clamouring for their wares - Jamiroquai's 'Emergency On Planet Earth' remix was rumoured to be hated by the artist concerned. His was a rare dissenting voice, however.

Masters Family

Formed in 1946, the Family are noted for their country and gospel performances. They comprised Johnnie Masters (b. John Mace Purdom, 27 May 1913, Jacksonville, Florida, USA, d. 21 January 1980; songwriter, guitar, mandolin, vocals), Lucille Masters (b. Lucille Ferdon, 13 September 1917, Homerville, Georgia, USA; songwriter, vocals) and their son Owen (b. John Owen Masters, 3 February 1935, Jacksonville, Florida, USA; songwriter, guitar, vocals). Purdom, who adopted the name Masters after his mother's remarriage, learned guitar as a boy and was performing on local radio in 1933. He met and married Lucille Ferdon in 1934, and in the early 40s, they sang as the Dixie Sweethearts on Jacksonville radio stations and made their first recordings for Rich-R-Tone in 1946. When young Owen and, on occasions, daughter Deanna, began to sing with them, they became the Masters Family. They recorded for Mercury Records in the late 40s and relocated to Knoxville, where they were regulars on WROL. Between 1950 and 1956, they recorded numerous sides for Columbia Records, most being gospel orientated, including their noted 'Gloryland March' (James Roberts, of James And Martha Carson, sang lead on some of the later recordings). After 1952, they became the first gospel group to adopt a normal country backing, rather than the limited piano or guitar accompaniment usual on gospel recordings at that time. Owen Masters was badly injured in a car crash in 1955 and his long absence affected the group's activities. They returned to Jacksonville and mainly played at church venues but recorded again, in the early 60s, for Starday and Decca Records. The Masters divorced but later remarried. In the late 70s, Johnnie planned for some comeback appearances but when he died, in January 1980, following a heart attack, the idea was forgotten. His widow, Evelyn and Deanna moved to Florida, while Owen settled in Mount Juliet, Tennessee. All members were prolific songwriters and many of their numbers have become country or gospel standards including 'Medals For Mothers', 'Cry From The Cross', 'Honeymoon On A Rocket Ship', 'That Little Country Church House', and many others.

Masters Of Ceremony

Nowadays chiefly remembered for the exploits of lead rapper Grand Puba (b. Maxwell Dixon), who would go on to front Brand Nubian before selecting a solo career. Masters Of Ceremony's singular album release was a pedestrian affair, divorced of the religious dogma, or indeed the musical precision, which characterised the work of Brand Nubian. Without which their attempts to fascimile a Public Enemy sneer wore fatally thin. However, it did include a major hit in 'Sexy'.

Masters Of Reality

This New York, USA-based quartet originally featured Chris Goss (vocals, guitar), Tim Harrington (guitar), Googe (bass) and Vinnie Indrizzo (drums). Deriving their name from the title of Black Sabbath's third album, they fused a diverse array of rock styles into a form that clearly invoked names such as the Doors, Vanilla Fudge, Love and Deep Purple. The group formed as early as 1980, after which they embarked on a long-haul club touring policy that eventually brought them serious attention. With the aid of producer Rick Rubin, who signed them originally to his Def Jam enterprise before it became Def American, they distilled their influences into a potent and powerful sound that had its roots in the 70s but was delivered with the technology of the present. Their self-titled debut was released to widespread critical acclaim in 1989, but fans had to wait another four years for Sunrise On The Sufferbus, which featured Ginger Baker alongside the only remaining members, Goss and Googe; the first line-up had imploded following disastrous touring engagements in support of their debut. A live album was released in 1997 that also featured Stone Temple Pilots vocalist Scott Weiland.

Masters, Frankie

b. USA. Masters began playing music while at college, eventually dropping out to become the leader of a theatre house band in Chicago, Illinois, USA. Several years later, in the late 20s, he decided to inaugurate his first dance band under his own name. His sidemen included Woody Kessler, Jerry Borchard, Steve Brown, Jay Mathews, Stuart Charles, Bill Pritchard, Kahn Keene, Vincent Ferrine, Buddy Shiffman, Carl Bean, Howard Barkell, Don Elton, Russ Dillon, Orin Crippen, Ray Noonan, Johnny Barshark, Phil Gray, Joe Reisman, Eddie Baxter, Hy Lesnick, Morty Nathan, Fred Smith, Jimmy Nash, Bill Aimesworth, Jack Wald, Bobby Lewis, Irving Trisco, Maxwell Anderson, Don Bell and Bill Johnson. The featured vocalists were Harlan Rogers, Gordon Goodman, Lou Hirst, Phyllis Miles (who later married Masters) and Marion Francis. There were also two vocal congregations: the Swing Masters and the Masters Voices. Initially taking dates in the local Chicago theatre circuit from where so many of its members were culled, the group's first professional hotel engagement came at the College Inn of the Sherman Hotel. They stayed there for nearly four years with regular remote radio broadcasts from that location. Masters became a national celebrity when 'Scatterbrain' became a major hit single, producing high profile engagements at the Pennsylvania Taft and Essex House hotels in New York. By the 40s they were among the most successful dance bands of their generation, with Masters acquiring a regular slot on Coca Cola Company's Victory Parade Of Spotlight Bands. After the end of World War II the band moved to the St. Francis Hotel in California, before returning to Chicago and the Stevens Hotel (later the Conrad Hilton). After several years there Masters entered a period of semi-retirement in Cary, Illinois. By the late 60 he had made his return to the stage, playing mainly at private engagements in and around Chicago.

Masters, Valerie

b. 24 April 1940, London, England. This red-headed pop singer from London's East End sang during her childhood in the local underground station during air raids and later became the private secretary to the Mayor of Stepney. She received her big musical break when she replaced Marion Ryan in the popular Ray Ellington Quartet. Masters made her first recording, 'Ding Dong', for Fontana in 1958 and was first seen on television on the Hughie Green Show. She was given her own series on Radio Luxembourg in 1959, which ran for over two years. Her only chart success came in 1960 with her sixth single on Fontana, a version of the European song 'Banjo Boy'. This was the same song that gave much-loved singer/comedian George Formby his last chart hit. Masters represented Britain in the European (not Eurovision) Song Contest in Belgium in 1960, and this led to her working in Scandinavia, Germany and the Netherlands. She recorded for HMV in 1963, Columbia in 1964, Polydor in 1966 and once more on Columbia in 1969 but has not graced the chart since.

Mastren, Carmen

b. Carmine Niccolo Mastandrea, 6 October 1913, Cohoes, New York, USA, d. 31 March 1981. As a child he learned to play violin before becoming adept on banjo and finally guitar. For several years he played in the family band alongside four musician brothers, the best-known being trombonist Al Mastren. In the early 30s he began to make a name for himself outside the family fold and by the middle of the decade was a mainstay of the Tommy Dorsey band. He stayed with Dorsey until 1940, along the way becoming a poll-topper in US music magazines, then joined Joe Marsala and also played in orchestras at NBC in New York. During military service in World War II he played in Glenn Miller's orchestra. In the late 40s he was on call in New York for session work, playing, conducting and arranging. In 1953 he returned to studio work at NBC, remaining there for almost 20 years. In later years he worked in jingle mills and also played with Dick Hyman's New York Jazz Repertory Company. In these years he also sometimes renewed his early acquaintance with the banjo, proving to be something of a virtuoso performer. As a guitarist, Mastren was a secure section player, his playing helping provide the swinging bedrock of the Dorsey band and the Miller Army-Air Force band. When called upon to solo, as with the Sidney Bechet-Muggsy Spanier Big Four, he showed rich ideas, although often couched in the older tradition of the instrument.

Matador

This show, which was 'inspired' by the life of the Spanish bullfighter El Cordobes, first surfaced in the form of a concept album recorded by Tom Jones in 1987. One of the tracks, 'A Boy From Nowhere', climbed to number 2 in the UK singles chart, and Jones was originally set to take the leading role in the stage production. Things did not work out that way, and when Matador opened at the Queens theatre in London on 16 April 1991, the central character of Domingo Hernandez was played by the young unknown John Barrowman, with Nicky Henson as his crafty manager. In an attempt to give the production some glamour, the actress Stephanie Powers, well-known in England for her appearances with Robert Wagner in the television series Hart To Hart, was brought in to play the part of an American film star Laura-Jane Wilding. The character was thought to be based on Ava Gardner with whom El Cordobes is said to have had an affair. The score was by Michael Leander and Edward Seago, who had written hits for Gary Glitter, Engelbert Humperdinck and Cliff Richard, and the book, by Peter Dukes, was based on Leander and Seago's original storyline. Domingo's rise from the obscure village of Andalucia to the top of the bullfighting world despite a background of illiteracy, was thrillingly staged against a background of spectacular sets, but it was the dancing - particularly the flamenco dancing choreographed by Rafael Aguilar - which proved to be the outstanding feature of the whole production. The score, which contained nothing else as memorable as 'A Boy From Nowhere', also included 'Panama Hat', 'No Way Out Of This Town', 'I Was Born To Be Me', 'I'll Take You Out To Dinner', 'Paseo And Corrida', 'To Be a Matador', 'Children Of The Sun', 'I'll Dress You In Mourning', and 'I'm You, You Are Me'. Critical reaction was mixed ('Risibly awful . . . a load of bull', was the worst), but the show never captured an audience and closed after three months with losses 'approaching £1 million'.

Matador Records

From its offices located on lower Broadway in New York, USA, Matador Records has risen to become one of the most revered outlets for alternative rock and pop in the 90s. The label was founded by Chris Lombardi (b. c.1965, USA) and Gerard Cosloy (b. c.1964, Wayland, Massachusetts, USA). The latter had formerly worked at Homestead Records, one of the most influential independent labels of the 80s, for whom his most important signing was Sonic Youth. Previously he had edited the underground magazine Conflict in his native Massachusetts. After falling out with Homestead's backers he left the label in 1990 to work with Lombardi, who had previously been employed by Homestead's distributors Dutch East India Trading. A year earlier Cosloy had set up the Matador label with money borrowed from his father. Cosloy's uncompromising attitude to what he describes as 'mediocrity' in the modern music industry had already gained him an imposing reputation. However, his ability to spot talent was beyond question. Having packed the Homestead roster with groups such as Sonic Youth, Jon Spencer's Blues Explosion and Dinosaur Jr, Matador would soon become home to the cream of 90s left-field music talent

- from Pavement to Bettie Serveert, Guided By Voices and Liz Phair. Not all of his signings were as revelatory - Matador's first release was an album by Australian act H.P. Zinker in 1992. The label was also nearly evicted from its premises just as they began shipping Pavement's breakthrough Slanted And Enchanted album. Although Phair was the only one to make a significant commercial sales impact, Cosloy's vision was established and his label soon became the subject of major label interest. However, its initial joint venture with Atlantic Records, negotiated to prevent the artists on its roster being preyed upon by majors, proved a failure. Out of eight releases through Atlantic, only Liz Phair's Whip-Smart sold more than 50,000 copies. When Atlantic president Danny Goldberg left the company for Mercury Records in 1994, Matador's relationship with the major deteriorated and was eventually dissolved in January 1996. However, later that year a new agreement was finalized with Capitol Records, though press reports of some $20 million changing hands were later revealed as wild speculation.

Matassa, Cosimo

Of Italian ancestry, Matassa ran a New Orleans jukebox company and a record store, J&M Amusement Services, in the early 40s. In 1945 he opened a small recording studio behind the shop. For the next 20 years, Cosimo's studios were the focus of recording activity in the city. Among the first to produce at Cosimo's was Dave Bartholomew, who recorded Roy Brown for De Luxe and Tommy Ridgley for Imperial. In 1949, Bartholomew began recording Fats Domino at the studio, and in 1952, he recorded Lloyd Price. There were other hits from J&M by Shirley And Lee. By the mid-50s, a studio band had emerged to accompany the growing number of singers working there. Led by saxophonists Red Tyler and Lee Allen, its members included Earl Palmer (drums) and Frank Fields (bass). In 1956, the studio moved to larger premises and was renamed Cosimo's. Soon afterwards, Little Richard made some of his most famous recordings there. During this time, Matassa had been engineer and studio owner but in 1957 he moved into management with white pop singer Jimmy Clanton. Two years later he started his own, short-lived label, Rex. Among its roster of artists was Mickey Gilley, Earl King, Jerry McCain and Mac Rebennack (Dr. John). Matassa returned to his recording work on hits such as Barbara Lynn's 'You'll Lose A Good Thing' (1962) until 1966, when he set up Dover Records, an ambitious distribution company for local New Orleans labels. There were big successes with Robert Parker ('Barefootin'') and Aaron Neville ('Tell It Like It Is'), but by 1968 Dover too had become bankrupt. Afterwards, Matassa remained a part-owner of the Jazz City Studios in New Orleans, as well as working at Sea-Saint studios and forming the Jefferson Jazz company with Marshall Sehorn.

Matchbox

Named after a Carl Perkins' classic, Matchbox were one of several 70s rock 'n' roll revivalist bands from the UK to make the jump from club favourites to chart stars. The band was formed in 1971 by two former members of Contraband - bassist Fred Poke and his brother-in-law Jimmy Redhead. They were joined by an old schoolfriend of Poke's called Steve Bloomfield. Capable of playing almost any stringed instrument, Bloomfield had made a living as a session player for Pye and was on several Mungo Jerry hits. Matchbox's debut single came out on Dawn in 1973, after which Redhead's departure left a line-up of Wiffle Smith (vocals), Rusty Lipton (piano), Bob Burgos (drums), Bloomfield (guitars), and Poke (bass). They subsequently recorded Riders In The Sky for Charly (they had previously recorded a Dutch-only album on Rockhouse). Smith and Lipton then departed, and former Cruisers vocalist Gordon Waters joined. The band were signed to a minor label and completed Setting The Woods On Fire in just over two days in October 1977, but as the record company were virtually bankrupt Chiswick took over its distribution. By this time, however, Matchbox had signed up with Raw Records - which issued a single - and this led to complications. Chiswick did not promote the band because Matchbox were not signed to the label, and Raw declined to promote them because they did not own the album. In desperation the group bought themselves out of their contract and signed a new agreement with Magnet. At this point they had been joined by vocalist Graham Fenton, previously with the Wild Bunch, the Houseshakers and the Hellraisers, and now Redhead returned, along with another guitarist, Gordon Scott. The first Magnet single, 'Black Slacks', missed out, but the second - a Steve Bloomfield original called 'Rockabilly Rebel' - made the charts. A string of hit singles followed. One further line-up change came about when Bloomfield decided he did not want to tour anymore, and Dick Callan was brought in as a replacement for live appearances. Apart from Matchbox recordings, the group also put out a version of Freddie Cannon's 'Palisades Park' under the pseudonym Cyclone. Steve Bloomfield released a solo album entitled Rockabilly Originals. The group is known as Major Matchbox outside the UK.

Led by Rob Thomas (vocals), the impact of American rock band Matchbox 20's debut was inspired by a change in record companies on the day of release. As part of Atlantic Records' streamlining, their Lava dependent was brought under the major label's auspices. Given greater promotion and access to Atlantic's marketing departments, Yourself Or Someone Like You quickly gained a foothold in the Billboard Top 100. The promotional single, 'Long Day', also proved a minor hit on America's modern rock radio formats. The follow-up, 'Push', again gained strong airplay as the band continued to tour heavily on the US club circuit.

Matching Mole

Matching Mole were formed by Robert Wyatt after he left Soft Machine in 1971. The name was conceived by a brilliant twist, by using a french translation of the name Soft Machine (La Machine Molle). He recruited David Sinclair (keyboards, ex-Caravan), Phil Miller (guitar, ex-Delivery) and Bill McCormick (bass, ex-Quiet Sun) to complete the line-up. Having secured a contract with CBS Records, the group embarked on recording sessions for their debut album, but soon lost the services of Sinclair. Dave Macrae was recruited as his replacement in time to complete the sessions. The result was the group's self-titled 1972 debut. Those already converted to Wyatt's esoteric and innovative musical ambitions were not disappointed. Two of the best tracks, 'O Caroline' and 'Signed Curtain' were combined on a single, though for obvious reasons the album's outstanding track, 'Instant Pussy', was not. A second album followed in 1973. Matching Mole's Little Red Record arrived packaged in a striking cover showing armed revolutionaries painted in the manner of post-war Soviet propaganda - demonstrating both Wyatt's growing politicization and sense of irony. Many have assumed that the group's subsequent career was blighted by Wyatt's disabling accident, after he fell from an apartment window in 1972. In actuality, the group was falling apart anyway, and the accident coincided with his decision to relaunch the group with new members. In the event, when he returned from recuperation in hospital he elected to pursue a solo career. Sinclair and Miller subsequently joined Hatfield And The North, who also included David Sinclair's brother Richard. McCormick returned to session work while Macrae joined Pacific Eardrum.

Matchuki, Count

b. Winston Cooper, *c.*1939, Kingston, Jamaica, West Indies, d. 1995. Matchuki, whose nickname came from his habit of chewing matchsticks, is widely acknowledged as the first Jamaican DJ. In the 50s R&B was the prevailing popular sound, and he would simply add local phraseology to enhance the tunes, whereas U-Roy, who is often referred to as the innovator, rode the reggae rhythms with his chantings. R&B is acknowledged to have influenced Jamaican musicians and in the 50s Coxsone Dodd made frequent visits to secure new releases for his Downbeat Sound System. While on his visits, he heard the US DJs' jive talk and felt that the style would augment his status as the top sound man on the island. Following the departure of Dodd's resident DJ Duke Vin, Matchuki was offered and accepted the role, where he emulated the US radio hosts. By the late 50s Jamaican musicians began recording their own sound, initially with an American influence, but it soon developed its own identity. The Skatalites performed a number of ska instrumentals for Dodd and the Count was invited to add his vocals on a number of recordings, although he was often uncredited. Having not been acknowledged, it is difficult to identify recordings involving his voice-overs, although he certainly appeared on the Sound Dimension's 'More Scorcher', 'Doctor Sappa Too' and 'Pepper Pot'. By the late 60s, disillusioned with the lack of either financial reward or recognition, he decided to abandon his career, remaining unobtrusive within the industry. He resurfaced 10 years later in the television series Deep Roots Music. The production team secured a rare interview with the pre-eminent DJs Sir Lord Comic and Count Matchuki, although the duo spent most of the interview in a heated debate relating to the Jiving Juniors' 'Lollipop Girl'. Matchuki's appearance enabled him to set the record straight as to the embryonic role he played in the DJ phenomenon.

Material

One of Bill Laswell's projects, Material was mixing jazz, funk and punk with hip-hop and scratch before the terms were invented; the result was stunning and powerful music. Basically comprising Michael Beinhorn, Fred Maher and Laswell, Material also included Fred Frith, Sonny Sharrock, Shankar, George Lewis, Henry Threadgill and Olu Daru. After a long hiatus in its career, Material reappeared in 1989 with Seven Souls, when it seemed to be evolving into a 'new age' band. However, on Third Power, Laswell assembled a new, back-on-the-block version that includes Shabba Ranks, the Jungle Brothers, Herbie Hancock, Sly And Robbie and Fred Wesley.

Material Issue

Belonging to the pop rock tradition of Tom Petty and Big Star, Material Issue arrived in the mid-80s from Chicago, Illinois, USA, to great critical fanfare. The band consisted of songwriter Jim Ellison (b. *c.*1965, d. 20 June 1996, Chicago, Illinois, USA; vocals, guitar, previously a member of fellow Chicago band Green), Fred Ansani (bass, vocals) and Michael Zeleneko (drums). Material Issue was a six-track mini-album, co-produced by Jeff Murphy of the Shoes. The promise was confirmed with the arrival of their first full-length album which illustrated Ellison's flair for power-pop composition; the songs recalled a golden age of US pop, with a focus on guys and girls that was both heartfelt and innocent. Further albums confirmed Ellison's talent, but he committed suicide in June 1996.

Matheny, Dmitri

b. *c.*1966, Nashville, Tennessee, USA. Based in San Francisco, California, USA, flügelhorn player Dmitri Matheny made his debut with the 1996 release of Red Reflections. Raised in Tucson, Arizona, Matheny was first drawn to jazz when he heard his father playing Miles Davis's Kind Of Blue. Inspired, Matheny took up the trumpet in an attempt to emulate his hero, but found the sound was too 'brash and edgy'. Eventually he chose the flügelhorn, preferring its warm, rich tones. He trained at the Interlochen (Michigan) Arts Academy and the Berklee College Of Music, alternating between flügelhorn and trumpet. When he came to write his own compositions, however, the flügelhorn proved more suited to the emotive textures he wished to produce. After training under Art Farmer, Matheny graduated from Berklee in 1989 and moved to San Francisco. There he formed the SOMA Ensemble, featuring John Heller (guitar), Rob Scheps (tenor saxophone), Bill Douglass (bass), Alan Jones (drums), Trevor Dunn (bass) and two members of the Charlie Hunter Trio; Scott Amdendola (drums) and Davis Ellis (tenor saxophone). All contributed to his 1996 debut album, Red Reflections, which included cover versions of Horace Silver's 'The Outlaws' and Michael Brecker's 'Take A Walk'. Matheny's own compositions included 'Myth Of The Rainy Night', part of a series of pieces concerning author Jack Kerouac, which Matheny described as a 'tone poem'.

Mathieu, Mireille

b. 24 July 1946, Avignon, France. It was convenient, if inaccurate, for the media to brand her a second Edith Piaf, but Mathieu shared a similar poor upbringing. One of 13 children of a stone mason, she used some of her factory wages for singing lessons, until she was noticed by one of Johnny Hallyday's former managers, Johnny Stark. He groomed her for stardom via an 'urchin' hair style by Elrhodes and, from celebrated couturier Louis Feraud, trademark red-and-black stage costumes. A showcase at the Paris Olympia led to a deal with Barclay Records and a run of hits that began with 'Mon Credo' in 1965. After this and later singles such as 'C'Est Ton Nom', 'Qu'Elle Est Belle' and 'Funambule' sold over a million collectively within Europe alone, the organization directed its gaze overseas. While a domestic television spectacular (directed by François Reichenbach) served as a grassroots holding operation, the artist's appearances on networked US shows (hosted, respectively, by Ed Sullivan and Andy Williams) established vital links with that lucrative market. During the same lengthy world tour, Mathieu was even heard in concert in Moscow where she sang 'Quand Fera-T-Il Jour Comrade', Gaston Bonheur's tempestuous anthem commemorating the October Revolution. Her impact on Britain was less tangible, though healthy sales of her 1968 album indicated a deeper groundswell of support than was evidenced by a solitary entry in the singles Top 30 the previous Christmas with a French interpretation of Engelbert Humperdinck's 'The Last Waltz'. Later, Humperdinck stole UK chart honours with his cover of Mathieu's 'Les Bicyclettes De Belsize'. Both vocalists were featured on 1972's Top Star Festival, a charity compilation of international entertainers on which Mirielle performed 'Where Do I Begin' (from Love Story) - a rare genuflexion towards English-speaking listeners from one who had achieved global fame with a recorded repertoire which was invulnerably French, no matter what language the actual lyrics she sang.

Mathis, Country Johnny

b. 28 September 1933, Maud, Texas, USA. Not to be confused with his more successful namesake, this Johnny Mathis is a country singer-songwriter. He appeared on the Big D Jamboree, Dallas, but moved to Shreveport and made his debut on the Louisiana Hayride in 1953. In 1954, he and Jimmy Lee Fautheree recorded as Jimmy And Johnny and gained a number 3 US country chart hit with his song 'If You Don't Somebody Else Will'. During his days at Shreveport, Mathis worked with Johnny Horton and co-wrote some songs with him including 'I'll Do It Everytime'. Horton also recorded some of Mathis's songs. Although Mathis appeared on the Grand Ole Opry, he had no solo chart hits after 'Please Talk To My Heart' in 1963. The following year that song became a Top 10 hit for Ray Price and, 16 years later, charted again for Freddy Fender. His songs have been recorded by many stars, including George Jones, Faron Young, Charley Pride and Engelbert Humperdinck. Mathis recorded both country and gospel material for Little Darlin' and Hilltop Gospel during the 60s and 70s, but despite being around the country music scene for three decades, he basically remains an unknown.

Mathis, Johnny

b. John Royce Mathis, 30 September 1935, San Francisco, California, USA. In 1956, the 19-year-old Mathis was signed to Columbia Records where he began his career with a jazz-tinged album. A US Top 20 hit with 'Wonderful! Wonderful!' saw him move adroitly towards the balladeer market, and before long he was a major concert attraction, with regular appearances on highly rated American television shows. In 1957, together with his first hit, Mathis was barely absent from the US bestseller lists, and that year had a further five hits, including the number 1 'Chances Are', 'The Twelfth Of Never' and 'It's Not For Me To Say'. Mathis had become a phenomenon; his popularity at that time ranked alongside that of Frank Sinatra. By May 1958, he was scraping the UK charts with 'Teacher, Teacher', and soon established himself with major hits such as 'A Certain Smile', 'Winter Wonderland', 'Someone', 'Misty' and 'My Love For You'. His appeal to the adult market ensured spectacular album success, and Johnny's Greatest Hits stayed a record 490 weeks in the US chart. With the beat boom and 60s pop explosion making it more difficult for visiting American balladeers to infiltrate the singles chart, Mathis concentrated increasingly on releasing albums. Indeed, he seemed willing to tackle a variety of concepts presented by his various producers and arrangers. Away From Home, produced by Norman Newell, saw the singer concentrating on the songs of European composers; Olé, the Latin-American outing, was sung in Portuguese and Spanish; Wonderful World Of Make Believe consisted entirely of songs based on fairytales; and there were tribute albums to such composers as Burt Bacharach and Bert Kaempfert. Meanwhile, Mathis was suffering from serious drug addiction, but fortunately he managed to kick the habit. By the late 60s, Mathis seemed equally adept at tackling MOR standards and John Lennon/Paul McCartney songs, as well as hoping to update his image. He returned to the UK singles chart in 1974 for the first time in a decade with 'I'm Stone In Love With You' and, two years later, secured the Christmas number 1 with 'When A Child Is Born'. Back in the USA, he was still searching for new ideas and in 1978, collaborated with Deniece Williams on 'Too Much, Too Late'. This, his first duet, became a surprise number 1, his first US chart-topper since 1957. Since then, Mathis has duetted incessantly with a list that includes Gladys Knight, Paulette McWilliams, Stephanie Lawrence, Jane Oliver, Dionne Warwick, Angela Bofill, Natalie Cole, Barbara Dickson and Nana Mouskouri. What has been overlooked is Mathis's incredible commercial success: he is one of the most successful recording artists of all time, although behind Sinatra and Elvis Presley. His remarkable durability and unfailing professionalism demand admiration.

Matlock, Glen

b. 27 August 1956, Paddington, London, England. The original bass player with the Sex Pistols, it is hard to separate Matlock's contribution to that band from the mythology that has been created around the group's existence. Though viciously derided by everyone in the band, particularly John Lydon/Rotten, his musicianly efforts on the group's behalf were a key factor in their development. He wrote 'Pretty Vacant', aside from one line contributed by Lydon, and was responsible for the structure of several other songs. However, management and inter-group machinations saw him dismissed from the band in favour of glamorous bootboy Sid Vicious prior to the sessions that produced Never Mind The Bollocks. The change was reported to the press by Pistols manager Malcolm McLaren on 28 February 1977 in a telegram that insisted 'he went on too long about Paul McCartney' (this comment has been corrupted down the years into 'he knew too many Beatles chords'). Famously, Matlock did not hold a grudge - even offering the notoriously inept Vicious bass lessons. More recently he flatly denied claims made by Lydon in his 1994 autobiography that he helped work on Never Mind The Bollocks for a session fee. Matlock subsequently formed the Rich Kids, a group that also featured Steve New, Rusty Egan and Midge Ure. The latter two would later enjoy fame in the New Romantic period with Visage and Ultravox, respectively, but after the group's collapse a long period in the wilderness opened up for Matlock. Several projects, including work with Damned drummer Rat Scabies, failed to produce anything of note, until Matlock published his autobiography (with Pete Silverton) in the early 90s. In 1996, just as the Sex Pistols' re-formation was confirmed to the press, Matlock announced the release of his debut solo album. Who's He Think He Is When He's At Home? was released by Creation Records and featured former Rich Kids colleague Steve New, plus Keith Baxter and Chris McCormick of 3 Colours Red, Derwood Andrews, Dean Klavatt and Pete Vukovice. The critical reaction was decidedly frosty, however, and low-key gigs around London to promote its release proved less than convincing.

Matsu, Tokyo

b. Tokyo, Japan. She studied classical violin at Tokyo's Kunitachi School of Music but listening to the country music on the AFN network saw her interests change to that genre. In the late 60s, she played for US servicemen in the Far East and Vietnam as well as to US bases in Italy and England. She relocated to America, where she has played on the Wheeling Jamboree and acted as opening act and toured with several major artists, including Faron Young, Dolly Parton and Tammy Wynette. She appeared on the Grand Ole Opry, where her fiddle playing won her many new friends. In her stage act, she also proved to be a fine yodeller, while her vocals with her lilting, if limited, English, as demonstrated on her popular rendition of 'Locky Top', proved gently amusing but pleasantly listenable. She proved a big hit at the 1987 Wembley Festival in London, particularly with a dazzling rendition of the 'Orange Blossom Special'. She married and settled to raise a family in Nashville.

Matsuda, Seiko

b. Noriko Kamachi, 1962, Fukuoka, Japan. As extremely popular as her precedent, Momoe Yamaguchi, Matsuda had her first single, 'Hadashi No Kisetsu' ('The Season For Bare Feet') was released in 1980. As the theme song for a television commercial it became a substantial hit. The second single, 'Aoi Sangoshô ('A Blue Coral Reef'), rose in the chart of Original Confidence, a smaller Japanese equivalent to Billboard magazine, to number 2. Her third single, released that same year 'Kaze Wa Akiiro' ('The Colour Of The Wind Is Autumn'), easily topped the chart and began her unprecedented run of 24 consecutive chart-toppers, the last one of which was 'Tabidachi Wa Freesia' ('Starting On A Journey Feels Like A Freesia') in 1988. The cuteness of her appearance and voice has often been criticized as feigned innocence and prudishness, especially by her female critics. Her national popularity, however, has never substantially waned, and her public and private affairs are routinely headlined in the entertainment journals, including her marriage to a popular actor, Masateru Kanda, the birth of her baby, and her residential and professional life in New York - a life-style regarded by many Japanese observers as feministic.

Matsui, Keiko

Multi-faceted modern jazz artist, Japan-born Keiko Matsui released her eighth album, Dream Walk, in 1997, by which time she had established a strong following, despite limited commercial success. After its release she toured the USA in support of the YME organization, set up to promote breast cancer awareness and provide support and information for breast cancer victims and their families. As Matsui told the press: 'As a woman and the mother of two daughters, I became alarmed by the statistics and wanted to do what I could.' A four-song CD, Gift Of Hope, was also issued to raise funds, featuring one song from Dream Walk, one from her earlier album A Drop Of Water and two versions of her song 'Hope'.

Matsuri Productions

John Perloff and Tsuyoshi Suzuki set up Matsuri (Japanese for ritual or ceremony) in November 1994 since when it has become one of the most innovative and respected labels in its field. The latter's intention was to introduce more people to psychedelic techno (what the media termed 'Goa' trance) when it was more of an underground scene. They kicked off with Prana's Scarab EP the title track of which appeared on the first album release, Prana's 'Cyclone' and over the next few years they brought out EPs by Manmademan, Doof and Transwave among others. A number of compilations, notably The Truth Of Communication, Abstract Phaze and Resonance Mood established Matsuri as a leader in the psy-trance field producing quality tunes from a range of respected names from around the world as well as one-off collaborations. By 1997 the label was turning towards a psychedelic sound that embraced genres such as techno, breakbeat, drum 'n' bass and electronica as well as trance, a move heralded by the excellent compilations Let It Rip and Sympathy In Chaos. Let It Rip combined some elements of four-on-the-floor trance with more varied funky ideas including breakbeats and slap bass which, blended with the most crazy noises and textures, produced fresh exciting psychedelic sounds, less turgid than much riff-based psy-trance. Sympathy In Chaos presented a more chilled set. In 1998 EPs from Digitalis (Soma Jumkies) and Sandman (Nostradamus), and albums from Quirk (Machina Electra & Fornax Chemica) and the Australian Ju Ju Space Jazz (Ju Ju Space Jazz) confirmed Matsuri's broadminded, truly experimental approach. The label's sound together with their distinctive artwork, developed by Mark Neal in London and Organix in Tokyo, illustrates Tsuyoshi's philosophy which espouses artistic expression applied with the latest technology.

Matt Bianco

This UK jazz/pop group was formed in 1984 by ex-Blue Rondo A La Turk members Mark Reilly (b. 20 February 1960, High Wycombe, Buckinghamshire, England; lead vocals) and Daniel White (b. 26 August 1959, High Wycombe, Hertfordshire, England; keyboards), with Basia (b. Basha Trzetrzelewska, 30 September 1959, Jaworzno, Galica, Poland; vocals). They emerged in the latter part of the UK jazz/pop scene in the early 80s, inhabitated by other acts such as Sade and Animal Nightlife. Signed to the WEA Records distributed YZ label, they achieved a run of hits with the breezy, samba-laced 'Get Out Of Your Lazy Bed' (1984), 'Sneaking Out The Back Door'/'Matt's Moods' (1984), 'Half A Minute (1984) and a cover of Georgie Fame's 'Yeh Yeh' (1985). The initial employment of various session musicians was abandoned in favour of a full-time group, taking on Mark Fisher (who had connections to the group in the capacity of songwriter), as keyboard player, plus Kito Poncioni (b. Rio, Brazil; bass). Basia left in 1986 to forge her own solo career and was replaced by Jenni Evans. Daniel White also left around this time. Basia and White recorded Time And Tide together and, because of White's contractual problems the album, and various singles from it, came out as Basia solo releases. By now Matt Bianco was, in pop terms, unfashionable; yet Reilly's fascination, and adeptness with fusing Latin rhythms to pop, gave the group another UK hit in 1988 with the number 11 single, 'Don't Blame It On That Girl'. Increasingly driven to cater for a select audience, the group has continued to produce specialized, quality pop music.

Mattea, Kathy

b. 21 June 1959, Cross Lane, West Virginia, USA. During her teens, Mattea began playing with her guitar at church functions and, when she attended university, she joined a bluegrass group, Pennsboro. She decided to go with the bandleader to Nashville and, among several jobs, she worked as a tour guide at the Country Music Hall Of Fame. Despite the competition, her vocal talents were appreciated and she was soon recording demos, jingles and commercials. In 1982, she became part of Bobby Goldsboro's roadshow. She signed with Mercury and worked with Don Williams' producer, Allen Reynolds. Her first single, 'Street Talk', made the US country charts, and then, after some minor successes, her version of Nanci Griffith's 'Love At The Five And Dime' reached number 3. She topped the US country charts with 'Goin' Gone', written by the delightfully eccentric Fred Koller, and had further chart-toppers with '18 Wheels And A Dozen Roses', 'Life As We Knew It', 'Come From The Heart' and 'Burnin' Old Memories'. Mattea is married to Jon Vezner, who won awards for writing the best country song of the year with Mattea's 'Where've You Been', written about his grandparents' love. Her 1991 album, Time Passes By, includes her version of 'From A Distance' which she recorded in Scotland with her friend, folk-singer Dougie MacLean. Her song, 'Leaving West Virginia', is used by the West Virginia Department of Tourism. Mattea overcame persistent throat problems to record Lonesome Standard Time in 1992. Since then she has become part of the new wave of contemporary country females currently leading the way. The compilation Ready For The Storm testifies to the quality and consistency of her work. Love Travels leaned more towards pop, with half the album recorded in New York.

Matthews Southern Comfort

Formed in 1969 by former Fairport Convention singer/guitarist Iain Matthews, the group comprised Mark Griffiths (guitar), Carl Barnwell (guitar), Gordon Huntley (pedal steel guitar), Andy Leigh (bass) and Ray Duffy (drums). After signing to EMI Records, they recorded their self-titled debut album in late 1969. Country-tinged rather than folk, it nevertheless displayed Matthews' songwriting talents. In the summer of 1970, their next album, Second Spring reached the UK Top 40 and was followed by a winter chart-topper, 'Woodstock'. The single had been written by Joni Mitchell as a tribute to the famous festival that she had been unable to attend. Already issued as a single in a hard-rocking vein by Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young, it was a surprise UK number 1 for Matthews Southern Comfort. Unfortunately, success was followed by friction within the group and, two months later, Matthews announced his intention to pursue a solo career. One more album by the group followed, after which they truncated their name to Southern Comfort. After two further albums, they disbanded in the summer of 1972.

Matthews, Al

b. Brooklyn, New York, USA. An all-round entertainer, Matthews began singing in New York street groups before progressing to the folk scene. He was a member of bands who supported artists including Bob Dylan, Tom Paxton and Peter, Paul And Mary, before moving to France where as a leading member of Petit Conservatoire de Chanson, he became a familiar voice on radio and television. Between 1965 and 1971, he served in Vietnam becoming the first black to be promoted to sergeant while still in the field. He returned to Europe and became successful on the English folk scene, and he later was signed by CBS Records. A UK Top 20 hit followed with 'Fool'. It also reached the Top 10 in 15 European countries. Although he continued to record, Matthews never matched his initial chart entry. In 1979, he became the first black disc jockey on BBC Radio 1. Throughout the 80s he turned his career entirely towards acting, starring in movies including Aliens, Superman 3 and Yanks.

Matthews, Dave

b. 6 June 1911, Chagrin Falls, Ohio, USA. As a young man Matthews studied music in Oklahoma and Chicago. He became proficient on alto and tenor saxophones and also developed skills as an arranger. Caught up in the swing era, he played (mostly alto) with Ben Pollack, Jimmy Dorsey and Benny Goodman. In 1939 he left Goodman to go with Harry James who had formed a new band. Matthews contributed some fine swinging charts for the band and over the next few years continued to write for and also play with (now mostly on tenor) bands led by Hal McIntyre, Woody Herman, Stan Kenton and Charlie Barnet. With the latter, his admiration for the stylings of Duke Ellington were allowed to go unfettered. From time to time he led his own bands but it was as an arranger that he became best known during the 50s. Skilled though he was as a player, and with original thoughts on the occasions when he performed solos, Matthews was usually content to remain an anonymous sideman in the bands in which he played and which he helped to achieve popularity through his writing. (This artist should not be confused with the similarly named pianist, arranger and bandleader active in New York in the mid-70s.)

Matthews, Dave, Band

b. *c.*1967, South Africa. Dave Matthews moved to New York from his native country when he was just two years old. When his father died he moved back to Johannesburg with his mother, where he finished high school. He finally settled back in Charlottesville, and assembled his self-titled, multiracial band in the late 80s. These musicians forged a vibrant, individual sound from elements that included violin, saxophone and piano as well as the more traditional guitar, bass and drums. This eclectic mix significantly complemented Matthews' own expanded world view. Together they built a formidable reputation on the back of a punishing touring schedule, which helped their self-produced and financed debut, Remember Two Things, sell over 100,000 copies. In its wake the group were afforded the luxury of picking from the majors. Eventually choosing RCA Records (who offered the most malleable contract), their major label debut, Under The Table And Dreaming, produced by Steve Lillywhite, entered the Billboard charts in 1994 at number 34, and has since sold over four million copies in the USA. Because of the record's continued success, the band were faced with the problem of having new material written to perform at gigs and yet having an album that was still selling strongly. They wisely issued Crash, to satisfy demand for a new product and it immediately went to number 2 in the US chart, confirming their arrival as one of the most successful acts of the 90s. Before These Crowded Street, which debuted in the US chart at number 1, showed little sign of any creative progress, indicating that the band have become victims of their own astonishing success.

Matthews, Eric

b. 12 January 1969, Compton, California, USA. Trumpeter, composer, vocalist and former student of classical music at college in San Francisco. A former member of Cardinal with Australian Richard Davies, Matthews delivered a highly acclaimed debut solo album of inspired songs showing influences of the Beach Boys and Colin Blunstone. Matthews' breathy vocals, however, more specifically owed a debt to the Beatles. The trumpet intro of his debut single 'Fanfare' is uncannily similar to 'Penny Lane', and the other tracks on the album show a mature melodic gift. Matthews' album subsequently appeared on many rock critics' best of the year lists. The follow-up album came with a free 7-inch single, the sublime 'My Morning Parade', and was another collection of beautifully arranged orchestral pop songs that earned Matthews further comparisons to Brian Wilson's Pet Sounds-era work with the Beach Boys.

Matthews, George

b. 23 September 1912, Dominica, West Indies, d. 28 June 1982. Matthews settled in New York with his family while he was still a small child. He studied music formally and began playing trombone professionally in the late 20s. In the early 30s he played and recorded with Tiny Bradshaw, then moved on through the bands of Willie Bryant and Louis Armstrong, fetching up in Chick Webb's band in 1938. He remained with the band after Webb's death, when it was led nominally by Ella Fitzgerald. In the 40s he was briefly with Lucky Millinder before joining Count Basie for a four-year stint. In 1950 he joined Erksine Hawkins, then played in a variety of bands both in jazz and on its fringes. A section man at heart, in his early years Matthews played with a rough-hewn sound, ripping into blues-inflected solos with great delight.

Matthews, Iain

b. Ian Matthews McDonald, 16 June 1946, Scunthorpe, Lincolnshire, England. Matthews sang with small-time Lincolnshire bands, the Classics, the Rebels and the Imps, before moving to London in 1966, as one of the vocalists in a British surfing band Pyramid, who recorded a few tracks for Deram Records. To supplement his income, Iain worked in a shoe shop in London's famous Carnaby Street. He learned of a vacancy for a vocalist in Fairport Convention, which he joined in 1967 before they had recorded (and before Sandy Denny joined them). He appeared on the group's first single 'If I Had A Ribbon Bow', released on Track and produced by Joe Boyd, and on their debut album on Polydor. Fairport then moved to Island Records in 1968, and Matthews appeared on their early breakthrough album, What We Did On Our Holidays, but left the group during the recording of mid-1969's Unhalfbricking, because it had become obvious to him that the group's new-found traditional folk rock direction would involve him less than its previous contemporary 'underground' work.

Matthews (who had changed his surname to avoid confusion with saxophonist Ian McDonald of King Crimson) then signed with starmakers Howard And Blaikley, who had been involved in the success story of Dave Dee, Dozy, Beaky, Mick And Tich. After making a solo album Matthews Southern Comfort, for MCA in 1970, a group, also called Matthews Southern Comfort, was formed around him, and released two more country rock albums, Second Spring and Later That Same Year. The group also topped the UK singles chart with their version of Joni Mitchell's 'Woodstock'. By 1971, Matthews had left the band, which continued with little success as Southern Comfort. Matthews, meanwhile, signed a solo recording contract with Vertigo, releasing two excellent but underrated solo albums, If You Saw Through My Eyes and Tigers Will Survive, both featuring many of his ex-colleagues from Fairport, before forming Plainsong, an ambitious quartet that included Andy Roberts (ex-Liverpool Scene), Dave Richards and Bob Ronga. Matthews was still obligated to make another album for Vertigo, but was unwilling to commit Plainsong to the label. As a result, he was given a small budget to make a contractual commitment album, Journeys From Gospel Oak, which Vertigo did not release but instead sold to Mooncrest, a label with which the album's producer Sandy Robertson was connected. Originally released in 1974, it became one of the earliest compact disc releases to feature Matthews' post-Fairport work. Plainsong then signed with Elektra, and released the magnificent In Search Of Amelia Earhart in 1972, before Bob Ronga left the band. During the recording of a second album (still unreleased, but supposedly titled Plainsong III, referring to the membership of the band rather than a third album), Matthews and Richards apparently fell out. To continue would have been difficult, and Matthews accepted an invitation to work with ex-Monkee Michael Nesmith in Los Angeles. An excellent solo album (organized and encouraged by Nesmith), Valley Hi, was followed by Some Days You Eat The Bear, which included the Tom Waits song, 'Ol' 55', which Matthews recorded a month earlier than label-mates the Eagles. He then signed with CBS for Go For Broke and Hit And Run, which were neither commercially successful nor artistically satisfactory. By 1978, Matthews was again 'available for hire', at which point Rockburgh (which was owned by Sandy Robertson) offered to re-sign him. The first fruit of this reunion was Stealing Home, on which the backing musicians included Bryn Haworth and Phil Palmer on guitar, and Pete Wingfield on piano. Robertson licensed the album for North America to a small Canadian label, Mushroom, which had been financed by the discovery of the group Heart. 'Shake It' was excerpted as a US single and reached the Top 10, but the founder and owner of Mushroom died suddenly, and the company virtually collapsed. A follow-up by Matthews, Siamese Friends, was already contracted to Mushroom, but swiftly vanished with little trace in the UK.

In 1980 came a third album for Rockfield, A Spot Of Interference, which was an ill-judged attempt to climb aboard the new wave. This also disappeared, and later that same year came Discreet Repeat, a reasonably selected double album 'Best Of' featuring post-Southern Comfort material, but this marked the parting of the waves between Matthews and Robertson. The former formed an unlikely band called Hi-Fi in Seattle, where he lived with ex-Pavlov's Dog vocalist David Surkamp. Two more contrasting vocal styles than those of Surkamp and Matthews could hardly be imagined, but the group made a live mini-album, Demonstration Records, in 1982, and followed it with a full-length studio album, Moods For The Mallards - both were released in the UK on the small independent label, Butt Records.

In 1983, Matthews signed with Polydor in Germany for a new album, Shook, which surprisingly remains unreleased in Britain, and more importantly from the artistic point of view, the USA. Matthews threw in the towel and took a job as an A&R man for Island Music in Los Angeles, but was made redundant in 1985. An appearance at the 1986 Fairport Convention Cropredy Festival in Oxfordshire convinced Matthews that he should return to singing, even though he had just ended a period of unemployment by starting to work for the noted new age label, Windham Hill. After a frustrating year during which it became clear that Matthews and the label were creatively at odds, Matthews left, but only after recording a vocal album for the predominantly instrumental label, Walking A Changing Line released in 1988, on which he interpreted a number of songs written by Jules Shear (ex-Funky Kings and Jules And The Polar Bears). While this was his best album to date according to Matthews, it sold little better than anything since Stealing Home.

In 1989, Matthews relocated to Austin, Texas, where he linked up with Mark Hallman, a guitarist and producer who had worked on 'Changing Line'. A cassette-only album by the duo, Iain Matthews Live, was made for sale at gigs, and Matthews signed in 1990 with US independent label Gold Castle, to which several comparative veterans, including Joan Baez and Karla Bonoff, were also contracted. Pure And Crooked was released in 1990, and later that same year, Matthews reunited with his Plainsong-era colleague, Andy Roberts, for a very popular appearance at the Cambridge Folk Festival. By 1992, Gold Castle had gone out of business, leaving Matthews, an exceptional vocalist with excellent taste in both self-composed material and especially in cover versions, once again without a recording contract. In 1993 Matthews and Roberts released Dark Side Of The Room under the Plainsong moniker, which was funded by a German record-maker and supporter.

b. 11 March 1907, London, England, d. 19 August 1981, Pinner, Middlesex, England. A member of a large and poor family, Matthews became a professional dancer at the age of 10. After a few years in the chorus of several shows in London's West End, she achieved recognition with a series of ingenue roles and some bit parts in films. After appearing in stage production such as André Charlot's Revue Of 1926, Earl Carroll's Vanities Of 1926*, Jordan, This Year Of Grace, Wake Up And Dream (London and New York), Hold My Hand, and Sally Who?, by the early 30s she had become one of London's most popular stars. At the height of her career, in such shows as the 1930 London production of Ever Green, with a score by Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, Matthews was the epitome of the English musical comedy star: her delicate build and translucent beauty fully matched songs such as that show's ethereal 'Dancing On The Ceiling'. Her film work also grew, and she made several British movies in which she shone effortlessly. Despite an appearance in the 1934 film version of her stage hit, slightly retitled as Evergreen - in which she introduced 'Over My Shoulder', one of 'identity songs - few of Matthews' film musicals were worthy of her talent. They included Out Of The Blue, Waltzes From Vienna, First A Girl, It's Love Again, Head Over Heels, Gangway, and Sailing Along (1938). An outstanding dancer, the variable quality of her films militated against her continuing for long and by the 40s, her career was all but over. Her last appearance on a London stage in this part of her career was in the 1942 production of Wild Rose. After many years away from the public eye, spent mostly in Australia, she returned to the screen in 1958 as the mother in Tom Thumb, and in 1963 took over the title role in the daily BBC radio serial Mrs Dale's Diary. In the 70s she was seen on the London stage in The Water Babies and Lady Windemere's Fan, and also appeared on television in the series Edward And Mrs. Simpson. Her one-woman show Miss Jessie Matthews In Concert, which was produced in Los Angeles in 1979, won the US Drama Critics Award. In 1993/94, when the Adelphi Theatre in London was being lavishly restored under the supervision of its co-owner, the celebrated composer and producer Andrew Lloyd Webber - a great admirer of Jessie Matthews, one of the bars in the theatre was named in her honour.

Matthews, Julie

b. Yorkshire, England. Matthews first rose to prominence as a member of the Albion Band, and through her growth as a solo singer-songwriter she has continued to collaborate to excellent effect with that most English of folk groups. Proficient on both guitar and keyboards, she is also a member of the acclaimed roots group Daphne's Flight, and in 1996 released her debut solo album. She began playing guitar at the age of nine before teaching herself piano. She recorded her first songs while still at school, thanks to a teacher whose husband worked for BBC Radio Sheffield. When Matthews left school she immediately gained a publishing deal, though she was forced to subsist for several years as a nightclub and hotel pianist, working in locations throughout Europe. When the chance arose, she played her own songs at folk festivals, often alongside her duet partner Pat Shaw. While singing at the Feet First Festival in Derbyshire she was seen by Ashley Hutchings, who invited her to join the Albion Band. Although her compositions came to dominate that outfit, Matthews also concentrated on outside projects, and in 1993 released an album of duets, Lies & Alibis, on Fat Cat Records with Shaw. This critically-acclaimed release was nominated in the 'rising star' category of the Great British Country Music Awards and led to an opening slot for Mary-Chapin Carpenter on her 1994 UK tour. When Shaw resumed her teaching career, Matthews embarked on a new songwriting partnership with Chris While of the Albion Band. Their songs have proved both popular and profitable, with 'Young Man Cut Down In His Prime' sung by Barbara Dickson and 'Love Me Or Not' by Frances Black. They also released a CD together in 1994, entitled Blue Moon On The Rise. Her solo debut, Such Is Life, featured the controversial 'Jewel In The Crown', which Fairport Convention used as the title-track of their 1995 album.

Matthewson, Ron

b. Rognuald Andrew Matthewson, 19 February 1944, Lerwick, Shetland Isles, Scotland. Matthewson began playing piano at the age of three, but switched to bass at 16. The first band he played with was a local quartet in which he was teamed with a violinist, pianist and an accordionist playing reels and old-time dances. His first jazz enthusiasm was for trad stars Acker Bilk and Chris Barber, and his first engagements with a well-known band were with the Clyde Valley Stompers, with whom he moved to London in 1962. After a spell back in the Shetlands working for the Herring Industry Board, he returned to London to work with Alex Welsh in 1964. He began to work in a modern jazz context with John Stevens, then returned to Welsh's band for a while before spending time with John Cox, Tubby Hayes, the Kenny Clarke/Francy Boland Big Band, Philly Joe Jones, Phil Woods' European Rhythm Machine, Gordon Beck's Gyroscope, Stan Sulzmann, Kenny Wheeler and a long spell with Ronnie Scott's Quintet. There was also a duo with bassist Ron Rubin.

Mattôya, Yumi

b. Yumi Arai, 29 January 1954, Tokyo, Japan. As the daughter of a rich draper who could afford to give her private lessons in music, Yumi developed into a female singer-songwriter, debuting in 1972 with 'Henji Wa Iranai' ('I Don't Want Any Reply'). Her fifth single, 'Anohi Ni Kaeritai' ('I Want To Go Back To That Day'), topped the Japan singles chart in 1975, after she married, taking the name Mattôya. The sense of airy urbanity that has characterized her lyrics and music, as well as the way they were performed, contributed towards turning what had usually been called 'folk' - a derivation of the kind of music earlier developed by Bob Dylan - into 'new music', a field that would later overwhelm kayôkyoku, formerly the most common style of popular song in Japan. The eclectic music of Mattôya, who is fondly called Yûmin, has been especially popular among female listeners.

Matumbi

Nowadays largely remembered for being home to Dennis Bovell's first musical adventures, Matumbi should nevertheless be considered in their own right as a leading voice in the UK's 70s reggae scene. Formed in south London in 1972 by Tex Dixon (vocals), the latter assembled a nucleus that comprised Euton Jones (drums), Errol Pottinger (guitar), Eaton 'Jah' Blake (bass), Bevin Fagan and Nicholas Bailey (vocals), alongside the aforementioned Bovell (guitar). They took their name from the African word for 'rebirth', and in the customary manner of early UK reggae bands, first found employment backing visiting Jamaican musicians. After signing to Trojan Records, early singles included 'Brother Louie' and 'Wipe Them Out', but it was the subsequent singles, 'After Tonight' and 'Man In Me', that brought them major commercial recognition. The latter was the biggest-selling UK reggae single of 1976. However, success almost immediately brought internal friction, exacerbated by Trojan's attitude. They were concerned over individual members' involvement in outside projects, rather than concentrating solely on establishing the band as a top name. An injunction was finally served, with the result that Bailey and Dixon quit, the former, who went on to solo 'pop' successes with Nick Straker, being replaced by Webster Johnson (keyboards). Pottinger had already been replaced by Glaister Fagan, while Jah 'Bunny' Donaldson joined in 1976 in place of Euton Jones. The remaining members moved on to a contract with EMI subsidiary Harvest, bolstering their profile by joining Ian Dury And The Blockheads on tour. Seven Seals was an effective long-playing debut, but it was the follow-up, Point Of View, that garnered most plaudits. The title track, a mix of reggae, soul and Glen Miller, reached the Top 40, and for a time it seemed Matumbi might occupy the commercial high ground to which many UK reggae bands had aspired. It was not to be, however; a further album followed but popular taste had bypassed Matumbi, and the members resumed their solo projects. Donaldson joined the Cimarons, and Fagan and Blake came to be known as the Squad, experiencing some chart success as such. Bovell pursued his own idiosyncratic vision, working both inside and outside of the reggae medium.

Mau Mau

Based in Turin, Italy, Mau Mau's name derives from a local dialect saying denoting a vagabond or street tramp (the UK punk band of similar name, Mau Maus, used its more conventional political meaning). The group began in 1990 as a trio featuring two native Italians and a Cameroonian, with a musical dynamic close in style to that popularised by Les Negresses Vertes. By the mid-90s they had expanded to become a septet, led by founder vocalist and guitarist Luca Morini. His colleagues are Fabio Barovero (accordion) and Nsonhi Tate (djembe), the other founder members, plus newcomers Davide Rossi (violin), Davide Graziano (percussion), Andrea Ceccon (trumpet) and Valerio Corzani (tea chest bass). Cameroonian Tate has been resident in Italy for 10 years and also performs with fellow ex-patriates in a separate group, and has also recorded a series of albums of traditional African music. Ceccon similarly plays with two other groups, a Genovian mariachi group and a vocal band known as Voci Atroci. The original intention of Mau Mau was to play small, informal venues (the first performances by emergent Italian bands are invariably conducted in squats), and so they shunned electrical instrumentation in favour of acoustic instruments such as the guitar, accordion and African drum (djembe). They established their reputation by playing prolifically throughout Italy at Centri Sociale (social centres). At the beginning of 1992 they recorded their debut mini-album, one side of which was acoustic, the other featuring samplers and drum machines. By 1992 they were beginning to earn a strong profile in the Italian music press, and the group were signed to Vox Pop Records, who licensed the album internationally to EMI Records. The improved finances allowed the group to record at Real World Studios in England, and launch international tours, including one date in Jerusalem. As their name implies, many of their songs celebrate the rights of migrants and travellers to move areas in order to secure work and improve their situation, championing the underdog in a manner similar to the UK's Levellers.

Maughan, Susan

b. 1 July 1942, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Tyne And Wear, England. A popular and vivacious singing star in the UK during the 60s, Susan Maughan began her singing career in 1958 as a member of a popular midland band led by Ronnie Hancock. Their 1961 demonstration disc alerted the Philips label to her talent, and a year in the Ray Ellington Quartet ran concurrently with a nascent recording career, which began with the timely 'Mama Do The Twist'. Maughan enjoyed chart success when the effervescent 'Bobby's Girl' reached the UK Top 3 in 1962, but although 'Hand A Handkerchief To Helen' and 'She's New To You' (both 1963) were minor hits, she was unable to repeat this early triumph. Maughan nonetheless continued to record, and albums featuring a full orchestra (Swingin' Susan) or a jazzband (Hey Look Me Over) showed her versatility. In 1965, along with a host of other pop stars such as Billy J. Kramer, the Animals, Peter and Gordon, Matt Monro, and Herman's Hermits, she appeared in the 'mock concert' film Pop Gear, which was hosted by Jimmy Savile. Nearly 30 years later, in 1992, Susan Maughan joined another survivor from those far off days, Jess Conrad, in the UK tour of The Golden Sounds Of The Sixties.

Maupin, Bennie

b. 29 August 1940, Detroit, Michigan, USA. Maupin played saxophone in high school before studying music at the Detroit Institute for Music and Art. He came to New York, in 1963 making his living from commercial music while playing with saxophonists Marion Brown and Pharoah Sanders. In 1966, he played with Roy Haynes and in 1968 joined the Horace Silver Quintet. By 1969, drummer Jack DeJohnette had introduced him to Miles Davis who made his bass clarinet improvisations an integral part of Bitches Brew. He went on to play with pianists Chick Corea and Andrew Hill before joining Herbie Hancock's sextet in 1970. He played with the band which recorded the influential Headhunters, and continued with Hancock when the sextet became the funk band. He settled in Los Angeles where he has worked ever since.

Mauriat, Paul

b. 1925, France. A conductor, arranger and composer, descended from generations of classical musicians, Mauriat began to study music at the age of four, and continued his studies at the Conservatoire in Paris when his family moved there in 1935. His initial ambition to become classical pianist gave way to an interest in popular music and jazz. When he was 17, Mauriet formed his own orchestra and, for several years, toured concert halls and theatres in Europe. His big break came when he began arranging and conducting for recordings by Charles Aznavour, a relationship which endured, and led to him working with other French artists. In the 60s his distinctive, melodic, arrangements on his own instrumental albums with a contemporary beat, gained him a substantial following. In 1962, under the pseudonym Del Roma, Mauriat co-wrote 'Chariot', which, sung in French, became a big Continental hit for Petula Clark. In the following year, with an alternative lyric by Norman Gimbel and Arthur Altman, the song was re-titled 'I Will Follow Him', and was taken to the top of the US chart by Little Peggy March. Mauriat's own success in America was sparked off in 1968, when his enormous international hit version of 'L'Amour Est Bleu' ('Love Is Blue'), Luxembourg's entry in the 1963 Eurovision Song contest, spent five weeks in the number 1 spot. He repeated the feat with Blooming Hits, a collection of 60s favourites, including Eurovision winner 'Puppet On A String' and John Lennon/Paul McCartney's 'Penny Lane', which is reputed to have sold well over two million copies. This all led to major television appearances and tours throughout the USA and Mexico, Latin America, Japan, and many other countries. Mauriat had two other minor US hit singles, 'Love In Every Room' and 'Chitty Chitty Bang Bang', but his albums continued to sell in large quantities.

Maurice And Mac

(Maurice McAlister and Green McLauren). One of the long lost soul duos of the 60s, Chicago-based Maurice And Mac's output for the Checker label between 1967 and 1970 contained both upbeat and slow-tempo examples of gospel-based soul as good as anything by better-known duos such as Sam And Dave or James And Bobby Purify. Maurice And Mac were founder-members of the fine Chicago R&B/early soul group, the Radiants, who began recording for Chess in 1962. The group itself stemmed from the young people's choir of the local Greater Harvest Baptist Church. Both McAlister and McLauren sang with the choir, but Maurice McAlister first came to notice in gospel circles as early as 1956 when he formed the Golden

Gospeltones quartet together with Leonard Caston. Caston, the son of famous bluesman Leonard 'Baby Doo' Caston, and a long-time associate of Willie Dixon, later wrote and produced for ex-Temptation Eddie Kendricks at Motown, and formed Caston And Majors. In 1960, Caston and McAlister joined a doo-wop group, the Radiants, with McAlister on lead, plus Wallace Sampson, Jerome Brooks, Elzie Butler and Charles Washington, later replaced by Green 'Mac' McLauren. In 1962, they signed for Chess, and recorded 'One Day I'll Show You', which combined doo-wop with soul, and 'Father Knows Best'. On the strength of their first secular recording, they appeared at Harlem's Apollo, but were still members of the Greater Harvest Baptist Church choir, who recorded a gospel album and two singles for the Sharp label in the same year (1962), with McAlister taking lead on 'Steal Away' and McLauren on 'What A Difference In My Life'. By early 1963 they had left the Church, and a further nine Radiants Chess singles, chiefly featuring McAlister on lead, appeared up until 1966. Green McLauren enlisted in the US armed forces in late 1963, and was replaced for a time by Frank McCollum, before the Radiants continued to work as a trio. The group had some sucess in 1965 with 'Voice Your Choice' and 'It Ain't No Big Thing', both of which made the R&B and Hot 100 Charts. There were two further hits in 1967/8, but with a different Radiants line-up. Maurice McAlister left to go solo in mid-1966, and made one recording for Chess later that year ('Baby Hang On'), but after it flopped, he teamed up with the newly demobbed Green 'Mac' McLauren. As Maurice And Mac they were allotted to the Checker label and sent south to Rick Hall's 'Fame' studio in Muscle Shoals. The initial recordings contrasted the duo's churchy vocals with the sympathetic sound of Fame's premier soul-loving rhythm section. They included the ultra-deep 'Lean On Me' and 'You're The One', the slightly pacier but still deep cover version of Ben E. King's 'So Much Love', the lilting mid-tempo of 'Why Don't You Try Me', the driving soul of 'Try Me', and an excellent version of the much-covered 'You Left The Water Running', first recorded by Billy Young. They were followed by other great cuts such as the rhythmic 'Love Power', which was re-released on the superb 1984 Japanese P-Vine album, containing all of Maurice And Mac's best material. Poor promotion by Chess/Checker affected those and subsequent issues, such as their Chicago sides, which included the deep crie de coeur 'What Am I Gonna Do', 'Lay It On Me', 'Oh What A Time', 'Baby You're The One' (arguably the duo's most beautiful deep ballad), 'Kick My Cat, I'll Beat Your Dog', and the very churchy, slow-building deepie, 'But You Know I Love You'. The latter single was released on Checker in 1970, and in the following year the Chess label reissued 'Lay It On Me' coupled with 'You Can't Say I Didn't Try'. McAlister's high pitched tenor and McLauren's deeper, gospel-style baritone combined on one last single for Brown Sugar in 1972 ('Use That Good Thing'/'Ain't No Harm To Moan'), before the pair split up. McLauren disappeared completely from the music scene, and McAlister spent some time making television jingles, before working as an appliance-repairman in Chicago. In the 80s, he was reported to be playing a few local clubs with a newly formed band.

Maurizio

Berlin DJ and recording artist who runs the Basic Channel label. He is famed for placing only a large M on the centre of his records, then pressing them in America so they are presumed to have emerged from Detroit. Cuts like 'Domina' (1994) highlighted his experimental but accessible craft, while collaborations with genuine native Detroit man Carl Craig ('Mind') proffered further cult status.

Mauro, Turk

b. Mauro Turso, 11 June 1944, New York City, New York, USA. Mauro began playing clarinet while still in school and was largely self-taught. By the age of 15, he was sufficiently proficient both on this instrument and the alto saxophone to obtain his union card. In 1960, he joined Red Allen's quartet, playing at clubs in Queens and Harlem. After graduation, Mauro decided to become a professional musician and around this time switched to tenor saxophone. Not surprisingly for a musician of his generation, he was attracted to jazz-rock, though between these gigs he would sit in at the Half Note club with jazzmen such as Zoot Sims, Al Cohn, Nat Pierce and Dave Frishberg. In the late 60s, he played at holiday resorts in upstate New York - originally as a sideman - but later leading a danceband playing Latin American music. Subsequently, he led a small group at the Half Note, then worked with Richie Cole before becoming resident at Sonny's Place, a club on Long Island where he remained for more than a dozen years. He found time, however, for appearances with the bands of Dizzy Gillespie, Buddy Rich and others. Of greater long-term significance were some appearances with Billy Mitchell, for whom he had to play baritone saxophone. Gradually, over the years, Mauro became steadily more proficient on the baritone until it eventually became his principal instrument. In the early 80s, he worked solo in New York and also toured Europe, both as a single performer and with Cole. He appeared in Paris and London and also at various festivals. Back in New York in the mid-80s, he had to take work outside of music to help make ends meet; but, in 1987, he decided to return to Europe and settle in Paris. Although of an age to have come under more modern influences, Mauro's chief musical mentors are great mainstreamers such as tenor saxophonists Ben Webster, Coleman Hawkins, Lester Young, Stan Getz and Dexter Gordon - though he also acknowledges debts to Sims, Cohn, Mitchell, Gene Ammons and others with whom he has worked. As such a list indicates Mauro still thinks of himself as a tenor player. Perhaps this is what has allowed him to develop an interesting and highly distinctive baritone style. His playing is forceful, fiery and committed, and his occasional vocal excursions show a tough, no-nonsense approach and considerable rhythmic vitality.

Mavericks

This country-rock band was formed in Miami, Florida, a region better known for its dance and rock music than any fondness for country. Lead singer and songwriter Raul Malo (vocals, guitar) was born in Miami of Cuban descent. His parents' record collection was full of American roots music and rockabilly, and led to his discovery of Johnny Cash, Elvis Presley and Bill Haley. He also grew particularly fond of the dramatic intensity of the ballads sung by Roy Orbison and Patsy Cline. However, nobody at his school shared his taste, until he came across Robert Reynolds (bass). Reynolds was also a fan of older bands, and had previously been unable to find anyone to share his fascination with old country records. His best friend was Paul Deakin (drums), who had played with local progressive rock bands for several years. They played the Florida rock circuit, having realized that the few country venues wanted covers bands only. They used the opportunity to set about building a set of strong original songs, steering away from too close an approximation of their heroes because, as Reynolds conceded, 'it's one thing to touch the nerve of older styles, it's another to let yourself be engulfed by them'. The band independently released a 13-song album in 1990. This eventually reached the ears of the Nashville record companies, and MCA Records flew them to the country music capital for a showcase. Legend has it that the company decided to make their offer before the end of the band's sound-check. Their debut for MCA, From Hell To Paradise, was a minor success, but it was with What A Crying Shame that they made their breakthrough when it sold over half a million copies. It was produced by Don Cook (who had also worked with Mark Collie and Brooks & Dunn) and it included cover versions such as Bruce Springsteen's 'All That Heaven Will Allow' and Jesse Winchester's 'O What A Thrill'. The group then added a second guitarist, Nick Kane. The Mavericks are not to be confused with the UK band of the same name formed in the 90s by the former Sex Pistols bass player, Glenn Matlock. In 1995 the Mavericks won a CMA award and released the excellent Music For All Occasions. The band's bold genre-hopping was in further evidence on 1998's Trampoline, with a four-piece horn section bolstering the songs. They also gained a surprise crossover UK Top 10 hit with the single 'Dance The Night Away'.

Max And The Broadway Metal Choir

'The Devil gave us Death Metal and God gave us Max': this was the publicity that introduced Maximilan Gelt - a Jewish delicatessen owner from Miami, Florida, in his late 40s. Max was asked by a friend to visit London to see a band, the Broadway Metal Choir, featuring Jan Cyrka (guitar), Kevin Riddles (bass, ex-Angelwitch; Tytan), Kevin Fitzpatrick (keyboards) and Andy Beirne (drums). As they lacked a vocalist, Max offered his services, but after six weeks of touring he broke his leg and returned to Miami. He later returned to London armed with new songs, and together with FM and guitarist Steve Boltz, and backing singers Suzie O'List and Gillian O'Donovan, he recorded 10 tracks of what can only be described as Led Zeppelin fronted by Mel Brooks. The press loved the story but not the finished product and, dejected, Max returned home to face a different type of music. His wife, Shirly, had launched divorce proceedings, claiming his recent obsession with heavy metal music had driven him 'insane'. The rest of the band split, returning to session work, or, in Cyrka's case, to minor guitar 'hero' status.

Max Frost And The Troopers

Max Frost And The Troopers were a fictional group created for the 1968 hippie-exploitation film, Wild In The Streets. Frost was actor Christopher Jones (more interestingly, the Troopers' drummer was a young Richard Pryor). Their role in the film was to gain voting rights for 14-year-olds. Frost is elected president of the USA at the film's climax, and he orders everyone over 30 into concentration camps, where they are forced to take LSD. His band's songs were equally absurd semi-political rants ('14 Or Fight') save for one bona fide folk-punk classic, 'Shape Of Things To Come'. Written by Barry Mann and Cynthia Weil, the song was actually recorded by a group called the 13th Power. However, it was released under the name Max Frost And The Troopers to capitalize on the film's success with the youth market, and eventually reached number 22 in the USA.

● ALBUMS: Wild In The Streets (1968)★★★.

Max Webster

This Toronto, Canada-based group was formed by guitarist Kim Mitchell, who had worked with various bands over the years, including MC5 and Alice Cooper. Mitchell was very much the central figure owing to his onstage showmanship and guitar ability. He was backed by Dave Myles on bass, Terry Watkinson on keyboards and Gerry McCracken on drums. The UK proved a hard nut to crack, but they tried hard in 1979 with two albums and a single, 'Paradise Skies', which featured guest appearances from fellow Canadians Rush. For some reason, British audiences turned their back on the band and most of the tour was cancelled. 1980's Universal Juveniles brought back some dignity but their career and songwriting was on the wane, and by 1982 they had split up. Mitchell continued as a solo artist.

Max-A-Million

Based in Chicago, Illinois, USA, the dance act Max-A-Million consist of A'Lisa B., Duran Estevez and Tommye. They are one of several bands to emerge from the city's 20 Fingers collective, which has also spawned Gillette and Roula. Their debut album, Take Your Time (Do It Right), took its title from the inclusion of a cover of the S.O.S. Band song, which was updated with deep bass/hip hop production values. An ill-advised version of Marvin Gaye's 'Sexual Healing' was also included, alongside originals such as 'Fat Boy' and 'Hangin' On'. With accomplished songwriting and a marriage of traditional soul construction with hip hop and urban R&B stylings, Take Your Time attracted widespread praise within the black music community.

b. 6 June 1904, Kansas City, Missouri, USA. Maxey played drums with various territory bands in the 20s, including that led by Bennie Moten. In 1923 he joined a band in St. Louis, the Syncopators, which went to New York for an appearance at the Cotton Club. The band changed its name to the Missourians and then became the Cab Calloway Orchestra. In 1938, Maxey was obliged through poor health to leave the band, retiring from full-time playing. Maxey was a skilful, dynamic player, creating an urgent, rhythmic attack on many of the recordings he made with the orchestra during his career. His drumming on some of the Missourians' records, and later with Calloway, are especially impressive and have greater fluidity than the work of his better-known and technically superior successor with Calloway, Cozy Cole. Had circumstances not driven him from music at the height of the swing era Maxey might well have made a more lasting mark.

Maximum Joy

Like other Y label acts Shriekback and Pigbag, Bristol-based Maximum Joy explored a refreshing brand of independent funk that was in vogue in the UK during the early 80s. Formed by ex-Pop Group members John Waddington (guitar, vocals) and Dan Katsis (bass), the band was swelled by Janine Rainforth (vocals, clarinet, violin), Tony Wrafter (saxophone, flute, trumpet) and Charles Llewellyn (drums, percussion). The group's first two singles, 'Stretch' (1981) and 'White And Green Place' (1982), featured in the UK Independent Top 20. Later in the year, 'In The Air' preceded what was to be Maximum Joy's sole album, by which time Katsis had been replaced by Kevin Evans. Produced by Adrian Sherwood, this encapsulated Maximum Joy's occasionally quirky blend of percussion and funky instrumental flair, characterized by distinctive horns. With the departure of Wrafter later in the year, Dan Katsis rejoined for saxophone duties. After a healthy rendition of Timmy Thomas's 70s soul classic, 'Why Can't We Live Together', Maximum Joy disbanded.

Maxinquaye - Tricky

Tricky made a low-key entrance onto the music scene as a guest vocalist on Massive Attack's 1991 classic Blue Lines. There was little indication that he would resurface four years later with an album as powerfully unsettling as Maxinquaye. Accompanied by the sweet-voiced Martine, Tricky takes the listener on a tour of the dark corridors of his mind, dealing exclusively in paranoia and obsession. The striking rhythms of stand-out tracks 'Overcome', 'Hell Is Round The Corner' and 'Suffocated Love' merge seamlessly with a hard-rock reworking of Public Enemy's 'Black Steel In The Hour Of Chaos' and the warped soul of 'Abbaon Fat Tracks' to create one of the 90s' most compellingly atmospheric records.

Maxwell

b. 1974, Brooklyn, New York, USA. Half West Indian, half Puerto Rican soul singer Maxwell had to suffer the ignominy of his record company sitting on his debut album for a year, ignoring his traditional soul style in favour of the hip-hop-influenced singers dominating the R&B charts. Finally released in April 1996, Maxwell's Urban Hang Suite was a concept album about monogamy that eschewed male braggadocio to explore old-fashioned, romantic love. Featuring a collaboration with Leon Ware, co-writer of Marvin Gaye's I Want You, the album proved to be an unexpected critical and commercial success. Maxwell was voted Best R&B Artist by Rolling Stone magazine, and Urban Hang Suite was nominated for a Grammy. At the 11th Annual Soul Train Awards in March 1997, Maxwell won both Best Male R&B/Soul Album and Single (for 'Ascension'), and Best R&B/Soul or Rap New Artist. The same month, Urban Hang Suite went platinum. Maxwell collaborated with guitarist Stuart Matthewman again for the 1998 follow-up, Embrya, slowing the pace down to create a wonderfully sensual and dreamlike record.

Maxwell, Jimmy

b. 9 January 1917, Stockton, California, USA. After extensive studies in all aspects of brass playing, Maxwell established himself as a major-league trumpet player. Among his first professional engagements was one in the early 30s with Gil Evans, who was raised in Maxwell's home town. By the end of the decade he had played in the trumpet sections of several leading dance and swing bands, including those of Jimmy Dorsey and Benny Goodman. His stint with Goodman lasted from 1939-43, when he joined CBS. During the 30 years this job lasted he found time to work with Woody Herman, Count Basie, Gerry Mulligan, Duke Ellington, Quincy Jones and others. Among his Ellington engagements was an informal appearance on stage at the famous Newport concert in 1956, when Willie Cook was late returning to the stand. In the 70s he played with the New York Jazz Repertory Company under Dick Hyman, with Lionel Hampton's All-Star Big Band and with Chuck Israels's National Jazz Ensemble. After Ellington's death, he also played in the band which continued for a while under Mercer Ellington. Since the late 70s, Maxwell has employed his early training and subsequent breadth of playing experience to good effect as a teacher. He has also published a trumpet manual.

May Blitz

Formed in 1969, May Blitz comprised guitarist James Black and drummer Tony Newman, both veterans of Sounds Incorporated and the Jeff Beck Group. They were subsequently joined by Reid Hudson (bass). May Blitz showcased the trio's forceful sound and, in particular, Black's aggressive style, but it failed to emulate the success of stablemates Uriah Heep and Black Sabbath. The Second Of May was less satisfying and the group split up soon after its release. Newman subsequently joined Three Man Army and Boxer.

May, Billy

b. 10 November 1916, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, USA. May's first impact on the big band scene came in 1938, when he joined the trumpet section of the Charlie Barnet Band and, most notably, began contributing arrangements. Among his best-known charts was Barnet's hit record of the old Ray Noble song 'Cherokee'. In 1939, he joined Glenn Miller, bringing a previously absent vitality to the trumpet section and more fine arrangements. In 1942, he also wrote arrangements for Les Brown and Alvino Rey. The early 40s found him in great demand in radio and film studios, but he continued to write for popular bands of the day. When Capitol Records was formed, with a policy that called for the highest standards of musicianship, May was employed to write and direct for many major singing stars, including Frank Sinatra, Peggy Lee and Nat 'King' Cole. During the 50s, May also began making big band albums, on which he gave full rein to his highly distinctive arranging style. Although adept at all kinds of big band music, he had a particular fondness for voicing the reed section in thirds, creating a so-called 'slurping' saxophone sound. Among his band's successes were arrangements of 'All Of Me', 'Lulu's Back In Town', 'Charmaine', 'When My Sugar Walks Down The Street', 'Lean Baby' and 'Fat Man Boogie' (the last two also his own compositions). His recording of the movie theme 'The Man With The Golden Arm' made the UK Top 10 in 1956. For his studio band, May called upon such reliable sidemen as Murray McEachern, Ted Nash and Alvin Stoller. He also wrote for television, lending musical quality to series such as Naked City and to the occasional commercial. He was also musical director on the recording dates on which swing era music was recreated for a series of albums issued by Time-Life.

May, Brian

b. 19 July 1947, Twickenham, Middlesex, England. Best known as the flamboyant and highly original guitarist in Queen, May has also recorded in his own right. In the summer of 1983 he teamed up with Eddie Van Halen (guitar), REO Speedwagon's Alan Gratzer (drums), Fred Mandel (keybords) and Phil Chen (bass) for a supergroup session, which was released under the title Star Fleet Project. He subsequently produced the spoof heavy metal group Bad News, as well as the recording of 'Anyone Can Fall In Love' by his actress partner Anita Dobson. He also worked with Steve Hackett, completed a solo album and, in 1991, wrote and recorded the score for a production of Shakespeare's Macbeth. Following a commission for an advertisement by the Ford Motor Company in 1991, May released a further single, 'Driven By You', which became a sizeable hit at the end of 1991. He was also one of the prime movers behind the Freddie Mercury AIDS Benefit in 1992, and he has sustained himself admirably as a solo artist in the wake of the latter's death. Another World featured the late Cozy Powell on drums but, like its predecessor, was an anonymous MOR collection.

May, Derrick

b. *c.*1964, USA. If one name crops up again and again in discussions of techno, it is that of Derrick 'Mayday' May. Alongside Juan Atkins, Carl Craig and Kevin Saunderson, May is regarded as one of the kings of the Detroit sound. Inspired by Yello and Kraftwerk, he began to make electronic music with Atkins and Saunderson while studying with them at Belleville High, Detroit. Recording either as Mayday or Rhythim Is Rhythim (occasionally in conjunction with Carl Craig) and generally on his own Transmat Records label, he went on to carve out a new vein in dance music that synthesized the advances of the electro movement with the more challenging end of the house movement - a music that defined 'techno'. Early cuts such as 'Nude Photo' and 'The Dance', both on Transmat, were inspirational to many. However, it was the release of 'Strings Of Life' in 1987, which, with its wide appeal to the house music fans of the late 80s, simultaneously brought May his deserved acclaim and Detroit techno to European clubgoers. However, May has never proved prolific in his recordings. After the success of 'Strings Of Life' he largely fled the dance scene, aside from a remix of Yello's 'The Race'. Rhythim Is Rhythim did not follow up 'Strings Of Life' until 1990, when 'The Beginning' was released. May went on to cut three disappointing tracks on System 7's debut album, before Network released Innovator: Soundtrack For The Tenth Planet in 1991, a six-track EP that comprised some of May's definitive moments to date. In the same year May was responsible for what Carl Craig has called the finest remix ever, Sueño Latino's 'Sueño Latino', itself a reworking of Manuel Goettschring's epic 'E2-M4'. It was followed in 1992 by Relics, a double album of Transmat's finest moments, heavily featuring Rhythim Is Rhythim, which coincided with a re-release of 'Strings Of Life' on the Belgium label Buzz, this time in a drumless version reminiscent of May's 'Sueño Latino' remix. More recently, Transmat has been revived following its signing to Sony, resulting in the long-awaited release of Rhythim Is Rhythim's 1991 recordings, 'Kao-tic Harmony' and 'Icon', and the Japanese (and subsequent American) release of a comprehensive Derrick May retrospective, Innovator, which contains all May's work for the Transmat label including remixes and tracks released for the first time.

May, Tina

b. England. Encouraged by her piano-playing parents, who 'just assumed she would be musical', she began training as a singer at 16, first thinking of a career as a classical singer. Then, to use her expression, jazz chose her. She developed as a fine performing singer, became popular on the UK club circuit and also began teaching. A skilled improviser, she builds her repertoire with a careful eye for melody, lyric and mood. For most of the 90s she customarily worked with a piano-bass-drums trio which usually includes her husband Clark Tracey and David Newton.

b. 29 November 1933, Macclesfield, Cheshire, England. The career of England's premier white blues exponent and father of British blues has now spanned five decades and much of that time has been unintentionally spent acting as a musical catalyst. Mayall formed his first band in 1955 while at college, and as the Powerhouse Four the group worked mostly locally. Soon afterwards, Mayall enlisted for National Service. He then became a commercial artist and finally moved to London to form his Blues Syndicate, the forerunner to his legendary Bluesbreakers. Along with Alexis Korner, Cyril Davies and Graham Bond, Mayall pioneered British R&B. The astonishing number of musicians who have passed through his bands reads like a who's who. Even more remarkable is the number of names who have gone on to eclipse Mayall with either their own bands or as members of highly successful groups. Pete Frame, author of Rock Family Trees, has produced a detailed Mayall specimen, which is recommended. His roster of musicians included John McVie, Hughie Flint, Mick Fleetwood, Roger Dean, Davey Graham, Eric Clapton, Jack Bruce, Aynsley Dunbar, Peter Green, Dick Heckstall-Smith, Keef Hartley, Mick Taylor, Henry Lowther, Tony Reeves, Chris Mercer, Jon Hiseman, Steve Thompson, Colin Allen, Jon Mark, Johnny Almond, Harvey Mandel, Larry Taylor, and Don 'Sugercane' Harris.

His 1965 debut, John Mayall Plays John Mayall, was a live album which, although badly recorded, captured the tremendous atmosphere of an R&B club. His first single, 'Crawling Up A Hill', is contained on this set and it features Mayall's thin voice attempting to compete with an exciting, distorted harmonica and Hammond organ. Bluesbreakers With Eric Clapton is now a classic, and is highly recommended to all students of white blues. Clapton enabled his boss to reach a wider audience, as the crowds filled the clubs to catch a glimpse of the guitar hero. A Hard Road featured some clean and sparing guitar from Peter Green, while Crusade offers a brassier, fuller sound. The Blues Alone showed a more relaxed style, and allowed Mayall to demonstrate his musical dexterity. Diary Of A Band Vol. 1 and Vol. 2 were released during 1968 and capture their live sound from the previous year; both feature excellent drumming from Keef Hartley, in addition to Mick Taylor on guitar. Bare Wires, arguably Mayall's finest work, shows a strong jazz leaning, with the addition of Jon Hiseman on drums and the experienced brass section of Lowther, Mercer and Heckstall-Smith. The album was an introspective journey and contained Mayall's most competent lyrics, notably the beautifully hymn-like 'I Know Now'. The similarly packaged Blues From Laurel Canyon (Mayall often produced his own artwork) was another strong album which was recorded in Los Angeles, where Mayall lived. This marked the end of the Bluesbreakers name and, following the departure of Mick Taylor to the Rolling Stones, Mayall pioneered a drumless acoustic band featuring Jon Mark on acoustic guitar, Johnny Almond on tenor saxophone and flute, and Stephen Thompson on string bass. The subsequent live album, The Turning Point, proved to be his biggest-selling album and almost reached the UK Top 10. Notable tracks are the furious 'Room To Move', with Mayall's finest harmonica solo, and 'Thoughts About Roxanne' with some exquisite saxophone from Almond. The same line-up plus Larry Taylor produced Empty Rooms, which was more refined and less exciting. The band that recorded USA Union consisted of Americans Harvey Mandel, 'Sugercane' Harris and Larry Taylor. It gave Mayall yet another success, although he struggled lyrically. Following the double reunion Back To The Roots, Mayall's work lost its bite, and over the next few years his output was of poor quality. The halcyon days of name stars in his band had passed and Mayall suffered record company apathy. His last album to chart was New Year, New Band, New Company in 1975, featuring for the first time a female vocalist, Dee McKinnie, and future Fleetwood Mac guitarist Rick Vito. Following a run of albums that had little or no exposure, Mayall stopped recording, playing only infrequently close to his base in California. He toured Europe in 1988 to small but wildly enthusiastic audiences. That same year he signed to Island Records and released Chicago Line. Renewed activity and interest occurred in 1990 following the release of his finest album in many years, A Sense Of Place. Mayall was interviewed during a short visit to Britain in 1992 and sounded positive, happy and unaffected by years in the commercial doldrums. Wake Up Call changed everything once more. Released in 1993, the album is one of his finest ever, and became his biggest-selling disc for over two decades. The 90s have so far been kind to Mayall; the birth of another child in 1995, and a solid new release, Spinning Coin. The replacement for the departing Coco Montoya is yet another highly talented guitarist (a fortune with which Mayall is clearly blessed) - Buddy Whittington is the latest, continuing a tradition that started with Clapton and Green. As the sole survivor from the four 60s UK R&B/blues catalysts, Mayall has played the blues for so long without any deviation that it is hard to think of any other white artist to compare. He has outlived his contemporaries from the early days (Korner, Bond and Davis), and recent reappraisal has put the man back at the top of a genre that he can justifiably claim to have furthered more than any other Englishman.

Maye, Arthur Lee

b. 11 December 1934, Tuscaloosa, Alabama, USA. Maye had one of the most engaging lead voices on the west coast doo-wop scene and he put it to terrific use on many fine songs, usually recorded with his group the Crowns. His career was a unique dual one - as a baseball player (as Lee Maye) and as a singer - and he was only able to record and tour during the off-seasons. In 1954, the same year he joined a Milwaukee Braves' minor league club, he formed a trio in Los Angeles with bass Johnny Coleman and bass/baritone Richard Berry. They made some records for the Flair label that were released as being by the Rams and the '5' Hearts. At the end of the 1954 baseball season, Maye organized the Crowns, which other than himself included Berry and Coleman, with new members Charles Colbert (tenor), Johnny Morris (tenor) and Joe Moore (baritone). Occasionally, bass Randy Jones would substitute for Berry. The records they made for the RPM label were excellent, notably the classic 'Truly' and 'Love Me Always', but the Crowns only managed local success with them. After the 1955 baseball season, Maye And The Crowns then joined the Specialty label, recording one of their finest songs, 'Gloria'. No hits resulted and at the end of the 1956 baseball season, Maye began an association with Johnny Otis, touring with him in a vocal ensemble called the Jayos. They recorded for Otis's Dig label without much success, but Maye also brought the Crowns to the label, recording several tracks, most notably 'This Is The Night For Love' (1956). Maye And The Crowns made further tracks in 1957 for Flip and in 1959 for Cash. In 1959 Maye was brought up from the minor leagues to play major league baseball for the Milwaukee Braves. This served to end Maye's career with the Crowns, but as Maye played for various major league teams through 1971, each off-season allowed him time to record some solo numbers. He made his last record for Dave Antrell's Antrell label in 1985.

Mayer, Nathaniel

b. 10 February 1944, Detroit, Michigan, USA. Mayer was a typical transitional artist, whose vocal intensity evoked both the doo-wop past and the emerging soul music. This style was magnificently realized in his lone hit, 'Village Of Love', which went to number 16 R&B and number 22 pop in 1962. It was recorded for a small Detroit company, Fortune, and proved to be the biggest hit the label ever had (after being leased to United Artists). Mayer started singing in high school, and recorded his first record, the wonderful 'My Last Dance With You', with a pick-up group, the Fabulous Twilights. It failed to attract buyers, but the follow-up, 'Village Of Love', also recorded with the group, gave him a national audience. Later releases, notably 'Leave Me Alone' (1962) and 'Going Back To The Village Of Love' (1964), could not return Mayer to the charts, probably because the primitive production of Fortune's records made them sound uncompetitive next to the increasingly sophisticated recording methods employed by rival firms. Mayer never recorded again after his stay at Fortune Records.

Mayerl, Billy

b. William Joseph Mayerl, 31 May 1902, London, England, d. March 1959, England. The most famous British pianist of the 20s and 30s, who was also a celebrated composer of piano pieces and light orchestral works. Mayerl gave the first British performance of George Gershwin's 'Rhapsody In Blue' in 1925, and thereafter he was recognised as the leading exponent of syncopated piano playing in Britain. His influence on amateur pianists was so great that he was persuaded to form The Billy Mayerl School which supplied piano transcriptions by post, together with guidance on improving one's playing. Mayerl's best-known piece was 'Marigold' (1926) which he adopted as his signature tune. It was one of the earliest of a great string of piano successes, such as 'Autumn Crocus' (1932), 'Four Aces Suite' (1933), 'Bats In The Belfry' (1935), 'Aquarium Suite' (1937), 'From A Spanish Lattice' (1938), 'Parade Of The Sandwich Board Men' (1938) and 'Fireside Fusiliers' (1943). Mayerl's light orchestral works included 'Minuet By Candlelight' (1956), 'Waltz For A Lonely Heart' (1956), 'Busybody' (1956). During the 80s Mayerl's work was re-discovered by several leading pianists on CD release - Eric Parkin (Chandos), Susan Tomes (Virgin) and Peter Jacobs (Aspen). Eric Parkin has also recorded Mayerl's transcriptions of 20s and 30s popular songs for Priory Records (UK).

Mayes, Pete

b. 1938, Houston, Texas, USA. Mayes was given his first guitar by an uncle after experimenting with string and wire. According to his own story, by the age of 14 he had already worked with Lester Williams, although he did not meet T-Bone Walker, the doyen of all Texas guitarists, until 1954. During the next 20 years, he often worked with Walker and made the acquaintance of many other bluesmen who would later come to fame, most prominently Joe Hughes. Mayes' first recordings were made in support of Junior Parker and, in 1978, he entered a studio again while in Paris on tour with Bill Doggett. In the meantime, he had three singles issued under his own name on the Ovide label. In 1984, he appeared in the film Battle Of The Guitars, the soundtrack of which was issued on album. His own debut album was recorded in Houston during 1984-85 for the Dutch company Double Trouble.

Mayfield, Curtis

b. 3 June 1942, Chicago, Illinois, USA. As songwriter and vocalist with the Impressions, Mayfield established an early reputation as one of soul music's most intuitive talents. In the decade between 1961 and 1971, he penned a succession of exemplary singles for his group, including 'Gypsy Woman' (1961), 'It's All Right' (1963), 'People Get Ready' (1965), 'We're A Winner' (1968) and 'Choice Of Colours' (1969), the subjects of which ranged from simple, tender love songs to broadsides demanding social and political equality. Years later Bob Marley lifted lines from the anthemic 'People Get Ready' to populate his own opus, 'One Love'. Two independent record companies, Windy C and Curtom, emphasized Mayfield's statesman-like role within black music, while his continued support for other artists - as composer, producer or session guitarist - enhanced a virtually peerless reputation. Jerry Butler, Major Lance, Gene Chandler and Walter Jackson are among the many Chicago-based singers benefiting from Mayfield's involvement. Having parted company with the Impressions in 1970, the singer began his solo career with '(Don't Worry) If There's A Hell Below We're All Going To Go', a suitably astringent protest song. The following year Mayfield enjoyed his biggest UK success when 'Move On Up' reached number 12, a compulsive dance song that surprisingly did not chart in the USA. There, the artist's commercial ascendancy was maintained with 'Freddie's Dead' (US R&B number 2/number 4 pop hit) and the theme from 'Superfly' (1972), a 'blaxploitation' film that he also scored. Both singles and the attendant album achieved gold status, inspiring further excursions into motion picture soundtracks, including Claudine, A Piece Of The Action, Sparkle and Short Eyes, the last of which featured Mayfield in an acting role. However, although the singer continued to prove popular, he failed to sustain this high profile, and subsequent work, including his production of Aretha Franklin's 1978 album, Almighty Fire, gained respect rather than commercial approbation. In 1981, he joined the Boardwalk label, for which he recorded Honesty, his strongest album since the halcyon days of the early 70s. Sadly, the death of the label's managing director Neil Bogart left an insurmountable gap, and Mayfield's career was then blighted by music industry indifference. The singer nonetheless remained a highly popular live attraction, particularly in Britain where '(Celebrate) The Day After You', a collaboration with the Blow Monkeys, became a minor hit. In 1990, a freak accident, in which part of a public address rig collapsed on top of him during a concert, left Mayfield permanently paralyzed from the neck down. The effects, both personal and professional, proved costly, but not completely devastating in terms of his musical career . The material for BBC Radio 1 Live In Concert was gathered from the gig at London's Town And Country Club during Mayfield's 1990 European tour. In 1993 Warner Brothers released A Tribute To Curtis Mayfield featuring various artists, including Lenny Kravitz, Whitney Houston, Aretha Franklin, Bruce Springsteen, Rod Stewart, Elton John and Steve Winwood, which was an excellent tribute to the Mayfield songbook. Winwood contributed the album's highlight, a sparkling version of 'It's All Right!' A year later Charly Records reissued the majority of Mayfield's 70s albums on CD as well as several compilations. The icing on the cake came in 1996 when Rhino Records collated the best package in a three-CD box set. At the end of 1996 a new album, New World Order, was released to excellent reviews. The album stands up to repeated listening, but some particularly enthusiastic critics may have been swayed by their affection for such an important man, together with sympathy for his tragic disability. During the recording Mayfield had to lie on his back in order to give some gravitational power to his singing. His contribution to soul music has been immense; whatever the limitations of his disability, his voice, however, remains perfect and unique.

Mayfield, Percy

b. 12 August 1920, Minden, Louisiana, USA, d. 11 August 1984. A gifted performer, Percy Mayfield's first success came in 1950 with 'Please Send Me Someone To Love' on the Specialty label. A massive US R&B hit, it reportedly sold well in excess of one million copies and became an enduring composition through its many cover versions. Further chart entries, 'Lost Love' (1951) and 'Big Question' (1952), confirmed Mayfield's status, but it was nine years before he secured another best-seller with 'River's Invitation'. 'Hit The Road Jack' enhanced Mayfield's standing as a gifted composer when it became an international hit for Ray Charles.

This influential musician recorded several of Mayfield's songs; Mayfield, in turn, pursued his career on Charles's Tangerine outlet. The talented artist remained an active performer throughout the 70s and early 80s, and his later work appeared on several different labels. His death from a heart attack in 1984 robbed R&B of one of its most individual voices. Johnny Adams released an excellent tribute album in 1989 titled Walking On A Tightrope.

Mayhem

Formed in Norway by Euronymous (real name Oystien Aarseth), who was a young fan of the Satanic black metal played by bands such as Bathory and Venom, Mayhem made their first impact with the 1984 demo Pure Fucking Armageddon, which is regarded in underground circles as a classic of extreme metal. The black metal genre was losing popularity, however, along with the leather-and-chains imagery and Satanic lyrics that were its trademark. Rather than follow heavy metal fashion and adopt the hardcore punk or death metal genres that were becoming popular, Euronymous opted to preserve purist black metal. In order to do so, he opened a record shop in Oslo named Helvete (Norwegian for 'Hell') and founded the Deathlike Silence label, both dedicated solely to black metal. In 1987 he released Deathcrush, Mayhem's official debut, which featured six songs in 17 and a half minutes of frenzied angst. Then, in 1991, the band's vocalist shot himself (by way of black irony, he went under the stage-name 'Dead'). Rather than halting Euronymous's black metal crusade, the tragedy appeared to have redoubled his faith. Mayhem inspired a number of Scandinavian bands to readopt the musical style and imagery of black metal during the early 90s, while Euronymous became an increasingly melodramatic and popular spokesman on the extreme metal underground, with his philosophies of cold hate and spite. A series of Norwegian church burnings in early 1993 were linked to the Black Metal Circle, a cult-like group centred around Euronymous's black metal crusade and dominated by members of bands such as Emperor, Dark Throne and Burzum, all signed to Deathlike Silence. Euronymous revelled in the international publicity. However, on 10 August 1993, he was found, stabbed 25 times, outside his Oslo apartment. Two weeks later, Varg Vikernes (better known by his stage-name of Count Grishnakh) of the band Burzum was arrested for the murder, and convicted the following year. Vikernes had been Euronymous's right-hand man, and it is not apparent whether the murder was committed because of a financial dispute over record royalties, over a woman, or because of darker doctrinal differences between the two. What does seem clear is that Euronymous was consumed by the vivid world of pain and hate he had himself created, while the black metal revival he inspired continues unabated. In 1994 De Mysteriis Dom Sathanas, Mayhem's last recording, was released posthumously. Sinisterly, it featured Grishnakh on bass guitar.

Maynard, Ken

b. 21 July 1895, Vevay, Indiana, USA, d. 23 March 1973, California, USA. Maynard, who could play guitar, banjo and fiddle, worked in rodeos until he broke into films as a stuntman. He became the first motion picture singing cowboy, when he sang in The Wagon Master in 1929. In this part-talkie (it was 40% silent), he sang 'The Lone Star Trail' and 'The Cowboy's Lament'. He recorded eight cowboy songs for Columbia in 1930. A cowboy song was used for a film title for the first time in Maynard's 1930 film The Strawberry Roan. His career as a singing cowboy ended with the film debut of Gene Autry in Maynard's 1934 film, In Old Sante Fe. His singing, which has been described as rustic, was not comparable to that of Autry, Roy Rogers or later singing cowboys, but he continued for some years as a noted cowboy actor. (His brother Kermit Maynard [1898-1971] was also a cowboy actor.)

b. 5 October 1953, Sheffield, England. Mayor taught himself guitar at the age of 10, and in his teens he added the whistle, mandolin and fiddle. He met Hilary James (b. 4 August 1952, Stoke On Trent, England; vocals/guitar/double bass), at the Reading University folk club, and began to work with her in various line-ups. After university, they formed Spredthick, a folk/blues/ragtime band. The group underwent many personnel changes at different times and featured musicians such as Andrew Mathewson (b. 1952; guitar) who was with them from 1973-76, Peter Jagger (b. 1954; guitar) from 1976-77, Andy McGhee (banjo) during 1978, and Phil Fentimen (b. 10 August 1954; guitar/double bass), from 1977-80. Spredthick released one album then disbanded.

Aside from working as a duo, Simon and Hilary make occasional outings fronting Slim Panatella And The Mellow Virginians, a bluegrass/western swing trio. For this they recruit the services of Andy Baum (b. 1953; vocals/guitar/mandolin). With Hilary, Simon has written topical songs for television programmes such as Newsnight, Kilroy, and children's songs for Play School, Listening Corner, and Green Claws. As a duo, they have played throughout Europe, and Singapore. Simon has also presented The Song Tree on BBC Radio 5 for six years. He has done much to revive interest in the much under-rated mandolin, via his mandolin album project, encompassing classical, bnaroque, and folk themes. The project featured Simon's own compositions alongside non-folk elements by composers including Vivaldi, Berlioz, and Handel. This series of albums received excellent reviews and a great deal of airplay.

Mays, Bill

b. William Allen Mays, 5 February 1944, Sacramento, California, USA. Mays studied piano formally for a number of years into his twenties. In the early 70s his proficiency and growing reputation was such that he was hired as accompanist to Sarah Vaughan and then Al Jarreau. In the mid-70s he led his own small band and also worked with many other leaders including Bobby Shew and Bud Shank. In the 80s he was with Shelly Manne, Benny Golson, Mark Murphy and Red Mitchell. Later in the decade, he played with Tom Harrell in his own group, with Murphy, and also with Gerry Mulligan. A strikingly talented pianist with the special skills needed by an accompanist allied to those of an imaginative soloist (by no means a common combination), Mays also composes and arranges much of the material he plays.

Mays, Curley

b. 26 November 1938, Maxie, Louisiana, USA. A nephew of Gatemouth Brown and a cousin of Phillip Walker, Mays was raised in Beaumont, Texas, where he taught himself to play guitar when he was in his early teens. He worked on the streets and in the clubs around Beaumont until his break came in 1959 when he began a three-year stint with the Etta James Revue. Over the years, he also worked with the Five Royales, James Brown and Tina Turner. After a period spent working in hotel bands in Las Vegas, Mays formed his own band in the mid-60s and returned to Texas, where he appeared regularly in clubs from San Antonio to Houston. Veteran Texas bluesman Zuzu Bollin remembered him as a consummate showman blessed with the ability to play the guitar with his bare feet!

Mays, Lyle

b. 27 November 1953, Wausaukie, Wisconsin, USA. The varied keyboard talents of Mays are regularly heard together with Pat Metheny. They met in 1975, and have since forged a musical partnership built upon respect and admiration for each other's work. While it is Metheny who rightly takes the limelight, the integral backbone of the music has much to do with May's fluid keyboard playing, thoughtful arrangements and superb composing ability. In addition to sharing the credits on As Falls Wichita, So Falls Wichita Falls, he has played on virtually all of Metheny's impressive catalogue. He contributed to Eberhard Weber's Later That Evening, and has so far released two critically acclaimed solo albums. The 'Alaskan Suite' in particular, shows the vast range of capabilities from this dedicated and unassuming musician.

Maytals

Arguably, the Maytals were only ever kept from becoming 'international' artists by the runaway success of Bob Marley And The Wailers in the 70s. Rumour has it that Island Records' Chris Blackwell originally only signed the Wailers because he was unable to obtain the Maytals' signatures at the time. Frederick 'Toots' Hibbert, Nathaniel 'Jerry' Matthias/McCarthy and Henry 'Raleigh' Gordon came together in 1962 at the start of Jamaica's ska craze and began recording for Coxsone Dodd's Studio One organization. With a hoarse vocal from Hibbert, backed by an impenetrable wall of sound, it was not long before the Maytals were the number one vocal group in Jamaica - a position they maintained throughout the 60s and on into the 70s.

They left Dodd after some massive hits and moved on to his ex-employee and arch-rival Prince Buster, celebrating with the vengeful 'Broadway Jungle'/'Dog War'. However, their stay with Buster was also short-lived and the Maytals moved on again to Byron Lee's BMN stable. In 1965 they made Jamaican musical history when both sides of 'Daddy'/'It's You' topped the Jamaican charts, and in 1966 they won the prestigious Jamaican Festival Song Competition with 'Bam Bam'. Many of their releases in these early days were credited to 'The Vikings' or 'The Flames', because, as Hibbert explained: 'Promoters in Jamaica called us all kinds of different names because they didn't want us to get our royalties'. The future was looking bright for the group, but Hibbert was imprisoned in late 1966 for possession of marijuana and was not released until 1968. The Maytals began work for Leslie Kong's Beverley's label, and their first release was a huge hit in Jamaica and the UK - '54-46 That's My Number' featured one of reggae's most enduring basslines as Hibbert detailed his prison experiences in song. This was the beginning of a hugely successful period for the group, both artistically and financially, and they recorded many classic records for Beverley's, including 'Do The Reggay', one of the first songs ever to use 'reggae' in the title, 'Monkey Man', which actually reached the UK charts, and 'Sweet and Dandy', which won the Festival Song Competition again for them in 1969. They also appeared in a cameo role in the hugely popular film The Harder They Come, singing one of their most popular tracks, 'Pressure Drop'.

Kong's untimely death in 1971 from a heart attack robbed them of their mentor. Many believed that their best work was recorded while at Beverley's; evidence of its popularity was found in the 2-Tone craze of the late 70s, when new bands took a large part of their repertoire from Hibbert's Beverley's songbook. The Maytals subsequently returned to Byron Lee, now the successful owner of Dynamic Sounds, a state-of-the-art recording, mastering and record pressing complex. In 1972 they won the Festival Song Competition yet again with 'Pomps and Pride'. Through their work with Dynamic they attracted the attention of Chris Blackwell and became Toots And The Maytals. For the first time in 14 years they became widely known outside of reggae circles. Their UK and US tours were sell-outs, and Island Records released what became their biggest-selling album, Reggae Got Soul, which took them into the UK album charts. They made history again in 1980 when, on 29 September, they recorded a live show at London's Hammersmith Palais, which was mastered, processed, pressed and in the shops 24 hours later. Few live excursions have been able to capture the feel and spontaneity of this album, which showcases the Maytals at their best - live without any embellishments. By this time, they had left their Jamaican audiences far behind, but their nebulous 'pop' audience soon moved on to the next big sensation. Hibbert dispensed with the services of Matthias/McCarthy and Gordon for his 1982 tour and has even experimented with non-reggae line-ups. While the Maytals continued to tour and make records in the 90s, real lasting international success always seemed to elude them.

Although this 1937 screen version retained hardly anything from the 1917 stage operetta other than the title and one of the songs, it remains one of the most accomplished and enjoyable films of its kind. Noel Langley's story, which is told in flashback, concerns the famous opera star Marcia Mornay (Jeanette MacDonald), who puts her career before her true love, Paul Allison (Nelson Eddy), and marries Nicolai Nazaroff (John Barrymore), the dominant figure in her life. The somewhat melodramatic climax comes when Allison, having been killed by Nazaroff while in a jealous rage, materialises in spiritual form and is serenaded by a remorseful Marcia. Among a strong supporting cast were Herman Bing, Lynne Carver, Tom Brown, Sig Ruman, Billy Gilbert, Harry Davenport, Walter Kingsford, Ivan Lebedeff, and Leonid Kinskey. The lovely 'Will You Remember (Sweetheart)?' (Rida Johnson Young-Sigmund Romberg), the song that survived from the original stage show, was sung with a glorious passion by Eddy and MacDonald, a feeling they also brought to bear on 'Czaritza', which consisted of excerpts from Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, arranged by Robert Wright and George Forrest. The latter duo also wrote new lyrics to the folk song, 'Vive L'Opera', and the rest of the score - a mixture of songs and operatic excerpts, included 'Carry Me Back to Old Virginny' (James Bland), 'Love's Old Sweet Song' (James L. Molloy-G. Clifton Bingham), 'Le Regiment De Sambre Et Meuse' (Robert Planquette), and 'Ham And Eggs' (Herbert Stothart-Wright-Forrest). This lavish production, which is considered to be one of the best of Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy's eight films together, was produced by Hunt Stromberg for MGM and directed by Robert Z. Leonard. Variety reported that it grossed three and a half million dollars in US domestic theatre rentals, putting it among the most successful films of the decade.

Maytime (stage musical)

With his score for this highly popular operetta, which was based on a German production, Wie Einst In Mai, Sigmund Romberg finally stepped out of Victor Herbert's shadow, and established himself as the leading composer of these gloriously musical, sentimental sagas. Rida Johnson Young wrote the book and lyrics, and the show's role-reversal story was set in New York, where well-off Ottilie Van Zandt (Peggy Wood) is prevented by her father, Matthew Van Zandt (William Norris), from marrying her true love, Richard Wayne (Charles Purcell), because, quite frankly, he comes from 'the other side of the tracks'. They go on to each marry their respective partners, although they meet socially and affirm their love for each other. When Ottilie's husband dies, she is left destitute, and her house and all her belongings are auctioned. Richard buys the house, and many years pass before their grandchildren encounter each other, and presumably find happiness together. The grandchildren were also played by Peggy Wood and Charles Purcell. The sweeping, romantic score included 'The Road To Paradise', 'Jump Jim Crow', 'In Our Little Home Sweet Home', 'Only One Girl For Me', and 'Will You Remember?', a lovely song which achieved wider recognition. One of the other numbers, 'Dancing Will Keep You Young', had music by Romberg and a lyric by Cyrus Wood. An enormously popular show - America's biggest hit of World War I - which all the soldiers aimed to see before they departed for the conflict. Its run of 492 performances in 1917 was, for the time, astounding. The 1937 film changed the story and discarded all the songs except for 'Will You Remember?'. The song was sung superbly by Jane Powell and Vic Damone in the 1954 Sigmund Romberg bio-pic, Deep In My Heart.

Maytones

The Maytones comprised Vernon Buckley and Gladstone Grant and began recording in the late 60s with Alvin 'GG' Ranglin. In 1970 they released 'Black And White', which was considered to be the alternative reggae cut to Greyhound's successful pop hit. They also enjoyed hits in the early 70s with 'Preaching Love', 'If Loving You Was Wrong', 'Brown Girl' and 'Funny Man'. These successes were generally love songs, but with subsequent releases they recorded in a more serious vein, concentrating on a Rastafarian theme. 'Judas', 'Babylon A Fall' and 'Run Babylon' signalled the direction in which reggae was heading. Conscientious lyrics and a clarion call for black pride resulted in the duo achieving cult status. They continued releasing hits through to the mid-70s, then returned to Ranglin at the Channel One Recording Studio, securing a success with Madness, which surfaced in the UK through Burning Sounds. The group were inauspiciously overlooked by Virgin Records when the latter were signing all the major acts in Jamaica. Fellow vocal group and Virgin signing the Mighty Diamonds had previously recorded as the Diamonds. This inspired Ranglin and Clement Bushay to promote the duo as the Mighty Maytones. The release of Boat To Zion, including the title track, was a hit within the West Indian community but failed to match the success of other Rastafarian-influenced vocal groups. The duo recorded in heavy patois and this may have been the reason why they were overlooked. Their image did not portray the media idea of the typical Rastafarian, without locks or red, gold and green outfits, and they were therefore generally ignored. In 1980 Ranglin compiled a collection of the duo's work, including recordings from 1976 sessions. Bushay also compiled a Best Of, which featured tracks lifted from the two earlier releases.

Mayweather, Earring George

b. 27 September 1928, Montgomery, Alabama, USA, d. 12 February 1995, Boston, Massachusetts, USA. Like Little Sonny Willis, young George received his first harmonica as a Christmas present when he was six, along with an apple and an orange. Although he heard John Lee 'Sonny Boy' Williamson's records, he was largely a self-taught musician until he arrived in Chicago in September 1949. There he befriended Little Walter, who helped him with harp selection and how to find keys in different positions. In 1951 he linked up with his next-door neighbour, J.B. Hutto, and with Eddie 'Porkchop' Hines on percussion, the group played at weekends on Maxwell Street market. However, work was scarce, so Mayweather joined Bo Diddley and for a time alternated between both groups. He then formed a group with Eddie Taylor, refusing Walter's offer to replace him in Muddy Waters' band. He recorded with J.B. Hutto on the Chance session that produced 'Combination Boogie' and 'Pet Cream Man', and with Eddie Taylor on 'You'll Always Have A Home' and 'Don't Knock At My Door'. In the late 80s Mayweather moved to Boston where he established himself at the 1369 Jazz Club. Whup It!, recorded with the nucleus of Luther Johnson's Magic Rockers, consists almost entirely of Chicago blues standards by Howlin' Wolf, Muddy Waters, Jimmy Rogers and Little Walter, and just one original, 'Cheatin' On Me'. It represents an accurate and fitting memorial. He died of liver cancer in 1995.

Maze (60s)

Formed in Fairfield, California, USA, Maze comprised of Rick Eittrem, William Gardner, Kit Boyd and Jeff Jensen. They were one of several 'Bay Area' groups to record at Golden State Records, owned by Leo de Gar Kulka. Kulka secured a deal for Maze with New York-based MTA Records. Armageddon is a typical, late-60s album, with brooding organ work redolent of Iron Butterfly. However, the album was not a commercial success and Maze broke up when Boyd was drafted into the US Armed Services in April 1968.

● ALBUMS: Armageddon (MTA 1968)★★★.

Maze (featuring Frankie Beverly)

Frankie Beverly (b. 6 December 1946, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, USA) had an apprenticeship in several Philadelphia groups. One such unit, Frankie Beverly And The Butlers, recorded several well-received singles in the 60s, but never managed to attract more than local play. By the early 70s, however, impressed by Santana and Sly And The Family Stone, he formed a self-contained band, Raw Soul, and they moved to San Francisco where they became the house band at a local club, the Scene. Discovered by a girlfriend of Marvin Gaye, the group subsequently supported the singer in concert, and it was he who suggested they change their name in deference to their now cooler sound. The septet, which featured Wayne aka Wuane Thomas, Sam Porter, Robin Duke, Roame Lowery, McKinley Williams, Joe Provost plus Beverly, thus became Maze. Their debut album was issued in January 1977, since which time Maze have remained one of soul's most consistent live attractions. Indeed, the group sold out six consecutive nights at London's Hammersmith Odeon during their 1985 tour. However, Beverly's brand of funk/R&B has failed to achieve the wider recognition it deserves and he remains something of a cult figure.

Mazzy Star

Highly regarded duo featuring the soothing timbre of singer Hope Sandoval's textured voice and guitarist David Roback. The partners had begun working together on a projected album as Opal (under which name Roback had formerly operated). Previously, he had been a member of Paisley Underground legends the Rain Parade, and recorded the Rainy Day album with vocalists Susanna Hoffs (Bangles) and Kendra Smith. He met Sandoval while she was part of female duo Going Home. Enjoying a profitable working relationship, Roback and Sandoval adopted the name Mazzy Star for their sessions together, which eventually resulted in a critically lauded debut album. They released a comeback album on Capitol Records in 1993 after an absence that was mourned by many rock critics. Various musicians were employed, but the core of the project remained Roback and Sandoval (who would also contribute to the Jesus And Mary Chain's 'Sometimes Always' single). Contrary to expectations established by its forerunner, the resultant album included a cover version of the Stooges' 'We Will Fall'. Elsewhere, however, Roback's stinging lyrical poignancy and effortless song construction continued to hold sway. Among My Swan was a lo-fi excursion with Sandoval and Roback's latest songs sounding like a cross between the Cowboy Junkies and Neil Young.

Mbaqanga

Mbaqanga is the term used to describe the South African township music which blends traditional song sources from that continent with more modern, urban influences. The exact translation from Zulu is 'dumpling'. Its character can best be described as encompassing briskly stroked guitars (similar to reggae), prominent bass and harmonised vocals. Initially mbaqanga musicians drew from the repertoire of groups such as the Manhattan Brothers and their USA vocal R&B style. The difference was that instead of four-part harmonies, mbaqanga groups added a fifth vocal section, dividing the role of tenor singer into 'high' and 'low' parts. Joseph Makwela was the first native South African to own an imported electric bass and his influence on the sound of mbaqanga can still be detected to this day in its accent on bass rhythms. Although its roots existed long before, mbaqanga began to gain popular appeal by the early 60s. As might be expected for a musical form that refused to disavow its cultural roots, it was treated with either disdain or repression in the apartheid regime of the time. Soon the music became distinguished by 'groaning' vocal interludes, a deep-throated bellow which accentuated the sweetness of the female harmonies. Soon Lerole 'Big Voice Jack', then Simon 'Mahlathini' Nkabinde, defined the vocal style of mbaqanga referred to as mqashiyo. The biggest stars, however, were groups such as the Mahotella Queens and Soweto Stars, whose popularity was furthered by recording contracts with Gallo Records. Later, groups such as the Bhundu Boys exported the mbaqanga sound to Europe and enjoyed considerable success. Other artists, including Johnny Clegg, Sam Mangwana, the Malopoets, Ray Chipika Phiri and Sipho Mabuse, all recorded music deeply rooted in the tradition of mbaqanga - despite their varying attempts to incorporate its rhythms into new forms and styles. That versatility and willingness to adapt, in essence, remains the cornerstone of the mbaqanga ethos.

Mbarga, Nico, Prince

b. Nicholas Mbarga, 23 August 1950, Abakaliki, Nigeria, d. 24 June 1997. Vocalist and guitarist Mbarga, founder and leader of Rocafil Jazz, was one of Nigeria's few convincing highlife artists (generally speaking, the music is best performed by Ghanaians, its originators). Born of mixed Nigerian and Cameroonian parentage, he left Nigeria during the 60s civil war, basing himself in Cameroon, where he formed the Melody Orchestra. He returned home in 1971 and, two years later, fronting Rocafil, had his first hit, 'I No Go Marry My Papa', a song composed in 'panko' style (a mixture of highlife and Cameroonian makossa). In 1977, he enjoyed his - and, indeed, one of Africa's - biggest successes with 'Sweet Mother', sung in 'broken English' and so readily understandable throughout Anglophone West Africa. Hit albums followed: Simplicity, Happy Birthday and Family Movement. In 1981, Mbarga left his label, Rogers All Stars, during a dispute over foreign royalties for 'Sweet Mother' and, forming his own label, recorded the albums Tribalism and Man Pass Man. He returned to Rogers in 1985. Despite the international success of 'Sweet Mother', and a triumphant appearance at the WOMAD World Of Music Arts & Dance Festival in Britain in 1982, Mbarga kept a realistic balance between the Nigerian and Western markets. Happy to tour Europe and the USA, but not prepared to de-Africanize his recorded output in order to appeal to Western audiences. In 1983, he built Sweet Mother hotels in two eastern Nigerian cities, devoting increasing amounts of his time to their management.

Mbulu, Letta

b. 23 August 1942, Johannesburg, South Africa. Resident in the USA since 1964, vocalist Mbulu - along with fellow expatriates and musical associates Hugh Masekela, Miriam Makeba and Caiphus Semenya (her husband and producer) - first came to prominence in South Africa in 1960, as a member of the cast of the musical King Kong. On arrival in the USA, she was still under a exclusive world contract with leading South African label Gallo which, afraid of reprisals from the Pretoria authorities, declined to offer her any new recording opportunities. For three years she continued her fruitless negotiations with Gallo's New York representatives, before unilaterally severing the agreement and signing to Capitol Records. For her new label she released two albums - Letta Mbulu Sings and Letta Free Soul - before Gallo re-emerged waving (but sadly, not waiving) her contract and threatening legal action. The continuing ramifications of this situation meant that Mbulu was unable to record for a further two years, instead spending much of her time on tour with, first, Masekela and, later, Cannonball Adderley. In 1970, she returned to the studios to record Letta, followed by Naturally Letta Mbulu and, in 1974, a live album with Harry Belafonte. In 1978, newly-signed to A&M through Masekela's connections with label boss Herb Alpert, she released There's Music In The Air and, in 1980, the Semenya-produced Sound Of A Rainbow, two masterpieces of black American and South African jazz/pop fusion. In 1981, she enjoyed considerable USA and UK dance-floor success with the single 'Kilimanjaro', co-written with Semenya. She continued to be active throughout the 80s, based in the USA but frequently touring Africa, the Far East and Europe.

MC 900ft Jesus

Dallas, Texas based Mark Griffin is one of the more credible examples of white hip-hop. His pseudonym was taken from a statement made by USA 'televangelist' Oral Roberts. Roberts once reminisced about how he was wandering in the Colorado desert, distraught at being unable to raise the money to build a sanctuary, when a huge Jesus appeared in front of him to reassure him. Alongside his musical collaborator DJ Zero, Mark Griffin explores a wide variety of styles including jazz and industrial dance as well as hip-hop. The lyrics, especially on his second album, track a more personal, introspective path than many of his peers. He made his debut in 1989 with the self-titled MC 900ft Jesus With DJ Zero EP, which highlighted his distinctive vocal style, which could hardly be described as rap in conventional terms, and reflected more the spoken word narratives of the beat poets. However, he had certainly been listening to the rise of hip-hop on the East Coast, as the influence of Public Enemy testified. His debut album centred on club-orientated material, though again the interest centred on his lyrics ('The faces on the covers of all the magazines are me/Only cleverly airbrushed to look like someone else' from 'The Killer Inside Me'). Later, his single, 'The City Sleeps Tonight', caused an outcry in Baltimore, where its inflammatory lyrics coincided with an outbreak of arson. Griffin moved to Rick Rubin's American label in time for his third album, One Step Ahead Of The Spider. Its title was inspired by, 'this dream that I was standing in a field and a guy in front of me turned round and threw spiders on me. It was the first time a dream had literally woke me up in fright.' His vivid imagination was again in full bloom here, blurring reality with his sneering delivery and sparse hip-hop beats, produced by his new, eight-piece backing band.

MC Brains

b. James De Shannon Davis, *c.*1975, Cleveland, Ohio, USA. MC Brains' early career was fostered by Michael Bivins (of New Edition and Bell Biv Devoe fame), who first brought him to the attention of Motown Records. His debut album, recorded when he was only 17, introduced his catchy, unassuming blend of commercial rap, and included two singles, the minor hit 'Brainstorming', and the US Top 30 success, 'Oochie Coochie'. He has failed to follow-up his breakthrough, however, while Bivins has moved on to discovering fresh talent.

MC Breed

MC Eric Breed (b. c.1972, Flint, Michigan, USA) was originally supported by his cousin Al Breed (of DFC fame) in the early 90s, before that artist would go solo with the aid of T-Trouble E. Both Breeds would, however, remain firm friends, Eric going on to a support/advisory capacity on the latter's debut album. Under the title MC Breed And DFC, he had scored a crossover hit single (US number 66) with the debut album's 'Ain't No Future In Yo' Frontin'', a typical slice of hardnosed gangsta vanity (a theme revisited on the second set's 'Ain't To Be Fucked With', retitled 'Ain't To Be Flexed With' for single consumption). 'Ain't No Future In Yo' Frontin'' continues to enjoy a healthy half-life and has been much sampled by other rap artists. The album which bore it was produced with the aid of Bernard Terry, of Ready For The World fame. The follow-up set again saw him working with Terry and his DJ/Producer Flash Technology, its chart profile buoyed by a further three successful singles. After sessions for a third set were completed, he was invited to join George Clinton for his 'Paint The White House Black' ensemble single. When The New Breed emerged it brought a harder-edged sound, as might have been anticipated by its title. It featured guest appearances from 2Pac ('Gotta Get Mine'), Clinton (on the video to 'Tight') and D.O.C. Production was assisted by Warren G and Colin Wolfe. Long-term friend D.O.C. would also contribute a song to Breed's fourth set, entitled 'B.R. Double E. D'. Other guests included DFC and Jamal of Illegal fame on an album whose high watermark was set by the 'Teach My Kids' track.

MC Buzz B

b. Shorn Braithwaite. Eco-conscious UK rapper who allies his intelligent, highly wordy raps to a jazz/soul-funk melange which is characterised beyond anything else by its cool, restrained vibe. He debuted for Manchester independent Play Hard with the 12-inch only 'Slaphead' in May 1988, following it with 'How Sleep The Brave' and 'The Sequel' the following year. It was enough to procure a contract from Polydor Records, who released his ironically titled debut album in 1991. However, a series of singles, 'The Last Tree', 'Never Change' (delayed due to problems in obtaining clearance on a sample from Bruce Hornsby's 'That's Just The Way It Is') and 'Don't Have The Time' during that period failed to break him, as he became yet another UK hip-hop under-achiever. He made a comeback in 1993 by providing the vocal to Lionrock's 'Pocket Of Peace'.

● ALBUMS: Words Escape Me (Polydor 1991)★★★.

MC Duke

Together with his DJ Leader One, this British MC released 'The Final Conflict' in 1990, which left substantial imprints in the relatively virgin soil of UK hip-hop. Raised in east London, MC Duke made his recorded debut on Music Of Life's compilation, Hard As Hell. Later he would make his home there, releasing two relatively succesful solo albums. He picked up Hip Hop Connection magazine's 1990 award for Best British Recording Artist, and even broke the Top 75 of the UK charts with 'I'm Riffin''/'English Rasta', before the recession cut in. Despite two solid singles for the Shut Up And Dance label, his fortunes declined. Duke has gone on to produce the 90s compilation series The Royal Family, to showcase new British rap talent. In turn he set up his own label, Bluntly Speaking Vinyl, formed in conjunction with Dan Donnely (Suburban Base Records). The initial releases included a 12-inch by Phat Skillz (essentially MC Duke) and material from a new group, IQ Procedure.

● ALBUMS: Organised Rhyme (Music Of Life 1989),★★ Return Of The Dread-I (Music Of Life 1991)★★★.

b. Eric Martin, 19 August 1970, Cardiff, Wales. MC Eric, aka Me One, is of Jamaican descent, though he grew up in Wales as the youngest of twelve brothers and sisters. It was via his stint in Technotronic (notably the 'This Is Technotronic' refrain, appearing in said video with his notorious 'skyscraper' hairstyle) that he first graced television screens and stereos. He had been introduced to the band via his girlfriend, Ya Kid K. 'I was 18 and Ya Kid K was 17 when we came into Technotronic and we knew that the money wasn't good'. He has also contributed to material from artists as diverse as Madonna and Jazzy Jeff. His debut solo album, promoted by a single, 'Jealous', was an artistic success, with deceptively subtle shades to its musical spine, buoyed by piano motifs and lolloping bass. Following its release, however, he seems to have became another of rap's many yesterday men. In the meantime he had a child with Ya Kid K, one Eric Jnr.

● ALBUMS: I Beg Uno Ceasefire (Polydor 1991)★★★.

b. Jens Mueller, *c.*1971, Berlin, Germany. This renowned anti-fascist rapper and political activist currently resides in Paris, France, due to fears for his safety. He has certainly given the extreme right reason to silence him. He is behind an internationally distributed newsletter, Germany Alert, which catalogues racist incidents, an objective to which his lyrics are also tuned. This has pushed him to the top of many organisation's hate lists. Typically, the final date of his 1993 British tour at Goldsmiths College in London saw an increased police presence due to threats that skinheads would attempt to halt his performance. He has been condemned by his own government as 'an alarmist', but even the briefest perusal of Germany Alert gives a very different impression. Sadly, We Are The Majority, for all its noble intentions, remained too deeply rooted in rhetoric to secure an international audience.

● ALBUMS: We Are The Majority (Germany 1993)★★.

b. Caron Geary. This UK female ragga chat artist grew up in north London, England, on a diet of reggae,

David Essex, Marc Bolan and Kate Bush. After being expelled from sixth- form college, she worked in children's playcentres by day and in nightclubs after dark. MC Kinky met Boy George while working as a DJ at Fred's in Soho, London, and was signed to his More Protein label in 1989. Her first release was in conjunction with the E-Zee Posse - 'Everything Starts With An E' - which became an instant UK club hit and eventually, after several attempts, went high in the charts. Once mistakenly arrested by police for soliciting (she was actually window shopping) her first solo single, 'Get Over It', was released in 1991 - after which the trail runs cold.

MC Lyte

b. Lana Moorer, 11 October 1970, Queens, New York, USA, but raised in Brooklyn. The daughter of First Priority boss Nat Robinson, and sister to the Audio Two brothers, Lyte began her career in fine style with the 45 'I Cram To Understand U (Sam)', released when she was still a teenager. The story told of personal deceit in a relationship, the narrator unable to compete for her boyfriend's attentions with his new mistress - crack. It was delivered with such force that it still has few peers in terms of adult, hardcore female rap. Lyte has gone on to underscore her patent scouring wit, often referring to the out of control egos of her male counterparts, with synthesizer and funk beats coalescing beneath. Her debut album additionally sampled Ray Charles, Helen Reddy and the Four Seasons. Her songs are populated by fully realised characters, though its an unfortunate truism that they often wind up dead (via AIDS, lung cancer, violence or drugs). Despite the contributions of Grand Puba on her second album, which was musically solid, there was a lack of lyrical progression which limited its appeal. Ain't No Other included attacks on fellow rappers Roxanne Shanté ('Steady F. King') and an answer record to Apache's 'Gangsta Bitch' ('Ruffneck', which would go gold when released on single). Rap forerunner KRS-1 introduced the tracks in a pseudo ragga style. Like Queen Latifah and others before her, she has founded her own management company, Dupe The Moon Productions, which also handles Isis and Brooklyn rappers Born In Hell. Bad As I Wanna Be and the follow-up remix album featured a maturer style.

● ALBUMS: Lyte As A Rock (First Priority 1988)★★★, Eyes On This (First Priority 1989)★★★, Act Like You Know (First Priority 1991)★★★, Ain't No Other (First Priority 1993)★★★, Bad As I Wanna Be (East West 1996)★★★★, Badder Than B-fore remix album (East West 1997)★★★.

MC Mell 'O'

b. Battersea, London, England. One of the earliest members of the UK's indigenous rap clan, Mell 'O' began his career in the best traditions of hip hop by breakdancing and body-popping in the streets of Covent Garden during the early 80s. He modelled himself on Grandmaster Melle Mel, calling himself Grandmaster Mellow in tribute, eventually abbreviating it to MC Mell 'O'. These activities would be followed by improvised jam sets at the Charing Cross Centre youth project. He also cruised with sound systems like First Class and Young Lion, and reggae remains a strong component in his Cockney-delivered rhymes (he was among the first British rappers to reject the process of imitating East or West Coast American accents). Together with fellow pupils Monie Love, DJ Pogo and Sparkie D, he formed the DETT (Determination, Endeavour and Total Triumph) collective, based on the New York Native Tongues principle. Together they released a solitary record, 'Freestyle', in 1987. This underground jamming scene lasted for several years, and it was not until 1989 that he released his first records. After a well-received debut album for Republic, he swiched to Jazzie B (Soul II Soul)'s Funki Dred label. However, he fell victim to record company politicking (when Motown pulled their finanical backing for Funki Dred). A completed album, due for release in 1992, was scrapped. Worse, Jazzie B held on to his contract meaning he wasn't released until December 1993. In the meantime his only sighting was as part of Island Records' The Rebirth of Cool set, with 'Open Up Your Mind'. Freed from Funki Dred at last, he signed to the Stereo MC's' Natural Response label in 1994. He had at least spent some of the intervening period working - notably on projects with Izit and the Young Disciples. His debut release for his new home was The First Chronicles Of DETT, in the summer of 1994. The first track on the record was 'I Hear Voices', which tackled the problem of mental illness in immigrant black generations, and was another intelligent, illuminating epistle from one of the genuine talents of the British hip-hop scene.

● ALBUMS: Thoughts Released (Republic 1989)★★★.

b. Lawrence Thomas, USA. Rapper who emerged in the 90s with lyrical preoccupations including sex, money and murder (his debut album even housed one cut of that title). Other songs included the socio-political 'The Projects', but elsewhere the tasteless sexual jibes continued on 'I Eat Pussy' and 'Your Dick'.

● ALBUMS: Funky As I Wanna Be (Jive 1992)★★.

b. Lorenzo Patterson, Compton, Los Angeles, USA. Another of NWA's personnel to launch a solo career, Ren has thus far failed to share the high profile of many of his former colleagues. He opened his slate with the Kizz My Black Azz EP, the title of which was a thinly veiled reference to the actions of Vanilla Ice. For his debut album Ren joined up with a slew of producers, including Rhythm D, the Whole Click (which featured Ren's brother Juvenile) and Denmark-based crew Solid Productions. A deal with the latter was first mooted when Ren met them while they were working on the soundtrack to the CB4 film, on which they encouraged Ren to participate. However, Ren has proved unable to replicate the lyrical incisiveness of Ice Cube nor the satisfying musical stance of Dr Dre. Allusions to the wisdom of the Nation Of Islam have revealed little in the way of insight or character.

● ALBUMS: Kizz My Black Azz mini-album (Ruthless 1992),★★★ Shock Of The Hour (Ruthless 1993)★★★, Da Villain In Black (Ruthless 1996)★★★★, Ruthless For Life (Ruthless 1998)★★★.

b. Michael Berrin, Queens, New York, USA. After splitting from white rap trio 3rd Bass, Serch remained with Def Jam for the launch of his solo career in 1992. Shortly afterwards he would take up a position as A&R Vice President for Wild Pitch Records. His sole solo hit thus far proved to be 'Love Will Show Us'.

● ALBUMS: Return Of The Product (Def Jam 1992)★★★.

MC Shan

b. Shawn Moltke, 8 September 1965, Queens, New York, USA. Moltke enjoyed an unusual start to his hip-hop career. Rather than the drudgery of demo cassettes and auditions, he was first spotted by his future Cold Chillin' boss as he attempted to steal his car. Nevertheless, with the early guiding hand of cousin Marley Marl, Shan has gone on to provide an inconsistent but occasionally interesting legacy. His debut album was the archetypal B-boy artefact, replete with Marl's stripped down production and conscious and party rhymes (the best example of the former being the anti-drugs track 'Jane, Stop This Crazy Thing!', the worst instance of the latter 'Project 'Ho'). The follow-up was more musically varied, but Shan's voice lacked the agility to compete with some exquisite samples. He dispensed with Marl in time for Play It Again, Shan, which, as the title might suggest, saw a bid for more mainstream territory. Apart from the instructional 'It Ain't A Hip Hop Record', there was little to distinguish this collection and its lacklustre Heavy D-styled performance.

● ALBUMS: Down By Law (Cold Chillin' 1987)★★★★, Born To Be Wild (Cold Chillin' 1988)★★★, Play It Again, Shan (Cold Chillin' 1990)★★.

b. Peter Jones, Bronx, New York, USA. Shy D is the cousin of Afrika Bambaataa, and grew up with the sounds and philosophy of the Zulu Nation. Moving to Atlanta in 1978, he made his name via his debut single 'Rapp Will Never Die' in 1985, before joining Luke Skywalker (now Luke) Records for 'I've Gotta Be Tough' and 'Shake It'. These releases, some of the first on the label, featured the prominent 'Miami bass' sound. After two well-received albums he set up his own Benz Records imprint in 1990, but his fortunes declined thereafter, 1991 being spent in the Georgia State Penal System. More fruitful was his liaison with Wrap/Ichiban Records, which saw the release of a quality single ('True To The Game') and album which reacquainted him with the hip-hop public.

● ALBUMS: Gotta Be Tough (Luke Skywalker 1987)★★★, Comin' Correct (Luke 1988)★★★, Don't Sweat Me (Benz Records 1990)★★★, The Comeback (Wrap/Ichiban 1993)★★★★.

b. Dakar, Senegal, but raised in Cairo and Paris, MC Solaar is the most prominent of the new breed of French rappers. His debut album (translating as Who Sows The Wind Will Reap The Beat) gave him four Top 10 French singles, the album itself moving over 200,000 copies. It brought him to the attention of the UK's Talkin' Loud imprint. They, like many others, were impressed by his free-flowing, relaxed style, and its easy musical backdrop, formulated by his DJ/producer Jimmy Jay. Gang Starr were so taken with the album that after a single hearing they asked if they could remix the title-track. Solaar also took part in many collaborative projects for the Talkin' Loud stable (United Future Organization, Urban Species) and the Guru of Gang Starr-orchestrated Jazzamatazz project. His own material most often concerns sad stories about malcontents in the stream of French life. The wordplay and nuances do not translate easily, but the musicality of the French language does. As well as rappers like Big Daddy Kane, Solaar draws his inspiration from the French literary tradition of Baudelaire and Jaques Prevert.

● ALBUMS: Qui Seme Le Vent Recolte Le Tempo (Talkin' Loud 1993)★★, Prose Combat (Talkin' Loud 1994)★★, Paradisiaque (Mercury 1997)★★★.

MC Trouble

b. Latasha Rogers, c.1972. MC Trouble became Motown's first female rapper when she appeared in 1990 with a debut album and attendant singles ('High Roller' etc) at the tender age of 18. Backed by the soul undertow more familiar with the label, her rhymes were contrastingly harsh and cutting. Trouble's talents were obvious to many. Above and beyond being a talented contemporary rapper, she was also responsible for writing, arranging and producing her debut set. Her conscious raps included the likes of 'Black Line', which parodied black talk shows, while in a romantic mode cuts like 'Make You Mine' were offered a smooth, soulful sheen. A guest appearance by Full Force was pleasing but incidental. She passed away in the early 90s.

● ALBUMS: Gotta Get A Grip (Motown 1990)★★★★.

MC Tunes

b. Nicky Lockett, Manchester, England. This rapper rose to fame by collaborating with local dance music stars 808 State, and later appeared on A Guy Called Gerald's 'Juicebox' single (A Guy Called Gerald also being a former member of 808 State). Whenever Tunes recorded solo, however, he seemed to possess a talent for over-estimating his own abilities. 'This is a concept of exceptional musical talent', he rapped on the single, 'Primary Rhyming'. It was not. His sole album was completed with strong musical backdrops provided by 808 State, but the fierce rendering of tales of inner-city violence and the perils of drink and drugs failed to gel. 808 State moved on to greater achievements while their former sparring partner was banished to obscurity. MC Tunes finally returned in the mid-90s with a new Manchester band, Dust Junkies. Featuring four musicians and a more guitar-orientated style, they were signed by Polydor Records in 1996.

● ALBUMS: with 808 State The North At Its Height (ZTT 1990)★★.

Formed in 1964 in Detroit, Michigan, USA, and originally known as the Motor City Five, the group was sundered the following year when its rhythm section left in protest over a new song, 'Back To Comm'. Michael Davis (bass) and Dennis Thompson (drums) joined founder-members Rob Tyner (b. Robert Derminer, 12 December 1944, Detroit, Michigan, USA, d. 18 September 1991; vocals), Wayne Kramer (guitar) and Fred 'Sonic' Smith (b. 1949, d. 4 November 1994; guitar) to pursue the radical direction this experimental composition offered. By 1967 their repertoire included material drawn from R&B, soul and avant garde jazz, as well as a series of powerful original songs. Two singles, 'One Of The Guys'/'I Can Only Give You Everything' (1967) and 'Borderline'/'Looking At You' (1968), captured their nascent, high-energy sound as the group embraced the 'street' politics proselytized by mentor/manager John Sinclair. Now linked to this former DJ's Trans Love Commune and White Panther party, the MC5 became Detroit's leading underground act, and a recording contract with the Elektra label resulted in the seminal Kick Out The Jams. Recorded live at the city's Grande Ballroom, this turbulent set captured the quintet's extraordinary sound, which, although loud, was never reckless. However, MC5 were dropped from their label's roster following several disagreements, but later emerged anew on Atlantic Records. Rock journalist Jon Landau, later manager of Bruce Springsteen, was invited to produce Back In The USA, which, if lacking the dissolute thrill of its predecessor, showed a group able to adapt to studio discipline. 'Tonight', 'Shakin' Street' and a remade 'Lookin' At You' are among the highlights of this excellent set. A third collection, High Time, reasserted a desire to experiment, and several local jazz musicians added punch to what nonetheless remains a curiously ill-focused album on which each member, bar Davis, contributed material. A move to Europe, where the group performed and recorded under the aegis of Rohan O'Rahilly, failed to halt dwindling commercial prospects, while the departure of Davis, then Tyner, in 1972, brought the MC5 to an end. Their reputation flourished during the punk phenomenon, during which time each former member enjoyed brief notoriety. Davis later surfaced in Destroy All Monsters, and Sonic Smith married Patti Smith (and was heavily featured on the singer/poet's 'comeback' album, Dream Of Life, in 1988). Both Kramer and Tyner attempted to use the MC5 name for several unrelated projects. They wisely abandoned such practices, leaving intact the legend of one of rock's most uncompromising and exciting acts. In September 1991 Tyner died of a heart attack in the seat of his parked car in his home-town of Ferndale, Michigan. Smith also passed away three years later. Kramer, however, relaunched a solo career in the same year, enlisting several prominent members of the US underground/alternative scene as his new cohorts.

McAfee, Johnny

b. 24 July 1913, Dallas, Texas, USA. McAfee, this highly respected ballad singer, also played alto saxophone with several bands during the 30s and 40s. He studied music at Baylor University, Waco, Texas, before working for the bands of Paul Pendarvis, Johnny Hamp, Leighton Noble and Eddy Duchin. In the early 40s he led Tony Pastor's saxophone section for a while, and sang on their hit, 'That Ain't The Way I Dreamed It'. After replacing Dick Haymes when Haymes left Tommy Dorsey at the end of 1941, McAfee supplied the vocals on 'Daybreak', and 'Moonlight Becomes You', which was on the other side of the Harry James million-seller, 'I've Heard That Song Before'. After military service during World War II, McAfee played with Buddy Morrow and Horace Heidt and, in the 50s McAfee appeared frequently on television, often on Sammy Kaye's popular shows.

McAll, Barney

b. 1968, Melbourne, Australia. In his childhood, McAll was exposed to all forms of jazz. His father was a traditional jazz lover, while elder brother John introduced him to more recent and contemporary artists such as Bud Powell, and Bill Evans. McAll played in the Melbourne jazz scene in the mid-80s and in 1986 was chosen as pianist for Vince Jones. He was featured on the subsequent Jones albums, It All Ends Up In Tears (1987) and Trustworthy Little Sweethearts (1988). In 1989 McAll worked with American alto saxophonist Vincent Herring, who encouraged him to write more original compositions. A year later McAll won the inaugural AMP Jazz Piano Award at the Wangaratta Festival Of Jazz and he spent the prize money travelling to New York, USA to study and perform. In 1992 he rejoined the Vince Jones group as pianist and musical director. After touring Europe a year later, McAll shared the APRA award for Best Jazz Composition Of The Year with Jones for their work on Future Girl. In late 1994, he toured with saxophonist Dewey Redman and in early 1995, with drummer Cindy Blackman. The same year McAll released his debut Exit. It featured the best of Australia's young jazz musicians and visiting Americans including Herring and Jimmy Cobb and contained seven originals played with impressive swing and vitality. Barney McAll is a versatile performer with a striving, melodic style and his debut album suggested the arrival of a mature, creative talent.

● ALBUMS: Exit (ABC 1995)★★★★.

McAlmont And Butler

One of the most intriguing and unexpected collaborations of the mid-90s, this London, England-based duo paired former Suede guitarist Bernard Butler with ex-Thieves' singer David McAlmont. They were immediately successful with 'Yes' and 'You Do', polished songs on which Butler's guitar accompanied McAlmont's sweet vocals. Although statements in the press continually stressed that the collaboration was only a temporary one, so successful were the singles that an album was eventually compiled. This comprised all the songs they had worked on together, including a cover version of the soul classic 'You'll Lose A Good Thing' (Barbara Lynn). Both members immersed themselves in other projects soon after the album's release and a second collaboration seems unlikely.

● ALBUMS: The Sound Of McAlmont And Butler (Hut 1995)★★★.

McAlmont, David

McAlmont's first exposure to the music industry came as half of the hotly tipped but underachieving London duo Thieves, who split up before the planned release of their debut album in 1994 (the album was released under the name of McAlmont). McAlmont, who possesses a three-and-a-half-octave vocal range, has gone on to further critical acclaim in his solo career, including supporting Morrissey on live dates. Through a mutual producer friend, McAlmont subsequently teamed up with ex-Suede guitarist Bernard Butler to form McAlmont And Butler. The relationship was never intended to be permanent, both parties being unhappy about the dissolution of their former bands. However, two singles, 'Yes' and 'You Do', were co-written for release as singles, and an album was also released. The success of the singles ensured McAlmont's real solo career was likely to take off, although demands for him to appear as guest vocalist filled his diary from 1996 to 1997.

● ALBUMS: McAlmont (1994)★★★.

McAnally, Mac

b. Lyman McAnally Jnr., 1 July 1959, Belmont, Mississippi, USA. McAnally's early life is described in his US country hit song, 'Back Where I Came From'. Inspired by his mother's gospel piano playing, he started working in clubs from a young age, and eventually had a US pop hit in 1977 with 'It's A Crazy World'. His first album for Geffen Records featured the quaintly titled 'E=MC Squared'. Simple Life included harmonies from Tammy Wynette and Ricky Skaggs, but McAnally is better known for his songwriting, which, unusually for Nashville, he generally does on his own. He has written 'It's My Job', 'Back Where I Come From' (both Jimmy Buffett), 'Two Dozen Roses' and 'She's All I Got Going' (both Shenandoah), and the classic story-song, 'Crime Of Passion' for Ricky Van Shelton. He wrote 'Company Time' for Linda Davis and the amusing video showed an MCP receiving a public humiliation for his behaviour. He also co-produced Ricky Skaggs' album My Father's Son.

McAuley, Jackie

Having left the legendary Irish R&B band Them during the recording of their debut album, Irish singer-songwriter McAuley went on to form the Belfast Gypsies with Mike Scott and Ken McCleod. Their sole album was a bizarre psychedelic oddity produced by the legendary Kim Fowley. Following the break-up of the Gypsies, McAuley moved to Dublin and formed Cult with Paul Brady, but this potentially interesting band did not release any records. Relocating to London, McAuley formed Trader Horne with ex-Fairport Convention singer Judy Dyble, releasing the acclaimed acoustic album Morning Way. Dyble then left to get married, and after briefly continuing with Saffron Summerfield, McAuley dissolved the band. In 1971 he released his solo debut, with backing from British jazz musicians Henry Lowther and Roy Babbington, but a reluctance to undertake live promotional work doomed the album to failure. McAuley then played with the bands Wand and Mackerel Sky, and the Christian rocker Bryan Haworth, before becoming Lonnie Donegan's guitarist and MD. In addition to extensive session work, he co-wrote Status Quo's 1982 hit 'Dear John'. During the 80s he performed as part of Poor Mouth, with Clive Bunker (ex-Jethro Tull), Philip Rynhart (ex-Taj Mahal) and Tommy Lundy (ex-Katmandu), releasing the Gael Force album. In 1994 he recorded his second solo album, Headspin, which included a cover version of Bob Dylan's 'Just Like Tom Thumb Blues'.

McAuliffe, Leon

b. William Leon McAuliffe, 1 March 1917, Houston, Texas, USA, d. 20 August 1988, Tulsa, Oklahoma, USA. McAuliffe learned both guitar and steel guitar while at school, and when aged 16 joined the Light Crust Doughboys. In March 1935, he joined Bob Wills' Texas Playboys as steel guitarist, remaining with him until December 1942, when military service intervened.

Wills' entreaties of 'Take It Away Leon' became an expected shout, both on live and recorded performances. He formed his own band, the Western Swing Band, in 1946, but after becoming the owner of the Cimarron Ballroom, Tulsa, in the early 50s, changed the band's name to the Cimarron Boys. He recorded for Majestic, Columbia, Dot and Starday, finding success with such numbers as 'Steel Guitar Rag' and 'Panhandle Rag', and played regularly on KVOO and KRMG, Tulsa. In the late 50s and for most of the 60s, McAuliffe and his band toured extensively in the USA, appeared on many television shows and even visited Europe. He formed Cimarron Records in 1961, and the next year had US country chart success with his version of 'Faded Love', before moving to Capitol in 1964. He retired in the late 60s, but in 1973, he played on the famous last recordings made by Wills and soon afterwards was persuaded to front a line-up of ex-Texas Playboys. This band played successfully during the 70s and early 80s, and recorded for Capitol and Delta. He died in August 1988, and is remembered as one of the great steel guitarists.

b. 19 May 1935, Tulsa, Oklahoma, USA. A full-toned bassist who creates rich, singing phrases in a wide range of contemporary jazz contexts, McBee studied clarinet at school, but switched to bass at the age of 17, playing in local nightclubs. He gained a degree in music from Ohio Central State University, then spent two years in the army, conducting the band at Fort Knox. Moving to Detroit in 1962, he worked with Paul Winter (1963-64), then went to New York and played with Jackie McLean (1964), Wayne Shorter (1965-66), Charles Lloyd (1966), Yusef Lateef (1967-69) and Alice Coltrane (1969-72). He established his own group in 1975, but, as one of the most in-demand sidemen in jazz, has continued to work with others, including Chico Freeman, Freddie Hubbard, Grachan Moncur III, Miles Davis, Bobby Hutcherson, Charles Tolliver, Pharoah Sanders, Lonnie Liston Smith, Sonny Rollins, Michael White, JoAnne Brackeen, Horace Tapscott, Anthony Braxton, Abdullah Ibrahim, Buddy Tate and Harry 'Sweets' Edison.

McBride And The Ride

Terry McBride (b. 16 September 1958, Austin, Texas, USA; lead vocals, bass), Ray Herndon (b. 14 July 1960, Scottsdale, Arkansas, USA; guitar, vocals) and Billy Thomas (b. 24 October 1953, Fort Myers, Florida, USA; drums, vocals). MCA producer Tony Brown noticed that Alabama were losing their appeal and so he formed a new country group to take over the market. He experimented with McBride, Herndon and Thomas, liked what he heard and gave them a contract; within two months, they were making their first album. The title track of Sacred Ground is a neat twist on adultery, written by Kix Brooks of Brooks And Dunn and Vernon Rust. Herndon and Thomas left in 1993 and were replaced by Kenny Vaughn (guitar), Randy Frazier (bass) and Keith Edwards (drums); the band were then renamed Terry McBride And The Ride. They are featured performing 'No More Cryin" in the rodeo film 8 Seconds. Terry McBride's father, incidentally, was Dale McBride, an original member of the Downbeats, who had several minor country successes in the 70s.

McBride, Frankie

b. 1944, Omagh, Northern Ireland. Originally a member of the Polka Dots Showband, McBride found solo fame in 1967 after working with producer Tommy Scott on the ballad 'Five Little Fingers'. Signed by Dick Katz of the Harold Davison Agency, McBride seemed a likely bet to cross over into mainstream cabaret success in the UK, but a follow-up hit proved elusive. His fortunes in Ireland, where he enjoyed a hit with 'Burning Bridge', continued for a period, and his 1968 album, Frankie McBride Sings, was a moderate seller.

b. Janet Lister, 5 April 1934, Inglewood, California, USA. She grew up in North Whitefield, Maine and developed a keen interest in country music and yodelling as a child. She sang with siblings at local venues but after marrying Claude McBride in 1955, they returned to California, where she began a solo career. She first recorded for Toppa in 1960 with Wynn Stewart's band and during the early 60s, she worked shows with many artists including Merle Haggard and Buck Owens and featured in television shows. In 1965, she relocated to Dallas, where she became the featured vocalist at Dewey Groom's Longhorn Ballroom, appeared on the Big "D" Jamboree and recorded songs and yodels for the Longhorn label. Accompanied by her husband and songwriter Vern Stovall, she played Las Vegas venues and toured to Canada. In 1968, after further tours with Roy Clark and Tex Williams, she relocated to Nashville but returned to Dallas the following year and continued her appearances at the Longhorn Ballroom. When Claude died, in 1973, she retired from singing until 1976, when she married B.J. Ingram, a Dallas County deputy sheriff. Together they started the Saturday night Mesquite Opry, a show which featured both local and touring country artists. In 1984, she achieved a lifelong ambition by singing on stage at the Grand Ole Opry with Patsy Montana, whose yodelling had always been her inspiration. (She had recorded Patsy's 'I Want To Be A Cowboy's Sweetheart', as her tribute, years before). During her career McBride, an excellent exponent of the art, has written several yodelling numbers including 'Best Dern Yodeler', 'Yodelling Jan' and her popular 'Yodeling Tribute', which mentions great yodellers including Jimmie Rodgers, Elton Britt and others. Deciding to take things easier, she closed the Mesquite Opry 30 December 1995 but maintained some public concert appearances including touring to Austria in 1996, where she featured at the Vienna Country Music Festival gaining good reviews for her yodelling. She has recorded for several labels with backing provided by such as Ralph Mooney, Phil Baugh and Dale Potter. In the 80s three albums were issued by a German label, one being a compilation of earlier recordings while there have also been cassette releases and in 1996 a CD containing 25 of her own songs.

McBride, Laura Lee

b. Laura Frances Owens, 16 May 1920, Bridport, Oklahoma, USA. McBride first sang with her sister as Joy And Jane on her father Tex Owens' radio programme on KMBC Kansas City, Missouri, in the mid-30s. When, in 1943, she was hired by Bob Wills, she became not only the first female vocalist with Wills but, in fact, the first featured woman singer of western swing music. She devoted her life to the genre and became affectionately known as the Queen of Western Swing. She recorded with Wills on Armed Forces Radio Transcriptions in 1943/4 and some MGM recordings in 1950. In the late 40s, she married guitarist/bandleader Dickie McBride who, as a member of Cliff Bruner's Texas Wanderers, provided the vocal for the first recording of the country standard 'It Makes No Difference Now' in September 1938 (between 1938 and 1941, Dickie McBride fronted his own band the Village Boys and recorded for Decca). In the late 70s, Laura Lee McBride made some appearances with surviving members of Bob Wills' Texas Playboys at various functions.

McBride, Martina

b. Martina Mariea Schiff, 29 July 1966, Sharon, Kansas, USA. One of the leaders in contemporary country music, McBride has also won converts within more puritanical country factions for the respect she affords the roots of the music. She and her husband sold T-shirts at Garth Brooks concerts, and she graduated to becoming his opening act. The Time Has Come, her debut album, impressed many with its cultured treatment of traditional material such as 'Cheap Whiskey' and 'That's Me'. Her breakthrough came as the result of two singles in 1993, 'My Baby Loves Me The Way That I Am' and the much removed 'Independence Day', which gave her considerable momentum on country radio. The latter single's accompanying video also won the Country Music Association's Video Of The Year category in 1993. This time the subject matter was far from traditional, depicting an abused wife who takes justice into her own hands. Sales of her second album, The Way That I Am, climbed to the half million mark as a result of this exposure. She won the CMA Video Of The Year award in 1994 for 'Independence Day'. In 1995 RCA Records launched a major campaign to back her third album, Wild Angels, with numerous television appearances (including the CMT Showcase Artist Of The Month) and special retail promotion via the K-mart chain. Preceded by the single 'Safe In The Arms Of Her Love', Wild Angels was produced by McBride alongside Paul Worley and Ed Seay. Its composition relied heavily on the melancholy and sadness of her earlier releases, with her compassionate, third-person songs reflecting sympathetically on relationships with a series of characters. 'Safe In The Eyes Of Love' was a country hit although for many, her revival of Delbert McClinton's 'Two More Bottles Of Wine' was a stronger track. Other songs, such as 'Born To Give My Love To You' which addressed the birth of her daughter Delaney, were more optimistic (her baby daughter gurgles on the number 1 hit 'Wild Angels'). In addition to the release of the album and extensive touring commitments she joined Reba McEntire, Trisha Yearwood and Linda Davis in a new version of the Michael McDonald/Patti LaBelle hit, 'On My Own'. The opening track on 1997's Evolution, 'I'm Little But I'm Loud', featured the recorded talents of a seven year old McBride, but overall the album strayed too close to slick MOR to match Wild Angels.

McCafferty, Dan

This gritty vocalist gained early experience as a member of the Shadettes, a mid-60s' beat group based in Dunfermline, Scotland. By 1968, the act had evolved into Nazareth, which grew from provincial origins into a leading international attraction. McCafferty's throaty rasp was an integral part of the unit's best-known hits, notably 'Broken Down Angel' and 'This Flight Tonight' (both 1973), but he undertook a concurrent solo project in 1975. Dan McCafferty comprised several of the artist's favourite songs, including 'Out Of Time', which broached the UK Top 50 as a single. The singer then resumed his commitment to the parent group, but re-embarked on an independent career in 1987 with Into The Ring.

McCain, Jerry

b. 19 June 1930, Gadsden, Alabama, USA. From a musical family, McCain learned harmonica as a child, and played with local group the Upstarts in the early 50s. He first recorded in Jackson, Mississippi, for Lillian McMurry's Trumpet label in 1954 ('Wine-O-Wine', 'Stay Out Of Automobiles', 'East Of The Sun'). A competent singer and fiery harmonica player, McCain next signed to Excello where he recorded a number of songs from 1956-59. After other tracks for Cosimo Mattasa's Rex label and for OKeh, McCain left music in the early 60s. He returned to the studio in 1965, recording '728 Texas' for Stan Lewis's Jewel label. In the 70s and 80s he worked as a private investigator while continuing to make occasional records and perform at blues festivals. The Atlanta Rhythm Section provided the backing for McCain's cover versions of Slim Harpo's hits, while Love Desperado contained some of his best work including an anti-drug piece, 'Burn The Crackhouse Down'.

McCall, C.W.

b. William Fries, 15 November 1928, Audubon, Iowa, USA. Fries loved country music as a child, but had a successful career in advertising in Omaha, culminating in a 1973 campaign for the Metz bread company that involved a truck-driver called C.W. McCall: 'It was just a name that came out of thin air,' says Fries. He had done the voice-over himself and developed the character on record. McCall had a US country hit with 'The Old Home Filler-Up And Keep On A-Truckin' Cafe', and then reached the pop chart with a tale of brake failure on 'Wolf Creek Pass'. President Nixon had imposed a 55 miles per hour speed limit during an oil shortage, and CB radio, which had previously been confined to farmers and radio hams, became in demand so that motorists could warn each other of radar traps. McCall told the story of 'Convoy' in CB jargon and the accompanying press release enabled DJs to explain the song to their listeners. 'Convoy' soared to number 1 on both the US pop and country charts, also making number 2 in the UK. A parody, 'Convoy G.B.', by Laurie Lingo And The Dipsticks (in actuality, BBC Radio 1 disc jockeys Dave Lee Travis and Paul Burnett) made number 4. McCall's record was the inspiration for a film of the same name, directed by Sam Peckinpah and starring Kris Kristofferson. The soundtrack featured 'Convoy' and previously released material by other artists. McCall went to number 2 on the US country charts with the narration 'Roses For Mama', and enjoyed a minor US pop hit with 'There Won't Be No Country Music (There Won't Be No Rock'n'Roll)', but he soon returned to advertising. In 1982, he moved to Ouray, Colorado, and was elected mayor in 1986.

McCall, Cash

b. Maurice Dollison, 28 January 1941, New Madrid, Missouri, USA. McCall was a songwriter, session musician and vocalist in the R&B and gospel fields. Best known for his 1966 R&B hit 'When You Wake Up', McCall began singing with the gospel Belmont Singers at the age of 12. Moving to Chicago in the 60s, he played guitar for the Five Blind Boys of Mississippi, Pilgrim Jubilee Singers and Gospel Songbirds. His secular recording career began in 1963 for One-derful Records. He next signed to the small Thomas label, for which he recorded his only R&B chart hit. Subsequent releases for labels such as Checker, Ronn, Paula and Columbia Records did not fare as successfully. In 1967, McCall wrote 'That's How Love Is', a hit for Otis Clay, and also penned songs for artists including Etta James and Tyrone Davis.

McCall, Darrell

b. 30 April 1940, New Jasper, Oklahoma, USA. Honky-tonk vocalist McCall was briefly successful both in the early 60s, as first a pop and then a country singer, and then again in the mid-70s when outlaw country was at the height of its popularity. Raised in Oklahoma, McCall moved down to Nashville in 1958 in an attempt to record as a duo with his childhood friend Johnny Paycheck. When this plan failed he found work as a studio harmony vocalist and band member for artists including George Jones, Ray Price and Faron Young. In 1959 McCall met Nashville producer Buddy Killen who persuaded him to join the Little Dippers, alongside Delores Dinning, Emily Gilmore and Hurshel Wigintin. They placed a Top 10 pop single in 1960 ('Forever'), but by 1961 McCall had signed a solo contract with Capitol Records, releasing two unsuccessful singles for the pop market ('My Kind Of Lovin'' and 'Call The Zoo') before the label dropped him. Moving to Phillips Records in 1962, McCall switched back to recording country material, and immediately placed on the charts with the number 17 single 'A Stranger Was Here' in January 1963. Unable to repeat this success, McCall temporarily abandoned music for a film career, appearing in Nashville Rebel (1965), Road To Nashville and What Am I Bid (both 1966), and also worked briefly as a cowboy. He returned to music in 1968, signing up to the independent label Wayside Records for whom he released several singles and an album. When his contract expired in 1971, McCall signed to Tree International as a professional songwriter (Hank Williams Jnr had recently taken his 'Eleven Roses' to number 1) before resuming his recording career in 1974 with Atlantic Records. By 1975 he had left Atlantic for Columbia Records where he enjoyed a brief period of chart success, achieving two Top 40 singles with 'Lily Dale' (a duet with Willie Nelson) and the solo 'Dreams Of A Dreamer'. His popularity soon faded and by 1980 he was back on an independent label, Hillside Records, before switching briefly to RCA Records for the minor hit 'Long Line Of Empties'. McCall's final chart placing was with 1986's 'Memphis In May' on Indigo Records. The same year, he released two albums. German label Bear Family Records have released a comprehensive box set of McCall's recordings.

McCall, Mary Ann

b. 4 May 1919, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, USA, d. 14 December 1994, Los Angeles, California, USA. McCall's early career was spent singing with the bands of Buddy Morrow, Tommy Dorsey, Woody Herman and Charlie Barnet. During this period, which ended in 1940, she was regarded as an average big band singer. Her return to the spotlight, when she rejoined Herman in 1946, saw her maturing and by the time she left the band in 1950, she was an able, original and forthright jazz singer. She recorded with several leading beboppers in the late 40s and early 50s, including Howard McGhee, Dexter Gordon, Charlie Ventura and her then husband, Al Cohn. During the next three decades, McCall worked extensively as a soloist, making occasional records with jazz musicians such as Jake Hanna and Nat Pierce and singing in jazz clubs and at festivals.

McCall, Steve

b. 30 September 1933, Chicago, Illinois, USA, d. 25 May 1989. McCall studied music at conservatory and university, though his first professional gig was drumming with blues singer Lucky Carmichael. In 1964, he recorded with soul/jazz pianist Ramsey Lewis. McCall was not only a founder member of the AACM, but also a member of its predecessor, the legendary Experimental Band. He brought to both years of experience with blues, dance and show bands, having worked with Gene Ammons, Dexter Gordon and Arthur Prysock. His incisive, precise drumming always had the ability to boil up when necessary. In Chicago, he played with Muhal Richard Abrams and Joseph Jarman. Between 1967 and 1970 he lived in Paris, where he played and recorded with Anthony Braxton on his recordings for the BYG label. When the Chicago musicians played in New York in 1971 under the name of Creative Construction Company, McCall again played drums, relating to the established New York bassist Richard Davis with no problems at all. McCall's most visible gig after that was with Henry Threadgill and Fred Hopkins in the trio Air, a group that rapidly became festival favourites. McCall supplied magically sensitive percussion to the group, so important to their collective sound that when he left in 1982 - to be replaced by Pheeroan akLaff - they changed their name to New Air. He worked, too, with Marion Brown, Chico Freeman, Arthur Blythe and David Murray's Octet: McCall's creative drumming, with its irreverent enthusiasm for past styles, was the ideal accompaniment for Murray's great 'jazz consolidation' band of the 80s. He returned to Chicago later in the 80s, giving solo concerts and leading his own sextet.

McCall, Toussaint

b. 1934, Monroe, Louisiana, USA. McCall's haunting hypnotic 'Nothing Takes The Place Of You' (number 5 R&B) was one of the highlights of a golden year in soul, 1967. Six other singles followed and one album but McCall could not recapture the magic of that one hit. He attempted to revive his career in 1976 with an album on McGowan, but it met with little acceptance. In 1988 he made a surprise appearance in the John Waters film Hairspray, where his lip-sync cameo to 'Nothing Can Take The Place Of You', was a most memorable moment, even if it was outside the time-frame of the movie.

McCalmans

Formed on 6 October 1964, the original line-up of this Scottish trio was Hamish Bayne (b. Nairobi, Kenya), Ian McCalman (b. 1 September 1946, Edinburgh, Scotland; vocals, guitar, bodhran), and Derek Moffat (b. near Dundee, Fife, Scotland; vocals, guitar, mandolin, bodhran). All three met, in 1964, at the Edinburgh School of Architecture, where they called themselves the Ian McCalman Folk Group. Within the year the trio was regularly playing clubs and concerts, and signed a recording deal with EMI in 1967. The group secured its first television series in 1970, on BBC Scotland, and worked in Europe. In 1982, Bayne left the group, to be replaced by Nick Keir (b. Edinburgh, Scotland; vocals/guitar/mandolin/tenor banjo/whistles/recorder). Throughout their career, the group have continued to base their style around three-part vocal harmony, both with and without instruments, performing traditional and contemporary material. Flames On The Water, featuring contemporary Scottish songs, was highly regarded, and in 1991 the group were given their own series on BBC Radio 2.

McCandless, Paul

b. 24 March 1947, Indiana, Pennsylvania, USA. The distinctive, curling sound of Paul McCandless on English horn, oboe, saxophones, flute, clarinet, musette (a French bagpipe from the last century) and wind-driven synthesizers has done much to define the fusion music of Oregon. The nucleus of the group, Ralph Towner, Collin Walcott, and McCandless, came together as members of the influential Paul Winter Consort. Just as the part-time nature of Oregon has enabled its members to undertake other projects, so, too, has McCandless taken that opportunity to work with Art Lande and David Samuels; he also re-united with ex-Consort cellist, David Darling in the Gallery project.

McCann, Eamon

b. 6 November 1955, Creggan, Omagh, Co. Tyrone, Northern Ireland. McCann's interest in music came from his father, who played in a ceilidh band. After learning to play guitar as a boy, he gained his first experience of country music playing local venues with his two brothers. He recorded a demo cassette, Eamon McCann Sings Country, in 1990 on No Sweat, which led to him being signed to the Harmac label the following year. In 1992, he formed his own band, Pure Country, which soon became a popular touring band on the Irish country scene. He joined Ritz Records in 1994 and has collected several awards for his modern approach to country music. He sings in a style that strongly suggests the influence of Randy Travis and Merle Haggard. Everything That I Am included seven of his own songs. It has also led Irish devotees of line dancing to create a new dance routine, The Eamon McCann Shuffle, which they perform to his recording of 'Its All Over Now'. McCann now regularly tours in the UK and his growing popularity and the airplay his records are receiving should ensure future success.

b. Leslie Coleman McCann, 23 September 1935, Lexington, Kentucky, USA, d. November 1996. 'There is no end to the possibilities (and fun) in music. So, why don't we get on in there and get it?' McCann's comment highlights two distinctive elements of his music: an interest in innovation, particularly in new technology, and a preference for the dance-based rhythms of jazz, gospel and funk. Self-taught as a pianist, he played and sang in school bands and in the navy, where a talent contest won him a spot on the Ed Sullivan Show. Moving to California in the late 50s, he formed a successful trio with which he first recorded in 1960. A series of popular jazz piano albums followed, and in the late 60s, McCann had two hit singles with the protest song 'Compared To What' and the ballad 'With These Hands'. The early 70s saw the pianist exploring electronic keyboards and synthesizers and, while still recording, he performed in films such as Soul To Soul and shows such as the all-star Black Music Show from 1972-74. McCann also practised as a photographer, exhibiting on a number of occasions, and worked as a volunteer teacher with his wife in Mexico. His recording diminished in the late 70s, following an unsuccessful foray into soul and R&B. He bounced back in the late 80s and continued in the jazz funk field until his death in 1996.

McCann, Lila

b. *c.*1981, Steilacoom, Washington, DC, USA. Country singer Lila McCann began her recording career at the age of 15, releasing an acclaimed self-titled debut album while vowing to continue her academic commitments. Her musical apprenticeship came as a guest singer at local dances with her father's group, the Southlanders, from the age of four onwards. She had been recommended to Asylum Records as a 13-year-old by music industry legend Seymour Stein. 'I was playing at the Palomino Club in Los Angeles when I was 12 or so, and Seymour saw me there, and he loved me', recalls McCann. She eventually secured a full recording contract with Asylum (as part of a development agreement) in December 1995. The main attraction proved to be a demo track entitled 'Down Came A Blackbird', written for McCann by Mark Spiro, who became the producer of her debut album. McCann's own input produced one co-writing credit, though she was keen to stress her desire to write more of her own material.

McCann, Peter

b. Connecticut, USA. Peter McCann was best known for his 1977 Top 5 single 'Do You Wanna Make Love', and as the author of 'Right Time Of The Night', a Top 10 hit for Jennifer Warnes that same year. McCann joined a folk-rock group called the Repairs in 1971, while attending college, and in 1973, when the group split, he joined the staff of ABC Music Publishers. He wrote and recorded 'Do You Wanna Make Love' while employed by that firm (it was issued on 20th Century Records), and simultaneously Warnes scored a hit with his other composition. After his glory year of 1977, however, McCann never wrote or sang another hit.

b. Patricia Susan Mary McCann, 26 February 1949, Carrickasticken, Forkhill, County Armagh, Northern Ireland. One of a family of eight children, she first sang at local venues at the age of eight and as a teenager, she was the vocalist with a local Ceili band. She met future husband Dennis Heaney and they decided that since the music business held little security, they should qualify for other jobs as insurance for the future. She became an hairdresser, while Heaney studied accountancy. During this time, with a friend, they formed the Fairylanders, a trio which eventually grew to become the Storytellers. After their two children were born, McCann began to seriously consider her music career. In the mid-70s, she joined Top Spin Records and became fully professional. Her second single 'Big Tom Is Still The King' became a number 1 on the Irish charts and established her as a major artist. (The song was a parody on the Waylon Jennings hit 'Bob Wills Is Still The King' and paid tribute to Irish country star Big Tom). This success saw her tour to the UK and in Europe and in 1977, she made her first tour to the USA. She was badly injured in a car crash in 1978 but survived that and throat problems to resume an hectic touring schedule by the end of the year. In 1979, she returned to America and made her debut on the Grand Ole Opry. During the 80s, she toured Europe with visiting US stars, including Charley Pride and Emmylou Harris and made several appearances on the Wembley Festival. Further American trips saw her play the Opry, Carnegie Hall, Fan Fair in Nashville and in 1988, she became the first non-American to appear at Dolly Parton's Dollywood Theme Park, near Knoxville, Tennessee. In 1991, she was also the first non-American artist to headline at the popular Strawberry Festival in Plant City, Florida. She returned to the show in 1992 and again in 1993, when she also appeared in a major concert at the special request of Gulf War hero, General Norman Schwarzkopf and has also sung for President George Bush. In 1993, she became one of the few country stars to perform in Russia. By 1998, she had starred on the Strawberry Festival on five occasions, made two tours of South Africa and in 1998 she topped the bill at the Belgian Country Music Festival. Over the years she has recorded a steady stream of albums on various labels, some being recorded in America under the production of Porter Wagoner. Maintaining a mixture of Irish and country, she has regularly found success in the Irish charts with such songs as 'When The Sun Says Goodbye To The Mountains', 'While I Was Making Love To You', 'Rockabilly Can Rock', 'String Of Diamonds' and 'Blue Velvet'.

McCarters

Jennifer and twins Lisa and Teresa McCarterwere born in the late 60s, in Dolly Parton's home-town of Sevierville, Sevier County, Tennessee, USA. Their father, a factory foreman, played banjo in local bands, and their mother was a gospel singer. When Jennifer was 11 years old and her siblings were nine, they were performing clog dancing routines they had learned from watching the groups on the Grand Ole Opry. Three years later, realizing that they would not make a living in that occupation, Jennifer learned to play the guitar and sing, and soon the twins were adding harmony vocals. Around 1984, they made their debut on a Knoxville television station and gained further experience working with Opry stars Stu Philips and Archie Campbell, as well as busking on the streets of their home-town. In 1986, after some persistent and persuasive telephoning by Jennifer, the girls managed to get an audition with Kyle Lehning, Randy Travis's record producer, which led to them signing for Warner Brothers. They made their US country chart debut in January 1988, with Top 10 hits named 'Timeless And True Love' and 'The Gift', the title track of their first album. Soon after, they became part of the Randy Travis show and toured extensively in the USA and Europe. They have also appeared on many top US network television shows. Their close-harmony singing is similar to the 'Trio' recordings of Dolly Parton, Linda Ronstadt and Emmylou Harris. Jennifer also showed a talent for songwriting and with Carl Jackson co-wrote their beautifully descriptive ballad 'Letter From Home'. By the time their second album appeared in 1990, they had become known as Jennifer McCarter And The McCarters. Shortly after its release they were dropped by their record company, but they have continued to maintain their following by constantly touring USA and Europe. A new album of acoustic country songs is planned for the latter part of 1996. Says Jennifer McCarter, 'We've learnt from everything that went wrong in our career, and it's been better for us. When it happens again, and it will, we will be ready.'

McCarthy

Barking Abbey Comprehensive school, in Essex, England, acted as a meeting point for McCarthy in the early part of the 80s. Eventually, in 1984, Malcolm Eden (b. 1 September 1963, Ilford, Essex, England; vocals), Tim Gane (b. 12 July 1964, Barking, Essex, England; guitar), John Williamson (b. 28 December 1963, Ilford, Essex, England; bass) and Gary Baker (b. 8 September 1963, Barking, Essex, England; drums) formed McCarthy and released a self-financed single, limited to 485 copies. The quartet's profile was further raised with the inclusion of 'Celestial City' on the New Musical Express's influential C86 cassette, but while McCarthy certainly shared many contemporary bands' tastes for rough-edged guitars, they forced themselves away from the crowd by anointing their music with an extreme left-wing political stance. Perhaps it was pure coincidence that the similarly minded songwriter Billy Bragg attended the very same school, yet the 'Red Sleeping Beauty' single - a poetically veiled commentary on the Thatcher government of the time - was just one of a series of sharply toned releases where the message never suffocated McCarthy's melodic instinct. After a series of label changes and a highly successful, last-gasp evolution towards the more fashionable, upbeat sounds of 1990, McCarthy finally tired of battling against their apathetic surroundings and dissolved, playing their final gig at the London School of Economics at the start of the new decade. Gary Baker turned to radiography, Malcolm Eden concentrated on literary writing, while Tim Gane remained in music and started receiving numerous critical recommendations for his new band, Stereolab. He also used his Duophonic label to release Malcolm Eden's first post-McCarthy venture, Herzfield.

b. 27 September 1885, Somerville, Massachusetts, USA, d. 18 December 1943, New York, USA. An important lyricist in the 20s and 30s, McCarthy sang in cafes and worked for music publishers before writing songs such as 'That Dreamy Italian Waltz', 'That's How I Need You' and 'I Miss You Most Of All'. In 1913, with Jimmy Monaco, he produced one of popular music's all-time standards, 'You Made Me Love You', memorably sung and recorded by hundreds of artists, including Al Jolson, Harry James, Judy Garland and Grace La Rue. Three years later, again with Monaco, and Howard Johnson, McCarthy wrote 'What Do You Want To Make Those Eyes At Me For?' for Betty Hutton to sing in the 1945 movie Incendiary Blonde, the bio-pic of nightclub queen Texas Guinan. The song resurfaced in the UK in 1959, as a number 1 for Emile Ford And The Checkmates, and again in 1987, when it was a hit for rock 'n' roll revivalist, Shakin' Stevens.

In 1919, McCarthy and Harry Tierney contributed songs to the Ziegfeld Follies of that year, and wrote the score for the hugely successful Irene, which was filmed in 1940, starring Anna Neagle and Ray Milland, and successfully revived at the Minskoff Theatre in 1973, with Debbie Reynolds as Irene. In 1920, Tierney and McCarthy had several numbers, including 'Why Don't You?', interpolated in the European score of Charles Cuvillier's Afgar when it was staged on Broadway, starring the toast of London and Paris, Alice Delysia. They also contributed to the revues The Broadway Whirl, Up She Goes and Glory, before writing the score for Florenz Ziegfeld's 1923 hit, Kid Boots. After a brief break, McCarthy resumed his association with Tierney in 1927 for the operetta Rio Rita, the season's biggest musical success. McCarthy and Tierney's songs included 'The Rangers' Song', 'If You're In Love, You'll Waltz', 'You're Always In My Arms', 'Following The Sun Around', 'The Kinkajou' and the main duet, 'Rio Rita', which was sung by Ethelind Terry and J. Harold Murray. It ran for nearly 500 performances and was filmed in 1929, and again in 1942. Tierney and McCarthy's last Broadway show together was Cross My Heart in 1928, which closed after only eight weeks.

In the 30s, McCarthy collaborated with James Hanley on the songs for the film High Society Blues ('I'm In The Market for You', 'Eleanor', 'Just Like A Story Book', 'I Don't Know You Well Enough For That') and Listen, Darling, starring Judy Garland ('Ten Pins In the Sky'), and in 1940 had 'You Think Of Ev'rything and 'When The Spirit Moves Me' in Billy Rose's Aquacade water carnival. McCarthy's other songs included the poignant ballad 'I'm Always Chasing Rainbows' (with Harry Carroll), 'They Go Wild, Simply Wild, Over Me' (a hit for Marion Harris), 'Through', 'Ireland Must Be Heaven For My Mother Came From There', Night Time In Italy', 'I'm In The Market For You', and 'Underneath The Arches'. Among his other collaborators were Fred Fisher and Al Piantadosi.

b. 18 June 1942, Liverpool, England. Although commitments to the Beatles not unnaturally took precedence, bassist/vocalist McCartney nonetheless pursued several outside projects during this tenure. Many reflected friendships or personal preferences, ranging from production work for Cliff Bennett, Paddy, Klaus And Gibson and the Bonzo Dog Doo-Dah Band to appearances on sessions by Donovan, Paul Jones and Steve Miller (on Brave New World). He also wrote 'Woman' for Peter And Gordon under the pseudonym Bernard Webb, but such contributions flourished more freely with the founding of Apple Records, where Paul guided the early careers of Mary Hopkin and Badfinger and enjoyed cameos on releases by Jackie Lomax and James Taylor. However, despite this well-documented independence, the artist ensured a critical backlash by timing the release of McCartney to coincide with that of the Beatles' Let It Be and his announced departure from the group. His low-key debut was labelled self-indulgent, yet its intimacy was a welcome respite from prevailing heavy rock, and in 'Maybe I'm Amazed', offered one of Paul's finest songs. Ram, credited to McCartney and his wife Linda (b. Linda Eastman, 24 September 1942, Scarsdale, New York, USA, d. 17 April 1998), was also maligned as commentators opined that the singer lacked an acidic riposte to his often sentimental approach. The album nonetheless spawned a US number 1 in 'Uncle Albert/Admiral Halsey', while an attendant single, 'Another Day', reached number 2 in the UK. Drummer Denny Seiwell, who had assisted on these sessions, was invited to join a projected group, later enhanced by former Moody Blues' member Denny Laine. The quartet, dubbed Wings, then completed Wildlife, another informal set marked by an indifference to dexterity and the absorption of reggae and classic rock 'n' roll rhythms. Having expanded the line-up to include Henry McCullough (ex-Grease Band; guitar), McCartney took the group on an impromptu tour of UK colleges, before releasing three wildly contrasting singles, 'Give Ireland Back To The Irish' (banned by the BBC), 'Mary Had A Little Lamb' and 'Hi Hi Hi'/'C Moon' (all 1972). The following year, Wings completed 'My Love', a sculpted ballad in the accepted McCartney tradition, and Red Rose Speedway, to that date his most formal set. Plans for the unit's fourth album were undermined by the defection of McCullough and Seiwell, but the remaining trio emerged triumphant from a series of productive sessions undertaken in a Lagos studio.

Band On The Run was undeniably a major achievement, and did much to restore McCartney's faltering reputation. Buoyed by adversity, the artist offered a passion and commitment missing from earlier albums and, in turn, reaped due commercial plaudits when the title song and 'Jet' reached both US and UK Top 10 positions. The lightweight, but catchy, 'Junior's Farm' provided another hit single before a reconstituted Wings, which now included guitarist Jimmy McCulloch (d. 28 September 1979; ex-Thunderclap Newman and Stone The Crows) and Joe English (drums), completed Venus And Mars, Wings At The Speed Of Sound and the expansive on-tour collection, Wings Over America. Although failing to scale the artistic heights of Band On The Run, such sets re-established McCartney as a major figure and included best-selling singles such as 'Listen To What The Man Said' (1975), 'Silly Love Songs' and 'Let 'Em In' (both 1976). Although progress was momentarily undermined by the departures of McCulloch and English, Wings enjoyed its most spectacular success with 'Mull Of Kintyre' (1977), a saccharine paean to Paul and Linda's Scottish retreat which topped the UK charts for nine consecutive weeks and sold over 2.5 million copies in Britain alone. Although regarded as disappointing, London Town nevertheless included 'With A Little Luck', a US number 1, but although Wings' newcomers Laurence Juber (guitar) and Steve Holly (drums) added weight to Back To The Egg, it, too, was regarded as inferior. Whereas the group was not officially disbanded until April 1981, McCartney's solo recordings, 'Wonderful

Christmastime' (1979), 'Coming Up' (1980) and McCartney II, already heralded a new phase in the artist's career. However, if international success was maintained through duets with Stevie Wonder ('Ebony And Ivory'), Michael Jackson ('The Girl Is Mine') as well as 'Say Say Say' and 'Pipes Of Peace', attendant albums were marred by inconsistency. McCartney's feature film, Give My Regards To Broadstreet, was maligned by critics, a fate befalling its soundtrack album, although the optimistic ballad, 'No More Lonely Nights', reached number 2 in the UK. The artist's once-prolific output then noticeably waned, but although his partnership with 10cc guitarist Eric Stewart gave Press To Play a sense of direction, it failed to halt a significant commercial decline. Choba B CCCP, a collection of favoured 'oldies' solely intended for release in the USSR, provided an artistic respite and publicity, before a much-heralded collaboration with Elvis Costello produced material for the latter's Spike and McCartney's own Flowers In The Dirt, arguably his strongest set since Venus And Mars. Paradoxically, singles culled from the album failed to chart significantly, but a world tour, on which Paul and Linda were joined by Robbie McIntosh (ex-Pretenders; guitar), Wix (keyboards), Hamish Stuart (ex-Average White Band; bass/vocals) and Chris Whitten (drums), showed that McCartney's power to entertain was still intact. By drawing on material from the Beatles, Wings and solo recordings, this enduring artist demonstrated a prowess which spans over a quarter of a century. The extent of his diversity was emphasized by his collaboration with Carl Davis on the classical 'Liverpool Oratorio', which featured opera singer Dame Kiri Te Kanawa. Off The Ground received lukewarm reviews and soon dropped out of the charts after a brief run. The accompanying tour, however, was a different story. The ambitious stage show and effects undertook a world tour in 1993, and was one of the highest grossing tours in the USA during tht year.

Various rumours circulated in 1994 about a reunion with the surviving members of his most famous group. Both he and Yoko Ono appeared to have settled their longstanding differences, as had George Harrison and McCartney. The success in 1994-95 of the Beatles At The BBC indicated a ripe time for some kind of musical reunion. This was partly acheived with the overdubbing of 'Free As A Bird' and 'Real Love' for the magnificent Anthology series in 1996. The profile of the Beatles had rarely been higher and this was celebrated in the new year honours list by a knighthood for services to music to McCartney. Presumably this was in recognition for his outstanding work with Lennon.

No doubt spurred on by the Anthology, Flaming Pie sounded like McCartney meant it again. The addition of Steve Miller on three tracks added some gutsy rock guitar credibility. Mostly however, it was a magnificent return to form. Jeff Lynne's production was tempered to sound cooked to perfection, unlike some of his previous overbaked concoctions. This was most definitely for lovers of the Beatles' White Album. The varied contents included 'Heaven On A Sunday', with its descending acoustic guitar duelling with the ascending lead guitar of son James, and 'Used To Be Bad', an excellent simple up-tempo blues featuring Miller, both singers trading lines as their voices blend beautifully. Further tracks included some Memphis soul with 'Souvenir', and 'In It For The Money' which never loses pace for one moment. The folk simplicity of 'Calico Skys' is topped by the exquisite 'Somedays', a heart-tugging love song to Linda, and one of his finest songs in many decades. His love for his wife shines through the whole record. (Sadly, Linda lost her battle with cancer the following year, but was honoured with a memorial service on 9 June in London's Trafalgar Square.) Flaming Pie should ideally be listened to as one piece, since, in that context, it sounds like a minor masterpiece.

b. 25 July 1943, Liverpool, England. This ex-Yardbird's musical career resumed after his departure from Renaissance when, in an unfamiliar role on lead vocals and keyboards, he recorded 1973's On The Frontier with Shoot before concentrating on writing for other artists such as Dave Clark and Dave Berry. Plans to reform the original Renaissance line-up were quashed by Keith Relf's death in 1976, but the survivors continued as Illusion. Lingering enthusiasm for this outfit culminated in 1990's posthumous Enchanted Caress, which contained demos mostly composed and sung by McCarty, whose curriculum vitae by then included leadership of Ruthless Blues and later combos who, if popular club attractions, leaned heavily on the repertoires of the Yardbirds and their R&B contemporaries. This tendency also pervaded the British Invasion All-Stars which, financed by an American 60s fan, was a studio amalgam of McCarty and certain middle-aged peers. Earlier delvings into the past included 1981's Afternoon Tea, a spoken-word album of reminiscences with Chris Dreja (with whom McCarty also co-authored the Yardbirds' biography), and a Guide To Yardbirds Drumming video. Moreover, he was one of the Yardbirds who performed two UK concerts in 1983 and made an album under the guise of A Box Of Frogs. By the later 80s, the multi-talented McCarty emerged on yet another artistic front - plating new age music - when, as a mainstay of Stairway, his output was as prolific in its way as anything in the Yardbirds/Renaissance canon.

McClain, Charly

b. Charlotte Denise McClain, 26 March 1956, Jackson, Tennessee, USA. McClain began her musical career when only nine years old with her brother in a band called Charlotte And The Volunteers. For six years they worked locally and also had television appearances. She then started modelling swimsuits, changed her name to Charly and was signed to Epic in 1976. She had US country hits with 'Lay Down', 'Make The World Go Away', 'Surround Me With Love' and a duet with Johnny Rodriguez, 'I Hate The Way I Love It'. McClain had her first US country number 1 with the soap opera saga of 'Who's Cheatin' Who'. This was followed by 'Sleepin' With The Radio On' and two duets with Mickey Gilley, 'Paradise Tonight' (a number 1) and 'Candy Man'. In 1983, she married Wayne Massey, a star of the television soap One Life To Live, and they had success with the duets 'With Just One Look In Your Eyes' and 'You Are My Music, You Are My Song'. Massey encouraged her to record 'Radio Heart', also a US country number 1, and he became her record producer when she switched from Epic to Mercury Records. McClain has appeared in the television series Hart To Hart and Fantasy Island, and has been featured in numerous commercials.

McClain, Mighty Sam

b. 15 April 1943, Monroe, Louisiana, USA. Raised as one of 13 children, McClain first began singing in his mother's small gospel group when he was five, before starting work as a cotton picker. However, following disputes with his stepfather he ran away from home and the plantation at the age of 13. Eventually he found employment as valet to Little Melvin Underwood, taking over the singing role in his band when original vocalist Little Sonny Green left. Eventually the band settled in Penascola, Florida, where he started to sing part-time in the Dothan Sextet. Through disc jockey Papa Don Schroeder he was invited to record at Fame Studios in Muscle Shoals in Alabama. He subsequently built his reputation via a series of powerful soul singles released between 1966 and 1971 for labels such as Amy, Malaco and Atlantic Records. Among these singles were versions of Buster Brown's 'Fannie Mae', the country ballad 'Sweet Dreams' (in opposition to a 'white' version of the same song by Tommy McLain) and the Dan Penn/Spooner Oldham composition, 'In The Same Old Way' - three songs considered by many to be among the best southern soul 45s ever released. He also appeared three times at the Apollo Theatre. Afterwards, however, his career went into freefall, and through much of the 70s and 80s he subsisted on the streets of Penascola, Florida, as a dope pedlar. It was only in 1983 that he made a comeback, when producer Carlo Ditta invited him to return to the studio and record 'Pray'. This was followed by an EP, Your Perfect Companion, for the Orleans label. With interest in his lost career reborn, the Japanese label Dead Ball followed that release with a live recording of one of his shows in Tokyo. McClain also made a series of guest appearances on an album recorded by Hubert Sumlin for Black Top Records in 1987, before spending the next five years working on a failed real estate venture with his third wife in Houston. Nothing more was heard until he re-emerged on AudioQuest Records in 1993 with a stunning new album, Give It Up To Love. Featuring McClain originals alongside two cover versions (of Al Green and Carlene Carter songs), it attracted rave reviews in the soul and R&B music press, and was followed up two years later by Keep On Movin', as McClain at last began to enjoy the fruits of his labours and talent.

McClean, Bitty

b. *c.*1972, Birmingham, England. Bitty was so named by his grandmother because he was underweight as a baby. As a teenager he went on to study Sound Recording and Media at Sandwell College in Birmingham. He impressed in his studies, and lecturer Alan Cave, previously engineer to UB40 on Labour Of Love, recommended him to his former employers as a tape operator. He went to the band's Abattoir Studio and remained there for three years. Although nominally recording local bands, McClean would more often find himself sneaking back into the studio late at night to record demos. By chance, the band's Ali Campbell heard some of his material and was impressed enough to invite McClean to provide backing vocals and harmonies on UB40's UK number 1, 'Can't Help Falling In Love'. He also co-produced and engineered their subsequent album, Promises And Lies. Having given notice of his talents, he was signed by the newly established Brilliant Record Company in June 1993. His debut single, 'It Keeps Rainin', surged to number 2 in the UK charts in September of that year, and was a good example of the fare on offer for his debut long-playing set - as Bitty himself described it: 'Fresh, infectious, accessible reggae'. The immediate follow-ups were versions of Bunny Wailer's 'Pass It On' and Justin Hinds' 'Here I Stand', both of which followed a similar pattern.

McClennan, Tommy

b. 8 April 1908, Yazoo City, Mississippi, USA, d. *c.*1960, Chicago, Illinois, USA. McClennan's biography is fairly typical of many blues singers of his time and place. He was raised on the J.F. Sligh farm in rural Mississippi and learned to play the guitar at an early age. Working for tips on the streets and at private parties, he became acquainted with other performers such as Honeyboy Edwards and Robert Petway. Petway and McClennan shared a style so close that, later on record, it became difficult to tell them apart, a confusion they sometimes compounded by recording together. McClennan had a limited but effective percussive guitar style, often played by working on a single string. His voice was rough but full of humour, and also capable of expressing poignancy and subtle emotions. Around 1939, he moved to Chicago (as did Petway) and made a name for himself playing at clubs where expatriate southerners gathered to hear the 'down-home' sounds of their younger days. McClennan was an uncompromising character who, according to a famous story told by Big Bill Broonzy, found himself in trouble by refusing to adapt his songs to conform with northern sensibilities. His refusal to be impressed by the big city found expression in his often used, self-addressed, facetious aside: 'Play it right, you're in Chicago'. Although his 40-track career on record ended in 1942, he continued to play in the clubs into the post-war boom typified by Muddy Waters and Howlin' Wolf. One of his two known photographs shows him in the company of Sonny Boy Williamson (Rice Miller), Little Walter and Elmore James. His death is unconfirmed, but word of mouth suggests that he died, in poverty, around 1960.

McClintock, Harry

b. 8 October 1882, Knoxville, Tennessee, USA, d. 24 April 1957, San Francisco, California, USA. He learned guitar and sang as a child but left home in 1896 to travel. He worked briefly with a travelling show, before he hoboed his way to New Orleans. During his career, he was referred to as Haywire Mac, Radio Mac and sometimes just plain Mac. By 1897, he was busking on the streets where, for the first time, he sang his self-penned 'Big Rock Candy Mountain' (the song later became internationally popular and has been recorded by many artists). In 1898, he worked as a mule driver in the Philippines, delivering supplies to American troops involved in the war with Spain. In 1899, he assisted journalists reporting on the Boxer Rebellion in China, before visiting Australia. He moved to Africa and worked for the railroad delivering supplies to the British during the Boer War. In 1902, after visiting London to watch the coronation of Edward VII, he worked in Argentina, Barbados and St. Croix before returning to the USA to work on the west coast and in Alaska. He became involved with the Industrial Workers of the World and wrote several songs and poems for their publications, including his famous 'Hallelujah, I'm A Bum'. In 1925, while working as a brakeman, he gained a daily programme on KFRC San Francisco where both he and the aforementioned song soon proved very popular. In 13 sessions, between 1928 and 1932, he recorded 41 sides for Victor, including 'Hallelujah, I'm A Bum', 'The Bum Song' and 'The Bum Song #2'. The material also included hobo songs ('My Last Dollar'), cowboy ballads ('The Texas Rangers') and novelty numbers ('Ain't We Crazy'). Some were recorded with what was described as his Haywire Orchestra. In 1938, he re-recorded his three 'Bum' songs and 'Big Rock Candy Mountain' for Decca. He relocated to Hollywood in 1938 and made some film appearances, including several with Gene Autry. He also did regular radio work and wrote articles, plays and stories for several publications, sometimes under pseudonyms. His popular column 'The Railroad Boomer', for Railroad Magazine, ran for 10 years and in 1953, he returned to San Francisco to appear on the radio and television show The Breakfast Hour, until he officially retired in 1955. He continued, however, to make appearances by request whenever he felt inclined.

McClinton, Delbert

b. 4 November 1940, Lubbock, Texas, USA. This white R&B artist honed his craft working in a bar band, the Straitjackets, backing visiting blues giants such as Sonny Boy Williamson, Howlin' Wolf, Lightnin' Hopkins and Jimmy Reed. McClinton made his first recordings as a member of the Ron-Dels, and was noted for his distinctive harmonica work on Bruce Channel's 'Hey Baby', a Top 3 single in the UK and number 1 in the USA in 1962. Legend has it that on a tour of the UK with Channel, McClinton met a young John Lennon and advised him on his harmonica technique, resulting in the sound heard on 'Love Me Do'. Relocating to Los Angeles in the early 70s, McClinton emerged in a partnership with fellow Texan Glen Clark, performing country/soul. They achieved a degree of artistic success, releasing two albums before splitting, with McClinton embarking on a solo career. His subsequent output reflects several roadhouse influences. Three gritty releases, Victim Of Life's Circumstances, Genuine Cowhide and Love Rustler, offered country, R&B and southern-style funk, while a 1979 release, Keeper Of The Flame, contained material written by Chuck Berry and Don Covay, as well as several original songs, including loving remakes of two compositions from the Delbert And Glen period. Emmylou Harris had a C&W number 1 with McClinton's 'Two More Bottles Of Wine' in 1978, and 'B Movie Boxcar Blues' was used in the John Belushi/Dan Aykroyd film The Blues Brothers. His 1980 album, The Jealous Kind, contained his solitary hit single, a Jerry Williams song, 'Givin' It Up For Your Love', which reached the US Top 10. After a rest-period during much of the 80s, this rootsy and largely underrated figure made a welcome return in 1989 with the fiery Live From Austin. His most recent collection, the assured One Of The Fortunate Few, was arguably his finest recording to date.

McClinton, O.B.

b. Obie Burnett McClinton, 25 April 1940, Senatobia, Mississippi, USA, d. 23 September 1987. The son of a Baptist preacher, McClinton was dissuaded from listening to R&B, but took solace in country music. Having worked for a time as a disc jockey at radio station WDIA in Memphis, he forged a career as a songwriter, penning country-soul ballads for Otis Redding ('Keep Your Arms Around Me'), before finding the ideal foil in James Carr. Two of McClinton's compositions, 'You've Got My Mind Messed Up' (1966) and 'A Man Needs A Woman' (1968), stand among this singer's finest work. McClinton then became a staff writer at the Stax label and, in January 1971, began recording as a C&W artist on the company's Enterprise subsidiary. His albums there offered varied material, including versions of Wilson Pickett's 'Don't Let The Green Grass Fool You' (1972) - his most successful country chart single - and Merle Haggard's 'Okie From Muskogee'. McClinton briefly moved to Mercury in 1976, where he had a hit with 'Black Speck', before moving to Epic, where he scored half a dozen minor C&W hits. One of the few successful black country singers, McClinton died of abdominal cancer in September 1987.

b. 21 April 1942, Chicago, Illinois, USA, d. 13 November 1992, Los Angeles, California, USA. McClure's family moved to East St. Louis when he was two years old, and he was singing in church by the time he was nine. A year later, he provided the unbroken high-tenor lead in the otherwise all-female Spirit Of Illinois gospel group, who went on to tour the 'programs' with better-known gospel quartets such as the Swan Silvertones, the Pilgrim Travellers and the Soul Stirrers, for whom McClure's idol Sam Cooke was singing lead. By the late 50s, McClure was involved in R&B, and formed the doo-wop group Bobby And The Vocals. Subsequently, he sang with East St. Louis drummer Big Daddy Jenkins' band, before replacing vocalist Bernard Mosley with Oliver Sain's famous revue. Sain launched two other major blues/soul names, Little Milton and Fontella Bass. Bass and McClure duetted on his first recording, 'Don't Mess Up A Good Thing', which was released in January 1965 on Checker, and made the US Top 30. In the mid-60s, McClure moved to Chicago to gig with the likes of Otis Clay and Little Milton, but by the early 70s he was back in East St. Louis singing for Sain, sometimes duetting with Shirley Brown, and recording for Sain's Vanessa label as well as February 15 Records. He also cut for Sedgwick, Klondike, and Willie Mitchell's by now predominantly soul-orientated Memphis-based Hi label, for whom he recorded four good, but unsuccessful, sides. By the 80s McClure was working as a correction officer in an Illinois penitentiary, but still recorded two singles for B-Mac, before quitting his job and moving to Los Angeles where he recorded for Jerry 'Swamp Dogg' Williams and for ex-Stax man Al Bell's Edge Records. Sadly, Bobby McClure was only 50 when he died from a stroke following a brain aneurysm.

McClure, Ron

b. 22. November 1941, New Haven, Connecticut, USA. McClure started playing the accordion when he was five years old, and played the piano at high school. He studied the bass at the Julius Hartt Conservatory in Hartford, and when he left in 1963 went on to study composition with Hall Overton and Don Sebesky. By the time he joined Charles Lloyd in 1967, he had played with Buddy Rich, Herbie Mann and Wynton Kelly backing Wes Montgomery. Lloyd's enormously successful group took McClure on worldwide tours before he returned to San Francisco, where he was a founder member of the fusion group Fourth Way. Later on, he played with the group Blood, Sweat And Tears before settling to studio work in New York. McClure played with musicians as diverse as vocalists Tony Bennett, Dionne Warwick and the Pointer Sisters, and instrumentalists Thelonious Monk, Gary Burton and Joe Henderson. In 1985, he joined the group of Al DiMeola and then worked with Michel Petrucciani and George Russell. His firm bass lines are characterized by rhythmic fills on open strings against the fretboard. He has taught at the Berklee College Of Music (1971) and Long Island University (1983-85).

● ALBUMS: with Charles Lloyd Love In (1967)★★★★, Charles Lloyd In The Soviet Union (1967)★★★, with Fourth Way Sun And Moon (1969)★★★, with Joe Henderson In Pursuit Of Blackness (1971)★★★, Descendants (Ken Music 1992)★★, Yesterday's Tomorrow (EMP 1992)★★★.

b. 14 February 1935, London, Ontario, Canada. After playing valve trombone in various bands in his homeland during the mid- and late 50s, McConnell joined fellow-Canadian Maynard Ferguson's New York Band in 1964. Despite the attention he attracted there, he returned to Canada to work with the Phil Nimmons band; he also played in studio orchestras and wrote many arrangements. Towards the end of the 60s he formed a band, the Boss Brass, playing his own charts of currently popular music for a 15-piece brass and rhythm group. In the early 70s McConnell added a reed section and, with the band's musical policy slanted strongly towards jazz, he made a series of outstanding albums. Among the musicians in the band were Sam Noto, Guido Basso, Don Thompson and Ed Bickert. Apart from its own albums, the band also made records with Singers Unlimited, the Hi-Lo's, Phil Woods and Mel Tormé. He also made Old Friends/New Music, using a sextet drawn from the big band. Despite the popularity of the Boss Brass and the success of its albums, by the late 80s McConnell decided it was time to make changes. He accepted a teaching post at the Dick Grove Music School in Los Angeles, where he relocated at the end of 1988. In the early 90s, he was active in the southern California jazz scene, playing with various rehearsal bands and seriously considering the reformation of his own big band. An excellent arranger with a real affection for hard-swinging, contemporary, big band jazz, McConnell has made an outstanding contribution to the development of this area of music. His decision to enter teaching (while stopping, at least temporarily) the flow of outstanding big band albums, should ensure that a future generation of musicians will develop some of the theories he has already put into practice.

McConville, Tom

b. 6 November 1950, Newcastle-Upon-Tyne, England, to a Scottish mother, and an Irish father. During the 70s, this fiddle player toured with comedian Mike Elliott, then teamed up with Bob Fox (guitar/vocals) to form a duo. McConville then worked briefly with Magna Carta in 1977. During 1979, he got together with songwriter Kieran Halpin to play clubs and festivals. Apart from the domestic circuit, they often performed on the Continent, particularly in Germany. They released two albums before reverting to solo work. In 1983, McConville formed Dab Hand with Jez Lowe and Tom Napper (b. England; tenor banjo). With only the one album to this line-up's credit, and insufficient work as a three-piece, McConville left in 1987, again returning to solo performances. In 1988, he released Straight From The Shoulder. The excellent follow-up Cross The River saw the fiddler establishing himself on the club and festival circuit. The album was produced, arranged and recorded by Chris Newman. In 1994 he recorded and formed a working duo with Pauline Cato.

McCoo, Marilyn

b. 30 September 1943, Jersey City, New Jersey, USA. McCoo first reached stardom as a founding member of the Fifth Dimension. That group was formed in Los Angeles in 1965 as the Versatiles, and enjoyed a number of Top 10 hits between 1967 and 1972, including 'Up-Up And Away', 'Stoned Soul Picnic', 'Aquarius/Let The Sunshine In' and 'Wedding Bell Blues'. McCoo married Fifth Dimension member Billy Davis Jnr in 1969, and together they left the group in 1975 to form an act as a duo. Signed to ABC Records, their first single, 'I Hope We Get To Love In Time', was a minor chart entry in 1976, but the album of the same title yielded 'You Don't Have To Be A Star (To Be In My Show)', a number 1 hit. The couple then hosted their own television show for six weeks in 1977. They released two further albums together in 1977 and 1978, and both recorded solo albums in the 80s. In 1981, McCoo hosted the popular television musical programme Solid Gold, with which she remained until 1984, returning once more in 1987-88. She released a gospel-orientated album in 1991.

McCook, Tommy

b. 1927, Jamaica, West Indies, d. 5 May 1998, Atlanta, Georgia, USA. From the age of 10, McCook attended the Alpha Catholic School For Boys, where he learnt tenor saxophone, flute and music theory. He left Alpha at 14, and played with the dance bands of Eric Dean and Roy Coburn, subsequently developing into a fine jazz player. During the late 40s and early 50s he was a frequent visitor to Count Ossie's camp, where he jammed with Ossie's Rastafarian hand-drummers, developing a deep love for their music in the process. In 1954 McCook joined a dance band in the Bahamas, and further developed his jazz technique. On his return to Jamaica in 1962, he became involved in the development of ska, emerging as a founder-member of the Skatalites in 1963. His understanding of jazz, R&B and Jamaican musical forms enabled him to make a huge contribution to the group, which changed the course of Jamaican music. The group backed all of the major ska vocalists, and recorded a huge body of instrumental music. Some of the best examples of his work with the Skatalites are compiled on Ska Authentic. After the Skatalites split up in 1965, McCook formed the Supersonics, who became Duke Reid's house band at Treasure Isle studios. Their sublime, cool style made Treasure Isle the most popular studio of the rocksteady era with hits from the Techniques, Alton Ellis And The Flames, Justin Hinds And The Dominoes and many more. A compilation of Supersonics instrumentals from this period, simply entitled Tommy McCook, was later released in the UK. Since that time, he played on many recordings for Coxsone Dodd, Bunny Lee, Channel One, Joe Gibbs, Randys and other producers. Solo albums released by Bunny Lee included Cookin', Brass Rockers and Hot Lava. Glen Brown also issued an excellent blank-labelled album, usually called Horny Dub, and with trumpeter Bobby Ellis he made an album (Blazing Horns)for Yabby You. He was also a featured soloist on most Aggrovators, Revolutionaries and Professionals instrumentals from this period. Prior to his death from heart failure, McCook toured with the Skatalites, although he was unable to perform on the group's last international performances due to ill-health. A memorial service was held in an Atlanta-based Methodist church.

McCord, Castor

b. 17 May 1907, Birmingham, Alabama, USA, d. 14 February 1963. Together with his twin brother, Ted (Theodore Jobetus), McCord played clarinet and saxophones in the Edgar Hayes band in the early 20s (Ted also playing similar instruments). McCord moved on to the band of Horace Henderson when it was still a student group at Wilberforce University, and remained with the band when it became a professional group. At the end of the decade he was with the Mills Blue Rhythm Band, and also played with Louis Armstrong and others. Following a trip to Europe in 1934 he remained in France for some time and also travelled to India and the Netherlands. During this period he again played with Armstrong and also with Coleman Hawkins. In the late 30s he was back in the USA where he joined Benny Carter and then played with Eddie Mallory and Claude Hopkins before retiring from music in the mid-40s.

McCorkle, Susannah

b. 1 January 1949, Berkeley, California, USA. In the late 60s, McCorkle lived for a while in Paris. It was during this sojourn that she heard Billie Holiday on records and decided to take up singing. Multi-lingual, she lived for a while in Italy, working as a translator and taking any singing jobs she could find. In 1972, she moved to the UK, singing in clubs and pubs and learning about what she had determined would be her future career. She also made two albums which, although well received, enjoyed only limited circulation. In the late 70s, McCorkle returned to the USA and settled in New York, where a five-month engagement at the Cookery in Greenwich Village brought her to wider public attention and elicited rave reviews from critics. She continued to record during the 80s, and her maturing style and the darkening timbre of her voice greatly enhanced her performances. By the early 90s, with the release by Concord Records of No More Blues and Sabia, two enormously successful albums, McCorkle was poised to make her name known to the wider world. Indeed, her linguistic abilities, skills which enabled her to translate lyrics, notably the Brazilian songs on Sabia, make her a likely candidate for international success. In the meantime, she is consolidating her status in jazz with awards, including the 1989 New York Music Award, and is being recorded by the Smithsonian Institute, the youngest singer ever to be included in their popular music series. A graduate of the University of California at Berkeley, McCorkle has also had several short stories published and, in 1991, was working on her first novel.

McCormack, John

b. 14 June 1884, Athlone, Eire, d. 16 September 1945. McCormack was one of the most renowned tenors of the first part of the 20th century, as well as an early recording star. After winning a singing competition in Dublin, he made his first records in London in 1904. He studied opera singing in Milan, and regularly appeared at Covent Garden in London after 1909. From 1907 he had a dual recording career, releasing both operatic arias and popular songs. Among those most associated with McCormack were 'The Minstrel Boy', 'The Irish Immigrant' and 'The Sunshine Of Your Smile'. He made hundreds of records, covering virtually the whole repertoire of Victorian parlour ballads and Irish folk songs and ballads. During World War I, he enjoyed tremendous success with his version of 'It's A Long, Long Way To Tipperary' and Ivor Novello's 'Keep The Home Fires Burning'. He also gave numerous fundraising concerts in the USA. In 1928, McCormack became a Papal Count and the following year made his film debut in Song O'My Heart. During the 30s he gave numerous radio broadcasts and continued to record and give recitals. During his lifetime, over 200 million copies of McCormack's recordings were sold and his continuing popularity is proven by the 15 reissued albums of his work released during the 80s.

McCoy, Charlie

b. 28 March 1941, Oak Hill, West Virginia, USA. When McCoy was eight years old, he ordered a harmonica for 50 cents and a box-top, but he was more interested in the guitar. He played in rock 'n' roll bands in Miami, where Mel Tillis heard him and suggested that he visit Nashville to work as a singer. Although his singing career did not take off, he played drums for US hitmakers Johnny Ferguson and Stonewall Jackson. In 1961, McCoy recorded as a singer for US Cadence Records and entered the charts with 'Cherry Berry Wine'. He then formed a rock 'n' roll band, Charlie McCoy And The Escorts, which played in Nashville clubs for several years. McCoy played harmonica on Ann-Margret's 'I Just Don't Understand' and Roy Orbison's 'Candy Man', and the success of the two records led to offers of session work. McCoy became the top harmonica player in Nashville, playing up to 400 sessions a year. He worked with Bob Dylan, playing harmonica on 'Obviously Five Believers', trumpet on 'Rainy Day Women, Nos. 12 And 35', and bass on several other tracks. The success of Dylan and other rock musicians in Nashville prompted McCoy and other sessionmen to form Area Code 615. McCoy had a US chart hit in 1972 with a revival of 'Today I Started Loving You Again', but, considering his love of blues harmonica player Little Walter, his records are comparatively unadventurous and middle-of-the-road. Nevertheless, he often reached the US country charts with instrumental interpretations of overworn country songs. McCoy joined Barefoot Jerry and was featured on the group's 1974 US country hit, 'Boogie Woogie'. He now limits his session appearances, largely because he is musical director of the television series Hee-Haw. McCoy frequently visits the UK and has played the Wembley Country Festival with other Nashville musicians. He appeared with other Nashville session men on Ween's oddball 12 Golden Country Greats in 1996.

McCoy, Clyde

b. 29 December 1903, Ashland, Kentucky, USA, d. 1 June 1990, Memphis, Tennessee, USA. McCoy grew up in Portsmouth, Ohio, bought his first trumpet at the age of nine and taught himself to play. While in his teens he formed his own small group, and by the late 20s, led a full orchestra, playing clubs and ballrooms. Using a mute, he developed a distinctive hiccuping, growling, 'wah-wah' trumpet sound, exemplified by his first big hit in 1931, 'Sugar Blues'. This first McCoy recording of the number on Columbia Records, (he re-recorded it several times), reputedly sold several million copies and became his theme tune. His other hits during the 30s included Glen Gray's signature tune 'Smoke Rings', 'In The Cool Of The Night', 'Wah Wah Lament', 'The Goona Goo' and 'Sugar Blues', this time on Decca. In 1937, McCoy added a female vocal group, the Bennett Sisters, and later married the lead singer. During World War II McCoy took his band and vocalists into the Navy's Special Services as a complete unit. He re-formed after the war and during the 50s had an especially successful band, working major clubs, ballrooms and concert halls throughout the USA and Canada. In later years he often led a small Dixieland outfit, and was still performing up to the mid-80s.

McCoy, Joe

b. 11 May 1905, Raymond, Mississippi, USA, d. 28 January 1950, Chicago, Illinois, USA. An early start learning guitar prepared McCoy for a diverse recording career. At first, he partnered his wife, Memphis Minnie, and they made many blues records together in the late 20s and early 30s. McCoy (under the pseudonym Kansas Joe) played beautifully tight, two-guitar arrangements, alternating between them on lead vocals, and occasionally playing as a duet. When the couple split up, McCoy was well-established in Chicago and continued to record as accompanist to other artists, under his own name or a variety of pseudonyms (including religious records as Hallelujah Joe). He adopted a more urbane blues style as time went on and, in 1936, he began a long and successful series of recordings with the jazz-orientated group the Harlem Hamfats.

McCoy, Neal

b. Hubert Neal McGauhey Jnr. (surname pronounced McGoy), 30 July 1963, Jacksonville, Texas, USA. McCoy grew up with a love of country as well as pop, soul and big band music. He started performing as Neal McGoy and his break came when Janie Fricke was a judge in a talent contest that he won. She mentioned McCoy to Charley Pride, who signed him to a booking and management contract and asked him to be his opening act. His debut single was 'That's How Much I Love You' on 16th Avenue Records, but in 1991, he moved to Atlantic Records and adjusted his name to Neal McCoy. After several minor hits, including 'If I Built You A Fire', 'Where Forever Begins', 'Now I Pray For Rain' and 'No Doubt About It', he found success with his excellent third album and had his first US country number 1s with the title track, 'No Doubt About It', and 'Wink'. 'You Gotta Love That' was a Top 10 hit, and stayed on the US country singles chart for over a year. Further singles and albums have proved equally successful.

McCoy, Robert

b. 31 March 1912, Aliceville, Alabama, USA, d. 1978, Birmingham, Alabama, USA. Jabbo Williams was a family friend, and Cow Cow Davenport and Pinetop Smith were visitors to the McCoy home. McCoy claimed to have played piano on record behind Jaybird Coleman in 1930 and, in 1937, he accompanied a number of Birmingham artists at a session organized by Lucille Bogan, of whose band he was a member. After war service, McCoy largely retired (although he claimed to have recorded with Jerry McCain). In the early 60s he was extensively recorded by a local enthusiast; attempts to commercialize his sound with R&B musicians and songs failed, but his exploration of the older repertoire resulted in some valuable performances. Heavily indebted to Race Records for material, and stylistically influenced by Leroy Carr, McCoy nevertheless preserved the rough, percussive piano styles of Birmingham. He had become a church deacon by 1975.

McCoy, Van

b. 6 January 1944, Washington, DC, USA, d. 6 July 1979. This successful artist had been a member of several groups prior to announcing his solo career with 'Hey Mr DJ'. Released in 1959, the single was distributed by Sceptre Records, with whom McCoy subsequently served in an A&R capacity. He also branched out into writing and production work, making contributions to hits by the Drifters, Gladys Knight And The Pips and Barbara Lewis. Following that, McCoy embarked on a fruitful relationship with Peaches And Herb. In 1968, he established VMP (Van McCoy Productions) and enjoyed further success with Jackie Wilson ('I Get The Sweetest Feeling') and Brenda And The Tabulations ('Right On The Tip Of My Tongue'). He later became the musical arranger for the Stylistics, on the departure of Thom Bell, and emphasized the sweet, sentimental facets of their sound. McCoy was also encouraged to record under his own name and, fronting the Soul Symphony, secured an international smash in 1975 with the multi-million-selling disco-dance track, 'The Hustle'. This perky performance set the pattern for further releases but the style quickly grew anonymous. McCoy continued his successful production career with, among others, Faith, Hope And Charity, until his premature death from a heart attack in 1979.

McCoys

Formed in Union City, Indiana, USA, in 1962, this beat group initially comprised Rick Zehringer (b. 5 August 1947, Fort Recovery, Ohio, USA; guitar), his brother Randy (b. 1951, Union City, Indiana, USA; drums) and bassist Dennis Kelly. Known variously as Rick And The Raiders or the Rick Z Combo, the group later added Ronnie Brandon (organ), becoming the McCoys soon after Randy Hobbs replaced the college-bound Kelly. The quartet became a highly popular attraction throughout America's midwest, and were brought to Bert Berns' Bang label by producers Feldman/Gottherer/Goldstein. The group's debut 'Hang On Sloopy' (1965), topped the US chart and reached the UK Top 5, but successive releases in a similar gutsy style fared less well; an early b-side, 'Sorrow', was later adopted by the Merseys, and in turn was covered by David Bowie on his 1973 Pin-Ups. The group discarded its bubblegum image with the progressive Infinite McCoys, and as the house band at New York's popular Scene club. Owner/entrepreneur Steve Paul later paired the group with blues protégé Johnny Winter, whose Johnny Winter And featured the Zehringer siblings and Randy Hobbs, with Rick, now Rick Derringer, handling production. When this group was disbanded, Derringer joined Edgar Winter before embarking on a solo career.

McCracken, Bob

b. 23 November 1904, Dallas, Texas, USA, d. 4 July 1972, Los Angeles, California, USA. McCracken's early clarinet playing included work in Doc Ross's band with Jack Teagarden. He worked in Chicago and New York with Willard Robison's Band in the late 20s before returning to Texas. It was only in 1939 that he settled in Chicago and worked with various artists including trumpeters Jimmy McPartland and Wingy Manone. His elegant playing fitted well with the Louis Armstrong All Stars with whom he played in the early 50s, touring Europe in 1952-53. He played with Kid Ory's Band before settling in California, where he continued playing with Ben Pollack (drums), Pete Dailey (cornet), Jack Teagarden and Wild Bill Davison.

McCracklin, Jimmy

b. James David Walker, 13 August 1921, St. Louis, Missouri, USA. A former professional boxer, McCracklin began his singing career in 1945. Four years later he formed his own band, the Blues Blasters, in San Francisco, but almost a decade passed before the artist secured minor fame for his single 'The Walk'. This gritty slice of R&B crossed over into the pop charts via Dick Clark's American Bandstand show where it was favoured by the resident dancers. In the wake of this success, McCracklin continued to enjoy intermittent chart success. 'Just Got To Know' (1961) and 'Think' (1965) reached the US R&B Top 10, but later blues/soul-styled releases fared less well and confined this underrated performer's appeal to a more specialist audience.

McCrae, George

b. 19 October 1944, West Palm Beach, Florida, USA. A member of a vocal group, the Stepbrothers, while at elementary school, McCrae later joined the Jivin' Jets. This unit broke up on his induction into the US Navy, but was re-formed by the singer on completing his service in 1967. McCrae's wife, Gwen McCrae, joined the line-up, but after six months the couple began work as a duo. Together they recorded two singles, the second of which, 'Lead Me On', won Gwen a contract as a solo artist with Columbia Records. She received sole credit on the song's ensuing re-release which reached the R&B Top 40. McCrae then began managing his wife's career, but following an R&B Top 20 hit with 'For Your Love' (1973), the pair resumed their singing partnership. McCrae was responsible for one of soul's most memorable releases when Gwen failed to arrive for a particular studio session. He was obliged to sing lead on 'Rock Your Baby', a melodic composition written and produced by Harry Wayne (KC) Casey and Rick Finch, the two protagonists of KC And The Sunshine Band. This soaring, buoyant song topped both the US and UK charts, while two further releases, 'I Can't Leave You Alone' (1974) and 'It's Been So Long' (1975) also reached the UK Top 10. McCrae's work was less well received at home but he continued to record with and manage his wife, appearing on her US number 1 R&B hit 'Rockin' Chair' (1975). In 1984, George McCrae enjoyed a final minor UK chart entry with 'One Step Closer (To Love)', but continued to record and tour in the mid-90s.

McCrae, Gwen

b. 21 December 1943, Pensacola, Florida, USA. The wife of George McCrae, Gwen made her mark in the mid-70s with a delightful series of southern-style soul numbers produced by Steve Alaimo and Clarence Reid for Henry Stone's Miami-based TK operation. She first found success with a remarkable remake of the old Bobby Bland gospel-blues, 'Lead Me On' (R&B number 32, 1970). The record was recorded for TK Records, but leased to Columbia. The following year, now on TK's subsidiary label Cat, she followed with an equally remarkable remake of the Ed Townsend oldie, 'For Your Love' (R&B number 17). McCrae had her only pop hit with 'Rockin' Chair' in 1975, when the number 1 R&B hit crossed over to reach the US Top 10. 'Love Insurance' (R&B number 16) was a respectable follow-up in 1975. TK collapsed in 1980, and McCrae moved to New Jersey, and while there signed with Atlantic, after which she entered the charts with 'Funky Sensation' (number 22 R&B) in 1981. McCrae's last US chart record was in 1984, but in the UK she had a hit with 'All This Love That I'm Giving' (number 63), in 1988. Ironically it was her only UK chart record.

McCray, Larry

b. 5 April 1960, Magnolia, Arkansas, USA. McCray was given his first guitar by his sister Clara when he was 12 years old. Soon afterwards the pair moved to Saginaw, Michigan, to be followed over several months by the rest of the family. He played saxophone in high school, but at home he persevered with the guitar, with his brothers Carl and Steve on bass and drums. Like most of his generation, he listened to funk music as well as blues and liked Eric Clapton and Jeff Beck as much as Albert King, B.B. King and Albert Collins. While working a day job, he gigged with Lazy Lester and jammed with his brothers. A basement tape from those sessions brought about his contract with PointBlank. Ambition was the label's initial release and to promote it, McCray toured Europe with Gary Moore. While that album was heavily rock-orientated, Delta Hurricane, recorded in Memphis with production assistance by Mike Vernon, reverted to a more traditional blues stance, with McCray paying homage to the guitarists that had influenced him.

McCready, Mindy

b. Malinda Gayle McCready, Fort Myers, Florida, USA. McCready is one of the brightest new voices in country music, updating the traditional values of the genre for a new generation of listeners. Born and raised in southern Florida, she moved to Nashville when she was 18. Meeting up with producer David Malloy, she spent almost a year performing and preparing her demo tape, before signing with RLG Records. Released in April 1996, her debut Ten Thousand Angels was an assertive and confident collection that revealed McCready as an icon of female independence and self-reliance. The album gained strong reviews and by 1997 had gone platinum. The follow-up, Don't Stay The Night, was released in November 1997 to further acclaim and widespread commercial acceptance. Though McCready does not write any of her own material, she covers songs that deal frankly with relationships and sexual dilemmas, and on tracks such as 'What If I Do' and 'This Is Me', she sounds like a country version of Alanis Morissette. Her rising status was confirmed by recent support slots for George Strait, Alan Jackson and Tim McGraw.

McCurdy, Ed

b. 11 January 1919, Willow Hill, Pennsylvania, USA. McCurdy started out as a gospel singer on radio station WKY in Oklahoma City, and went on to work as a night-club and theatre performer, and radio announcer. Married in 1945, it was in 1946 that McCurdy began singing folk-songs on Canadian radio, and later recorded his first album for the Whitehall label. In 1952, he started writing and performing, for children's programmes, both on radio and on television, and, in 1954, moved to New York City. For A Ballad Singer's Choice, he was accompanied by Erik Darling on guitar and banjo. The album included folk standards such as 'Barbara Allen' and 'Pretty Saro'. McCurdy performed at the 1959 Newport Folk Festival, and appeared on four tracks on Folk Festival At Newport Vol.3. The album was recorded on 11-12 July 1959, and released the following year. McCurdy also played the festival in 1960 and 1963. He wrote the song 'Last Night I Had The Strangest Dream' in 1950. The song has been covered by many singers, including Simon And Garfunkel, and was especially popular with the peace movements of the 60s. Despite health problems during the 60s, McCurdy was able to undertake a European tour in 1976.

McCusker, John

b. 15 May 1973, Scotland. Prolific Scottish musician John McCusker studied violin from the age of seven, but was not drawn to the folk tradition until, at the age of 12, he saw his first concert by the Battlefield Band, the group he would subsequently join. Inspired, he formed a folk band with school friends, named Parcel Of Rogues. As he later recalled, 'we just stole off Chieftains albums as we didn't know any better'. The Battlefield Band invited Parcel Of Rogues to support them at their Highland Circus extravaganza in 1989, leading to the release of an album for Temple Records. McCusker also worked widely as a session musician during this time, collaborating with the BMX Bandits, Teenage Fanclub and Peter Nardini among others while simultaneously studying at Glasgow's Academy of Scottish Music and Dance. However, he was still unsure as to whether his future lay in classical or folk music. The decision was made for him when Brian McNeill left the Battlefield Band and the same group's Robin Morton invited him to become his replacement. Still only a 16-year-old, he made his debut with the band at Glasgow's George Square. He has continued to tour and record with the band since, and also worked extensively as a session musician (appearing on over 40 albums by the time he was 22) and producer (producing Kate Rusby And Kathryn Roberts' debut album). In 1995 he also announced the release of his debut solo album. Joined by established musicians such as Simon Thoumire, Iain McDonald and Ian Carr, Ian McCusker primarily consisted of original material written in a traditional vein (notably 'Radio Sweetheart's Waltz').

McCutcheon, John

b. 14 August 1952, Wisconsin, USA. McCutcheon, whose family background encompasses farmers and shoemakers, started playing guitar in the early 60s. He picked up a great number of traditional American songs and tunes from the Appalachians, and learned a wealth of instruments, including fiddle, banjo, autoharp and dulcimer. He is especially regarded for his songwriting and hammer-dulcimer playing, as can be heard on Step By Step. His dulcimer-playing encompasses folk, classical, jazz and many other elements. Fine Times At Our House received a Grammy nomination on release, while Step By Step received the NAIRD Award in 1987 for string music album of the year. In 1986, Frets magazine readers poll named McCutcheon the String Instrumentalist of the Year. 'Christmas In The Trenches', from Winter Solstice, tells the story from a soldier's point of view of the day when opposing troops came together to celebrate Christmas in no-man's land during World War I. Mail Myself To You and Howjadoo, in contrast, consisted of children's songs, both traditional and contemporary. In 1984, McCutcheon co-produced, co-wrote and arranged Watch Out by Holly Near. Occasionally, he tours the UK. He has also recorded with songwriter Si Kahn, including Signs Of The Times. McCutcheon also collected and recorded a good deal of Nicaraguan music, which was released on Rounder as a double album, Nicaragua Presente!, in 1989. Since 1989, he has been co-editor for 'Folk Blues And Bayond', a regular piece in International Musician magazine.

McDaniel, Floyd

b. 21 July 1915, USA, d. 22 July 1995, Chicago, Illinois, USA. Singer and guitarist McDaniel took his first professional engagement in the late 30s with the Rhythm Rascals. After becoming leader of the Cotton Club Tramp Band in New York he found his most famous and enduring professional commitment with the Five Blazes, beginning in 1941. Fusing jazz and R&B, the group stayed together through the war years and into the mid-50s, proving an ever popular attraction on the east coast of America. After their dissolution McDaniel continued to work as a session and live musician. He sang back-up vocals for Sam Cooke for a period before joining one of the numerous line-ups of the Ink Spots for over 10 years. In the 90s he was still active, recording music with the Blues Swingers for Delmark Records as late as 1994 and played at the 1995 Chicago Blues Festival. He died of cancer a year later aged 80.

McDaniel, Mel

b. 6 September 1942, Checotah, Oklahoma, USA. McDaniel began working in bands around Tulsa - first on trumpet, then on guitar - and J.J. Cale wrote and produced his first single, 'Lazy Me'. He moved to Nashville in 1969, and after two years of knocking on doors, his brother found him steady work at a club in Anchorage, Alaska. In the mid-70s, he began recording demos for a Nashville publisher and his singing talents were then recognized. In 1976 he entered the US country charts with 'Have A Dream On Me' and he had a considerable success with 'Gentle To Your Senses'. A record about a synthetic lover, 'Plastic Girl', was banned by radio stations. He recorded many songs by Bob McDill including 'Louisiana Saturday Night', 'Right In The Palm Of Your Hand', 'I Call It Love' and his US country number 1, 'Baby's Got Her Blue Jeans On'. He wrote Conway Twitty's tribute to the Grand Ole Opry, 'The Grandest Lady Of Them All', while his hippie anthem 'Roll Your Own' has been recorded by Hoyt Axton, Arlo Guthrie and Commander Cody.

McDaniels, Gene

b. Eugene B. McDaniels, 12 February 1935, Kansas City, Kansas, USA. A former gospel singer and bandleader, McDaniels completed studies at Omaha's Conservatory of Music before embarking on a recording career. Signed to Liberty in the late 50s, he enjoyed several local hits, including 'In Times Like These' and 'The Green Door', prior to securing two US Top 5 entries in 1961 with 'A Hundred Pounds Of Clay' and 'Tower Of Strength'. Both singles fared less well in Britain, where cover versions by Craig Douglas and Frankie Vaughan took the plaudits, but McDaniels' influence on British music was acknowledged by his appearance in the film It's Trad, Dad. McDaniels' last US chart entry came the following year with 'Point Of No Return', a smooth, jazz-based performance and arguably the singer's finest release. He sadly fell from favour when tastes changed following the rise of the Beatles and his subsequent efforts at soul, tinged with social consciousness, paled beside these early recordings.

McDermott's Two Hours

Though they only released one album and dissolved in the late 80s, this Brighton, Sussex, England band's single recording, The Enemy Within, remains much prized among folk fans and has been widely bootlegged. An indicator of the esteem in which it is held was confirmed when the Levellers included one of its tracks, 'Dirty Davey', as the only non-original composition on Levelling The Land. The song, born in a pub session in Brighton, relayed the true story of an acquaintance who hanged himself while in police custody. The Levellers' manager, Phil Nelson, had originally issued The Enemy Within on his Hag label prior to his main charges signing to Musidisc Records.

Indeed, the principal songwriter of McDermott's Two Hours, Nick Burbridge, claims to have taught Mark Chadwick the guitar. His main collaborator was Tim O'Leary (fiddle; the brother of Christy O'Leary of Boys Of The Lough). Their name was taken from Tommy McDermott, who became a disc jockey for two hours on Radio Free Derry in the late 60s during the riots, playing the Incredible String Band and urging everyone to love one another before he was dragged out. The album was completed in testing circumstances. '(It) was recorded in a tiny basement called Bloomsbury Studios over three days, and mixed in two. We pressed a thousand and they all went.' Yet as Burbridge later confessed, McDermott's Two Hours never possessed the same sense of defiance as either the man who inspired their name or their peers the Levellers, committed to playing nearly 300 gigs a year. The group broke up after just two years of existence in 1991 after an appearance at the Reading Festival. Burbridge is also a published playwright, having written three plays: the typically politicised War Without Honour with ex-intelligence officer Fred Holroyd concerning the British 'shoot to kill' policy in Ireland, Vermin and Dirty Tricks. Before the demise of McDermott's Two Hours he was signed to a publishing contract by Rykodisc and has continued to write songs, though he is still reluctant to tour again.

McDermott, John

b. 1956, Priesthill, Glasgow, Scotland. Although unable to read or write music, John McDermott has done much to keep traditional Celtic music alive in Canada, where he moved as a nine-year old child. Despite having a musical father, to whom he dedicated his 1995 album, Love Is A Voyage, McDermott never considered singing a viable career when he was a young man. Instead, he became a shipper and salesman for a chemical company, before starting work in the circulation department of the Toronto Sun. It was that newspaper's proprietors, who, after hearing him sing at a staff party, encouraged him to become a professional. McDermott's repertoire of Scottish and Irish songs has been in demand, both in Canada and the USA, ever since. His 1993 debut, Danny Boy, which was financed by local Toronto businessmen, sold close to 200,000 copies domestically. Although his subsequent releases were unable to uphold that sales profile, each has sold relatively well. He has also begun to win name-recognition in the USA. His debut sold disappointingly on release there for Angel Records, but a subsequent compilation, combining tracks licensed from his first two albums to the Newport, New York label Beautiful Music, served to awaken new audiences to McDermott's considerable talents as an interpreter of traditional material. Though even his biggest fans would have to concede that there is little that is innovative about the artist's approach, his competency, particularly in ballad work, can hardly be questioned. His inroads into the Irish-American communities has also been helped by his performance of the US national anthem at American football (Pittsburgh Steelers) and baseball (Chicago White Sox) games.

McDermott, Michael

Chicago, Illinois, USA-based singer McDermott had only just turned 20 when he was signed by Brian Koppelman of Giant Records in 1991, who co-produced his debut album alongside Don Gehman. However, Koppelman evidently saw in the songwriter a maturity beyond his years, inviting musicians including Bruce Hornsby to help out on the studio sessions. The subsequent Gethsemane was an attempt to move McDermott out of the 'folk' bracket, and featured a full-time backing band with which the artist subsequently toured. However, sales remained disappointing, and for his third album, McDermott played all the instruments himself. The songs were recorded as if they were 'home demos' at Joe Hardy's garage studio in Memphis, and this helped to produce a more vibrant background to his demanding lyric-writing. Of the few parts not played by McDermott himself, the most interesting inclusion was the (unlisted) track, 'Killing Me', featuring author Stephen King on guitar. Indeed King had previously used McDermott's lyrics in his novel Insomnia, and also wrote the liner notes to the album.

McDevitt, Chas

b. 1935, Glasgow, Scotland. McDevitt was the banjo player with the Crane River Jazz Band in 1955, before forming a skiffle group that won a talent contest organized by Radio Luxembourg. Another contestant, vocalist Nancy Whiskey (b. 1936, Glasgow, Scotland) joined the McDevitt group, which included guitarists Tony Kohn and Bill Branwell (from the Cotton Pickers skiffle group), Marc Sharratt (d. May 1991; washboard) and Lennie Hanson (bass). The group appeared in the film The Tommy Steele Story in 1957, performing 'Freight Train', a song introduced to Britain by Peggy Seeger who had learned it from its composer, black American folk singer Elizabeth Cotten. Issued by Oriole, the McDevitt/Whiskey version was a Top 10 hit in the UK and reached the US charts, although McDevitt was the object of a US lawsuit over the ownership of the copyright. After the release of a version of 'Greenback Dollar' and an EP as follow-ups, Whiskey left the group. With a studio group, the Skifflers, she made a series of singles for Oriole from 1957-59, including 'He's Solid Gone' and the folk song 'I Know Where I'm Going' and also released The Intoxicating Miss Whiskey. Having opened a Freight Train coffee bar in London, McDevitt continued to perform and record with new vocalist Shirley Douglas (b. 1936, Belfast, Northern Ireland), whom he later married. He briefly followed the rock 'n' roll trend with a conspicuous lack of success, and later performed duets with Douglas after the manner of Nina And Frederik. Among his later efforts were 'It Takes A Worried Man' (Oriole 1957), 'Teenage Letter' (1959) and 'One Love' (HMV 1961). Both McDevitt and Douglas recorded for Joy Records in the 70s enlisting session support from Joe Brown and Wizz Jones.

McDonald And Giles

Ian McDonald (b. 25 June 1946, London, England; keyboards/woodwind) and Mike Giles (b. 1942, Bournemouth, Dorset, England; drums) were founder members of King Crimson, but they left the group in December 1969, following an ill-tempered tour of the USA. Their lone album, McDonald And Giles, displayed similarities to their former incarnation, while adding a freer, jazz-like atmosphere. The duo was assisted by Mike's brother, Peter, and Steve Winwood, but despite their potential, the partners embarked on separate careers. McDonald later became a founder member of Foreigner.

McDonald, Billy

b. USA. Formerly a vocalist with the Carol Lofner Orchestra, McDonald later became a member of the Three Midshipmen with Kay Thompson. He formed his own dance band in 1936 in Balboa, California, USA. His sidemen included Ernie Barrell, Leon Gray, Harry Forbes, Hi Davidson, Ollie Mitchell, Bill Lamberton, Ian Bernard and Bob Handaway, performing under the tag line Billy McDonald And The Royal Highlanders. They concentrated on engagements in the Midwest and west coast of America, performing sentimental songs such as 'Friendly Arms And Western Skies', 'I'm Going Home', 'Everybody Dance', 'It's A Rainy Day', 'The Meaning Of Aloha', 'Hula Drums' and their theme song, 'Loch Lomond'. These and others were released on D&S and Decca Records. Many of the songs were themed after the sounds of the Pacific Islands, and McDonald took the band there in 1941. They were actually playing in Honolulu when Pearl Harbor was attacked by the Japanese during World War II. McDonald entered the services himself in 1942, but reconvened his band after war's end. However, they never recovered their popularity and in 1948 their leader took a job at the Fredericks Brothers Agency. Later he moved to the William Morris Agency, then the Hollywood offices of the Associated Booking Corporation.

McDonald, Brian, Group

This melodic US pop-rock outfit was put together in 1987 by keyboard wizard Brian McDonald. Enlisting the services of Will Hodges (guitar), Andrew G. Wilkes (bass), and D.W. Adams (drums), the group signed to Capitol Records and released Desperate Business the same year. Influenced by Nightranger, Bryan Adams and Jeff Paris, the album was a solid musical statement, marred only by McDonald's vocals, which lacked both power and range. However, the set did feature singer/actress Fiona on backing vocals, which helped the cause.

McDonald, Country Joe

b. 1 January 1942, El Monte, California, USA. Named Joe in honour of Joseph Stalin by his politically active parents, McDonald became immersed in Berkeley's folk and protest movement during the early 60s. In 1964, he made a low-key album with fellow performer Blair Hardman, and later founded the radical pamphlet, Rag Baby. An early copy included a four-track record that featured the original version of the singer's celebrated anti-Vietnam War song, 'I-Feel-Like-I'm-Fixin'-To-Die-Rag'. In 1965, he formed the Instant Action Jug band, which later evolved into Country Joe And The Fish. This influential acid-rock band was one of the era's finest, but by 1969, McDonald had resumed his solo career. Two tribute albums, Thinking Of Woody Guthrie and Tonight I'm Singing Just For You (a selection of C&W favourites) presaged his first original set, Hold On, It's Coming, which was recorded in London with several British musicians. This was followed by Quiet Days In Clichy, the soundtrack to a film of Henry Miller's novel, and War, War, War, an evocative adaptation of the work of poet Robert Service. The acclaimed Paris Sessions was a critical success, but subsequent releases lacked the artist's early purpose. He has remained a popular live attraction and his commitment to political and environmental causes is undiminished, as exemplified on a 1989 release, Vietnam Experience.

McDonald, Kathi

b. USA. McDonald came to prominence as a (white) member of Ike And Tina Turner's Ikettes. After a period as a session singer she joined Joe Cocker's Mad Dogs And Englishmen revue and then became a member of Big Brother And The Holding Company and featured on their final album, How Hard It Is (1971). Her only solo release features assistance from guitarists John Cipollina, Nils Lofgren and Ronnie Montrose but, barring a strong version of Neil Young's 'Down By The River', the album is disappointing. Sales were low and McDonald reverted to session work.

McDonald, Michael

b. 2 December 1952, St. Louis, Missouri, USA. Following his departure from the Doobie Brothers in 1982, McDonald, the former Steely Dan keyboard player, embarked on a popular solo career. He had already won a Grammy for his song, co-written with Kenny Loggins, 'What A Fool Believes', but during the 80s he had his compositions recorded by numerous artists, including Aretha Franklin, Millie Jackson and Carly Simon. He almost made the top of the US charts in 1982 with his soulful 'I Keep Forgettin' (Every Time You're Near)'. It is not often that a white singer is able to write and sing black soul music with such conviction and integrity. His 'Yah Mo B There', recorded with James Ingram in 1984, is a modern soul classic. The 1985 album No Lookin' Back was a dance favourite, shortly to be followed by his epic number 1 hit with Patti LaBelle, 'On My Own'. During that year, he enjoyed an international hit with the theme from the film Running Scared, the graceful 'Sweet Freedom'. McDonald has one of the most effortless and powerful voices in modern soul/rock, and has honed his ability to become a major, although not always completely consistent, songwriter.

McDonald, Shelagh

One of the leading females from the UK during the brief early 70s folksinger/songwriter boom, McDonald signed to B&C Records where she cut a couple of coyly appealing, self-penned and traditional albums. She sang a particularly fine version of the traditional ballad 'Dowie Dens Of Yarrow', but has been absent from the music scene for some time.

McDonald, Skeets

b. Enos William McDonald, 1 October 1915, Greenway, Arkansas, USA, d. 31 March 1968. The youngest of seven children of a poor cotton picking family, influenced by Jimmie Rodgers' recordings, he taught himself to play guitar at the age of 12. (He gained his nickname as a boy, because of trouble with mosquitoes, which he always called 'skeets'). By 1935, he was in Detroit singing with the Lonesome Cowboys, before organizing his own band, which played local clubs and on radio at Flint and Pontiac. He saw military service in North Africa and the Far East during World War II but, on discharge, he returned to radio and television work in Dearborn, Michigan. He made his first recordings for Fortune in 1950 and followed with further ones for London and for Mercury as Skeets Saunders. In 1951, he relocated to California, where he soon became a long time regular on Cliffie Stone's Hometown Jamboree. He was signed by Capitol, who viewed him as their answer to Columbia's Lefty Frizzell and, between 1951 and 1958, he recorded over 80 sides for the label. In 1952, he scored a country number 1 with 'Don't Let The Stars Get In Your Eyes'. (Goldie Hill also gained number 1 status with her 'answer' version, 'I Let The Stars Get In My Eyes', for Decca Records). In 1959, he moved to Columbia and recorded for that label until 1966, gaining a Top 10 with 'Call Me Mr Brown', in 1963. He recorded in Nashville in the 60s, made appearances on the Grand Ole Opry and also on the Big "D" Jamboree in Dallas. He also made several film appearances including Saddle Pals (with Johnny Mack Brown), Ma And Pa Kettle Go To Town (1950), The Glenn Miller Story (1954) and Hud (1963). McDonald was singer and writer of honky tonk songs but, in his later years, he did to some degree move his style for odd numbers slightly towards rock 'n' roll, as may be heard on his later Capitol recordings. However, he always refused to move far from the tearjerking songs with which he had made his name. Even when told by reviewers he 'belonged to another age', he took the remark as a compliment to his dedicated music. He continued to sing until he suffered a heart attack and died in March 1968. His own songs include 'I'll Make Believe', 'Big Family Trouble', 'I Need Your Love' and 'The Echo Of Your Footsteps'. During the late 80s, some of his recordings were reissued by German record labels

McDonough, Dick

b. 1904, USA, d. 25 May 1938. Guitarist McDonough began on banjo and by the mid-20s was in great demand on record sessions by jazz groups, popular singers and dancebands of the day. Among the artists with whom he recorded were Red Nichols, Red McKenzie, Connee Boswell, Benny Goodman, Mildred Bailey and Glenn Miller. His career continued into the 30s, which saw a particularly fruitful musical partnership with fellow-guitarist Carl Kress. McDonough's high-pressure musical life was matched by equally high living, and his health finally gave out. He died in May 1938. Although often overlooked, McDonough was an important figure in the development of jazz guitar and his recorded work, especially that with Kress, is worthy of study.

McDowell, Mississippi Fred

b. 12 January 1904, Rossville, Tennessee, USA, d. 3 July 1972, Memphis, Tennessee, USA. A self-taught guitarist, McDowell garnered his early reputation in the Memphis area with appearances at private parties, picnics and dances. He later moved to Como, Mississippi, and was employed as a farmer until discovered by field researcher Alan Lomax in 1959. Sessions for Atlantic and Prestige confirmed the artist as one of the last great exponents of the traditional bottleneck style and McDowell became a leading light of the 60s blues renaissance. He undertook several recordings with his wife, Annie Mae and, in 1964, appeared at the Newport Folk Festival alongside other major 'rediscoveries' Mississippi John Hurt and Sleepy John Estes; part of his performance was captured on the attendant film. The following year he completed the first of several releases for the California-based Arhoolie label. These recordings introduced a consistency to his work which deftly combined blues and spiritual material. McDowell also became a frequent visitor to Europe, touring with the American Folk Blues Festival and later appearing in concert in London, where he was supported by Jo Ann Kelly. He appeared on several Dutch television programmes and in two documentary films, The Blues Maker (1968) and Fred McDowell (1969). The artist was then signed to the Capitol label, for which he recorded I Don't Play No Rock 'N' Roll. Arguably one of the finest releases of its genre, its intimate charm belied the intensity the performer still brought to his work. Despite ailing health McDowell continued to follow a punishing schedule with performances at festivals throughout the USA, but by the end of 1971, such work had lessened dramatically. He died of cancer in July 1972. Although his compositions were not widely covered, the Rolling Stones recorded a haunting version of 'You've Got To Move' on Sticky Fingers (1971). McDowell's influence is also apparent in the approach of several artists, notably that of Bonnie Raitt.

McDowell, Ronnie

b. 26 March 1950, Fountain Head, Tennessee, USA. McDowell initially built his career on his ability to imitate the voice of Elvis Presley, a talent he was often called upon to utilize in films and television programmes. He also recorded his own music, however, and by the 80s, was a major star in his own right in the country field. McDowell began trying out his Presley imitation while in the US Navy in 1968. Upon his discharge, he worked as a sign painter in Nashville while trying to sell his songs. Among the country artists who recorded his compositions were Roy Drusky and Billy Walker. He recorded for minor record labels such as Chart and Scorpion during the mid-70s, with no success, and released a cover version of Roy Orbison's 'Only The Lonely' in 1976, which also did not chart. McDowell's first single to chart was 'The King Is Gone', his tribute to his departed hero, which he wrote (with Lee Morgan) and recorded on Scorpion two months after Presley's death. It reached number 13 on both the country and pop charts. His real breakthrough came later that year with 'I Love You, I Love You, I Love You', which reached number 5 on the country chart (it was also his last single to cross over to pop, although it placed near the bottom of that chart). McDowell continued to place singles on the country charts through 1980, having switched to Epic Records in 1979. That same year he supplied the voice of Presley for the soundtrack of the film Elvis. At the start of 1981, he began a long string of country Top 10 singles with 'Wandering Eyes', which was followed by the number 1 'Older Women' and 10 other Top 10 country hits. By the middle of the 80s, he was able to release music with little remaining of the Elvis sound, and could finally claim to have succeeded on the merits of his own voice. Later, he returned to his early vocation as the voice of Elvis in the short-lived 1989 television series titled Elvis. McDowell switched labels to MCA Records' Curb division in 1986. One of his biggest hits of the late 80s was a remake of the old Conway Twitty hit 'It's Only Make Believe', with the originator supplying a guest vocal.

McDuff, Brother Jack

b. Eugene McDuff, 17 September 1926, Champaign, Illinois, USA. McDuff adopted a professional name that reflected the racial consciousness of the 60s. Self-taught on piano, he became adept on the Hammond organ, an instrument associated with the church and hence with black music at its most heated. He took time out from touring to study music at the New York Technical College in Cincinnati, Ohio. He toured with various R&B bands from 1948, then formed his own jazz group in 1954, playing in the Midwest. In 1957, he broke up the group and left music, but returned in 1958 as a bass player. This was an ideal introduction to the Hammond, on which the organist supplies bass with foot pedals. In 1961, he recorded an album with Roland Kirk, Kirk's Works. In that year he also worked with guitarist Grant Green and, from 1962 to 1965, with superstar-to-be George Benson. 1964's The Dynamic Jack McDuff was a highly successful meeting of organ and big band, featuring arrangements by Benny Golson. In the 80s McDuff started playing electric piano and working with vocalists, but he reverted to the soul jazz organ sound of the 60s when the acid jazz movement revitalized the instrument during the 90s.

McEachern, Murray

b. 16 August 1915, Toronto, Canada, d. 28 April 1982. After learning to play a wide range of musical instruments, McEachern began playing in dancebands during the early 30s. In 1936, he joined the Benny Goodman Orchestra, where he played trombone. After Goodman he was with the Casa Loma Orchestra, playing trombone and alto saxophone; following this there was a short spell with Paul Whiteman. By 1942 McEachern was settled on the west coast and for much of the next three decades he was active in film and television studio work. In 1972, he took the lead alto chair when Bill Berry reformed his big band on moving to Los Angeles, but soon afterwards, McEachern went on the road as leader of the reformed Tommy Dorsey band - this time, naturally enough, playing trombone. A remarkably polished player on trombone with a contrastingly strong and gutsy saxophone style, McEachern was one of the outstanding sidemen in the history of big band music.

McEnery, Red River Dave

b. David McEnery, 15 December 1914, San Antonio, Texas, USA, close to the Alamo. Being a Texan, McEnery naturally became interested in things appertaining to the western life and as a boy at school, took to playing the guitar and singing cowboy songs. His fondness for 'Red River Valley' led to his nickname when he started his professional career. He played on local radio in the early 30s, but during the decade he also played many stations in various places, including New York State where the northern audiences were taken with the singing cowboy and his strange saga songs. He developed a penchant for writing songs of historic events such as 'The Battle Of The Alamo' and 'Pony Express' and his first real break came in 1937, with his saga song 'Amelia Earhart's Last Flight'. Following this, he moved to Chicago for a time and in 1939, was invited to New York to sing his song of the lost aviator and others on the first commercial television broadcast at the World's Fair. In the early 40s, he returned to San Antonio, Texas and began regular appearances on Border Radio station XERF where, billing himself as 'your favourite Texas Farmboy', he sang his songs and sold his sets of six songbooks, which he classed as 'a complete library of cowboy, hillbilly and sacred songs'. He also appeared on local US stations and during the 40s and 50s, recorded for several labels. He wrote many songs including 'I'm A Convict With Old Glory In My Heart' (about the man who wanted to fight but was in jail) and as the war ended, he tugged at his listeners heartstrings' with such maudlin numbers as 'The Blind Boy's Dog' (later recorded with success by Hank Snow). He has never been short on gimmicks. In 1936, he claimed to be the first (and probably the last) singing cowboy to broadcast from an airship when high above Miami, he sang 'Way Out There', over the airwaves of CBS, from the Goodyear blimp. In 1946, he was handcuffed to a piano for 12 hours and wrote songs from titles that people selected from magazines. By the end, he claimed a total of 52 completed songs.

In the 40s, he appeared in several films, including Swing In The Saddle, Hidden Valley and Echo Ranch but had made some appearances in earlier films in the 30s. Although he was a singer of cowboy songs for many years and is an expert on them, he is probably now best remembered for his saga songs. After the success of the Amelia Earhart song, he continued over the years to turn out such numbers of news interest including 'Ballad Of Emmett Till', 'The Flight Of Gary Powers', 'The Flight Of Apollo Eleven' and 'The Ballad Of Patty Hearst'. He has appeared on countless radio and television programmes and built the reputation of being something of a character, as well as becoming an ordained Pentecostal minister. Many of the major stars have recorded his songs and amongst his many tribute songs, he once recorded a dedication to his friend, Bob Wills, called 'Somewhere I Hear Angels Singing The San Antone Rose'. He moved to Nashville in the mid 70s, where he became noted for his flamboyant western dress with gold boots, his long white hair and goatee beard, all of which made him look a most distinctive resident somewhat like a modern Buffalo Bill Cody. He later returned to his native Texas, where he dispensed with the white locks and beard and reverted to more normal attire but still maintained his regular public appearances at folk festivals and similar events in many parts of the USA.

b. Dale Stanley McEntire, 1952, Chockie, Oklahoma, USA. Brother of Reba McEntire, Pake sang at rodeos with her and their other sister Susie as the Singing McEntires in the early 70s. He has competed professionally in roping events for many years. McEntire had his first US country success with 'Every Night' in 1986; 'Savin' My Love For You' went to number 3. Reba sang harmony on his 1987 chart entry, 'Heart Vs. Heart'.

McEntire, Reba

b. Reba Nell McEntire, 28 March 1955, Chockie, Oklahoma, USA. One of four children, McEntire recorded 'The Ballad Of John McEntire', which was about her grandfather. The family owned a 7,000-acre ranch and participated in rodeos; this background later inspired McEntire's song 'Daddy'. She sang with her sister Susie and brother Pake McEntire as the Singing McEntires, and in 1972, they recorded for the small Boss label. In 1974, she was asked to sing 'The Star-Spangled Banner' at the National Rodeo Finals in Oklahoma City. Honky-tonk singer Red Steagall heard her, which led to a recording contract with Mercury. Her first single, 'I Don't Want To Be A One Night Stand', made the US country charts in 1976, the year in which she married rodeo rider Charlie Battles. It was followed by several minor successes, including a revival of 'Sweet Dreams' and two duets with Jacky Ward ('Three Sheets To The Wind' and 'That Makes Two Of Us'). She made the US country Top 10 with '(You Lift Me) Up To Heaven', the Top 5 with 'Today All Over Again', and in 1982, number 1 with 'Can't Even Get The Blues'. She often recorded country waltzes and had another chart-topper in 1983 with 'You're The First Time I've Thought About Leaving'. She then left Mercury for MCA, although the label was to release an album of out-takes, Reba Nell McEntire, in 1986. She continued her country hits with 'Just A Little Love', 'He Broke Your Memory Last Night', 'Have I Got A New Deal For You', and the number 1 hits 'How Blue' and 'Somebody Should Leave'. Her best-known single and title track of a bestselling album was 'Whoever's In New England'. McEntire's own battles with Battles ended in their divorce in 1987, and she married her bandleader, Narvel Blackstock, in 1989. Several of her successes, although not written for her ('I Know How He Feels' and 'New Fool At An Old Game'), have overtones from her own life. She has won numerous country music awards, but her 1988 album Reba, although very successful, irritated traditionalists who questioned her revival of a pop hit, 'Sunday Kind Of Love', and her version of Otis Redding's 'Respect'. McEntire was adamant: 'I can sing any kind of song, but whatever I sing, it'll come out country.' She appeared, killing graboids with an elephant gun, in the well-reviewed horror film Tremors. On 16 March 1991, tragedy struck when Chris Austin, Kirk Cappello, Joey Cigainero, Paula Kaye Evans, Terry Jackson, Michael Thomas, Tony Saputo - seven of the nine members of McEntire's band - died in a plane crash shortly after taking off from San Diego. The following year, McEntire herself was involved in a forced landing at Nashville airport, evoking memories of the earlier tragedy. She dedicated her next album, For My Broken Heart, to her friends and collegues. It proved to be one of her most successful projects, and the title track was a major hit single. She tried to come to terms with the previous tragedy in 'If I Had Only Known', but the whole song selection evoked memories of it. Despite its melancholia, the album became one of her biggest hits. Having committed her feelings to record, McEntire then had a massive success via the dramatic video for the 'cheating' song, 'Does He Love You', which she sang with Linda Davis. When McEntire performed at the 1993 CMA awards, her low-cut dress was the most controversial aspect of the evening's entertainment. It might have been more telling to ask if she was singing soul or country. In 1995 she looked to her roots for an album of her favourite songs, Starting Over, including 'Talking In Your Sleep' and 'By The Time I Get To Phoenix'. For 'On My Own', she was joined by Linda Davis, Martina McBride and Trisha Yearwood. The follow-up, What If It's You, featured the excellent singles 'The Fear Of Being Alone' and 'I'd Rather Ride Around With You'. She is trying to establish herself as a film actress and has played alongside Kenny Rogers in The Gambler Returns: The Luck Of The Draw, Burt Reynolds in The Man From Left Field and Bruce Willis in North. As one of the best interpreters of any kind of popular song McEntire is on her way to selling more records than any other female country artist.

McEuen, John

b. 19 December 1945, Garden Grove, California, USA. McEuen was exposed to many forms of music through his brother William McEuen, who was a disc jockey and concert promoter. John formed his own folk group, the Illegitimate Jug Band, so called because they did not have a jug player. The group evolved into the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band and brother Bill became their manager. McEuen usually played banjo but he also played accordion, guitar, mandolin, dulcimer, steel guitar and fiddle. His guest appearances include Hoyt Axton's Rusty Old Halo, David Allan Coe's Just Divorced, Marshall Tucker Band's Long Hard Ride, and Bill Wyman's Monkey Grip. Since leaving the Dirt Band in 1986, McEuen has made records in the progressive bluegrass field, that is, bluegrass music that combines other sources such as Irish traditional music and jazz. He made his only solo appearance on the US country charts to date with a revival of Buddy Holly's 'Blue Days, Black Nights'. He arranged the music for one of Steve Martin's television specials and says, 'I could go down in history as the man who taught Steve Martin how to play the banjo.' In 1989 he returned to the Dirt Band for the double album Will The Circle Be Unbroken, Volume 2, and was understandably annoyed when only asked to play on one song. In 1990 he produced and directed the in-concert video and album for the Dillards, A Night In The Ozarks. He recorded the music for the television mini-series The Wild West in 1993, which was followed by a cable special, The Music Of The Wild West. He also scored the film The Good Old Boys, starring Tommy Lee Jones. String Wizards II features a guest appearance from José Feliciano. Acoustic Traveller includes a rare vocal on 'I Am A Pilgrim' and is a collection of songs from around the world. McEuen says, 'Most songs tell you what they're doing all the way through, but five people can listen to an instrumental and have five different opinions as to how it made them feel.'

McEvoy, Johnny

b. Banagher, Co. Offaly, Eire. After serving an apprenticeship around the Irish folk clubs, McEvoy established himself on the country music scene in the mid-60s. Since then he has become one of the most important and respected Irish country singer-songwriters. He made his first recordings in 1965 and topped the Irish charts the following year with 'Mursheen Durkin'. In the mid-70s, he furthered his reputation with his popular country show on British television and had his own series My Ireland on RTE. He has toured extensively in the UK, USA and Canada. McEvoy has written and recorded many fine songs based on true-life incidents. They range from 'The Ballad Of John Williams' (the story of a couple who sailed on the Titanic), 'Lincoln's Army' (a song of an Irish emigrant to the USA), 'Michael' (the story of Irish patriot Michael Collins), 'I'll Write Whenever I Can' (written after he saw homeless living on London's streets), to the beautifully descriptive 'Rich Man's Garden', about childhood memories, and 'Leaves In The Wind', a moving story of 'old Rosie Atkinson' who had been widowed by the war. McEvoy has become something of a living legend in Ireland and many artists including Foster And Allen have recorded his songs.

McFadden And Whitehead

Gene McFadden and John Whitehead (both b. 1948, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, USA), were former members of the Epsilons, a group managed by Otis Redding, prior to joining the Philadelphia International label. Here they forged a career as producers, playing a major role in the development of the label's 'sound' and as songwriters, penning hits for Harold Melvin And The Blue Notes ('Bad Luck', 'Wake Up Everybody') and the O'Jays ('Back Stabbers'), ultimately being responsible for over 20 gold discs. As performers, MacFadden and Whitehead enjoyed an international smash with 'Ain't No Stoppin Us Now' (1979), a defiant, post-disco anthem, highlighted by the latter's magnificent, exhorting delivery. The duo's later releases, however, were less successful, and, after serving time in prison for tax evasion, Whitehead embarked on a solo career in 1988.

McFarland Twins

Formed in America in the late 30s, the McFarland Twins were two saxophone-playing brothers who decided to expand into the dance band arena. Whether or not they were truly representative of this genre is debatable. Their stylised sound was widely described as 'Mickey Mouse' by critics, with its accent on novelty and irreverent fun. Nevertheless they persevered, and in the 40s switched their style to a more polished, musical standpoint. Engagements in this period saw them include pianist Geoff Clarkson in their ranks, alongside singers Betty Engells, Dick Merrick and the Norton Sisters. They recorded regularly for OKeh Records, including their theme song, 'Darkness', and proved a popular if light-hearted attraction at various ballrooms throughout America. However, by the advent of World War II the novelty of their fraternal leadership had grown thin and they rarely performed again.

b. 23 October 1933, Los Angeles, California, USA, d. 3 November 1971, New York City, New York, USA. McFarland was a vibraphonist, arranger and orchestra leader. He moved to Grants Pass in Oregon when he was 15 years old, and became interested in jazz while studying at the University of Oregon. He began to play the vibes during a stint in the US Army at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, in 1954, and, three years later, joined a group led by Santiago Gonzalez. Encouraged by musicians such as John Lewis, Buddy Montgomery and fellow vibes player Cal Tjader, McFarland won scholarships to the School of Jazz in Lennox and the Berklee College Of Music in Boston (1959). In the early 60s he blossomed into a fine young jazz writer, contributing arrangements and compositions to albums including those of the Modern Jazz Quintet, Gerry Mulligan, and John Lewis. He also wrote all the charts, and conducted the orchestra for Anita O'Day's All The Sad Young Men - although, according to O'Day, she sang to pre-recorded tapes, and did not meet McFarland until four or five years after the record had been released! Presumably he did get personally involved when working on albums with Stan Getz, Bill Evans and other leading musicians. In 1961, he recorded his own jazz version of the Frank Loesser-Abe Burrows Broadway Musical, How To Succeed In Business Without Really Trying, and subsequent releases included Soft Samba, Point Of Departure, Profiles, Simpatico, Tijuana Jazz and America the Beautiful and Does The Sun Real, Shine On The Moon? for the Skye Label, of which he was the co-founder. During the mid-60s, McFarland toured with his own quintet, and, in 1966, wrote the score for the Deborah Kerr-David Niven thriller movie, Eye Of The Devil. His last film music was for another 'whodunnit', Who Killed Mary What's'ername? in 1971. He died in November of that year. The cause of death was given as a heart attack, although it is rumoured that methadone, a synthetic drug similar to morphine, was put in his drink by a 'joker'.

McFerrin, Bobby

b. 11 March 1950, New York City, New York, USA. To call Bobby McFerrin a jazz vocalist is hardly to do him justice, for when McFerrin performs - he usually appears solo in lengthy concerts - he uses his entire body as a sound-box, beating noises out of his slender frame while emitting a constant accompaniment of guttural noises, clicks and popping sounds. To all this he adds a vocal technique that owes a slight debt to the bop vocalist Betty Carter and her daring swoops and scat vocals. McFerrin was brought up in a musical family - both his parents are opera singers, his father performing on the film sound-track of Porgy And Bess in 1959 - but his main jazz influence came from Miles Davis' Bitches Brew album. Training as a pianist at the Juilliard School and later at Sacramento State College, he worked first as an accompanist, then as a pianist and singer during the 70s. He came to public notice in 1979, when he performed in New York with the singer Jon Hendricks, from whom he learned a great deal, but it was his unaccompanied appearance at the 1981 Kool Jazz Festival which brought him widespread acclaim. By 1983, he had perfected his solo style of wordless, vocal improvisations. His debut album contained a dramatic reworking of Van Morrison's 'Moondance', while The Voice mixed his fondness for pop classics - this time, the Beatles' 'Blackbird' - with more adventurous pieces, notably the self-descriptive 'I'm My Own Walkman'. The 1988 album Simple Pleasures shows off his wide range with its mixture of pop classics and self-composed material. The highlight of the album was his idiosyncratic version of Cream's 'Sunshine Of Your Love', complete with a vocal electric guitar. That recording also spawned a huge hit single 'Don't Worry Be Happy' which was featured in the popular movie Cocktail. It reached number 1 in the USA and number 2 in the UK. Further hit success came when Cadbury's chocolate used 'Thinkin' About Your Body' in a major advertising campaign (substituting the word chocolate for body). This moved him away from a jazz audience although Paper Music was an impressive venture with McFerrin attempting the music of Bach, Mozart and Mendelssohn. He moved back to his jazz roots when he joined forces with Yellowjackets on Bang!Zoom, arguably his finest album to date. McFerrin is a true original, blessed with a remarkable vocal ability that goes beyond the usual limitations of the human voice.

McGann, Bernie

b. 22 June 1937, Sydney, New South Wales, Australia. Arguably Australia's premier saxophonist, McGann began on drums, taking lessons from his father, who was a professional musician. He switched to alto saxophone in 1955, initially inspired by Paul Desmond, though later influences were Sonny Rollins and avant garde players such as Ornette Coleman and Albert Ayler. In the late 50s, McGann began a long association with drummer John Pochée, and in 1964, joined him in a group called the Heads which also featured pianist Dave MacRae. McGann played regularly at Sydney's El Roco club, but when it closed in 1969, he found jazz gigs extremely scarce and for a while worked as a postman. From 1975, he played in Pochée's group, the Last Straw, and also led his own trio into the 80s, recording with Sonny Stitt on the latter's 1981 Australian tour. He has worked with other visiting Americans, notably Dewey Redman and Red Rodney, continues to perform both with the Last Straw and Pochée's big band, Ten Part Invention, and still leads his own small groups, which usually feature Pochée and bassist Lloyd Swanton. Although active since the 50s and a striking soloist, whose lines have the gnarled beauty of a truly original talent, McGann has rarely recorded. At Long Last, on the Emanem label, was his first album as leader after 30 years on the scene and remains his best to date - a twisting, eloquent bebop spiced with modernity.

McGarity, Lou

b. 22 July 1917, Athens, Georgia, USA, d. 28 August 1971. After playing in dancebands in and around Atlanta, Georgia, trombonist McGarity moved north. In 1938, he joined Ben Bernie's popular recording unit and, two years later, became a member of the Benny Goodman band. After military service in World War II, McGarity again played with Goodman, then divided his time between west coast studio work and playing in small jazz groups, often those under the nominal leadership of Eddie Condon, Yank Lawson and Bob Haggart. In the 60s, he played with Bob Crosby And The Bobcats and was with Lawson and Haggart in the World's Greatest Jazz Band. His warm sound and sometimes aggressive style made McGarity a welcome member of any dixieland-orientated jazz band. He worked until the day of his death in August 1971.

McGarrigle, Kate And Anna

Kate (b. 1944, St Sauveur, Montreal, Canada; keyboards, guitar, vocals), and her sister Anna (b. 1946, St. Sauveur, Montreal, Canada; keyboards, banjo, vocals), were brought up in the French quarter of Quebec. As a result they learned to sing and perform in both French and English. It was their father who first encouraged them in their musical pursuits, rewarding them with nickels when they learned harmonies from him. While still in Montreal, after mastering the guitar in their teens, the sisters became members of the Mountain City Four, before they went their separate ways, Anna to art college and Kate to McGill University to study engineering. As a duo, Kate and Anna came to public notice after other artists, including Linda Ronstadt and Maria Muldaur, recorded and performed their songs. Kate McGarrigle met Muldaur after moving to New York, and Muldaur recorded 'Work Song' as the final track on her debut album. When Ronstadt scored a hit with Anna's 'Heart Like A Wheel', record companies began to express an interest in the duo's talents. As a result, Muldaur's label, Warner Brothers Records, asked the McGarrigle sisters to record an album. Kate And Anna McGarrigle, their first release, was produced by Joe Boyd, and contained their own take of 'Heart Like A Wheel'. The album's disparate musical styles spanned everything save rock, yet that did not prevent Melody Maker magazine naming it the 1976 Rock Record Of The Year. Apart from Dancer With Bruised Knees, which made the Top 40 in the UK, none of their subsequent releases has had any significant impact in the charts in either the USA or Britain. The long break after Love Over And Over was put down to the strong-minded duo fighting the promotional machine that was building around them: 'We just weren't prepared to be in that mould, of "Hey, now you're being professional". It took a lot of the fun out of it.' However, they have retained a strong following and their concerts, albeit on a smaller scale, consistently sell out. They first came to the UK to perform in 1976, with Kate then married to Loudon Wainwright III, and they toured consistently until they arrived to support the release of Love Over And Over. In the meantime they had raised four children between them, penned movie soundtracks and written songs. The McGarrigle sisters have an instantly recognizable sound, with a distinctive harmonic blend, and incisive lyrics which defy expectations. Their early promise has never been realized, but they still command respect and a loyal following. Heartbeats Accelerating and Matapedia, their two album releases in the 90s, were mature and seasoned song collections.

McGear, Mike

b. Peter Michael McCartney, 7 January 1944, Liverpool, England. The younger brother of the Beatles' Paul McCartney, McGear adopted his tongue-in-cheek appellation in order to avoid unwarranted associations. In 1962, he joined John Gorman and Roger McGough in the Scaffold, a satirical revue which later enjoyed success as a pop group with 'Thank U Very Much' (1967) and the chart-topping 'Lily The Pink' (1968). With Gorman in absentia and Paul as producer, the remaining pair recorded McGough And McGear (1968), a mixture of songs and poetry which featured support from Jimi Hendrix, Dave Mason, John Mayall and Graham Nash. McGear later joined the multi-faceted troupe Grimms, many of whom appeared on the artist's solo debut Woman. A subsequent single, 'Sweet Baby', led to the recording of McGear*. Paul not only produced this set, but wrote or co-wrote all but one of its songs, adding bass, guitar and backing vocals, before inviting Wings to provide further support. A critical success, the album failed commercially and McGear, who reverted to his McCartney surname, has since pursued an informal career, including work as a photographer.

b. 29 September 1960, Glasgow, Scotland. After leaving school at the age of 17, McGee became an electrician, then relocated to London where he worked as a clerk for British Rail. In his spare time, he promoted gigs for his nomadic club, the Living Room, booking acts such as the Nightingales and the Television Personalities. To his surprise, he found that he was making a profit, so elected to release records and formed the label Creation. During the early phase of the label's history, McGee issued singles by artists such as the Loft, the Pastels, Primal Scream, the Jasmine Minks and his own venture, Biff Bang Pow. After signing the Jesus And Mary Chain in 1984, McGee's credibility as a manager and label owner escalated dramatically. He stayed with the group for two, often stormy, years and along the way issued some fascinating product by Felt, the Bodines and the Weather Prophets. The ill-fated tie-up with Warner Brothers, Elevation Records, encouraged McGee to pursue the independent route with more vigour. During the latter half of the 80s, the Creation roster extended to include Nikki Sudden, Momus, Clive Langer and, most crucially, the House Of Love. After one album and two excellent singles, the latter signed to Phonogram. After 1988, McGee turned increasingly to the dance floor for inspiration. Initial releases by Love Corporation, Hynotone, JBC and DJ Danny Rampling were not commercial successes, but the new direction was sound. Ironically, it was former psychedelic outfit Primal Scream who embraced the dance culture most effectively, providing the label with hits such as 'Loaded'. Further success followed with the critically acclaimed and bestselling My Bloody Valentine, Ride, Oasis, Teenage Fanclub, and the Boo Radleys, as Creation entered its most productive phase during the mid-90s. McGee's genuine love of music and thrust for innovation has made him one of the most influential music business entrepreneurs to emerge in the UK over the past decade.

McGee, Sam And Kirk

Samuel Fleming McGee (b. 1 May 1894, d. 21 August 1975) and David Kirkland McGee (b. 4 November 1899, d. 24 October 1983) were both born and raised on the family farm near Franklin, Williamson County, Tennessee, USA. Their father was a noted fiddle player, and the brothers learned to play the banjo as children but changed their style in their teens. Sam worked as a blacksmith, but around 1910, he became interested in the guitar and learned to play from black street musicians. During his career he became so proficient that he has been a major influence on many musicians and was most likely the first white musician to use the guitar as a solo instrument, instead of a mere accompaniment for vocals or fiddle music. Kirk concentrated on the banjo, although he later played guitar, mandolin and fiddle, and also developed into a fine vocalist. In 1925, Sam first met and played with Uncle Dave Macon, and the following year, made his first appearance with Macon on the Grand Ole Opry. Soon afterwards, they were joined by Kirk and both played with Macon, as well as performing as a duo. In 1927, together with fiddler Mazy Todd, they went to New York with Macon and recorded as Uncle Dave Macon And His Fruit Jar Drinkers. They recorded with Macon until the mid-30s, as well as recording as a duo, including their noted 1934 recording of 'Brown's Ferry Blues'. They were among the first members of the Opry ever to record, which later led to Sam stating, 'They recorded us because we were outstanding in the field and that's where they found us - outstanding in the field'. In 1930, they also teamed up with Fiddlin' Arthur Smith and both toured and played the Opry with him as the Dixieliners. They worked with Smith until 1938, when he left for Hollywood. Strangely, though recognized as one of the Opry's most influential bands, they never actually recorded with Smith until years later in the 60s, when they were reunited by Mike Seeger. During the 40s, they toured with Bill Monroe, appeared occasionally with Macon and still played the Opry. It seems likely that Sam was the first member to play an electric guitar on the Opry, consisting of an amplified Spanish guitar and an early electric lap steel. However, this soon incurred the wrath of George D. Hay, who quickly told Sam to 'Keep it down to earth'. In the 50s and 60s, the folk revival found them touring and still on the Opry. In later years, Kirk went into the property business and Sam continued to work the farm until he died in a tractor accident in 1975, at the age of 82. After Sam's death, Kirk played the Opry as a member of the Opry's own Fruit Jar Drinkers String Band, frequently playing fiddle rather than banjo. He died after a heart attack at his home in Franklin in 1983, having appeared on the Opry only a few days previously. It is interesting to note that, in 1924, Sam had learned to play the guitar-banjo, and his recordings using it, made with Macon in 1926 and 1927, are probably the only known examples of this difficult instrument being played by a white musician. The brothers' contribution to the history of country music, with their gospel, blues, instrumentals and old folk ballads, is considerable, and although they made many recordings during their long careers, few are now available.

McGhee, Brownie

b. Walter Brown McGhee, 30 November 1915, Knoxville, Tennessee, USA, d. 16 February 1996, Oakland, California, USA. McGhee learned guitar from his father, and started a musical career early on, playing in church before he was 10 years old, and on the road with medicine shows, carnivals and minstrel troupes in his early teens. His travels took him into the Carolinas, and his time there proved very influential in moulding his musical style. His younger brother was Granville 'Sticks' McGhee, also a singer and blues guitarist. He met Sonny Terry in 1939, and their partnership was to become one of the most enduring in blues. The following year, he made his first records, reminiscent of those of Blind Boy Fuller; indeed some of them bore the credit 'Blind Boy Fuller No.2'. Also around this time, he settled in New York, where his career took a rather different turn, as he took up with a group of black musicians - including Terry, Lead Belly and Josh White - favoured by the then small white audience for the blues. They also became part of the Folkways Records cognoscenti with Pete Seeger and Woody Guthrie. For a number of years, he catered very successfully both for this audience, playing acoustic blues in an older style, and for an entirely separate one. Throughout the late 40s and early 50s, he recorded electric blues and R&B aimed at black record buyers. In retrospect, it is this second type that stands up best, and indeed, some of his records from this period rank among the finest blues to come out of New York in the post-war years. He was also very prolific as an accompanist, playing superb lead guitar on records by other artists such as Champion Jack Dupree, Big Chief Ellis and Alonzo Scales, as well as his brother 'Sticks'. His partnership with Terry became more firmly established during this period, and, as the original market for blues and R&B faded, they carved a very strong niche for themselves, playing concerts, festivals and clubs, and making albums aimed at the growing audience for folk music. For many years, they travelled the world and made record after record, establishing their names among the best-known of all blues artists. However, critical opinion seems agreed that their music suffered to a large degree during this period, as it was diluted for such a wide international audience and successive recordings trod similar ground. After making many of their successful recordings for Vanguard Records, the duo then appeared widely in musical theatre productions, including Cat On A Hot Tin Roof, Finian's Rainbow and Simply Heaven. They also contributed to the soundtracks of films including Book Of Numbers, Lead Belly, Buck And The Preacher and A Face In The Crowd. McGhee's partnership with Terry eventually ended in the mid-70s after a build-up of internal tensions. While Terry continued to work until his death in 1986 McGhee retired to Oakland, California. He was in the process of making a live comeback when he was struck by cancer which resulted in his death early in 1996.

McGhee, Granville 'Sticks'

b. 23 March 1918, Knoxville, Tennessee, USA, d. 15 August 1961, New York City, New York, USA. Like his more famous brother, Brownie McGhee, Granville learned guitar from his father. After seeing action in World War II, he moved to New York in 1946. The following year, he made his first record, 'Drinkin' Wine Spo-Dee-O-Dee', under his own name. However, it was a later cut of the same song, made for Atlantic in 1949, with a group that included Big Chief Ellis as well as Brownie, that gave him his biggest success. Over the next few years, he made several more records, and appeared as accompanist on others, most notably to Sonny Terry. However, he did not manage to make the move to the new, young, white audience into which his brother tapped so successfully in the late 50s and onwards.

McGhee, Howard

b. 6 March 1918, Tulsa, Oklahoma, USA, d. 17 July 1987. During the late 30s, McGhee played trumpet in several territory bands in the Midwest before moving to Detroit, where he became well known in that city's lively jazz scene. He first enjoyed major success with Lionel Hampton in 1941; however, he quickly moved on, joining Andy Kirk, for whom he wrote arrangements and was featured soloist. Although he was to work in other big bands of the early 40s, including Charlie Barnet's and Georgie Auld's, McGhee soon became most closely associated with bebop. From the mid-40s he could be heard playing in clubs and on records with Charlie Parker, Fats Navarro and others. He was present on the notorious Parker recording date for Dial which produced 'Lover Man' and was, in fact, largely responsible for salvaging the session from potential disaster when Parker broke down. During the 50s, McGhee's career was damaged by drug addiction and his private life was blighted by some of the worst excesses of racism: his marriage to a white woman resulted in his wife being beaten up and he himself was framed on drugs-related charges. However, he survived and, in the early 60s, was making records with Teddy Edwards, George Coleman and others and later returned to regular playing. A big band he formed at this time and a 1969 appearance at the Newport Jazz Festival with Buddy Tate helped to prove that he still had talent to spare. One of the most melodic of bebop trumpeters, McGhee was an important influence on two major figures, Navarro and Clifford Brown, both of whom, ironically, were to die many years before him.

McGhee, Wes

b. 26 October, 1948, Lutterworth, Leicestershire, England. One of the very few British performers whose Texas-inspired country music is regarded as creditable in the USA, McGhee has suffered more than most from the British refusal to accept homegrown country music as genuine. He has worked with noted Texan artists including Ponty Bone and Freddie Krc (for both of whom he produced albums in the 80s), Butch Hancock, Jimmie Dale Gilmore and Kimmie Rhodes. As a promising teenage guitarist, McGhee was involved with the celebrated Reg Calvert (who worked as patron for a number of emergent musicians in the 60s from a large country house, where several groups, none of which became famous, lived communally). During the late 60s, McGhee worked in Hamburg as one of many musicians following the Merseybeat trail - his first wife was German. During the early 70s, he fronted an early pub/rock combo known as McGhee, but management problems, among other things, conspired to sabotage the recording contract he had been promised. By the mid-70s, McGhee had become friendly with Arthur Anderson, a musician he had met on the gig circuit, and they joined forces to record an album of McGhee's original material, with Anderson engineering and producing. The result, Long Nights And Banjo Music, was released on their own label, Terrapin Records, in 1978, with McGhee as lead vocalist and lead guitarist, plus assistance from, among others, Bob Loveday (violin, later with the Penguin Cafe Orchestra and the post-Boomtown Rats Bob Geldof band) and Rick Lloyd (later a member of the chart-topping Flying Pickets). The achievement of completing the album was of far greater significance than much of the self-conscious country rock it contained, and McGhee and Anderson scraped together enough finance - by renting out their home-made studio and by McGhee writing and recording radio commercials - to release a second album in 1980, Airmail, which gave notice that he was a considerable songwriting talent. Before Landing Lights was released in 1983, Anderson had left the partnership, although he worked on part of the album, some of which was recorded in Texas with local musicians including Krc (ex-Jerry Jeff Walker), Bone and Lloyd Maines (ex-Joe Ely), Gilmore and Rhodes. Probably McGhee's best original studio album to date in terms of original songs, it was released on his own TRP label, as was 1985's Thanks For The Chicken, a live double album made in Texas with a mixed British/Texan band, including Krc, Bone, Rhodes and Texan fiddler Alvin Crow, plus McGhee's long-time backing vocalist Ian Bartholomew (primarily an actor), Patti Vetta, and Irish multi-instrumentalist Dermot O'Conner. As well as numerous fine McGhee originals, the album included cover versions of Richard Thompson's 'Tear Stained Letter', Joe 'King' Carrasco's 'Mexcal Road' and the sublime 'Contrabandistas', written by Rhodes' husband, record producer Joe Gracey, and his partner, Bobby Earl Smith. The album even included a song sung in Mexican - McGhee had developed a cult following in Mexico owing to his semi-successful attempts to cater for the Hispanic audience. Although he remained virtually unknown in Britain, his talent was recognized by pioneering American music publisher Bug Music, who signed him during the second half of the 80s as his fifth album, Zacatecas, was released in 1986. A much more measured collection, it was his first studio album made without cost-cutting, and included a remarkable epic titled 'Monterey', plus a cover version of the 60s hit by Troy Shondell, 'This Time'. As usual, there was little commercial interest in Britain, although McGhee began working frequently in Texas, both on his own account and as lead guitarist with Kimmie Rhodes, who had duetted with him on a track from Thanks For The Chicken, and on several of whose albums he had played. Finally, in 1991, a UK label, Minidoka, was interested enough in McGhee to release a compilation of remixed tracks from his previous studio albums titled Neon And Dust, although this did not achieve the commercial success its quality richly deserved. His acoustic album Border Guitars in 1995 featured Rhodes, Krc and Bone. His great ability to write in the same West Texas style as Joe Ely and Butch Hancock suggests that he was unfortunately born in the wrong country.

McGlohon, Loonis

b. 29 September 1921, Ayden, North Carolina, USA. After graduating from East Carolina University, he turned his piano-playing talents into a professional career, but was interrupted by military service between 1942 and 1945, during which time he worked as a pianist-arranger in the US Army Air Force. In 1949 he joined Jimmy Dorsey's orchestra and was also briefly with Ray McKinley and Jack Teagarden, but from 1950 he was deeply involved in radio and television as a producer and presenter, although he continued to play frequently and also to write music. He formed his own trio for club and concert engagements and with the group has appeared all across the USA, including three appearances at Carnegie Hall, and also in Japan, China, Singapore, France, Italy and the UK. He has accompanied several singers including Helen O'Connell, Judy Garland, in 1964 and 1966, and was musical director for the legendary Mabel Mercer, 1978-80, and Eileen Farrell, 1981-96. His compositions include operas, musicals, revues, a children's cantata, A Child's Christmas, which was recorded and released in 1974, and numerous songs, among which are 'Blackberry Winter', in collaboration with Alec Wilder, which has been recorded by numerous singers including Mark Murphy, Mike Campbell, Teddi King, Vic Juris and Marlene VerPlanck, 'A Long Night' and 'South To A Warmer Place', both also with Wilder and which were recorded by Frank Sinatra, and 'Songbird', recorded more than 30 times by artists such as George Shearing and Robert Farnon, Jackie Cain, VerPlanck, Farrell and Weslia Whitfield. In addition to Wilder, his songwriting collaborators have included Billy VerPlanck, Hugh Martin and Marian McPartland. For several years, McGlohon served as Program Director for WBT Radio Station in Charlotte, North Carolina. On a regular radio show for National Public Radio he introduced many fine singers and instrumentalists and collaborated with Wilder on a series based on the latter's book, The American Popular Song, and a subsequent series, American Popular Singers, hosted by Eileen Farrell. This show featured artists such as Carrie Smith, Anita Ellis, Johnny Hartman, VerPlanck, Barbara Lea, King, Mercer, Hugh Shannon and Thelma Carpenter. Virtually the house pianist for Audiophile Records, he has accompanied many singers, including albums by Dick Haymes, David Allyn, Margaret Whiting, Smith, Lea, Dardanelle, Maxine Sullivan, Farrell, Campbell, Joyce Breach, Daryle Ryce and VerPlanck, and he has recorded with Farnon and the London Philharmonic Orchestra. With the latter, he recorded a particularly fine set of Wilder songs and also You'd Better Love Me, which featured music by Hugh Martin and Ralph Blane. In a liner note for this album, which was made in 1976, VerPlanck wrote of her first encounter with McGlohon the pianist, 'beautiful chords, beautiful technique, and lovely soulful playing.' McGlohon has founded a number of scholarships and a school of music and a theatre bear his name. Appreciation of McGlohon both inside and outside the world of popular music is evidenced by numerous honours, including four doctorates, nomination to the National Academy of Television and Science Hall of Fame, and the scheduling for August 1998 of a tribute at New York's Lincoln Center at which many of the artists who have played with him and sung his songs were eager to appear.

McGough And McGear

McGough And McGear comprised of Scaffold members Roger McGough and Mike McGear. In June 1967 they entered Abbey Road Studios with the aim of recording some demo discs. McGear's brother, Paul McCartney, assisted on the sessions which eventually included musical contributions from Graham Nash, John Mayall, Spencer Davis, Dave Mason and Jimi Hendrix, among others. The initial idea was then shelved and the results were issued as McGough & McGear. Sound effects, pop interludes and improvisation apart, it is McGough's poetry which lies at the heart of the set, notably on the lengthy 'Summer With Monica'. Here he is ably assisted by guitarist Andy Roberts (later of the Liverpool Scene) to create a sensitive celebration of past romances. Melody Maker declared McGough & McGear Album Of The Month upon its release and this captivating record has remained a highlight of its two creators' respective careers.

McGovern, Maureen

b. Maureen Therese McGovern, 27 July 1949, Youngstown, Ohio, USA. The possessor of 'one of the most technically proficient singing voices in all of pop', with a four-octave, coloratura range, as a young girl Maureen McGovern was influenced by Barbra Streisand. After graduating from high school in 1967, she worked as a typist, and perfomed folk songs in the evenings. She then embarked on a six-year tour of hotels and holiday camps in the Midwest of America, performing contemporary material with a rock band. She came to the attention of 20th Century-Fox Records, who signed her to a contract. Her first recording, in 1972, was Al Kasha and Joel Hirschhorn's 'The Morning After', which was used as the love theme for the 'disaster' film The Poseidon Adventure. It won an Academy Award for best song, and McGovern's version topped the US chart. In 1974, the media began calling her the 'disaster queen' after she sang the Oscar-winning 'We May Never Love Like This Again' (Kasha - Hirschhorn) on the soundtrack of The Towering Inferno (McGovern also played a cameo role in the picture), and 'Wherever Love Takes Me' (Leslie Bricusse-Don Black), the theme from Gold, a British film starring Roger Moore and Susannah York, in which a South African gold mine is destroyed. Given her recent career history, it was hardly surprising that McGovern was cast as the singing nun, Sister Angelina, in the 'disaster-spoof' movie Airplane! in 1980. By that time, she had begun to be known in Britain through her version of 'The Continental', and reached the US Top 10 with 'Different Worlds', the theme from the television series Angie. She had also recorded 'Can You Read My Mind' (Bricusse-John Williams), the love theme from Superman. In the early 80s, as well as appearing in regional productions of The Sound Of Music and South Pacific, McGovern attracted much acclaim for her performance as the ingénue, Mabel, in Joseph Papp's revival of The Pirates Of Penzanze on Broadway. She replaced Karen Akers in the Tony Award-winning musical, Nine, toured with Guys And Dolls, and appeared in a revival of the two-hander musical, I Do! I Do! Around this time McGovern was beginning to establish herself as a classy nightclub performer, singing mainly a blend of jazz and beloved Broadway standards. In particular, she has come to be regarded by many as 'the quintessential interpreter of Gershwin', although her programmes also include songs by writers such as Sergio Mendes, John Lennon and Paul McCartney, and Shelby Flint. In 1989 McGovern made her solo debut at Carnegie Hall, and as Polly Peachum, with Sting as Macheath, in 3 Penny Opera (a new production of The Threepenny Opera) on Broadway. In the early 90s, she made her London concert debut at the Barbican theatre, and also played in cabaret at the Pizza On The Park and the Café Royal. Her honours include a Canadian Gold Leaf Award (1973), an Australian Gold Award (1975), and the Grand Prize in the 1975 Tokyo Music Festival for her performance of Paul Williams' 'Even Better Than I Know Myself'. She continues into the 90s firmly established as a top attraction on the US caberet circuit.

McGraw, Tim

b. 1 May 1967, Delhi, Louisiana, USA. He was raised in Start, Louisiana, and is the son of Frank Edwin 'Tug' McGraw, a noted left-handed relief pitcher for the New York Mets and Philadelphia Phillies, who retired in 1984 after a 19-year major league baseball career. Tim began his musical career singing in local clubs and also worked as a demo singer. He was signed to Curb Records in 1990 but did not achieve his first chart entry until 1992 with 'Welcome To The Club'. In 1993, he had two further minor hits with 'Memory Lane' and 'Two Steppin' Mind', all three of these songs taken from his debut album. He appeared on the Honky Tonk Attitude tour with Joe Diffie. McGraw's career took off with the release, early in 1994, of the single 'Indian Outlaw'. The song, written by John D. Loudermilk, caused considerable controversy in the USA, where some claimed that it degraded the accepted image of the American Indian. Controversy always helps sales, and the recording, with its war-dance, rhythmic drum beat, quickly gave McGraw his first country number 1 record. The song naturally appeared on his second album, from which he also gained further chart success with the recording of 'Down On The Farm' and the title track. The album, Not A Moment Too Soon, entered the Billboard country chart at number 1. The album sales topped four million and it remained in the Top 5 for over a year. The following album, All I Want, also amassed huge sales and McGraw topped the country singles chart with 'I Like It, I Love It' and just missed with 'Can't Be Really Gone'. Many see him as the successor to Garth Brooks, and although his records are not quite as distinctive, he does seem determined to remain a country artist (whatever that means today) with titles such as 'Don't Mention Memphis', 'Give It To Me Strait', 'It Doesn't Get Any Countrier Than This' and his 1996 US country number 1 'She Never Lets It Go To her Heart'. His run of success continued with Everywhere in 1997, and a CMA Award for Vocal Event Of The Year on 'It's Your Love' (with his wife Faith Hill).

McGregor, Chris

b. 24 December 1936, Somerset West, South Africa, d. 27 May 1990. In his early years in the Transkei, McGregor studied classical piano music, but was more significantly affected by the hymns in his father's Church of Scotland mission and the music of the Xhosa people. At the 1962 Johannesburg Jazz Festival, he selected five of the best players (Mongezi Feza, Dudu Pukwana, Nick Moyake, Johnny Dyani and Louis Moholo) and invited them to join him in a new band. Thus, the legendary Blue Notes were created. Apartheid made it impossible for them, as a mixed-race band, to work legally in South Africa, and so, while touring Europe in 1964, they decided not to return home. After a year in Switzerland, they settled in London, where, evolving into the Chris McGregor Group (with Ronnie Beer replacing Moyake on tenor), they made a huge impact with their exhilarating mixture of free jazz and kwela, the South African Township dance music. During that period McGregor established a big band for gigs at Ronnie Scott's Old Place and, in 1970, he formed a regular big band, the Brotherhood Of Breath. He moved to Aquitaine, France, in 1974, often playing solo gigs, although from time to time he revived the Brotherhood. McGregor was an exciting piano player whose style encompassed the power of Cecil Taylor and the gentleness of African folk melodies, but it was as leader of a series of joyful, powerful bands that he made his main reputation. He once told Valerie Wilmer, 'Real musical freedom is the ability to look inside your own personal experience and select from it at will.' He died of lung cancer in May 1990.

McGregor, Freddie

b. *c.*1955, Clarendon, Jamaica, West Indies. McGregor entered the Jamaican music business at the precocious age of seven, singing backing vocals with ska duo the Clarendonians at Coxsone Dodd's Studio One. He stayed with Dodd throughout the rest of the decade and into the early 70s, acting as a session drummer and backing singer as well as cutting sides such as 'Why Did You Do It', and 'Do Good' (*c.*1965) with Clarendonian Ernest 'Fitzroy' Wilson as Freddie And Fitzy, versions of Johnny Ace's 'Pledging My Love' and Junior Byles' 'Beat Down Babylon' (*c.*1972), and his own compositions, 'Go Away Pretty Woman', 'What Difference Does It Make' and 'Why Is Tomorrow Like Today'. In 1975, after adopting the Rastafarian faith through the Twelve Tribes organization, he recorded two of his finest singles, 'I Man A Rasta' and 'Rastaman Camp', both heavyweight slices of roots Rasta reggae. In the early 70s he worked stage shows as lead singer with the Generation Gap and Soul Syndicate bands and maintained strong links with both sets of musicians throughout his career. The late 70s saw his star rise with excellent singles such as 'Jogging' for Tuff Gong, the herbsman anthem 'Natural Collie', based around the melody and arrangement of Norman Collins' soul opus, 'You Are My Starship', and 'Mark Of The Beast', 'Leave Yah', and a cover version of George Benson's 'Love Ballad', all for Earl 'Chinna' Smith. Winston 'Niney' Holness produced his debut set, Mr McGregor, and there were further recordings for Studio One including 'Homeward Bound', 'Come Now Sister', 'Africa Here I Come', and the classic Bobby Babylon. In 1979 McGregor was also involved in the production of Judy Mowatt's excellent Black Woman.

McGregor's reputation as one of the most vocally gifted singers in reggae, able to turn his hand to lovers or roots material with equal potency, had been increasing steadily when he recorded Big Ship for Linval Thompson. Released in the UK on Greensleeves, the album was a great success. He followed this up with Love At First Sight (1982) for Joe Gibbs. Coxsone capitalized on McGregor's popularity, which by that time was rivalling that of Dennis Brown and Gregory Isaacs, with the same year's I Am Ready, which, like its predecessor, was comprised mainly of singles and previously unreleased tracks from the singer's sojourn at Studio One in the early 70s. In 1984 McGregor inaugurated his own Big Ship label with Across The Border, and secured a licensing agreement with RAS Records in the USA for the release of Come On Over. In 1985 he recorded the duet 'Raggamuffin' with Dennis Brown for Gussie Clarke, and the dancehall hit 'Don't Hurt My Feelings' for George Phang's Powerhouse label. Throughout the 80s, McGregor enjoyed a position as one of reggae's most popular performers, touring the world with the Studio One Band, and enjoying a huge hit in Colombia with a version of the Sandpipers' 'Guantanamera', sung in Spanish, for RAS. He signed a contact with Polydor Records which resulted in the UK chart-nudging 'Push Come To Shove' (1987) and 'That Girl', finally achieving a UK hit with a cover version of Main Ingredient's 'Just Don't Wanna Be Lonely', which reached number 9 in August 1987. Now established as a senior reggae statesman, McGregor completed a pair of albums, Sings Jamaican Classics and Jamaican Classic Volume 2, on which he offered his interpretations of reggae standards such as Little Roy's 'Prophecy' and Derrick Harriott's 'The Loser', retitled 'The Winner'. McGregor again narrowly missed the UK charts with his interpretation of Justin Hinds And The Dominoes' 'Carry Go Bring Come' (1993), but has since had huge success in the reggae charts with his production of Luciano's 'Shake It Up Tonight', sung over the rhythm used for his own 'Seek And You Will Find', which also provided the vehicle for Big Youth's excellent 'Jah Judgement'. Already a veteran in the business McGregor's future as a reggae superstar looks assured.

b. James Herrell, 3 April 1936, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, USA. Encouraged by a musical home environment (both his parents were pianists), by the time he left school, McGriff played not only piano but bass, vibes, drums and saxophone. He played with Archie Shepp, Reggie Workman, Charles Earland and Donald Bailey in his youth, but after two years as an military policeman in the Korean War, he decided to take up law enforcement rather than music as a career. This did not satisfy him in the event, and he began moonlighting as a bassist, backing blues stars such as Big Maybelle. He left the police force and studied organ at Combe College, Philadelphia, and New York's Juilliard. He also took private lessons with Jimmy Smith, Richard 'Groove' Holmes and Milt Buckner, as well as from classical organist Sonny Gatewood. His career first took off with the single 'I Got A Woman' in 1962, and he had a string of hits released through the legendary Sue label. During this decade McGriff was arguably the crown prince of the soul jazz organ movement (the King being Jimmy Smith). His stabbing style and shrill tone was much copied, particularly in the UK with the rise of the beat R&B scene. Georgie Fame and Brian Auger were greatly influenced by McGriff. His memorable 'All About My Girl' remains one of his finest compositions, and has become a minor classic. In the late 80s he experienced a revival in his commercial success, collaborating with Hank Crawford on record and in concert. He tours for most of the year, still concentrating on Hammond organ, but also using synthesizers. A fine, bluesy player, he helped to popularize a jazz-flavoured style of R&B that is still gathering adherents and is influential in London clubland's 'acid jazz' circles.

McGuffie, Bill

b. 11 December 1927, Carmyle, near Glasgow, Scotland, d. 22 March 1987, Chertsey, Surrey, England. A highly accomplished pianist, composer and arranger in the UK from the 40s through to the 80s. Although the third finger of his right hand was amputated following a playtime accident as a child, McGuffie persevered with his music studies, and at the age of 11 was awarded the Victoria Medal for his piano proficiency by the Victoria College, Glasgow. A year later he made his first broadcast on Childrens' Hour, and at the age of 14 was playing regularly with the BBC Scottish Variety Orchestra. For a while he studied to be a naval architect, before moving to Ayr to join the Miff Hobson Orchestra. Early in 1944, he moved to London and played with Teddy Foster at the Lyceum, and then spent four years with Joe Loss, before joining Maurice Winnick and Sidney Lipton. He also led his own ensemble at the Mayfair Club, but really came to prominence during a three-year spell as a featured soloist with Cyril Stapleton's BBC Showband in the early 50s. When the band was taken off the air, McGuffie joined Kenny Baker's Dozen, and then, in the early 60s, played with the orchestra of Robert Farnon, who, together with composer Phil Green, was one of McGuffie's main influences, particularly in the area of film music. Widening his field into composing and arranging, he is said to have worked on over 50 movies, including The Boys (1961), The Leatherboys (1963), The Asphyx (1972) and The Small Miracle (1973). He also assisted Farnon on many projects, such as Gentlemen Marry Brunettes (1955) and the final 'Road' film, Road To Hong Kong, in which Frank Sinatra joined the regular team of Bing Crosby, Bob Hope and Dorothy Lamour. In the early 70s he played with Benny Goodman's British Band and American Sextet on their European tours, but a stroke in 1974 laid him low for a while. When he recovered, McGuiffie continued to work regularly until 1983, and the onset of cancer, from which he died four years later. During his wide- ranging career, he played jazz, both sweet and swinging, show music and concertos for films. He recorded as a solo pianist, and fronted a variety of ensembles including the Bill McGuffie Big Band, Trio, and Quintet. He broadcast regularly with his own show, and contributed to programmes such as Breakfast (And Bedtime) With Braden, Round The Horne, King Of The Keyboard, Piano Playtime and Week Ending. His compositions included 'Dear Dave', 'Up On the Hill', 'Gentle Gataa', 'It Zoot Sims' and 'Sweet September', for which he won an Ivor Novello Award in 1963. In 1980, the British Academy of Composers Songwriters and Authors awarded him its Gold Badge of Merit. He was also a founder member of the Niner Club, so called because of his missing finger. The organization raises substantial sums of money for autistic children.

McGuinn, Clark And Hillman

This aggregation of ex-Byrds came together at the end of 1977 and signed a major deal with Capitol Records. Their debut, McGuinn, Clark & Hillman had a distinctly late 70s production courtesy of Ron and Howard Albert, which contrasted markedly with their previous work in such outfits as the Flying Burrito Brothers, Manassas and Dillard And Clark. A catchy single, 'Don't You Write Her Off', written by Roger McGuinn, gave the trio its first Billboard hit since the Byrds days. After touring extensively, Gene Clark left his colleagues during the recording of their second album, City. McGuinn and Hillman soldiered on for one last album which did little to enhance their reputation. The experiment had clearly run its course and when Chris Hillman lashed out against a Capitol Records promotions person, the weary McGuinn announced that their latest partnership was at an end. Thereafter, they returned to various small-time solo ventures. It would be another decade before the two came together again for a brief series of shows with David Crosby.

McGuinn, Roger

b. James Joseph McGuinn, 13 July 1942, Chicago, Illinois, USA. After a period playing at various folk clubs in Chicago, lead guitarist Jim McGuinn briefly joined the Limeliters before accepting a job as an accompanist in the Chad Mitchell Trio in 1960. He played on two of their albums, Mighty Day On Campus and Live At The Bitter End, but after a couple of years became frustrated with his limited role in the ensemble. Bobby Darin, having switched from pop to folk, also recruited McGuinn for a spell, and the guitarist continued to learn his craft by appearing on sessions for artists such as Hoyt Axton, Judy Collins and Tom And Jerry (alias Simon And Garfunkel). By 1964, McGuinn was playing regularly as a soloist at the Troubadour in Hollywood, and it was there that he formed the Jet Set with Gene Clark and David Crosby. Following the recruitment of bassist Chris Hillman and drummer Michael Clarke, the quintet emerged as the chart-topping Byrds. McGuinn was a focal point in the group from the outset, thanks largely to his distinctive 12-string Rickenbacker guitar playing, Dylanesque vocal style and rectangular glasses. The only Byrd actually to play an instrument on 'Mr Tambourine Man', McGuinn was often nominated 'leader' at recording sessions - though his authority was largely illusory during the early stages of the group's career. Never a prolific songwriter, McGuinn's importance to the Byrds lay largely in his playing and arranging skills. Always professing an interest in religion, he became involved in the sect Subud and changed his name to Roger before recording the celebrated The Notorious Byrd Brothers.

By 1968, he was the sole surviving, original Byrd and kept the group going until as late as 1973. That same year, he launched his solo career with a self-titled album which ably displayed his musical versatility - combining folk, surf and even space rock. The Rickenbacker twang was even more evident on his second album, Peace On You (1974), but he lost critical ground with a hastily produced third album. A starring spot in Bob Dylan's Rolling Thunder Revue, in 1975, revitalized his career at a crucial time, laying the foundations for the excellent Cardiff Rose (1976), his most complete work as a soloist. The patchy Thunderbyrd (1977), which included McGuinn's version of Tom Petty's 'American Girl', coincided with a UK tour which brought together three ex-Byrds in different groups on the same bill. Within a year, the trio united as McGuinn, Clark And Hillman, re-enacting the Byrds' stormy career in microcosm when Gene Clark again left after the second album, City. Meanwhile, McGuinn had undergone another religious conversion, this time emerging as a born-again Christian. For virtually the whole of the 80s he performed solo without a recording contract, and avoided any ill-advised Byrds reunions. A legal dispute with his former colleague Michael Clarke briefly saw McGuinn re-establish the Byrds with Chris Hillman and David Crosby. After losing the Byrds name at the injunction stage, a proposed world tour and live album failed to materialize. Instead, McGuinn won a major contract with Arista Records and set about recording his first album in over a decade. McGuinn's 'legendary' reputation as an innovative guitarist has grown to the extent that, during the late 80s, Rickenbacker manufactured a 'Roger McGuinn' production model. This guitar is preset to give a replica of his trademark 12-string sound. In 1990, McGuinn returned to the recording scene with the release of his first album in over a decade, Back From Rio. Critically acclaimed, the album charted on both sides of the Atlantic. McGuinn concentrated on solo performances for much of the early 80s, performing over 200 dates each year in the USA. His first live album was issued in 1996, containing reworkings of old favourites together with two new studio recordings.

McGuinness Flint

Formed in 1969 by Tom McGuinness (b. 2 December 1941, London, England; bass, ex-Manfred Mann) and Hughie Flint (b. 15 March 1942; drums, ex-John Mayall). Dennis Coulson (keyboards), Benny Gallagher (b. Largs, Scotland; guitar/vocals), Graham Lyle (b. Largs, Scotland; guitar/vocals) and Paul Rutherford (saxophone) completed the original line-up, although the latter dropped out the following year. The group enjoyed immediate success with 'When I'm Dead And Gone' and 'Malt And Barley Blues', both of which reached the UK Top 5 and established their brand of light, folksy pop. Two excellent albums confirmed their undoubted promise, although a succession of disastrous live performances undermined progress. Further problems occurred in 1971, when principle songwriters Gallagher And Lyle left to pursue a career as a duo, but although Dixie Dean (bass/harmonica), John Bailey (guitar) and Neil Innes (piano, ex-Bonzo Dog Doo-Dah Band) replaced them, the group broke up at the end of the year. A resurrection of sorts occurred in 1972, when Coulson, Dean, McGuinness and Flint recorded Lo And Behold, a selection of Bob Dylan songs unavailable commercially. Coulson was then replaced by Lou Stonebridge, and with the addition of guitarist Jim Evans, a revamped McGuinness Flint re-emerged the following year. Two more albums were completed, but the unit was unable to recapture that first flush of success and broke up in 1975. Flint, Stonebridge and McGuinness later enjoyed fruitful periods with the Blues Band, albeit at different times.

McGuire Sisters

b. Middletown, Ohio, USA. This close-harmony vocal group, popular in the 50s and early 60s, consisted of three sisters, Chris (Christine) (b. 30 July 1929), Dorothy (Dotty) (b. 13 February 1930) and Phyllis (b. 14 February 1931). While in their teens the sisters sang with church choirs, and won an amateur talent contest at their local cinema for three consecutive weeks. After singing on their local radio station, the McGuires had their first big break, entertaining at army camps and hospitals during a nine-month tour in 1950-51. They then played club and radio dates in Cincinnati before moving to New York in 1952, and successfully auditioning for the Arthur Godfrey Talent Scouts contest. They subsequently became regulars on the show, and also appeared for eight weeks on singer Kate Smith's top-rated radio programme. Signed to the Coral label, they had their first minor hit in 1954 with 'Pine Tree, Pine Over Me', in collaboration with Johnny Desmond and Eileen Barton. During the rest of that year they had further successes with their version of the Spaniels' R&B hit 'Goodnight Sweetheart, Goodnight', followed by 'Muskrat Ramble', 'Lonesome Polecat' and 'Christmas Alphabet'. In 1955 the sisters had their first million-seller with another cover version, 'Sincerely', originally recorded by the Moonglows. The McGuires' version stayed at number 1 in the USA for 10 weeks, and accelerated their breakthrough into the big time in clubs, theatres and on television. They sang on the Red Skelton Show and the Phil Silvers Show and appeared at the Waldorf Astoria, the Desert Inn, Las Vegas and the Coconut Grove in Los Angeles. They made their first visit to London in 1961, and played a season at the Talk Of The Town. Their other hits, up until 1961, included 'No More', 'It May Sound Silly', 'Something's Gotta Give', 'He', 'Moonglow And The Theme From Picnic', 'Delilah Jones'; 'Weary Blues' (with Lawrence Welk), 'Ev'ry Day Of My Life', 'Goodnight My Love, Pleasant Dreams', 'Sugartime', 'Ding Dong', 'May You Always' and 'Just For Old Times Sake'. When the McGuires' sweet style was overtaken by the harder sounds of the Crystals, Shirelles and Supremes during the 60s, they turned to cabaret, and eventually disbanded. Phyllis continued solo, appearing regularly in Las Vegas and other cities. In 1985 the McGuire Sisters re-formed and, in the following year, undertook a national tour, stopping off at Bally's Reno to headline in Donn Arden's lavish revue Hello, Hollywood, Hello. Their well-received act continued into the 90s, leaning heavily on their old catalogue, along with more contemporary material from Cats and Les Miserables, and an a cappella version of 'Danny Boy'. In January 1986, Murray Kane, their personal manager and arranger since 1952, died in Las Vegas. He was responsible for writing the arrangements that won the sisters a spot on the Arthur Godfrey Show, their first break in New York. Prior to that, Kane had worked with Fred Waring, and had been a member of the Crew Chiefs, Glenn Miller's vocal group during World War II.

McGuire, Barry

b. 15 October 1935, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, USA. McGuire first came to prominence as a minor actor in Route 66 before teaming up with singer Barry Kane as Barry And Barry. In 1962, he joined the New Christy Minstrels and appeared as lead singer on several of their hits, most notably, 'Green Green' and 'Saturday Night'. He also sang the lead on their comic but catchy 'Three Wheels On My Wagon'. While still a Minstrel, he composed the hit 'Greenback Dollar' for the Kingston Trio. After leaving the New Christy Minstrels, McGuire signed to Lou Adler's Dunhill Records and was assigned to staff writers P.F. Sloan and Steve Barri. At the peak of the folk-rock boom, they wrote the rabble-rousing protest 'Eve Of Destruction', which McGuire took to number 1 in the USA, surviving a blanket radio ban in the process.The anti-establishment nature of the lyric even provoked an answer record, 'Dawn Of Correction', written by John Madara and Dave White under the pseudonym the Spokesmen. Ironically, 'Eve Of Destruction' had originally been conceived as a flip-side and at one stage was offered to the Byrds, who turned it down. Coincidentally, both Barry McGuire and Byrds leader Jim (later Roger) McGuinn received a flattering namecheck on the Mamas And The Papas' hit 'Creeque Alley' ('McGuinn and McGuire were just a-getting higher in LA, you know where that's at'). McGuire, in fact, played a significant part in bringing the million-selling vocal quartet to Adler and they later offered their services as his backing singers. McGuire unsuccessfully attempted to follow up his worldwide hit with other Sloan material, including the excellent 'Upon A Painted Ocean'. He continued to pursue the protest route on the albums Eve Of Destruction and This Precious Time, but by 1967 he was branching out into acting. A part in The President's Analyst led to a Broadway appearance in the musical Hair. After the meagre sales of The World's Last Private Citizen, McGuire ceased recording until 1971, when he returned with former Mamas And The Papas sideman Eric Hord on Barry McGuire And The Doctor. The work featured backing from the cream of the 1965 school of folk rock, including the Byrds' Chris Hillman and Michael Clarke. Soon afterwards, McGuire became a Christian evangelist and thereafter specialized in gospel albums.

McHargue, Rosy

b. James Eugene McHargue, 6 April 1902, Danville, Illinois, USA. After being taught music by his mother, McHargue began playing clarinet and C melody saxophone, settling on the former as his principal instrument largely through the inspiration of Larry Shields. He first played professionally in 1917 with the Novelty Syncopaters where he was featured as vocalist on the song 'When Rosie Riccoola Do The Hoola Ma Boola', which led to his nickname. In 1924 he hoped to join the Wolverines but when the job went to Jimmy Lord, he took Lord's empty chair in the Sig Meyer band in Chicago. Later, he played with the Seattle Harmony Kings in Atlantic City and recorded with them on alto and baritone saxophones. During the 30s and early 40s McHargue played in the bands of Kay Kayser, Ted Weems and Benny Goodman and was also with Eddie Miller. In the mid-40s he played in several Dixieland bands including those led by Pete Daily, Red Nichols and Pee Wee Hunt. With the latter he played on '12th Street Rag', his burlesqued clarinet solo helping greatly in the record's startling success with the fringe and non-jazz audience. McHargue eventually settled on the west coast where he continued to play and frequently lead his own bands through succeeding decades. In April 1992 he celebrated his 90th birthday at a West Hollywood club, playing and singing with all his old verve and enthusiasm. Despite being little known even within the jazz community, McHargue has consistently set an example to all through his ability, dedication and demeanour.

McHugh, Jimmy

b. James Francis McHugh, 10 July 1894, Boston, Massachusetts, USA, d. 23 May 1969, Beverly Hills, California, USA. A prolific composer for films and the Broadway stage, McHugh was educated at St. John's Preparatory School and Holy Cross College, where he graduated with an honours degree in music. After receiving professional tuition, he worked as a rehearsal pianist at the Boston Opera House, and later as a song-plugger for the Boston office of Irving Berlin Music. Moving to New York, he wrote for Harlem's Cotton Club revues, and had some success with 'When My Sugar Walks Down The Street' (lyric by Irving Mills and Gene Austin) and 'I Can't Believe That You're In Love With Me' (lyric by Clarence Gaskill). His first Broadway success came with the score for the all-black revue, Blackbirds Of 1928, in collaboration with Dorothy Fields, who became his first main lyricist. The songs included 'I Can't Give You Anything But Love', 'Diga Diga Doo', 'I Must Have That Man', 'Doin' The New Low-Down' and 'Porgy'. The original stars, Adelaide Hall and Bill 'Bojangles' Robinson were joined by the Mills Brothers, Ethel Waters, and the orchestras of Cab Calloway, Duke Ellington, and Don Redman on a rare reissue album. The McHugh/Fields team wrote the scores for two more Broadway shows, Hello Daddy (1929, 'In A Great Big Way' and 'Let's Sit And Talk About You'), and International Revue (1930), which starred Gertrude Lawrence and Harry Richman, and featured two important McHugh numbers, 'On The Sunny Side Of The Street' and 'Exactly Like You'. McHugh and Fields also contributed songs to the Chicago revue Clowns In Clover (1933), in which Jeanette Leff introduced the lovely ballad 'Don't Blame Me'. During the 30s and 40s McHugh is said to have written songs for over 50 films, initially with Fields. These included The Cuban Love Song and Dinner At Eight (title songs), Singin' The Blues (title song, 'Its The Darndest Thing'), Have A Heart, ('Lost In A Fog'), Every Night At Eight, starring Alice Faye ('I'm In The Mood For Love', 'I Feel A Song Coming On'), Dancing Lady (title song), and Roberta ('Lovely To Look At', 'I Won't Dance', with Jerome Kern). McHugh's other chief collaborator was Harold Adamson. Together they wrote numerous songs for films such as Banjo On My Knee ('There's Something In The Air'), You're A Sweetheart, starring Alice Faye and George Murphy (title song, 'My Fine Feathered Friend'). That Certain Age ('My Own'), Mad About Music, starring Deanna Durbin ('A Serenade To The Stars', 'I Love To Whistle'), Four Jills In A Jeep, starring Dick Haymes, Alice Faye, and Betty Grable ('How Blue The Night'), Higher And Higher, an early Frank Sinatra film ('The Music Stopped', 'I Couldn't Sleep A Wink Last Night', 'A Lovely Way To Spend An Evening', 'I Saw You First'), Calendar Girl ('Have I Told You Lately That I Love You', 'A Lovely Night To Go Dreaming'), Smash Up ('Red Hot And Beautiful', 'Hushabye Island'), Something For The Boys ('In The Middle Of Nowhere', 'Wouldn't It Be Nice?'). Two other well-known McHugh/Adamson songs were 'Comin' In On A Wing And A Prayer', and 'Love Me As Though There Were No Tomorrow'. In 1939, McHugh collaborated with Al Dubin on 'South American Way', which was introduced by Carmen Miranda, Ramon Vinay, Della Lind, and the Hylton Sisters in the Broadway revue Streets Of Paris. Miranda gave it the full treatment again in the 1940 movie Down Argentine Way. In the same year, McHugh and Dubin worked with Howard Dietz on the score for the stage musical Keep Off the Grass, which included 'Clear Out Of This World' and 'A Latin Tune, A Manhattan Moon, And You'. Other popular McHugh songs include 'I'm Shooting High', 'Let's Get Lost', I'd Know You Anywhere', 'You've Got Me This Way', 'Sing A Tropical Song, "Murder' She Says', 'Say A Prayer For The Boys Over There', 'Can't Get Out Of

This Mood', 'In A Moment Of Madness', 'Blue Again', 'Goodbye Blues', 'I've Just Found Out About Love And I Like It', 'Warm and Willing', 'The Star You Wished Upon Last Night', 'Where The Hot Wind Blows' and 'Massachusetts'. McHugh's collaborators during his long career included Ted Koehler, Frank Loesser, Johnny Mercer, Herb Magidson, Ralph Freed, Ned Washington and Arnold Johnson.

During World War II, McHugh wrote several US Government-commissioned 'War Savings Bond' songs such as 'Buy, Buy, Buy A Bond' and 'We've Got Another Bond To Buy'. For his work during the war he was awarded the Presidential Certificate Of Merit. He continued writing well into the 50s, and in 1955 had a hit with 'Too Young To Go Steady' (with Adamson), which was recorded by Patti Page and Nat 'King' Cole.

Mchunu, Moses

b. 1953, Transvaal, South Africa. During the mid-70s and early 80s, Mchunu was one of the leading vocalists in the raucous Zulu 'jive' style which gave way to mbaqanga. Mchunu's band typified its appeal, featuring driving rhythms and instruments such as guitar, violin and concertinas, together with powerful blues-based vocals. He has released a number of albums which have sold strongly throughout South Africa, but none have managed to sustain an international reputation.

McIntyre, 'Kalaparush' Maurice

b. 24 March 1936, Clarksville, Arkansas, USA. McIntyre's family moved to Chicago when he was six weeks old, and he grew up on the city's south side. He began to play drums at the age of seven, and clarinet two years later, but he did not really study music seriously until his mid-teens, when he concentrated on tenor saxophone. After a drugs problems in the early 60s, he worked on the Chicago blues scene - performing with Little Milton, recording with J.B. Hutto - and also joined Muhal Richard Abrams's Experimental Band, becoming one of the first members of the AACM in 1965. He played with Roscoe Mitchell's sextet (Sound) and with Abrams (Levels And Degrees Of Light) before forming his own group, the Light, and recording his first session as leader in 1969 (Humility In The Light Of The Creator). That same year he underwent a form of spiritual conversion and changed his name to Kalaparush (or Kalaparusha) Ahrah Difda (or Defda), though subsequent recordings have usually been credited to Kalaparush(a) Maurice McIntyre. He later spent time in New York, recording there for the Wildflower series of compilations (volume 1); but he was mostly based in Chicago throughout the 70s and 80s, during which time he played with a variety of artists, including Abrams again, Julius Hemphill, Jerome Cooper, Warren Smith, Roland Alexander, Sonelius Smith and Wilbur Morris. In 1982, he replaced 'Light' Henry Huff in the Ethnic Heritage Ensemble, recording with them on Welcome (but did not play on the later Ancestral Song). A robust, inventive tenor saxophonist, McIntyre cites his chief influences as Sonny Rollins, Charlie Parker, John Coltrane and Sam Rivers, but he has evolved a personal, rhythmically assured style, bristling with authority on his own Ram's Run, waxing more tenderly on Welcome. Regrettably, he is one of several AACM stalwarts who has not been recorded as frequently as their talent deserves.

McIntyre, Hal

b. 29 November 1914, Cromwell, Connecticut, USA, d. 5 May 1959, Los Angeles, California, USA. After playing alto saxophone and clarinet in several groups, McIntyre formed his own big band in 1935. Although fairly popular on the one-night-stand dancehall circuit, the band folded, and in 1937, McIntyre joined Glenn Miller. He remained with Miller until 1941, when he reformed his own band. This time he enjoyed considerably more success, making records and playing on the radio. Although still orientated towards dance music, McIntyre's was always a very sophisticated outfit and the employment of leading jazz players such as Eddie Safranski and Allen Eager ensured that the band swung. Arrangements were largely the responsibility of tenor saxophonist Dave Matthews, whose love of Duke Ellington's music was apparent in much of his work. In the mid-40s McIntyre took his band on overseas trips to entertain US servicemen. He managed to keep the group together into the 50s, but he died in a fire at his home in May 1959.

McIntyre, Ken

b. 7 September 1931, Boston, Massachusetts, USA. McIntyre was born into a musical family (his father played mandolin) and took lessons in classical piano between 1940 and 1945. At the age of 19 he began alto saxophone lessons with Andrew McGhee, Gigi Gryce and Charlie Mariano. In 1954, he attended the Boston Conservatory, and after graduating with an MA in composition, he studied at Brandeis University for two years. He formed his own group in Boston and recorded his debut, Stone Blues, for the Prestige label in 1959. In 1960, he moved to New York and met Eric Dolphy, who played on his Looking Ahead in June of that year. Discouraged by the poor financial returns of the jazz life, McIntyre decided to make teaching his full-time profession. However, he continued to record, releasing The Years Of The Iron Sheep and Way, Way Out (the latter featuring his own flute, oboe, bass-clarinet and alto sax plus his arrangements for strings). In 1964, McIntyre recorded with the Bill Dixon Septet, and in 1965, he played with the Jazz Composers Guild Orchestra. He was also in the Cecil Taylor group that recorded Unit Structures in 1966, a monumental work of intricate jazz modernism. Having taught in schools in New York, he obtained a post at Wilberforce University in Ohio between 1967 and 1969, and taught at the Wesleyan University for two years after that. Since 1971, he has been director of the African-American Music and Dance Department at Old Westbury. The Danish label Steeplechase documented his playing and compositions on a series of five albums in the 70s, since when he has played with Charlie Haden's Liberation Music Orchestra, but made only one more recording under his own name (taken from a 1990 tribute concert to Dolphy, with French reeds player Thierry Bruneau). Although a less innovative talent than Eric Dolphy or Ornette Coleman, McIntyre's work represents an equally valid extension of the music of Charlie Parker and often includes elements of African-Caribbean musics in recognition of the West Indian cultural heritage.

McKagan, Duff

b. Michael McKagan, 5 February 1964, Seattle, Washington, USA. Guns N'Roses' bass player, McKagan has served time in more ad hoc bands than anybody can care to remember. It was once said of McKagan that there were few punk/hard rock outfits in Seattle with whom he had not played at some point, with bands including the Fartz, Ten Minute Warning, Thankless Dogs, Silly Killers and Wandering Bandeleros. However, in 1993 McKagan decided to take the big step towards a solo career. Writing and playing most of the instruments, his debut included guest appearances by a fine array of rock's glitterati, Jeff Beck, Lenny Kravitz, Sebastian Bach (Skid Row) among them. There were also appearances from his Guns N'Roses workmates Matt Sorum, Gilby Clarke and Slash, just to prove there were no bad feelings about his foray. Despite the strength of the largely power-pop musical backing, McKagan's lyrics revealed only faint flashes of insight, notably on 'Man In The Meadow', dedicated to his former best friend, Todd Crew, who died of an overdose in 1987. It also disappointed those expecting him to return to his punk roots (he sang half of the tracks on Guns N'Roses punk tribute album, The Spaghetti Incident).

McKay, Freddie

b. 1947, St. Catherine, Jamaica, West Indies. McKay recorded for producer Prince Buster in 1967 and gained his first hit, 'Love Is A Treasure', for Duke Reid in that same year. Later he moved from Treasure Isle to Coxsone Dodd's Studio One to record a number of popular titles in the early reggae idiom, including 'High School Dance', 'Sweet You Sour You', 'Drunken Sailor' and 'Picture On The Wall'. The latter was also the title of his debut album, which remains McKay's most consistent set. Never in the major league of Jamaican singers, McKay nevertheless commanded a faithful following and continued to make excellent records right up to his untimely death in the mid-80s.

McKay, Kris

b. *c.*1963, Austin, Texas, USA. Singer-songwriter Kris McKay spent much of the early 90s touring America to establish an audience for her melancholic yet biting folk songs. Originally she had been a member of the popular Texas groups Wild Seeds and Hundredth Monkey. She made her solo debut in 1990 with a collection of songs titled What Love Endures for Arista Records, which provoked a favourable critical reaction but few concurrent sales. She waited six years before pursuing a follow-up collection. 1996's Things That Show included an excellent duet with Matthew Sweet, 'Too Cool', as well as cover versions of the Beat's 'Save It For Later' and Jo Carol Pierce's 'Loose Diamond'. However, the best song was arguably 'Testing 1-2', described as a rebuff to relentless romantic opportunists. McKay justified her artistic growth thus: 'I've become a better self-editor, but that's not really a conscious decision; it's just happened. I know I have to communicate in a way people will get, instead of just expressing everything I possibly can. But I try to come close to that. It's a calculated risk, like pretty much everything in my life seems to be.' Things That Show was part-produced at Willie Nelson's Pedernales Studio and revealed an artist standing on the threshold of a major recording career.

● ALBUMS: What Love Endures (Arista 1990),★★★ Things That Show (Shanachie 1996)★★★★.

b. USA. Banjo player McKay formed his dance band, the Marion McKay Orchestra, in Richmond, Indiana, USA, in the early 20s. The sidemen included Ambrose Barringer, Le Roy Morris, Doc Marshall, Russell Mock, Ernie McKay, Henry Lang, George Agonost, Paul Weirick, Izzy George, Terry George, Skinny Budd, Harry Bason, Ed Johns, Jack Tillson, Roger Beals, Clem Johnson, Red Ginslar, Ernie Weaver, Marlin Kiles and Eddie Page. These musicians were usually ordered in a three brass, three reed, piano, bass and drum format. The featured vocalists were Jack Tillson and Fred Stuart. Their performing territory covered a significant proportion of the Midwest, particularly Cincinnati and Cleveland. There were also rarer bookings in New York. Signed to Gennett Records, they were among the first bands to attempt to negotiate that organisation's new electronic recording system, located in its Richmond studios. However, teething troubles ensured that none of these recordings were ever issued. The orchestra was disbanded in the mid-30s when McKay retired as its leader.

b. November 1940, Pontiac, Michigan, USA. An outstanding dancer, singer, and actress, McKechnie grew up in Detroit and decided she wanted to be a dancer after seeing the classic 1948 British film The Red Shoes. Her parents were opposed to the idea, but when she was 15 she moved to New York to try out for the American Ballet Theatre, but was turned down. There followed a brief and unhappy spell at Radio City Music Hall, before she discovered the world of the musical theatre. After touring in West Side Story in which she played one of the 'Cool girls', and various other productions, she made her Broadway debut as a dancer in How To Succeed In Business Without Really Trying in 1961. This was her first meeting with choreographer Bob Fosse, and Gwen Verdon who was the dance captain. McKechnie was involved in several numbers, including 'A Secretary Is Not A Toy' and 'Coffee Break'. She subsequently toured as Philia in A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum, before becoming one of the six gyrating girl dancers on the popular television programme Hullabaloo. Also in the show was Michael Bennett, who was to become an immensely influential figure in her life. In April 1968, McKechnie was back on Broadway as Kathy McKenna in the short-lived musical version of Leo Rosent's collections of short stories *The Education Of H*Y*M*A*N K*A*P*L*A*N*, and in December of that year she played Vivien Della Hoya in Burt Bacharach and Hal David's Promises, Promises, performing the Act One closer, 'Turkey Lurkey Time'. This was followed by a spell as the Princess in the touring company of Call Me Madam which was headed by the legendary Ethel Merman. Michael Bennett had done the choreography for Promises, Promises, and he showcased McKechnie again in the acclaimed 'Tick Tock' number in Stephen Sondheim's innovative Company which opened in 1970. She was also a member of the girl trio that sang the ingenious 'You Could Drive A Person Crazy'. After leaving the New York show, McKechnie reprised her role in Los Angeles and London, and also toured as Ivy in a 1971 revival of On The Town. In March 1973 she choreographed and performed in the renowned one night only concert Sondheim: A Musical Tribute at the Shubert Theatre, and in the following year appeared in the New York City Center revue Music! Music!, as well as joining Richard Kiley and Bob Fosse in the movie The Little Prince.

In 1975 McKechnie created her most memorable role to date, that of Cassie in A Chorus Line, which Michael Bennett conceived, directed and choreographed. Her big number was 'The Music And The Mirror', and she won the Tony Award for Best Actress in a Musical. She married Bennett in 1976, but the marriage broke up after a only few months. After appearing in further productions of A Chorus Line, in 1980 McKechnie was diagnosed as suffering from arthritis and told she would never dance again. She pursued various physical and psychological healing remedies, and returned to the Broadway company of A Chorus Line in 1986. During the remainder of the 80s she toured in Sweet Charity and Annie Get Your Gun, and appeared in the 1988 London revival of Can-Can. In the early 90s she was Off-Broadway, firstly with Georgia Engel and Barbara Feldon in the revue Cut The Ribbons, and then as Mrs. Kelly, 'one of the romantic interests' in Annie Warbucks. In 1993 she, and all of the original 1970 New York cast of Company, except one, assembled for three special nostalgic concert performances. Three years later she played Emily Arden, a 'city-slicker singer', in a Broadway adaptation of Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein II's much-loved film State Fair. Later in 1996 she took her one-woman show, Inside The Music, to London, and while there recreated her part of Cassie for a BBC Radio 2 production of A Chorus Line.

McKee, Maria

b. Maria Louise McKee, 17 August 1964, Los Angeles, California, USA. Before her solo career McKee was the singer with Lone Justice, a band formed by her half-brother, Bryan Maclean, the former Love guitarist and vocalist. Both Lone Justice albums, Lone Justice and Shelter, were critically acclaimed. After the break-up of the band McKee took time to compose herself, and her debut solo album provided a good platform for her powerful voice and distinctive register (similar to a more cultured Janis Joplin) with more pop-orientated hooks. Predominantly concerned with romance and heartbreak, it included an unrepresentative UK number 1 single, 'Show Me Heaven', taken from the soundtrack to the Tom Cruise motor racing film Days Of Thunder. Touring extensively in support of the album, McKee eventually decided to move to Ireland. This period also saw McKee collaborate with a variety of Irish musicians, including Gavin Friday, at a series of gigs for the Dublin A.I.D.S. Alliance. She also recorded the UK club hit 'Sweetest Child', with the help of noted producer Youth (Killing Joke, Brilliant). She eventually returned to Los Angeles in 1992 to begin work on a follow-up set. This time she recruited producer George Drakoulias, veteran of successful albums by Black Crowes and the Jayhawks, both of whom sounded similar to Lone Justice. You Gotta Sin To Get Saved reunited three-quarters of the original line-up of that band: Marvin Etzioni (bass), Don Heffington (drums) and Bruce Brody (keyboards), alongside Gary Louris and Mark Olsen (guitar, vocals) of the Jayhawks. As McKee noted, 'We had everything in common musically so it just happened.' Bob Fisher provided guitar on live dates, with McKee seemingly much more comfortable with the return to rootsy material as highlighted on Life Is Sweet.

McKellar, Kenneth

b. 1927, Paisley, Renfrewshire, Scotland. An accomplished tenor, McKellar first achieved fame as an interpreter of Scottish songs, notably those by poet Robert Burns. Although later work encompassed light opera, sacred songs and popular material, he remained associated with the heritage of his homeland and was an endemic part of the country's entertainment industry. Despite a plethora of contemporaneous pop acts, McKellar was surprisingly nominated as Britain's representative in the 1966 Eurovision Song Contest. His entry, 'A Man Without Love', fared poorly and at a time such records invariably sold well domestically, the ensuing single struggled to reach the Top 30. This aberration apart, the singer has continued to enjoy a successful international career, particularly in countries boasting expatriate Scots.

McKendrick, 'Big Mike'

b. Reuben Michael McKendrick, 1901, Paris, Tennessee, USA, d. 22 March 1965. In the 20s he played banjo and guitar with various bands including one of those led by Edgar Hayes and also with Dave Peyton. In the early 30s he was on the road with Louis Armstrong, in a playing and managerial capacity, led his own band and also played with Erskine Tate and others. He regularly accompanied singer-pianist Cleo Brown. Through the 40s and 50s he continued playing in bands including Franz Jackson's Original Jass All Stars. A solid, if occasionally erratic, player with an agreeable singing voice, McKendrick's career ran parallel to and sometimes intersected with that of his younger brother, 'Little Mike' McKendrick, with whom he is sometimes confused.

McKendrick, 'Little Mike'

b. Gilbert Michael McKendrick, *c.*1903, Paris, Tennessee, USA, d. 1961. McKendrick was born into a very musical family; his father and four brothers were all musicians. In the 20s he played guitar and banjo and also sometimes sang with various bands including Doc Cook's. In the late 20s he worked with Eddie South, visiting Europe where he remained for several years, mostly leading his own band. He returned to the USA shortly before the outbreak of World War II, playing in several bands in New York and Chicago and also leading his own trio, activities he kept up through the 40s and 50s. A good accompanist with a fine sense of rhythm, McKendrick's long years in Europe kept him from wider appreciation in his homeland. One of his brothers played similar instruments and worked as 'Big Mike' McKendrick.

McKenna, Dave

b. 30 May 1930, Woonsocket, Rhode Island, USA. By his late teens, McKenna was active in and around Boston, playing piano with Boots Mussulli's band. In 1949, he joined Charlie Ventura, then worked with Woody Herman until drafted during the Korean War. From 1953 until well into the 60s he was mostly engaged in small group work, playing with Ventura again and with several major artists, including Gene Krupa, Stan Getz and Zoot Sims. From the late 60s until the end of the 70s, he played long residencies at bars and restaurants in the Boston and Cape Cod areas of Massachusetts. His return to the national and international scene happened on several fronts, with record dates, tours and festival appearances with Bob Wilber, Scott Hamilton, Warren Vaché and many other musicians associated with Concord Records. An exceptionally accomplished pianist whether playing solo, as accompanist or in an ensemble role, McKenna's range is wide - although he is clearly happiest playing ballads to which he brings a delightfully melodic touch. Chuck berg, writing in Jazz Times accurately stated that 'If Bach had played jazz, he just might have sounded like Dave McKenna', meaning he makes every single note and space count.

McKenna, Mae

A contemporary Scottish vocalist who contributed an impressive performance on Contraband's sole album in 1973. Shortly after they disbanded, Transatlantic launched McKenna as a singer-songwriter. She recorded a series of competent, but undistinguished albums before spending most of the 80s as a session singer with pop artists such Rick Astley, and Ultravox. In 1988 she surprisingly reappeared on Virgin's Venture offshoot with the Celtic, new age Nightfallers. The ensuing album, Mirage & Reality, displayed her Enya-like qualities and while not as strong as its predecessor, included a stunning interpretation of the Gaelic 'St. Columbia's Hymn'.

McKennitt, Loreena

b. c. 1965, Morden, Canada. Celtic harpist, keyboardist and singer Loreena McKennitt rose to prominence in her native Canada in the mid-80s with a series of independently released albums. The daughter of a livestock dealer, McKennitt's earliest ambition was to become a veterinary surgeon, though she abandoned her studies soon after she discovered Celtic music. While busking in Toronto, she recorded two cassette-only albums which were sold independently - an independence of spirit which can still be seen in the fact that, despite her worldwide success, she continues to be self-managed. Elemental included readings of W.B. Yeats and William Blake poems, plus beautifully performed versions of traditional material such as 'She Moved Through The Fair' and 'Carrickfergus'. Parallel Dreams explored Celtic influences in addition to the music of America's indigenous peoples. Warner Brothers Records saw the commercial potential of her work, despite the fact that a lot of her lyrics were taken from classical poetry and drama. The Visit was compared with the music of Kate Bush and Enya, and went on to sell half a million copies. Mask And Mirror continued her exploration of world religion, a theme also tackled in her 'traveller's diary' which accompanied the release. Songs such as 'The Mystic's Dream' attempted to meld the links between Judaic, Celtic and Christian mysticism. The elegant Palau De La Música Catalona in Barcelona, Spain, was chosen as one of the venues to promote the album, with her band now featuring Steve Lucas (double bass), Rick Lazar (percussion), Kiki Misumi (cello), Brian Hughes (guitar) and Hugh Marsh (violin).

McKenzie, Bob And Doug

Bob and Doug McKenzie were actually pseudonyms for comedians Dave Thomas and Rick Moranis, two Canadians who gained fame on the popular SCTV television programme in the USA. They left their mark in the music world with the 1982 single 'Take Off', which reached the Top 20 in the US, and Great White North, which made the Top 10. Thomas, a former scriptwriter for the Canadian Broadcasting Company, and Moranis, a comedy writer, actor, stand-up comic, included a routine on the television show in which they parodied Canadians. In 1982, they recorded the Great White North based on their characters, and it became a hit. The single featured Geddy Lee of Rush on vocals; the pair never charted again after their initial success. However, Moranis went on to greater success, as an actor who starred in films including Ghostbusters, Parenthood, and Honey I Shrunk The Kids.

● ALBUMS: Great White North (1982)★★★.

b. 17 February 1941, Enfield, Middlesex, England. An actress, singer, and director, Julia McKenzie is one of the most accomplished leading ladies in the British (and occasionally Broadway) musical theatre. She started to perform at an early age, and attended the Sylvia Spriggs Dancing School. She was about to begin training to become a French teacher when she was offered a scholarship to study opera. After spending four years at the Guildhall School Of Music, she performed in provincial theatres and toured in operettas and musical comedies for a good number of years before coming to prominence in 1969 in the London production of Mame, which starred Ginger Rogers. In the early 70s she had her first introduction to Stephen Sondheim's work - with which she has since become indelibly associated - when she took over one of the leading roles in Company. She also replaced Patricia Routledge in Cowardy Custard, and, in 1974, appeared in Cole, another of the Mermaid Theatre's excellent anthology productions. McKenzie's biggest break came two years later when she co-starred with Millicent Martin, David Kernan, and Ned Sherrin in yet another celebratory revue - Side By Side By Sondheim . A surprise hit in London, the show was also well-received in New York where it ran for 384 performances. During the 80s, McKenzie gave a 'dazzling performance' as Lily Garland in On The Twentieth Century, won Variety Club and Laurence Olivier Awards for her portrayal of Miss Adelaide in Guys And Dolls at the National Theatre, and resumed her association with Sondheim in Follies and Into The Woods. The 90s could well be another Sondheim decade for McKenzie. In 1993 she played Mrs. Lovett in the Royal National Theatre's highly acclaimed production of Sweeney Todd, a performance which won her another Olivier Award. And in the same year she directed the New York premiere of Putting It Together, a revue based on the composer's songs, which tempted Julie Andrews back to the New York musical stage for the first time since Camelot (1960). Julia McKenzie has also worked extensively in the straight theatre, and on television where she was voted 'Favourite Comedy Performer' three times in the 80s for her appearances in sitcoms such as Maggie And Her, Fresh Fields, and French Fields. In 1994, she devised (with Kit Hesketh-Harvey) and directed the well-received Mercury Workshop Musical Revue at London's Jermyn Street Theatre.

McKenzie, Red

b. William McKenzie, 14 October 1899, St. Louis, Missouri, USA, d. 7 February 1948. Very much a Jazz Age figure, McKenzie was an ordinary singer and something of a hustler. His principal contribution to jazz lay in his associations with several leading jazzmen of his day for whom he worked tirelessly, promoting record dates and gigs often against reluctance and indifference. In the early 20s, he formed the Mound City Blue Blowers, a group which became enormously popular with the fringe audience. McKenzie's singing and playing of an improvised comb-and-paper instrument, together with other instrumentation such as the kazoo, sometimes militated against a true jazz feel, but among the musicians he hired to augment the band for record dates were some of the best available. The results included two tracks featuring Coleman Hawkins, 'Hello Lola' and 'If I Could Be With You One Hour Tonight', which became classics. A later band, the Rhythm Kings, featured Bunny Berigan. A close associate of McKenzie's was Eddie Condon, for whom he arranged a record date, Condon's first, which helped show the outside world what was happening in the white jazz scene in Chicago. By the early 30s, McKenzie's star had waned, but he returned to limited prominence in the mid-40s, playing at Condon's club and making a handful of records.

McKenzie, Scott

b. Philip Blondheim, 1 October 1944, Arlington, Virginia, USA. McKenzie began his professional career in the Journeymen, a clean-cut folk group. He later recorded some undistinguished solo material before fellow ex-member John Phillips, then enjoying success with the Mamas And The Papas, invited the singer to join him in Los Angeles. Although the folk rock-inspired 'No No No No No' failed to sell, the pairing flourished spectacularly on 'San Francisco (Be Sure To Wear Some Flowers In Your Hair)'. This altruistic hippie anthem, penned by Phillips, encapsulated the innocent wonderment felt by many onlookers of the era and the single, buoyed by an irresistible melody, reached number 4 in the US chart, but climbed to the dizzy heights of number 1 in the UK and throughout Europe. Meritorious follow-ups, 'Like An Old Time Movie' and 'Holy Man', failed to emulate such success, and although McKenzie briefly re-emerged with the low-key, country-influenced Stained Glass Morning, he remained out of the public eye until the 80s, when he joined Phillips in a rejuvenated Mamas And Papas.

● ALBUMS: The Voice Of Scott McKenzie (Ode/Columbia 1967)★★, Stained Glass Morning (1970)★★.

McKibbon, Al

b. Alfred Benjamin McKibbon, 1 January 1919, Chicago, Illinois, USA. After playing bass in various mid-west bands in the late 30s and early 40s, McKibbon moved to New York where he established a solid reputation with leaders of large and small bands, such as Lucky Millinder and Coleman Hawkins. His musical interests were, however, moving away from such late swing era stylists and from the late 40s he became a prominent member of important bop groups including Dizzy Gillespie's big band and the studio band assembled for the Miles Davis-Gil Evans Birth Of The Cool sessions. He also worked with Thelonious Monk but maintained his connection with the mainstream and in 1951 joined George Shearing's quintet for a seven-year stint. Throughout the 60s and succeeding decades, McKibbon played and recorded with leading jazzmen, including Monk, Benny Carter and Gillespie. A meticulous sense of time, allied to a robust style has made McKibbon a much sought-after session musician, able to adapt readily to mainstream and bop demands.

McKinlay, Bob

b. 13 May 1942, Ashton-in-Makerfield, near Wigan, Lancashire, England. Like many others, McKinlay learned guitar from Bert Weedon's Play In A Day. He was a member of the north-west beat group The Long And The Short, which made the UK Top 30 in 1964 with 'The Letter', featuring session musician Jimmy Page on lead guitar. They appeared in the film Gonks Go Beat, and then McKinlay was offered a place in the Mojos. He soon, however, returned to Wigan and a job in a printing works. He became a mature student and gained a degree in sociology and a teaching diploma. He visited Nashville in 1977, and on his return, formed a country group. He decided to become a full-time professional and toured the UK country clubs with American singer-songwriter Steve Young. McKinley is enormously popular around country clubs and manages to support a band. His songs include his personal credo, 'English Born - Dixie Fried', and this Wigan peer has made several cassettes to sell at his shows. He has emulated Bert Weedon by issuing his own guitar tutor.

McKinley, L.C.

b. between 1914 and 1920, Winona, Mississippi, USA, d. 19 January 1970. McKinley is one of the mystery figures of the post-war Chicago blues. He had a much smoother style than most of his contemporaries and was obviously influenced by T-Bone Walker. McKinley was playing in Chicago in the 40s, and recorded as an accompanist to Tampa Red in 1953 and then, under his own name, for States the following year, for Vee Jay Records in 1955, and finally for Bea And Baby in 1959, before he dropped out of the music scene. Willie Dixon reputedly attempted to revive his musical career in the 60s, but to little avail.

McKinley, Ray

b. 18 June 1910, Fort Worth, Texas, USA, d. 7 May 1995, Largo, Florida, USA. After drumming in the danceband led by fellow Texan, singer Smith Ballew, McKinley joined the Dorsey Brothers orchestra in 1934. When the band became Jimmy Dorsey's, after his brother Tommy walked out, McKinley remained in the drum chair until 1939. In the autumn of that year he formed a band which he co-led with Will Bradley. A string of successful novelty songs, and the use of orchestral arrangements which capitalized on the current boogie-woogie craze, helped the band to become very popular. In 1942, he briefly led a band on his own but was then drafted into the US Army Air Force. He became a key member of Glenn Miller's USAAF band and, following Miller's death, took over leadership of the danceband unit. After the war, McKinley led his own outfit for a number of years, then formed a Miller-style unit which he led until 1966. Thereafter he continued to lead bands, large and small, often geared to Miller's music, until the late 70s. He was still active, playing at Miller reunion sessions, into the mid-80s. A fine, swinging drummer, equally at home in big bands and small groups, playing four-beat or two-beat with consummate ease, and an engaging singer, McKinley made a substantial contribution to American dance music.

McKinleys

Sisters Sheila and Jeanette McKinley began their singing careers in the 60s in Edinburgh, Scotland. Their parents were both professional musicians and the duo often featured at local dancehalls. They secured a recording deal when a demo tape reached the production/songwriting team Carter And Lewis. The McKinleys made their debut in March 1965 with 'Someone Cares For Me' which, although influenced by the Phil Spector sound, comes to life thanks to the duo's earthy voices and the song's cavernous arrangement. The follow-up, 'When He Comes Along', written and produced by Geoff Stephens, was slightly disappointing, but the McKinley's reached an artistic peak with 'Sweet And Tender Romance'. This urgent, vibrant Carter/Lewis recording was spurred on by sterling guitar work from Jimmy Page. A haunting ballad, 'Give Him My Love', temporarily closed the McKinleys' recording career in 1965, after which the pair moved to Hamburg where they held a residency at a declining Star Club. Several disappointing records ensued for Dutch Philips and in 1971 Sheila McKinley began a solo career in Germany with her version of Bob Dylan's 'If Not For You'. Both sisters subsequently retired from music.

McKinney's Cotton Pickers

Originally formed shortly after the end of World War I by drummer Bill McKinney (b. 17 September 1895, d. 14 October 1969), the band adopted their name in 1926. By this time McKinney was manager, having hired Cuba Austin to replace himself on the drums. Although geared towards harmless hokum, novelty songs and other aspects of currently popular entertainment, the arrival in 1927 of arranger Don Redman turned the band onto a jazz course. Among the many fine musicians who played in the band in its earlier years were Joe Smith, Doc Cheatham, Claude Jones and Fats Waller. Resident for several years at Detroit's Graystone Ballroom, promoter Jean Goldkette's flagship venue, the unit made a huge impression upon other bands and their arrangers. In 1931, Redman left, forming his own outfit from a nucleus of McKinney musicians. This was a blow from which the band never fully recovered. Even though several important jazzmen played in later editions, among them Benny Carter, who became its musical director, the glory days were over. Indeed, the band made no more records even though it stayed in existence for a few more years. McKinney managed to continue leading a band into the early 40s, but by then it was a shadow of what had gone before. During the four years of its supremacy, the Cotton Pickers established new standards towards which all later big bands would strive. Although history would later credit the period Don Redman spent with the Fletcher Henderson Orchestra as being the start of big band music as it is known today, the arranger's work with this earlier band should not be overlooked. In particular, the lively, skilful manner in which they played Redman's arrangements suggest a band well ahead of its time and place in the story of big band jazz. McKinney himself remained only sporadically active in music for the rest of his life. A year or two after his death in 1969, a number of musicians from Detroit formed the New McKinney's Cotton Pickers, using Redman's and Carter's old scores for successful engagements at jazz festivals in America and Europe.

McKnight, Brian

b. *c.*1974, USA. R&B singer Brian McKnight began his musical career at the age of 18, recording a self-titled debut set for Mercury Records which reached the Top 20 of the US R&B album chart, although its sales returns were modest. Much more successful was his second effort, I Remember You, which sold more than half a million copies and included five Top 20 R&B singles. With his reputation and image established, Mercury decided to pull out all the stops for his third album, the immaculately produced Anytime. Involved in its creation were star names such as Sean 'Puffy' Combs (production), Mase (rapping) and Mary J. Blige and Diane Warren (songwriting). The first single to be taken from the album, 'You Should Be Mine', featured Mase, in an attempt to convert sections of the hip-hop audience to McKnight's work and expand his growing fanbase. However, the single was hardly representative of the mature R&B and romantic balladry that comprised much of the album's contents, which is where McKnight's true talent lies.

b. Rodney Marvin McKuen, 29 April 1933, Oakland, California, USA. One of the revered poets of the late 60s love generation, Rod McKuen took a slow route to the top. He performed various manual jobs as a young man and embarked on both a pop career ('Happy Is A Boy Named Me' was released in the UK in 1957) and an attempted acting career, combining both by appearing as a musician in the rock 'n' roll exploitation movie Rock Pretty Baby in 1957. He also spent a spell as a disc jockey before heading to Paris in the 60s. It was here, in the company of Jacques Brel and Charles Aznavour, that he began writing poetry in a free verse form very typical of the times. Described by Newsweek as 'the king of kitsch', McKuen became one of the few poets able to sell his work in large volumes, and he became a wealthy man. His 60s books included Lonesome Cities, Stanyan Street And Other Sorrows and Listen To The Warm. His musical career continued when he wrote the score for the movie The Prime Of Miss Jean Brodie including the title song 'Jean' and contributed six songs to the soundtrack of A Boy Named Charlie Brown. The most interesting of his albums is McKuen Country, on which he enlists the aid of Glenn Campbell, Big Jim Sullivan and Barry McGuire in a perfectly acceptable stab at country rock. Among his best remembered compositions are 'Seasons In The Sun' (music by Brel and a hit for the Kingston Trio and Terry Jacks), 'If You Go Away', 'Love's Been Good To Me' (recorded by Frank Sinatra on an album of McKuen songs, A Man Alone), 'I Think Of You (music by Francis Lai and a hit for Perry Como), 'Soldiers Who Want To Be Heros', 'Doesn't Anybody Know My Name', and 'The Importance Of The Rose'.

McLachlan, Craig

b. Australia. Craig McLachlan initially rose to prominence for his acting skills in Australian television soap opera Neighbours. However, after both Kylie Minogue and Jason Donovan had converted their thespian fame into a singing career, the same move seemed an obvious next step for McLachlan - particularly as he could actually play an instrument, the guitar. His debut single, a cover version of 'Mona', became an instant UK hit, peaking at number 2 in June 1990. Subsequent singles 'Amanda', 'I Almost Felt Like Crying', 'One Reason Why' and 'On My Own' were more moderately successful. A version of 'You're The One That I Want', drawn from his appearances in the stage musical Grease, returned him to the UK Top 20 and reached number 13 in July 1993. Afterwards he concentrated on resurrecting his acting career. Having played a soldier in the 1991 Australian mini-series Heroes II he joined the cast of BBC Television's science fiction series, Bugs, in 1994.

McLachlan, Sarah

b. 28 January 1968, Bedford, Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada. Singer-songwriter Sarah McLachlan has featured on the Canadian folk scene since she was a 20-year-old, and through a series of well-received albums and tours has blossomed into a well-rounded folk-rock artist and a confident live performer. Fumbling Towards Ecstasy was produced by Daniel Lanois' protégé Pierre Marchand and was inspired partly by a disturbing trip the singer undertook with the World Vision charity to Cambodia and Thailand. The album blends her pastoral and reflective mood with a high-tech production that gives her sound a sophisticated edginess. As on all her releases her earthy voice is the perfect vehicle for her songs about the deeper, darker aspects of the human condition. In 1997, McLachlan inaugurated the Lilith Fair touring festival, a hugely successful showcase for female artists.

McLagan, Ian

b. 12 May 1945, London, England. The organist in the Muleskinners and Boz And The Boz People, McLagan was an established musician prior to joining the Small Faces in 1965. His distinctive style, redolent of Jimmy Smith, quickly became an integral part of the group's overall sound, and he remained an influential figure on their mutation into the Faces. When the latter group split in 1975, McLagan was tempted into the ill-fated Small Faces reunion before embarking on a solo album. Troublemaker featured assistance from several star names, including Keith Richards, Ron Wood and Stanley Clarke, but was a largely disappointing collection. The organist's distinguished work as part of the Rolling Stones' touring ensemble enabled him to relocate to the USA in the late 70s, where he carved out a highly successful career as a session musician playing alongside countless names such as Jackson Browne, Bonnie Raitt, the Everly Brothers, Bob Dylan and more recently, Georgia Satellites, Dogs D'Amour, Stray Cats and Bruce Springsteen.

● ALBUMS: Troublemaker (1979)★, Bump In The Night (1980)★★.

McLain, Tommy

b. 15 March 1940, Jonesville, Louisiana, USA. McLain was a practitioner of a musical style briefly popular in that state during the 50s and 60s called 'swamp pop'. He is best known for his 1966 hit 'Sweet Dreams', written by country singer Don Gibson and previously a hit for Patsy Cline. It peaked at number 15 in the US charts. McLain first came to notice as bassist for Clint West And The Boogie Kings, a popular Louisiana 'blue-eyed soul' band. He recorded 'Sweet Dreams' on his own, and news of its modest sales was brought to the attention of producer Floyd Soileau, who re-recorded the song for his Jin label. The subsequent national success forced the distribution of the disc onto the newly formed MSL Records, and it eventually sold a million copies. McLain released six further singles on Soileau's Jin Records label and Soileau later released two albums of his material but none charted. He was still performing in Louisiana in the early 90s.

McLaren, Malcolm

b. 22 January 1946, London, England. After a tempestuous childhood, during which he was reared by his eccentric grandmother, McLaren spent the mid to late 60s at various art colleges. In 1969 he became romantically involved with fashion designer Vivienne Westwood and they subsequently had a son together, Joseph. Malcolm was fascinated by the work of the Internationale Situationist, a Marxist/Dadaist group which espoused its doctrines through sharp political slogans such as 'be reasonable - demand the impossible'. Their use of staged 'situations', designed to gain the attention of and ultimately enlighten the proletariat, impressed McLaren, and would significantly influence his entrepreneurial career. In 1971 he opened the shop Let It Rock in Chelsea's Kings Road, which catered for Teddy Boy fashions. Among the shop's many visitors were several members of the New York

Dolls, whose management McLaren took over in late 1974. It was to prove an ill-fated venture, but McLaren did spend some time with them in New York and organized their 'Better Dead Than Red' tour. After returning to the UK, he decided to find a new, young group whose power, presence and rebelliousness equalled that of the Dolls. The result was the Sex Pistols, whose brief spell of public notoriety ushered in the era of punk. McLaren was at the peak of his powers during this period, riding the wave of self-inflicted chaos that the Pistols spewed forth. The highlights included McLaren taking sizeable cheques from both EMI and A&M Records, who signed then fired the group in quick succession. The creation of the tragic caricature Sid Vicious, the conflict with Johnny Rotten, the involvement with Great Train Robber Ronnie Biggs and, finally, a self-glorifying film The Great Rock 'n' Roll Swindle, were all part of the saga. Following the Sex Pistols' demise, McLaren launched Bow Wow Wow, heavily promoting the 14-year-old singer Annabella Lu Win. Although their recordings were highly original for the period, the dividends proved unimpressive and the group split. In the meantime, McLaren had served as 'advisor' to and let slip through his hands 80s stars such as Adam Ant and Boy George (Culture Club). Eventually, he decided to transform himself into a recording star, despite the fact that he could not sing (ample evidence of which had appeared on his Great Rock 'n' Roll Swindle out-take, 'You Need Hands'). His singular ability to predict trends saw him assimilating various styles of music, from the Zulu tribes in Africa to the ethnic sounds of the Appalachian Mountains. The arduous sessions finally came to fruition with Duck Rock, which featured two UK Top 10 singles, 'Buffalo Girls' and 'Double Dutch'. The work pre-empted rock's interest in world music, as exemplified on Graceland by Paul Simon. McLaren next persisted with the music of urban New York and was particularly interested in the 'scratching' sounds of street hip-hop disc jockeys. Would Ya Like More Scratchin' again anticipated the strong dance culture that would envelop the UK pop scene in the late 80s. Ever restless, McLaren moved on to a strange fusion of pop and opera with Fans, which featured a startling version of 'Madam Butterfly' that became a UK Top 20 hit. Following his experimental forays in the music business, McLaren relocated to Hollywood for a relatively unsuccessful period in the film industry. Nothing substantial emerged from that sojourn, but McLaren remains as unpredictable and innovative as ever. Paris, and the subsequent ambient remix album, proved more popular in Europe than the UK.

McLaughlin, John

b. 4 January 1942, Yorkshire, England. Born into a musical family - his mother played violin - McLaughlin studied piano from the age of nine. He then took up the guitar because, like so many of his generation, he was inspired by the blues. By the time he was 14 years old, he had developed an interest in flamenco - the technical guitarist's most testing genre - and later started listening to jazz. He moved to London and his first professional gigs were as part of the early 60s blues boom, playing with Alexis Korner, Georgie Fame and Graham Bond. As the 60s progressed, McLaughlin became interested in more abstract forms, working and recording with John Surman and Dave Holland. He also spent some time in Germany playing free jazz with Gunter Hampel. His Extrapolation, recorded in 1969, with Surman and drummer Tony Oxley, was a landmark in British music. McLaughlin's clean, razor-sharp delivery wowed a public for whom guitars had become an obsession. The rock music of the Beatles and the Rolling Stones seemed to be adding something to R&B that the Americans had not considered, so when Tony Williams - the drummer who had played on Eric Dolphy's Out To Lunch - formed his own band, Lifetime, it seemed natural to invite the young English guitarist aboard. McLaughlin flew to New York in 1969, but left the band the following year. His own My Goal's Beyond (1970) flanked his guitar with the bass of Charlie Haden and the percussion of Airto Moreira. Meanwhile, ever conscious of new directions, Miles Davis had used McLaughlin on In A Silent Way, music to a rock beat that loosened rhythmic integration (a nod towards what Dolphy and Ornette Coleman were doing). However, it was McLaughlin's playing on the seminal Bitches Brew (1970) that set the jazz world alight: it seemed to be the ideal mixture of jazz chops and rock excitement. Nearly everyone involved went off to form fusion outfits, and McLaughlin was no exception. His Mahavishnu Orchestra broke new boundaries in jazz in terms of volume, brash virtuosity and multi-faceted complexity. The colossal drums of Billy Cobham steered McLaughlin, ex-Flock violinist Jerry Goodman and keyboard player Jan Hammer into an explosive creativity bordering on chaos. The creation of rock superstars had found its equivalent for jazz instrumentalists. McLaughlin sported a custom-built electric guitar with two fretboards. By this time, too, his early interest in Theosophy had developed into a serious fascination with Eastern mysticism: McLaughlin announced his allegiance to guru Snr i Chinmoy and started wearing white clothes. When Cobham and Hammer left to form their own bands, a second Mahavishnu Orchestra formed, with ex-Frank Zappa violinist Jean-Luc Ponty and drummer Narada Michael Walden. This group never quite recaptured the over-the-top glory of the first Orchestra, and compositional coherence proved a problem. In the mid-70s, McLaughlin renounced electricity and formed Shakti with Indian violinist L. Shankar and tabla-player Zakir Hussain. This time McLaughlin's customized guitar had raised frets, allowing him to approximate sitar-like drone sounds. In 1978, McLaughlin made another foray into the world of electricity with the One Truth Band, but punk had made the excesses of jazz-rock seem old-fashioned and the band did not last long. In 1978, he teamed up with Larry Coryell and Paco De Lucia as a virtuosic guitar trio. Guitar experts were astonished, but critics noted a rather dry precision in his acoustic playing: McLaughlin seemed to need electricity and volume to really spark him. After two solo albums (Belo Horizonte, Music Spoken Here), he played on Miles Davis's You're Under Arrest in 1984. In November 1985, he performed a guitar concerto written for him and the LA Philharmonic by Mike Gibbs. The same year he joined forces with Cobham again to create a violin-less Mahavishnu that featured saxophonist Bill Evans as an alternate solo voice. In 1986, they were joined by keyboardist Jim Beard. Two years later, McLaughlin toured with Trilok Gurtu, a percussionist trained in Indian classical music, and was again playing acoustic guitar; a 1989 trio concert (with Gurtu) at London's Royal Festival Hall was later released on record. McLaughlin was back in the UK in 1990, premiering his Mediterranean Concerto with the Scottish National Orchestra at the Glasgow Jazz Festival. After The Rain proved to be his most successful album for many years in 1995.

McLaughlin, Ollie

b. 24 March 1925, Carthage, Mississippi, USA, d. 19 February 1984. McLaughlin was a record producer whose list of credits included artists such as Del Shannon, the Capitols, Deon Jackson and jazz great Chet Baker. McLaughlin moved to Michigan in his youth and, upon graduating high school and spending time in the army, he moved to Chicago, where he became a disc jockey. With his brother Maxie, he began promoting concerts. A move to Ann Arbor, Michigan, found him promoting some of the area's hottest jazz and R&B concerts. He produced an album by the Chet Baker Quartet, Jazz At Ann Arbor, for the Pacific Jazz label. Dave Brubeck's Jazz Goes To College was recorded at a McLaughlin-produced concert. By 1958, he had given up promotion, but in 1960 he heard a country band led by Charles Westover, better known as Del Shannon, and convinced the artist to allow McLaughlin to produce him. 'Runaway' was McLaughlin's first major production and drew him into the business full-time. He produced other hits for Shannon, as well as 'Hello Stranger' by Barbara Lewis, Deon Jackson's 'Love Makes The World Go Round', the Capitols' 'Cool Jerk' and others. He remained active until his death in 1984, but had no other major hits after the 60s.

McLawler, Sarah

b. *c.*1928, Louisville, Kentucky, USA. McLawler began playing piano by ear at the age of seven, quickly graduating to playing at the church of which her father was minister. She then took lessons and later won a scholarship to a music conservatory where she studied pipe organ and developed her wide musical knowledge. In the early 40s she was living in Chicago and her interest in jazz, already aroused by hearing touring bands elsewhere, was accelerated thanks to hearing Earl 'Fatha' Hines at a hotel where her brother-in-law was working. McLawler continued to study, this time at Fisk University, and was also starting to play in public. Her first important engagements were in Chicago clubs where she played piano as a single and also teamed up with two other young female musicians to form a trio. She continued to work in small female groups and also as a single, sometimes leading a small band, such as the Syncoettes which she led for five years in the late 40s and early 50s. During this period McLawler would also sometimes sing and had a minor hit record. Eventually, the band reached New York but finally McLawler folded the group. Around this time she was encouraged by Wild Bill Davis to take up the organ and, equipped with a Hammond B3, she formed a trio which played a residency in Brooklyn. The engagement quickly became noticed in jazz circles and many leading musicians dropped in and sometimes sat in. While there, McLawler was introduced to violinist Richard Ott and they teamed up musically and then matrimonially. With the addition of a drummer the group became very popular, playing the Apollo Theatre in Harlem and also making records. As McLawler told Sally Placksin, 'I reached a new plateau when I met Richard Ott. The organ and the violin was a very unusual thing . . . We were always experimenting with sound'. Mostly in duo with Ott but sometimes with drums, McLawler played throughout the 60s and into the 70s. Ott died in 1979 but McLawler played on, appearing at jazz festivals, mostly in and around New York, and appearing with the Big Apple Jazzwomen. An exceptionally gifted musician, McLawler's organ playing is perhaps her most popular form but her piano playing has a controlled flair while her singing accords her genuine labelling as an all-round entertainer.

McLean, Don

b. 2 October 1945, New Rochelle, New York, USA. McLean began his recording career performing in New York clubs during the early 60s. A peripatetic singer for much of his career, he was singing at elementary schools in Massachusetts when he wrote a musical tribute to Van Gogh in 1970. After receiving rejection slips from countless labels, his debut Tapestry was issued by Mediarts that same year, but failed to sell. United Artists next picked up his contract and issued an eight-minutes plus version of 'American Pie'. A paean to Buddy Holly, full of symbolic references to other performers such as Elvis Presley and Bob Dylan, the song topped the US chart and reached number 2 in the UK. The album of the same name was also an enormous success. In the UK, 'Vincent' fared even better than in his home country, reaching number 1. By 1971, McLean was acclaimed as one of the most talented and commercial of the burgeoning singer-songwriter school emerging from the USA. According to music business legend, the song 'Killing Me Softly With His Song' was written as a tribute to McLean, and was subsequently recorded by Lori Lieberman and Roberta Flack. McLean's affection for Buddy Holly was reiterated in 1973, with a successful cover of 'Everyday'. Meanwhile, his song catalogue was attracting attention, and Perry Como registered a surprise international hit with a cover version of McLean's 'And I Love You So'. Despite his promising start, McLean's career foundered during the mid-70s, but his penchant as a strong cover artist held him in good stead. In 1980, he returned to the charts with a revival of Roy Orbison's 'Crying' (UK number 1/US number 2). Thereafter, his old hits were repackaged and he toured extensively. As the 80s progressed, he moved into the country market, but remained popular in the pop mainstream. In 1991, his 20-year-old version of 'American Pie' unexpectedly returned to the UK Top 20, once again reviving interest in his back catalogue.

McLean, Jackie

b. 17 May 1932, New York City, New York, USA. Coming as he did from a musical background (McLean's father played guitar with the Tiny Bradshaw band), Jackie was encouraged by family friends who included Bud Powell. It was through Powell that alto saxophonist McLean came to the attention of Miles Davis, with whom he played in 1951, having previously gigged with Sonny Rollins. Throughout the 50s McLean performed and recorded with numerous leading jazzmen, among them Charles Mingus and Art Blakey. He also led his own groups, touring internationally, and from the early 70s became active in musical education. In the late 70s, he had a surprising entry in the UK pop charts with his 'Dr Jackyll And Mr Funk', a disco favourite, which reached number 53. Strongly influenced by Charlie Parker and Ornette Coleman, McLean's forceful and highly personal playing style reflects his interest in several schools of modern jazz. McLean's son, Rene, is a jazz saxophonist. A fresh wave of albums in the early 90s gave Mclean an indian summer after a number of years of recording inactivity. The recent crop easily matches the best of his work during his vintage Blue Note period in the 60s.

McLean, Nana

b. *c.*1960, Jamaica, West Indies. McLean began singing in her childhood, and won various local carnival contests. A notable success came at the Donkey Carnival in Linstead Market, where her performance led to her singing for the Soul Defenders, and she made her debut recording sessions at Studio One in 1977. Coxsone Dodd released her interpretation of 'Til I Kissed You', which announced McLean's arrival and showcased her characteristic style. She continued to maintain a high profile within the industry through to 1979, when she was commissioned to record Dream Of Life, released through A&M Records. As with many major label signings, the relationship was brief and she returned to an independent recording career. In 1987 she was recording with King Jammy ('Single Girl') and for the Youth & Youth co-operative ('Take Me Higher'). By the early 90s she had gained prominence for her work with Donovan Germain and Dave 'Rude Boy' Kelly. 'Take Me I'm Yours' was followed by the retrospective 'Nana's Medley', which featured 50s doo-wop over the popular 'Love I Can Feel' rhythm. A popular medley including versions of 'Daddy's Home', 'Eddie My Love' and 'Sincerely' led to a series of hits, such as 'Let Me Cover You' and 'I Will Follow You', which cemented her association with the duo. Although McLean relocated to Canada, she remained loyal to the producer's Penthouse organization, and in 1997 she earned a Juno award for her release Collectors Series.

McLeod, Enos

b. 1946, Trenchtown, Kingston, Jamaica, West Indies. Prior to his involvement in music McLeod served an apprenticeship as a cabinetmaker and trained as a boxer. His early work surfaced in the mid-60s with the debut 'Mackie', produced by Sid Bucknor, the resident engineer at Studio One. Bucknor coached McLeod in record production and this led to his initial success as a producer, with the release of 'Young Love' by Lloyd Clarke. The single surfaced on a UK release in the mid-60s through Blue Beat Records. McLeod followed this achievement by working with many of Jamaica's top performers, including Gregory Isaacs, Ken Boothe and the Gaylads, as well as the debut release from Prince Far I, who had until this session recorded under the name of King Cry Cry. In addition to production work, McLeod continued to voice his own hits, including 'Tel Aviv', 'Hello Carol', 'Bad Times', 'Hi-Jacking', 'Come Running Back' and 'If You Love Jah', while in combination he released 'Jestering' (with Shorty The President) and 'Jericho' (alongside the Mighty Diamonds). In the mid-70s McLeod was approached by Joe Gibbs, mindful of his boxing skills, to act as the bouncer at the producer's Retirement Crescent studio. While keeping out gatecrashers he also worked on recording sessions with the resident engineer, Errol Thompson, resulting in the scarcely available 'Money Worries' and, by contrast, his biggest hit, 'By The Look', released in the UK through Hawkeye. McLeod's intermittent output is eagerly consumed by his faithful followers and he continued recording through to the 90s, latterly in Europe, where he maintained flourishing business ventures.

McLin, Jimmy

b. James A. McLin, 27 June 1908, Brookesville, Florida, USA, d. 15 December 1983. After learning piano as a small child he began playing banjo, then guitar. On the latter instruments he played with several bands throughout the 20s, then moved to New York where he played with James P. Johnson and others during the 30s. In the early 40s he was with Claude Hopkins. Throughout his New York years he was frequently on call for recording sessions, including dates with Willie 'The Lion' Smith and Billie Holiday. He was in the US Navy during World II, playing in a service band. After the war he returned to Hopkins, playing with the band into the early 50s although he undertook extensive musical studies during these years. Always in demand for recording dates, McLin continued to work through succeeding decades, spending many years with the Ink Spots vocal group. Essentially a rhythm section player, rather than a soloist of note, McLin supplied discreet and subtly encouraging accompaniment to numerous artists on countless recording dates.

MCM

b. England. A former member of the well-regarded British hip-hop group Caveman, rapper MCM left that band due to internal friction and problems with their record company, Profile Records. MCM was the first of the former members to secure a solo contract, this time through BMG Records. He made his debut with the 1994 single, 'I Got Soul', produced by DJ Biznizz, which was stylistically familiar to the work of Caveman and their largely imported US style, but with a rawer, funkier edge. However, delays in the release of his debut album ensured he was unable to convert the positive reviews for 'I Got Soul' into artistic momentum.

McMahon, Andrew 'Blueblood'

b. 12 April 1926, Delhi, Louisiana, USA, d. 17 February 1984, Monroe, Louisiana, USA. McMahon played blues and hillbilly music in Mississippi and worked with Bukka White in Memphis, Tennessee, before moving to Chicago in 1949. During the 50s he worked with J.B. Hutto and Jimmy Dawkins, and played bass guitar for Howlin' Wolf and recorded during 1960-73. McMahon recorded under his own name for the Bea And Baby label in 1971, and as 'Blueblood' for Dharma Records in 1973. After leaving Wolf, he led a band around the Chicago clubs and recorded a live album for MCM in 1976, following which he returned to his home state and left music. Although he was a limited singer, McMahon always seemed to attract all-star line-ups for his recording sessions.

McMillan, Terry

b. Terry Lee McMillan, 12 October 1953, Lexington, North Carolina, USA. The son of alcoholic parents, he suffered a miserable childhood owing to his parents being continually forced to move. In 1960, he began to play drums but soon turned to piano and harmonica. In 1973, he joined Eddy Raven's band in Nashville until 1975, when Chet Atkins hired him to play harmonica with his touring show. Afterwards, he had spells with both Jerry Reed and Jeannie C. Riley before deciding to concentrate more on session work. In the late 70s, he played on various albums including those by Steve Young, Mickey Newbury and Gary Stewart. He made solo recordings, including vocals, for RCA in the early 80s, and gained a single minor Billboard hit 'Love Is A Full Time Thing', in 1982, but soon returned to being a session musician. Sometimes playing percussion as well as harmonica, he has played on countless recordings by major artists including Ray Charles, Elvis Presley, Dolly Parton, Garth Brooks and too many others to mention. He visited the UK in the 80s and appeared at the Wembley Festival. In 1993, as a member of the band that played at President Clinton's inaugural ball, he created a great impression with his harmonica version of 'Amazing Grace'. After a house fire in 1992, which almost cost him and his family their lives, he became a born-again Christian. He recorded an album for Step One, in 1993, with Nashville's Christchurch Choir. McMillan has become one of country music's most sought after session musicians on both harmonica and percussion.

McMorland, Alison

b. 12 November 1940, Clarkston, Renfrewshire, Scotland. When McMorland was aged four, her family moved to Strathaven, where she spent most of her school days. Later, when living in Helston, Cornwall, during the 60s, she became involved in the folk revival. In 1967, McMorland produced a teaching manual for the Smithsonian Institute in Washington DC, USA, to accompany a video made a year earlier, British Traditional Singing Games. It was not until 1970, however, that she first performed at a Scottish festival in Irvine. The following year, she won the women's traditional singing trophy at the Kinross folk festival. During the early 70s, McMorland worked on a project for the York Museum, producing a sound tape of songs and memories of old York called These Times Be Good Times. She also spent a great deal of time researching Scottish folk song tradition, as well as collecting songs on children's games and stories. In 1974, McMorland made a film on this particular subject, Pass It On, and was later invited by the Smithsonian Institute to appear in the Festival of American Folk Life. She also initiated workshops for children at festivals, specializing in songs and games. With Frankie Armstrong, she ran voice workshops, very innovative in the 70s, but now regarded as normal. For seven years, until the series ended, she presented Listen With Mother for BBC radio. For the series, she chose all the music, and always made a point of including folk material in the programme. McMorland sang with the Albion Band at the National Theatre debut of Lark Rise To Candleford, and later went on a European tour with The Passion And Creation, produced by Bill Bryden. Belt Wi' Colours Three, an album of Scottish traditional songs, included Aly Bain on fiddle, and Rab Wallace on pipes. My Song Is My Own featured songs from a women's perspective, ranging from the traditional 'John Anderson, My Jo' to the 1977 composition 'Lady Bus Driver'. Both McMorland and Peta Webb were the subject of one of a series of a films, made in 1980, by Phillip Donnelly, called Pioneers Of The Folk Revival. Others featured in the series were Martin Carthy, Peggy Seeger, Leon Rosselson and Roy Bailey, Frankie Armstrong and Ewan MacColl. McMorland also contributed to That'd Be Telling-Tales Of Britain, in 1985, a multi-cultural collection compiled by Mike Rosen and John Griffiths for the Cambridge University Press.

One of McMorland's more recent projects, resulted in the book Memories, a reminiscence project on Humberside of old people's musical memories, which were also recorded. In 1986, sheheaded another project called Threads, featuring Grand Union, a group of exiled musicians from different ethnic communities, who fused Scottish and Asian musical styles. The project told the story of the cotton trade and slavery in music. In 1990, McMorland took up the post of Traditional Folk Arts Lecturer for the Strathclyde Region.

McMullen, Fred

A shadowy figure, McMullen recorded for ARC in New York in January 1933, playing immaculate bottleneck blues guitar, whether behind his own vocals or with one or other of the Atlanta guitarists Curley Weaver and Buddy Moss. They also recorded as a trio, with Moss on harmonica. McMullen was listed only once in the 1932 Atlanta City Directory, and Moss maintained that he had returned to his home-town of Macon, Georgia, after the session. The intensity of 'De Kalb Chain Gang' ('They whipped me and they slashed me, forty-five all in my side') suggests that it was autobiographical, and that he may have been on his way home following release from prison when he encountered the Atlanta musicians.

McNabb, Ian

b. 3 November 1960, Liverpool, Merseyside, England. Former Icicle Works guitarist, singer and songwriter Ian McNabb never earned the commercial rewards he deserved first time round with his highly individual, underrated band. The Liverpool group's back-catalogue reputedly continues to sell better since their demise than it ever did while active, but more pertinent compensation for McNabb has arrived in a highly visible solo career. Though he has steered closer to the mainstream since the Icicle Works dissolved, he remains essentially the same prolific and acute songwriting commentator that many critics adored in the previous decade. His debut album, Truth And Beauty, was recorded on a small budget (allegedly via a loan secured by the artist's own mortgage) in Oldham, Lancashire. Andrew Lauder of This Way Up Records was the only one to express any interest, and the record was eventually released early in 1993. It housed one notable single, 'If Love Was Like Guitars'. His breakthrough album, Head Like A Rock, was afforded a much grander platform. It was recorded over three weeks in Los Angeles, California, USA, with expert help from Meters' drummer Joseph Modeliste, pedal steel guitar player Greg Leisz (of k.d. lang fame), plus Hutch Hutchings (rhythm guitar), Ralph Molina (drums) and Billy Talbot (bass) of Neil Young's Crazy Horse band. Amazingly, nobody had ever asked Crazy Horse to play on anybody else's record before, but they were happy to oblige, despite the almost 20-year age gap. The album, with sonic similarities to Neil Young that proved inescapable, earned rave critical reviews, ensuring a Mercury Prize nomination for a man whose career looked unlikely to be sustainable just a few months previously. Merseybeast continued the run of excellent quality pop with lyrical maturity and hair-raising melody, but sadly this album did not build on the critical success of Head Like A Rock.

McNamara, Robin

McNamara was an original member of the cast of the Broadway musical Hair in the 60s, before placing two singles on the charts in 1970. The same year, he signed with the New York-based Steed Records, owned by songwriter Jeff Barry, and recorded 'Lay A Little Lovin' On Me', written by the two of them plus Jim Cretecos. It reached number 11 in the US that summer, and was followed by 'Got To Believe In Love', which featured other singers from Hair on backing vocals. The second single did not reach number 80, however, and McNamara's recording career ended.

McNamara, Tim

b. Timothy Edmund McNamara, 10 October 1922, Lucknow, near Orange, New South Wales, Australia, d. 16 April 1983, Sydney, Australia. A pioneer of Australian country music, not only by his own performances but by the help he gave fellow performers. The youngest of 11 children, he worked as a boundary rider on a sheep station when he was 12. The following year, when the family relocated to Sydney, he refused to accompany them. Instead, having quit school, he spent the next four or five years working on dairy farms. He learned to play guitar, sing and yodel the hillbilly songs that he heard on the radio by such singers as Tex Morton. In 1940, he married Daphne Ford, a top horse rider and she encouraged him to pursue a singing career. He saw service with the Air Force during World War II, some of it overseas but sang whenever the opportunity arose. Returning to civilian life in 1945, writing much of his own material, he resumed the life of an entertainer, sometimes working as a duo with his brother Tommy Mack. By 1948, he was a well-established artist and appeared in the film Into The Straight. He sang two of his own songs, 'Riding Along' and 'We're Going To The Rodeo Today', both of which he later recorded, with four other songs, at his first recording session in August that year. In 1949, he joined 2SM Sydney as the presenter of their country show. Here he played records, sang a few songs and interviewed any available guests. Both Slim Dusty and Gordon Parsons gained initial career boosts through their appearances on the programme. In August 1950, McNamara persuaded 2SM and Rodeo Records to sponsor a national talent show, with a recording contract as the prize to be won at the grand final in Sydney's Town Hall. The first show attracted massive interest, eventually being won by Reg Lindsay with Shorty Ranger in second place. The process was repeated in other years and many artists achieved a breakthrough following appearances on McNamara's show. In 1950, McNamara had joined Rodeo Records and during the 50s, he recorded around 52 sides for the label, with many being self-penned numbers. In 1952, he became more active in production and with his wife, promoted shows in many areas that featured most of the top Australian artists. He recorded six sides for Festival in 1956 but made no further recordings until the 70s, when he recorded albums for EMI and Picture before returning to EMI. He maintained regular appearances around the Australian country circuit and even played the Grand Ole Opry in 1959 during an American visit. In 1981, his dedicated commitment to the Australian country music scene saw him become only the sixth person elected to the Country Music Roll Of Renown (Australia's equivalent to Nashville's Country Music Hall Of Fame). McNamara remained active promoting shows and helping fellow artists, until he finally lost his battle against cancer and with his wife, son Tim and old friend Smoky Dawson at his bedside, died in a Sydney hospital on 16 April 1983.

McNeely, Big Jay

b. Cecil James McNeely, 29 April 1927, Los Angeles, California, USA. As a tenor saxophonist McNeely was one of the pioneers of the wild, honking style that emerged in the dancehalls during the late 40s. The definitive tune of this style was 'Deacon's Hop', which reached number 1 R&B in 1949. His 'Wild Wig', which went to number 12 R&B the same year, was McNeely's only other chart record in this style. He returned to the charts in 1959 with the classic 'There Is Something On Your Mind' (number 5 R&B/number 44 pop), but vocalist Sonny Warner was the focus rather than McNeely. During the 80s McNeely revived his career with a series of reissue albums. His new recordings were mainly released in Europe only.

b. Big Pond, Cape Breton Island, Nova Scotia, Canada. McNeil appeared on the music scene in Britain almost overnight, and has had a degree of success in the field of country and folk music. In 1985, she went to Tokyo to perform at the Canada Expo pavilion, and in 1987, Flying On Your Own was released. The title track was also recorded by fellow Canadian Anne Murray. That same year, McNeil sang at the Edinburgh Folk Festival, and won a Canadian Juno award as Most Promising Female Vocalist. She first appeared in London, England, in September 1990, and Polydor released three of her albums, Flying On Your Own, Reason To Believe and Rita. In the same year, McNeil's Reason To Believe toppled Madonna from the top of the Australian album charts. Mixing country, folk and elements of Gaelic drawn from the fact that her family originally came from Scotland, McNeil has had less success in Britain than on her home ground, but still charted with 'Working Man', which reached the UK Top 20. Her albums have achieved platinum sales in Canada and she was the subject of a 1991 documentary, Home I'll Be.

McNulty, Chris

b. 23 December 1953, Melbourne, Victoria, Australia. Starting to sing professionally when she was aged 15, McNulty quickly developed a reputation in and around Melbourne. In the early 70s, while still singing in clubs and hotels, she studied musical theory. Tours of Australia and South-east Asia extended her experience and popularity and in 1975 she helped form a jazz group which performed in the jazz-funk idiom. Simultaneously, McNulty was also in growing demand as a studio singer, working on radio and television. In 1980 she moved to Sydney where she formed a new jazz group which was highly successful during the next few years. In 1985 she visited New York where she sang at the Bluenote club. By the late 80s McNulty was back in New York, this time picking up a contract to record for Trend/Discovery. She has continued to sing in the New York area, working with such leading musicians as Peter Leitch, Cecil McBee, George Mraz and Kenny Washington. McNulty's repertoire ranges over the great standards and modern jazz classics. She has also written lyrics for various songs including Miles Davis's 'A Kind Of Blue'. Singing in a rich contralto with a pleasing hint of toughness, McNulty ably interprets the lyrics she sings while giving full rein to her ability to phrase imaginatively in the jazz idiom.

McPartland, Jimmy

b. 15 March 1907, Chicago, Illinois, USA, d. 13 March 1991. McPartland began playing cornet while still at Austin High School in Chicago, and became a founding member of both the Austin High School Gang (not all of whom were pupils there) and the Blue Friars. At the age of 17, he replaced Bix Beiderbecke in the Wolverines, and two years later was with Art Kassell's Castles In The Air band. In 1927, he joined Ben Pollack for a two-year stint, then freelanced with numerous bands, small and large, playing on many record dates, until World War II. While still on active service, he married British pianist Marian Turner (see Marian McPartland). After the war he returned to playing in small dixieland-orientated bands, toured many countries, and was still entertaining audiences in the mid-80s with appearances at prestigious events such as the Nice Jazz Festival. A fiery, exuberant player, McPartland was also capable of playing with a wistful elegance that recalled his earliest and greatest influence, Bix Beiderbecke.

McPartland, Marian

b. Marian Margaret Turner, 20 March 1920, Windsor, Berkshire, England. Prior to World War II, McPartland played British music halls as a member of a four-piano group led by Billy Mayer. While touring with ENSA (the British equivalent of America's USO), she met and married Jimmy McPartland. At the end of the war she went to the USA with her husband, quickly establishing a reputation in her own right. During the late 40s and throughout the following decade, she worked steadily, usually leading a trio, holding down several long residencies, notably an eight-year spell at the Hickory House. During the 60s and 70s she developed a long-lasting interest in education, established her own recording company, Halcyon Records, performed extensively in clubs and at festivals and also began parallel careers as a writer and broadcaster on jazz. A very gifted pianist, rhythmically near-perfect and with a seemingly endless capacity for intelligent improvising, her long-running radio show, Piano Jazz, has helped establish her as one of the best-known jazz artists in America. Although divorced from her husband Jimmy, she has latterly made occasional concert appearances with him. McPartland has also worked successfully in duos with Joe Venuti, and with fellow pianists Teddy Wilson and George Shearing. In addition to her other many activities, she has also made a successful crossover into classical music, performing such works as the Grieg Piano Concerto, George Gershwin's 'Rhapsody in Blue', and a series of popular songs arranged for piano and orchestra by Robert Farnon. Although relatively little known in the country of her birth, McPartland continues to prove herself to be one of the outstanding pianists in jazz. A collection of her articles on jazz, All In Good Time, was published in 1987.

McPeak Brothers

A bluegrass band which comprises Dewey McPeak (b. 12 August 1941, Wytheville, Virginia, USA; banjo/guitar/vocals), Larry McPeak (b. Larry James McPeak, 13 July 1947, Wytheville, Virginia, USA; bass/guitar/vocals) and Mike McPeak (b. Michael Eugene McPeak, 4 May 1949, Wytheville, Virginia, USA; guitar/lead vocals). An elder brother, Udell (b. Udell Marion McPeak, 12 June 1935, Wytheville, Virginia, USA; guitar), had been playing in bluegrass music from the mid-50s and worked with the Lonesome Pine Fiddlers, when he joined brothers Dewey and Larry to form the first McPeak Brothers in 1963. He left to join Red Smiley in 1966 and his younger brother, Mike, took his place. They played a weekly show on local radio and at local venues, usually appearing with Ernest Atkins (fiddle) and Gus Ingo (mandolin) (Ingo was later replaced by Mickey Connor). They appeared on television in Bluefield and Roanoke and in the early 70s, they recorded albums for Dominion and Major. They appeared with Mel Tillis and, in 1974, recorded for RCA, before moving on to record for County and Rebel. Among their most popular recordings are 'Simon Crutchfield's Grave', 'Shelly's Winter Love' and a poignant Civil War ballad 'The Last Time'. They have never totally operated as a full-time band and, during the 80s, they appeared less and less outside their local area. In 1992, they recorded again on the Commonwealth label, which came at a time when Rebel chose to release a CD of some earlier material. Larry McPeak has written many songs both for his own and other acts. In 1995, no less than eight were included on their gospel orientated Pathway To Heaven for Copper Creek, on which they were joined by multi-instrumentalist Rick Allred (ex-Country Gentlemen) and fiddler Tim Smith (ex-Bluegrass Cardinals).

McPeake Family

b. Ireland. The McPeake Family's history spans several decades of popular music, during which time they helped to bring traditional Irish music to a much wider audience, inspiring both Planxty and the Bothy Band as well as more mainstream artists including Van Morrison, U2 and Bob Dylan. They were founded by uillean piper Francis McPeake I at the beginning of the century, having learnt the instrument from blind Galway piper John O'Reilly. Immediately he possessed one distinctive trait that has been passed down the family's generations, the ability to combine piping with singing. He formed the band with his two sons and brother James. They toured widely, including performances in Russia during the 60s. He passed on not only his expertise but also his name to successive leaders of the band; Francis McPeake II, Francis McPeake III and the band's leader and spokesman in the 90s, Francis McPeake IV (b. 1971). The 60s line-up featured Francis McPeake II, his son Francis McPeake III, his daughter Kathleen and cousin Tommy McCrudden. It was this formation of the group that so influenced the 60s singer-songwriter and traditional music generation. Francis McPeake IV, studying a social psychology degree at the University of Ulster in Coleraine, decided to take the family band out on the road again in 1994 after a break of over two decades, following the death of Francis I in 1971. He was joined by his father, who had once taught John Lennon the essentials of the pipes, whistle player Paula Meaney (later a McPeake by dint of marriage to Francis IV) and younger brother Eugene (bouzouki; replacing guitarist Paul Burns). They toured throughout the UK in the autumn of 1994 and their legendary, near mythical status, ensured full houses.

McPhatter, Clyde

b. Clyde Lensley McPhatter, 15 November 1932, Durham, North Carolina, USA, d. 13 June 1972, New York City, New York, USA. For three years, McPhatter was the lead singer in the seminal R&B vocal group Billy Ward And His Dominoes. He left in 1953 to form the Drifters, whose early releases were enhanced by the singer's emotional, gospel-drenched delivery. In 1954 McPhatter was drafted into the US Army, where he entertained fellow servicemen. Such work prompted a solo career, and the vibrant 'Seven Days' (1956) was followed by several other superb performances, many of which, including 'Treasure Of Love', 'Without Love (There Is Nothing)' and 'A Lover's Question', became R&B standards. A hugely influential figure, McPhatter inspired a generation of singers. His work was covered by Elvis Presley, Ry Cooder and Otis Redding, but his departure from the Atlantic label to MGM in 1959 precipitated an artistic decline. Although he had several minor hits during the early 60s, arguably his finest work was the US Top 10 hit 'Lover Please' in 1962. The follow-up, 'Little Bitty Pretty One', became standard fodder for many UK beat groups in the early 60s (recorded by the Paramounts). The singer became increasingly overshadowed by new performers and his career started to wane in the mid-60s. Beset by personal problems, he came to Britain in 1968, but left two years later without an appreciable change in his fortunes. A 1970 album on Decca, Welcome Home, was his last recording. McPhatter, one of R&B's finest voices, died from a heart attack as a result of alcohol abuse in 1972.

McPhee, Joe

b. 3 January 1939, Miami, Florida, USA. McPhee played the trumpet in his school band and studied music theory and harmony in his Division Band while he was with the army in Germany (1964-65). His first recording was with fellow trumpeter Clifford Thornton in 1967. While he was playing with the Matt Jordan Orchestra in the late 60s, he took up the saxophone as he became interested in free jazz. He gave a lecture course entitled 'The Revolution In Sound' when he taught at Vassar College (1969-71). McPhee has sought to extend the tonal range of the saxophone, introducing grainy effects into his playing and extending his phrasing by using circular breathing. The freedom he seeks is often clearly tied to melody. Though his first recording on saxophone was with Shakey Jake (vocal/harmonica) in 1972, he soon moved to New York to work with trumpeter Don Cherry, Thornton and the Jazz Composers Orchestra. In the mid-70s he worked in Europe with Steve Lacy, among others.

McPherson, Charles

b. 24 July 1939, Joplin, Missouri, USA. Often dismissed as a Charlie Parker copyist, McPherson is in fact more than a simple revivalist. While the style in which he plays, bebop, is now outmoded, it is one with which he grew up, and he plays it with fire and conviction. His family moved to Detroit when he was aged nine, and it was at high school, a few years later, that he started playing trumpet and flügelhorn. McPherson took up alto saxophone in his early teens (although he had wanted to play tenor), but his vocation for alto was confirmed, however, when he heard Parker. While in Detroit he spent some time studying with Barry Harris, and then, after moving to New York, he worked in Greenwich Village with Lonnie Hillyer in the early 60s. Fellow Detroit saxophonist Yusef Lateef suggested to Charles Mingus that he should hear McPherson when he was looking for a replacement for Eric Dolphy, and thus McPherson began the first of his stints with Mingus's band, garnering some critical plaudits for his work with one of the more adventurous bop-based leaders. Almost a forgotten man until the late 80s, he deservedly came back into the limelight as a result of a couple of successful European tours. He also played on part of the soundtrack for Clint Eastwood's bio-pic of Parker, Bird.

McQuater, Tommy

b. Thomas Mossie, 4 September 1914, Maybole, Ayrshire, Scotland. A self-taught trumpeter, he gained wide professional experience in the mid-30s playing in many leading British dancebands. These included Jack Payne, Lew Stone and Ambrose. During World War II he was in the Royal Force's noted danceband, the Squadronaires. In the late 40s and on for the next four decades, he worked extensively in theatre, radio and television bands. A highly accomplished lead trumpeter, McQuater's solo work in a jazz context was fiery and exhilarating and he played and recorded with many notable leaders including George Chisholm, John Dankworth and visiting Americans such as Benny Carter in the 30s and Benny Goodman in the 60s. In 1995 he was still enjoying life and helping fellow octogenarian Chisholm celebrate his birthday. McQuater's enthusiasm and skills as a teacher brought him the respect of many younger musicians and his pupils include distinguished trumpeters such as Ian Carr and Digby Fairweather.

McRae, Carmen

b. 8 April 1920, New York City, New York, USA, d. 10 November 1994, Beverly Hills, California, USA. One of the best American jazz singers, McRae was also an accomplished pianist and songwriter. Early in her career she sang with bands led by Benny Carter, Mercer Ellington, Charlie Barnet and Count Basie (sometimes under the name of Carmen Clarke, from her brief marriage to Kenny Clarke). Although a familiar figure on the New York jazz club scene, including a spell in the early 50s as intermission pianist at Minton's Playhouse, her reputation did not spread far outside the jazz community. In the 60s and 70s she toured internationally and continued to record - usually accompanied by a small group - but she was joined on one occasion by the Clarke-Boland Big Band. By the 80s, she was one of only a tiny handful of major jazz singers whose work had not been diluted by commercial pressures. One of her early songs, 'Dream Of Life', written when she was just 16 years old, was recorded in 1939 by Billie Holiday. Although very much her own woman, McRae occasionally demonstrated the influence of Holiday through her ability to project a lyric with bittersweet intimacy. She also sang with remarkable rhythmic ease and her deft turns-of-phrase helped to conceal a relatively limited range, while her ballad singing revealed enormous emotional depths. Her repertoire included many popular items from the Great American Songbook, but her jazz background ensured that she rarely strayed outside the idiom. Relaxed and unpretentious in performance and dedicated to her craft, McRae secured a place in the history of jazz singing.

McRae, Teddy

b. Theodore McRae, 22 January 1908, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, USA. He first played in a family band which included his brothers Bobby and Dave. Playing tenor saxophone, he worked with various bands in the 20s and also led his own. John Chilton records that he also studied medicine before settling on music as his career. In New York in the early 30s, he played with Chick Webb, Elmer Snowden, Benny Morton, Stuff Smith and others, then rejoined Webb, remaining in the band after it was taken over by Ella Fitzgerald who was its nominal leader, McRae being the straw boss. During the 40s he played in several big bands including those led by Cab Calloway, Jimmie Lunceford and Lionel Hampton. By this time, McRae was also established as an arranger and he worked in this capacity for Artie Shaw, arranging for the band his own compositions 'Traffic Jam' and 'Back Bay Shuffle', among others. In 1944 he became musical director of the last big band Louis Armstrong led. Thereafter, McRae concentrated on writing and also ran his own record company in partnership with pianist Eddie Wilcox. A robust-toned player in the Coleman Hawkins tradition, McRae's playing often reveals great imagination and a subtle understanding of the chiaroscuro effects possible with his instruments (he also sometimes played alto). His abilities as a composer and arranger were also extremely good although the sometimes derivative sounds of the swing era big bands offered little scope for free flights of imagination.

McShann, Jay 'Hootie'

b. 12 January 1909, Muskogee, Oklahoma, USA. After playing in many territory bands in the southwest and midwest, pianist McShann settled in Kansas City in the mid-30s, playing in Buster Smith's band, which also included Charlie Parker, in 1937. The following year, McShann formed his own unit which included Gene Ramey and Gus Johnson as well as Parker. By 1941, with the departure from Kansas City of Harlan Leonard, McShann's became the city's top band, Count Basie having moved on to greater things a few years earlier. The most popular member of the band was singer Walter Brown, who was featured on a handful of hit records, although McShann was himself an above-average blues shouter. In retrospect, the 1941 band is regarded as the most interesting of those McShann led because the saxophone section included the fast-developing and revolutionary talent of Parker. In fact, all McShann's bands had the virtues common to most Kansas City bands, those of lithely swinging, blues-based, exciting jazz. In 1944, McShann folded the band to enter the armed forces, reforming in 1945 on the west coast. Once again he showed himself to have a good ear for singers by hiring Jimmy Witherspoon. During the 50s and 60s, McShann was active, sometimes leading small groups, sometimes working as a solo act, but the jazz world was largely indifferent. By the 70s, however, he had become a popular figure on the international festival circuit, playing piano and singing the blues with flair and vigour. His recording career was also revitalized, and the 70s and 80s saw a steady stream of fine recordings, many of which were in the authentic tradition of the blues. The remarkable McShann was still performing at Blues Festivals in the mid-90s.

McShee, Jacqui

b. c. 1943, Catford, south London, England. Best known for her presence in Pentangle throughout its many incarnations, McShee waited until 1995 to release her debut solo album, in tandem with Gerry Conway and Spencer Cozens. McShee's early life was dominated by music, her mother singing for her own entertainment while her father was a devotee of Fats Waller. He encouraged her to take piano lessons but, owing to her well-documented shyness, which ensures she always sings seated to disguise her 'trembling knees', she declined. By her teenage years she had taken a Saturday job at the Woolworth's chain store instead. Her life irrevocably changed in 1960 when she and her sister followed a crowd from Trafalgar Square to the Crypt venue at St. Martins in the Fields. Heavily influenced by the War On Want exhibition there, she began to write songs and perform shortly after. Together with her sister they played regularly at the Olive Tree coffee bar in Croydon. Through guitarist Chris Ayliffe she was eventually introduced to Bert Jansch and John Renbourn. She sang on Renbourn's 1967 album Another Monday, and out of her association with these musicians Pentangle was formed later in the year. Although their early albums brought considerable momentum and success, Pentangle was always a volatile proposition because of the competing musical interests of the artists involved. Eventually the group sundered at the end of 1972 at which time McShee broke off to sing with the John Renbourn Band. She also recorded an album, Bongos Over Balham, with Chilli Willi And The Red Hot Peppers. McShee remained with the Renbourn Band until Pentangle's revival in 1983. Though Pentangle toured widely again, acrimony continued to brew within their ranks, and their subsequent line-ups, McShee apart, have not been stable. Her solo work was initiated at the suggestion of fellow Pentangle member Gerry Conway, alongside John Martyn and Julia Fordham collaborator Spencer Cozens. Other members of Martyn's band, including John Giblin (bass; also ex-Simple Minds) and Jerry Underwood (saxophone), plus Ralph McTell and Albert Lee, contributed to a set which included traditional material plus new collaborative compositions.

McTell, 'Blind' Willie

b. 5 May 1901, McDuffie County, Georgia, USA, d. 19 August 1959, Almon, Georgia, USA. Blind from birth, McTell began to learn guitar in his early years, under the influence of relatives and neighbours in Statesboro, Georgia, where he grew up. In his late teens, he attended a school for the blind. By 1927, when he made his first records, he was already a very accomplished guitarist, with a warm and beautiful vocal style, and his early sessions produced classics such as 'Statesboro Blues', 'Mama Tain't Long Fo Day' and 'Georgia Rag'. During the 20s and 30s, he travelled extensively from a base in Atlanta, making his living from music and recording, on a regular basis, for three different record companies, sometimes using pseudonyms which included Blind Sammie and Georgia Bill. Most of his records feature a 12-string guitar, popular among Atlanta musicians, but particularly useful to McTell for the extra volume it provided for singing on the streets. Few, if any, blues guitarists could equal his mastery of the 12-string. He exploited its resonance and percussive qualities on his dance tunes, yet managed a remarkable delicacy of touch on his slow blues. In 1934, he married, and the following year recorded some duets with his wife, Kate, covering sacred as well as secular material. In 1940, John Lomax recorded McTell for the Folk Song Archive of the Library of Congress, and the sessions, which have since been issued in full, feature him discussing his life and his music, as well as playing a variety of material. These offer an invaluable insight into the art of one of the true blues greats. In the 40s, he moved more in the direction of religious music, and when he recorded again in 1949 and 1950, a significant proportion of his songs were spiritual. Only a few tracks from these sessions were issued at the time, but most have appeared in later years. They reveal McTell to be as commanding as ever, and indeed, some of the recordings rank among his best work. In 1956, he recorded for the last time at a session arranged by a record shop manager, unissued until the 60s. Soon after this, he turned away from the blues to perform exclusively religious material. His importance was eloquently summed up in Bob Dylan's strikingly moving elegy, 'Blind Willie McTell'.

McTell, Ralph

b. 3 December 1944, Farnborough, Kent, England. Having followed the requisite bohemian path, busking in Europe and living in Cornwall, McTell emerged in the late 60s as one of Britain's leading folk singers with his first two albums, Eight Frames A Second and Spiral Staircase. The latter collection was notable for the inclusion of 'Streets Of London', the artist's best-known composition. He re-recorded this simple, but evocative, song in 1974, and was rewarded with a surprise number 2 UK hit. Its popularity obscured McTell's artistic development from acoustic troubadour to thoughtful singer-songwriter, exemplified on You Well-Meaning Brought Me Here, in which the singer tackled militarism and its attendant political geography in an erudite, compulsive manner. During live performances McTell demonstrated his considerable dexterity on acoustic guitar. He was particularly proficient when playing ragtime blues. Subsequent releases included the excellent Not Until Tomorrow, which featured the infamous 'Zimmerman Blues', and Easy, but McTell was unable to escape the cosy image bestowed upon him by his most successful song. During the 80s he pursued a successful career in children's television, and his later releases have featured songs from such work, as well as interpretations of other artist's compositions. Touring occasionally, McTell is still able to comfortably fill concert halls.

McVea, Jack

b. 5 November 1914, Los Angeles, California, USA. Starting out on banjo, McVea played in his father's band before he reached his teenage years. In the late 20s, he began playing reed instruments, eventually concentrating on tenor saxophone. In the early 30s, after graduating from high school, he turned professional and worked with a number of bands, including that led by Charlie Echols. In 1936, he was with Eddie Barefield and, after a brief spell leading his own unit, joined Lionel Hampton in 1940. With Hampton he mostly played baritone saxophone. After a short stint with Snub Mosley, he became interested in new developments in jazz and worked with Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker. McVea was also featured at an early Jazz At The Philharmonic concert. Despite his interest in bop, McVea appreciated current popular tastes, and his R&B single, 'Open The Door, Richard', a massive hit in 1946, brought him international attention. This celebrity allowed him to maintain a small R&B band for the next several years, playing clubs, hotels, casinos and concerts in various parts of the USA. In the late 50s he also played in bands led by Benny Carter among others. In the mid-60s McVea led a trio at Disneyland, a gig he retained into the 80s.

McVie, Christine

b. Christine Perfect, 12 July 1944, Birmingham, England. Having begun her musical career playing bass in the Birmingham-based Shades Of Blue, Perfect joined two other ex-members, Andy Sylvester and Stan Webb, in Chicken Shack, a blues group signed to Mike Vernon's nascent Blue Horizon label. Between April 1967 and August 1969, she was featured on piano and vocals, and her impassioned reading of the Etta James classic, 'I'd Rather Go Blind', became the band's best-known and most successful release. Perfect left Chicken Shack on completion of O.K. Ken. Now married to John McVie, bassist in Fleetwood Mac, she had tired of the couple's alternating lives on the road. A 1969 poll in Melody Maker voted her 'Female Vocalist Of The Year', and in deference to the publicity surrounding this award, the singer instigated the Christine Perfect Band, which included former Yardbirds' guitarist 'Top' Topham. She made her solo recording debut with Christine Perfect, a low-key but absorbing collection, before joining Fleetwood Mac in August 1970 in place of guitarist Peter Green. Christine's skills as a pianist, vocalist and composer were steadying influences during the group's turbulent years. Although the arrival of Stevie Nicks and Lindsey Buckingham introduced a musical consistency, personal problems now wracked the band. Her marriage to John McVie ended, a break-up detailed on the singer's stellar contributions to the phenomenally successful Rumours. Although several members of Fleetwood Mac began pursuing their own directions in the early 80s, it was not until 1984, following the release of the group's Mirage album, that Christine unveiled her second solo selection. The album confirmed her varied prowess and McVie's in-concert appearances proved highly popular. However, her contributions to the film soundtrack of A Fine Mess aside, the singer concentrated on Fleetwood Mac's career. Indeed, the departure of Buckingham in the wake of 1987's Tango In The Night, coupled with Nicks' divided loyalties between her own recordings and those of the band allowed McVie's talent to flourish on Fleetwood Mac's 1990 release, Behind The Mask. McVie decided to retire in the mid-90s, but was persuaded back by Mick Fleetwood for the 1997 reunion album The Dance.

McVie, John

b. 26 November 1945, London, England. Having served his musical apprenticeship in an amateur group inspired by the Shadows, bassist McVie joined John Mayall's Bluesbreakers in 1963. Barring interludes during which he was suspended for over-indulging in alcohol - Mayall was a notorious teetotaller - this excellent musician provided the backbone to one of the era's most influential acts. He appeared on releases such as John Mayall's Bluebreakers With Eric Clapton (1966), A Hard Road (1967) and Crusade (1968), and despite repeated overtures, initially preferred to remain in the group rather than join ex-members Peter Green and Mick Fleetwood in Fleetwood Mac. However, the temptation became too strong to resist and, in September 1967, he joined the new venture. Despite the interminable changes which have afflicted this band, the bassist is still an integral part of its line-up. This position has been maintained despite considerable personal difficulties, in particular his battle against alcoholism and his divorce from Christine McVie, who was added to the line-up in 1970. The latter chronicled their marital problems on Rumours (1976). McVie deferred a compositional role within the group. However, his interest in penguins inspired the title of their 1973 release and a recurrent motif which has appeared on each subsequent album.

McWilliams, Brigitte

b. Chicago, Illinois, USA. An R&B singer of distinctive vocal quality and strength, Brigitte McWilliams made her debut for Virgin Records in 1994 with a lacklustre set entitled Take Advantage Of Me. Although it received generally favourable reviews in the soul/R&B papers, the artist later complained that she enjoyed 'zero creative control' in its conception and birth. She addressed this artistic impasse with the follow-up set, 1997's Too Much Woman, assembling a band of old-school R&B veterans to help her. These included guitarist Al McKay and keyboardist Larry Dunn (Earth, Wind And Fire), guitarist Jimmy Macon (Gap Band), Bobby Watson (Rufus) and Billy Preston. Recorded in informal 'jam' sessions, the results of employing such first-rate genre performers were immediately satisfying. McWilliams herself contributed three songs to the collection, part of a shift of emphasis towards a female view of relationship issues, rather than the more hackneyed R&B stereotype outlined on her debut.

McWilliams, David

b. 4 July 1945, Cregagh, Belfast, Northern Ireland. The subject of an overpowering publicity campaign engineered by his manager Phil Solomon, McWilliams was featured on the front, inside and back covers of several consecutive issues of the New Musical Express, which extolled the virtues of a new talent. He was incessantly plugged on the pirate Radio Caroline. Much was made of his rebellious youth and affinity with Irish music, yet the singer's debut release, 'Days Of Pearly Spencer'/'Harlem Lady', revealed a grasp of pop's dynamics rather than those of folk. The former song was both impressive and memorable, as was the pulsating follow-up, '3 O'Clock Flamingo Street', but McWilliams was unable to shake the 'hype' tag which accompanied his launch. His manager believed that Williams was a more promising protégé than his other star artist, Van Morrison of Them, but his faith was unrewarded. Williams disliked live performance and failed to show his true talent in front of an audience. Neither single charted and a period of reassessment followed before the artist re-emerged the following decade with a series of charming, folk-influenced collections. In April 1992 Marc Almond took 'Days Of Pearly Spencer' back into the UK charts.

Me And Juliet

Perhaps because it emerged into the bright lights of Broadway in the same season as hits such as Wish You Were Here, Wonderful Town, and Can-Can, Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein's Me And Juliet was regarded by critics and public alike to be well below their par. Certainly, after blockbusters such as Oklahoma!, Carousel, and The King And I, a run of 358 performances was not remarkable by their standards. Unlike those three shows, Me And Juliet was not adapted from an existing work, but had an original book by Hammerstein. It opened at the Majestic Theatre in New York on 28 May 1953. The setting is a theatre, onstage and off, where a musical entitled Me And Juliet is playing. Jeannie (Isabel Bigley), a singer in the chorus, is being pleasantly pursued by Larry (Bill Hayes), the assistant stage manager, until electrician Bob (Mark Dawson), a nasty hard-drinking character, tries to muscle in on the romance to such an extent that he tries to murder her. The traditional 'fun-romance' situation that usually crops up in these kind of shows, in this case involves a dancer, Betty (Joan McCracken) and the stage manager, Mac (Ray Walston). The latter artist proved to be a memorable Luther Billis in the film of Rodgers and Hammerstein's South Pacific, and he also gave a 'devil' of a good performance in Damn Yankees on both stage and screen. The score for Me And Juliet was light, and contained none of the composers' 'deeply meaningful songs' (such as 'You'll Never Walk Alone', 'Carefully Taught', etc.), but there were some pleasant songs, including 'Keep It Gay', 'It's Me', 'The Big Black Giant', 'A Very Special Day', 'I'm Your Girl', and 'Do I Love You Because You're Beautiful' and 'Marriage-Type Love', both of which achieved some modest popularity. Rodgers had used the melody of one of the other numbers, 'No Other Love', before, as part of the background score for the television documentary series, Victory At Sea (1952). The song became a big hit for Perry Como in America, and a UK number 1 for Ronnie Hilton. Rodgers remembered the song again, in 1957, and interpolated it into a US television version of Cinderella, which starred Julie Andrews. It was also present when Cinderella was adapted for the stage, and played the London Coliseum as a Christmas-time entertainment in 1958, with a cast that included Tommy Steele, Bruce Trent, Yana, Jimmy Edwards, Betty Marsden, and Kenneth Williams. Exactly 35 years after that, Cinderella was staged in America by the New York City Opera.

Me And My Girl

With music by Noel Gay, and a book and lyrics by Douglas Furber and L Arthur Rose, Me And My Girl opened in at the Victoria Palace in London on 16 December 1937. The immensely popular Lupino Lane starred as Bill Snibson, a Cockney barrow-boy who becomes involved with the 'toffs', but stays true to Sally (Teddy St. Dennis), a girl from his own background. Me And My Girl was the first West End production to be televised live from a theatre, and after excerpts were transmitted by the BBC, audiences flocked to see the show with its cheerful music and happy-go-lucky air. The show ran at the Victoria Palace until June 1940, a total of 1,646 performances, and, after a break, and a spell at the London Coliseum, it returned to the Palace for a further nine months in 1945/6. By that time everybody, it seemed, was doing 'The Lambeth Walk' and singing along with Bill and Sally to 'Me And My Girl'. There was yet another short-lived production at the Winter Garden in 1949/50. At this stage, Lupino Lane had played the lead in all of them. In February 1985, a revised version of the show, written by the humorist Stephen Fry, opened at the Adelphi Theatre in London. It was produced by Richard Armitage, Noel Gay's son, and starred the popular straight actor Robert Lindsay, and future Oscar-winner Emma Thompson. Also in the cast were veteran performers Frank Thornton and Ursula Smith, representing the 'toffs', who duetted the amusingly nostalgic 'If Only You Had Cared For Me'. Two other Noel Gay hits, ' Leaning On a Lamp Post' and 'The Sun Has Got His Hat On', were interpolated into the score, and coach parties galore continued to pour into the Adelphi for an incredible eight years. Along the way the show won Laurence Olivier Awards for best musical and actor, Robert Lindsay, who reprised his role for the 1986 Broadway production. New York audiences loved it too, and the show earned Tony Awards for Lindsay, best actress (Maryann Plunkett), and choreographer Gillian Gregory. Many years before all that, in 1939, a film version was released, starring Lupino Lane, of course.

Me And My Shadows - Cliff Richard

By the time this album was released Cliff Richard had name-changed his Drifters to the Shadows and they were seen as a permanent recording unit. He had also abandoned the American rock 'n' roll cover versions and started down the path of straight pop. His Shadows were unknowingly about to become the most famous instrumental group in the world with their own records. This is the best example of Richard being 'backed by a beat combo'. The recording, although primitive, is quite perfect and demonstrated what a tight unit they were before strings and orchestration eclipsed their later recordings.

Me And You

Me and You were a vocal duo featuring the talents of a brother and sister team, Norman McLean (b. 1959, Jamaica) and Sonia McLean (b. 1963, Jamaica, d. 1995). They came from a musical family and were aware of the pitfalls in the industry through their sister Shirley's earlier experiences in the Jamaican music scene. The duo began their recording career in 1979 with DEB music, one of the more successful independent labels, which evolved from the Morpheus group initiated by Castro Brown. (It was wrongly assumed that there was a family connection when Castro formed a partnership with Dennis Emanuel Brown, whose initials inspired the label's name.) The duo's debut, 'This Love', was a Top 10 hit in the reggae charts, maintaining a healthy position throughout the spring season. They were then taken to the studio by Dennis and Castro Brown, who produced a version of the Philly hit 'You Never Know What You Got', featuring Jamaican session players the Professionals, later known as the We The People Band, and including Lloyd Parks and Sly Dunbar. The single topped the reggae chart and crossed over into the mainstream, staying in the chart for nine weeks and peaking at number 31 in the UK Top 40. The song was licensed to the Lazer group who had promoted 'Money In My Pocket' for Dennis Brown, repeating the accomplishment with the duo's major label debut. During the summer months the group toured as part of a DEB music showcase featuring Black Harmony, 15-16-17, Destiny and George Burrell, pipped from the top slot by Black Harmony. In spite of this phenomenal rise to stardom Norman and Sonia maintained a cautious approach to their success. Their decision to be wary was proved correct when 'In The Future', released on DEB, was unable to match the fortunes of its predecessor. In 1980 the previous year's efforts were rewarded when they were voted among the best newcomers in the Black Echoes Awards. They continued to record a number of hits, including 'Railway Station', alongside their 1982 self-production of 'Casual Affair', with a sublime version of Jackie Edwards' 'Who Told You So'. The duo had carved a respectable position in the history of UK reggae and the industry suffered a great loss when Sonia died in 1995.

Mean Machine

Though somewhat unfairly consigned to the wastebasket of musical history, Mean Machine deserve their place in the hip-hop hall of fame by dint of being the first crew to rap in Spanish, in 1979. As such they would serve as a signpost to subsequent generations of Latino rappers, from Kid Frost to Mellow Man Ace, to Cypress Hill and K7.

Meanstreak

Originating from New York, USA, Meanstreak were formed in 1985 by guitarists Marlene Apuzzo and Rena Sands. Recruiting vocalist Bettina France, bassist Martens Pace and drummer Diane Keyser, they were the first all-female thrash metal band to record an album. Signing to the independent Music For Nations label, they released Roadkill, produced by Alex Perialas and ex-Raven drummer Rob Hunter. Recorded within a week, the pressure resulted in a set that betrayed its origins by being both shambolic and ill-focused. The songs, meanwhile, were rigidly formularized and were further scuppered by weak vocals. The album remains of interest to thrash aficionados, but even then, only on a historical rather than musical level.

Meat Beat Manifesto

Their name a grotesque reference to masturbation, London, England's Meat Beat Manifesto are a post-industrial dance group comprising multi-instrumentalist/vocalist Jack Dangers and programmer Jonny Stephens, aided by non-musical contributors Marcus Adams (dancer and choreographer) and Craig Morrison (stage and costume design). Taking their theme as the modern information/consumer society, the group combines samples drawn from television and commercials, combined with hip-hop beats and dub grooves to create mesmerizing aural soundscapes. The group began releasing a series of 12-inch singles (still their best medium) in the late 80s, which were later anthologized on Storm The Studio. Herein the 'cut-up' techniques pioneered in literature by William Burroughs were transposed to diverse musical cultures, a process confirmed by the fact that the title Storm The Studio was adapted from a statement made by Burroughs' character Uranian Willy in The Soft Machine. Enigmatically, none of the songs were given individual titles. The tapes for a debut album proper had been lost during a fire at their London studio, thus Armed Audio Warfare again comprised largely dated material. Their first studio album proper, 99%, was less visceral and more attuned to the burgeoning house movement, though the group's lyrics were no less challenging. That was especially true of 1992's Satyricon, on which such subjects as consumerism ('That Shirt') and animal rights ('Untold Stories') were addressed without the band's sound becoming too didactic. In the 90s Dangers also became a celebrated remixer, working with artists including Consolidated, the Shamen, David Byrne and MC 900ft Jesus. After a four-year gap Meat Beat Manifesto returned in 1996 with their fifth studio album, Subliminal Sandwich.

Meat Is Murder - The Smiths

The second Smiths album expanded upon the twin flight paths of its predecessor: singer Morrissey's unabashed solipsism and Johnny Marr's textured guitar playing. Opening with the plangent 'Headmaster's Ritual', Meat Is Murder brings both these facets into sharp focus with layers of sound supporting the singer's confessional, singsong style. Bittersweet humour and rampant profligacy mark the album's lyrical content, no more so than on the indignant, pro-vegetarian title track. The rhythm section of Andy Rourke and Mike Joyce provides a supple spine for the group's two central sparring partners, keeping both their potential excesses in check. Self-indulgent? Yes, but brilliantly so.

b. Marvin Lee Aday, 27 September 1951, Dallas, Texas, USA. Meat Loaf strongly claims this date of birth, but it has also been suggested as 1947. The name Meat Loaf originated at school, when, aged 13, he was christened 'Meat Loaf' by his football coach, owing to his enormous size and ungainly manner. Two years later his mother died of cancer, and fights with his alcoholic father grew worse. He moved to Los Angeles in 1967 and formed Popcorn Blizzard, a psychedelic rock group that toured the club circuit, opening for acts including the Who, Ted Nugent and the Stooges. In 1969 Meat Loaf successfully auditioned for a role in Hair, where he met soul vocalist Stoney. Stoney and Meat Loaf recorded a self-titled album in 1971, which spawned the minor Billboard chart hit, 'What You See Is What You Get'. Hair closed in New York in 1974, and Meat Loaf found new work in More Than You Deserve, a musical written by Jim Steinman, then took the part of Eddie in the film version of The Rocky Horror Picture Show. In 1976, he was recruited by Ted Nugent to sing lead vocals on his Free For All, after which he joined up with Steinman once more in the famous US satirical comedy outfit, the National Lampoon Roadshow. Meat Loaf and Steinman struck up a working musical relationship and started composing a grandiose rock opera. After a long search, they found Epic Records and producer Todd Rundgren sympathetic to their ideas and demo tapes. Enlisting the services of Bruce Springsteen's E Street Band, they recorded Bat Out Of Hell in 1978. This was pieced together around the high camp of the title track, an operatic horror melodrama that saw Meat Loaf raging against nature, and 'Paradise By The Dashboard Lights', with Ellen Foley providing female accompaniment. The album was ignored for the first six months after release, although Meat Loaf toured extensively, supporting Cheap Trick, among others. Eventually the breakthrough came, and Bat Out Of Hell rocketed towards the top of the charts in country after country. It stayed in the UK and US album charts for 395 and 88 weeks, respectively, and sold in excess of 30 million copies worldwide, the third biggest-selling album release of all time. However, with success came misfortune. Meat Loaf split with his manager, David Sonenberg, causing all manner of litigation. He was also drinking heavily, unable to cope with his new-found but barely anticipated stardom, and lost his voice. He lost his songwriter too, as Steinman left for the solo release of what had been mooted as a thematic follow-up to Bat Out Of Hell - Bad For Good: 'I spent seven months trying to make a follow-up with him, and it was an infernal nightmare. He had lost his voice, he had lost his house, and he was pretty much losing his mind'. After a three-year gap, during which Meat Loaf voluntarily declared himself bankrupt, the eagerly anticipated follow-up, Dead Ringer, was released. Again, it used Steinman's compositions, this time in his absence, and continued where Bat Out Of Hell left off, comprising grandiose arrangements, anthemic choruses and spirited rock 'n' roll. The title song made the Top 5 in the UK and the album hit number 1, but it only dented the lower end of the Top 50 Billboard album chart. This was, seemingly, the last time Meat Loaf would be able to use Steinman's sympathetic songwriting skills, and the consequent decline in standards undoubtedly handicapped the second phase of his career. Concentrating on Europe, relentless touring helped both Midnight At The Lost And Found and Bad Attitude to creep into the UK Top 10 album chart. Nevertheless, this represented a significant decline in popularity compared with his Steinman-penned albums. Blind Before I Stop saw Meat Loaf teaming up with John Parr for the single 'Rock'n'Roll Mercenaries', which, surprisingly, was not a hit. The album was, however, his strongest post-Steinman release and featured a fine selection of accessible, blues-based hard-rock numbers. In live performances, things had never been better; Meat Loaf's band included Bob Kulick (brother of Kiss guitarist Bruce Kulick, and now of Skull), and ex-Rainbow drummer Chuck Burgi. They delivered an electrifying show that ran for nearly three hours. Recorded at London's Wembley Stadium, Meat Loaf Live emerged in 1987, and featured raw and exciting versions of his finest songs. By this time, Meat Loaf was also a veteran of several films, including Roadie, Americathon and, in the 90s, Wayne's World and Leap Of Faith. Apart from re-releases and compilations, he maintained a recording silence well into the 90s. However, he signed a new contract with Virgin Records in 1990, and as rumours grew that he was once again working with Steinman, the media bandwagon began to roll. Bat Out Of Hell II: Back Into Hell, from its title onwards displayed a calculated, stylistic cloning of its precursor. The public greeted the familiarity with open arms, propelling the first single, 'I'd Do Anything For Love (But I Won't Do That)', to number 1 in both the USA and UK, its parent album performing the same feat. Though critics could point at the formulaic nature of their approach, Meat Loaf had no doubts that by working with Steinman again, he had recaptured the magic: 'Nobody writes like Jim Steinman. All these things - bombastic, over the top, self-indulgent. All these things are positives.' Steinman was noticeably absent from Welcome To The Neighbourhood, apart from two old compositions. Instead, the excellent pulp magazine-style package contained songs that sound exactly like Steinman's work, particularly 'I'd Lie For You' and 'If This Is The Last Kiss', both written by Diane Warren.

Meat Puppets

Formed in Tempe, Arizona, USA, Curt Kirkwood (b. 10 January 1959, Wichita Falls, Texas, USA; guitar, vocals), Cris Kirkwood (b. 22 October 1960, Amarillo, Texas, USA; bass, vocals) and Derrick Bostrom (b. 23 June 1960, Phoenix, Arizona, USA; drums) made their debut in 1981 with a five-track EP, In A Car. Meat Puppets, released the following year on the influential hardcore label SST Records, offered a mix of thrash punk with hints of country, captured to perfection on the alternative cowboy classic, 'Tumblin' Tumbleweeds'. Their affection for roots music was fully realized on Meat Puppets II, a captivating set marked by dramatic shifts in mood and Curt Kirkwood's uncertain, but expressive, vocals. Meat Puppets II hauled country back to the campfire. Up On The Sun showed the trio moving further from their punk roots, embracing instead neo-psychedelic melodies. This evolution was enhanced further on Mirage, yet another critically acclaimed set. Having proclaimed an affection for ZZ Top, Curt Kirkwood introduced a more direct, fuzz-toned sound on Huevos, which was recorded in one marathon 72-hour session. Kirkwood shuns using a traditional plectrum, he merely uses a quarter dollar coin. Viewed by many long-time fans as a sell-out, Huevos' commercial appeal continued on Monster, the trio's heaviest, most 'traditional' set to date. Memorable hooklines were combined with hard-rock riffs and despite the qualms of those preferring the group's early work, the set was lauded as one of 1989's leading independent releases. Surprisingly the Meat Puppets then disbanded, re-forming in 1991, buoyed by continued interest in their work and a contract with London Records. Subsequent releases have kept interest in the group alive, and in 1993 the Kirkwood brothers joined Nirvana on their now-legendary Unplugged appearance. Three songs from Meat Puppets II; 'Lake Of Fire', 'Plateau' and 'Oh Me', were immortalized during this affectionate collaboration. No Joke! lived up to its title and proved to be their most commercial and successful album to date.

Meaux, Huey P.

b. 10 March 1929, Kaplan, Louisiana, USA. Meaux is an influential figure in Texas music circles, and often acted as go-between, arranging for labels to license masters brought to him. A shrewd judge of hit potential, he also prospered as a producer with a series of excellent, contrasting acts. Barbara Lynn's 1962 hit, 'You'll Lose A Good Thing', helped finance Meaux's studios in Houston and Jackson, which in turn generated further success with B.J. Thomas ('I'm So Lonesome I Could Cry'), Roy Head ('Treat Her Right') and the Sir Douglas Quintet ('She's About A Mover'), the latter of which was released on Meaux's own Tribe label, one of several he inaugurated. A conviction in 1967 for violation of the Mann Act (escorting a female across state lines for immoral purposes), resulted in his imprisonment but he received a pardon from the then President, Jimmy Carter. It was the mid-70s before Meaux recovered momentum with Tex-Mex star Freddie Fender, who rose from regional to national acclaim with Meaux's excellent southern-style recordings. Among the many acts to use this intuitive individual's production skills are Johnny Copeland, T-Bone Walker and Johnny Winter. 'Before The Next Tear Falls' was a US number 1 single in 1975, and the producer continued this roots-based direction with several other acts, enjoying a 1985 hit with Rockin' Sydney's version of the cajun 'standard', 'My Toot Toot'. He made an appearance as a disc jockey in David Byrne's film, True Stories, in 1986. In 1996 he was arrested and charged with possesion of drugs and a further child pornography charge. He was found guilty and given a 15 year jail sentence in the summer of 1996.

Meco

Meco Monardo (b. 29 November 1939, Johnsonburg, Pennsylvania, USA) was a talented arranger who successfully moved into the pop field in the early 70s. He co-produced Gloria Gaynor's 'Never Can Say Goodbye' and Carl Douglas's 'Doctor's Orders' before finding fame in his own right in 1977. Totally entranced by the Steven Spielberg film Star Wars, which he saw 11 times, Meco was convinced that he could take the theme into the charts. After hiring musicians and employing his own talents as trombonist and pianist, Meco watched with equal fascination as 'Star Wars Theme'/'Cantina Band' effortlessly moved to number 1, outselling the official theme by the London Symphony Orchestra in the process. Thereafter, Meco became something of a specialist in movie themes, finding success with adaptations from Close Encounters Of The Third Kind, The Wizard Of Oz, The Empire Strikes Back and Return Of The Jedi.

Medallions

The Medallions were formed by lead singer Vernon Green (b. Denver, Colorado, USA) in Los Angeles, California, USA, after record company boss Dootsie Williams commented on the quality of his voice as he was walking down the street one day. The rest of the group - Andrew Blue (tenor), Randolph Bryant (baritone) and Ira Foley (bass) - were built around Green's strong vocal abilities, and took their collective name from their leader's fondness for jewellery. Williams was as good as his word and signed the group to Dootone Records, a relationship that began with the release of 'The Letter'. The b-side, 'Buick 59', was particularly well received on Los Angeles radio, and started a trend of naming singles after car types ('Coupe De Ville Baby', '59 Volvo', etc.). Willy Graham replaced Andrew Blue, while the group expanded to a quintet in 1955 with the addition of Donald Woods. However, the group broke up after the release of their third single, 'Speedin''. Abandoning Green, the other four members formed the Vel-Aires and signed with Flip Records. Green responded by putting together a new Medallions featuring Kenneth Williams and Frank Marshall, issuing 'Only For You'. This formation did not last, however, and Williams then placed Green as singer with another of his groups, the Dootones (who shared the name of the label). They were still titled the Medallions, but their first release together was as back-up group to Johnny Morisette on October 1955's 'My Pretty Baby'. However, a month later they debuted in their own right with 'Dear Darling', then 'I Want A Love'. Their next release saw their billing extended to Vernon Green And The Medallions. They released three singles for Dootone's Dooto subsidiary between 1956 and 1957 in this manner. None of these singles, which again featured fluctuating line-ups, were successful. Green left to form the Phantoms, a masked group who recorded briefly for Specialty Records, but then returned in 1957 to front another version of the Medallions. Five further singles emerged (three for Dooto, one for Minit and one for Pan World Records), while the band continued to tour widely. The most interesting of these singles was the second, 'Magic Mountain'/'59 Volvo'. The latter track was expressly commissioned by a local disc jockey whose brother owned a Volvo dealership. The band was then put on hold for nine years following an automobile accident that incapacitated Green. He returned to front the Medallions for a final 1973 single for Dooto, 'Can You Talk', and again in 1989 at the inaugural Doo-wop Society show.

Meddle - Pink Floyd

This famous 'inside the ear' cover is often put at the bottom of the Pink Floyd pile in place of their many mega-selling others. Meddle is often remembered for the (admittedly impressive) 'Echoes', nearly 24 minutes of sweeping organ, building over clashing guitar. Equally good is the lilting 'A Pillow Of Winds', which is a delight, as is the easy-going 'Fearless', with some lovely chord changes. Roger Waters also sings well as the whole band sound relaxed and more together than at any stage in their turbulent career. Meddle deserves reappraisal as their most therapeutic and enjoyable album.

Medicine

This US indie rock band features Beth Thompson (b. 12 June 1967, St Louis, Missouri, USA; vocals), Brad Laner (b. 6 November 1966, Los Angeles, California, USA; vocals, guitar), Jim Putnam (b. 30 September 1967, Hollywood, California, USA; guitar), Jim Goodall (b. 9 May 1952, Burbank, California, USA; drums) and Ed Ruscha (b. Edward Joseph Ruscha, 14 December 1968, Inglewood, California, USA; bass). Each of these members had performed as part of other bands. Thompson had worked with Four Way Cross, Laner with Savage Republic and Steaming Coils, Putnam with SDF, Magic Beard and Bus Engines, Ruscha with SDF, Maids Of Gravity, Pita Hawks, Magic Beard and Dumb Speedway Children. The eldest member of the group, Goodall has seen service with such established bands as the Flying Burrito Brothers and Canadian Sweetheart. Taking their name from an old Throbbing Gristle song, the group made their live debut in Long Beach, California, in September 1991 (they had already been picked up for radio broadcast by west coast alternative radio guru Rodney Bingenheimer). Signed to English label Creation Records, they made their recorded debut in August 1992 with 'Aruca', which prefaced a well-received debut album. Sounds Of Medicine was a mini-album with remixes by Billy Corgan (Smashing Pumpkins) and Robin Guthrie (Cocteau Twins). In common with earlier releases this could hardly be described as light-hearted fare, but as Thompson declared to the press: 'I'm happy to make dark music. Fortunately you can't really make out our words so nobody's going to come to us and say we caused so-and-so's suicide.' Her Highness was just as deliberate, almost numbingly introspective both musically and lyrically, winning strong comparisons to My Bloody Valentine.

Medicine Ball Caravan

This 1971 film followed several rock groups as they travelled across America. The guiding force behind the project was San Franciscan disc-jockey Tom Donahue, former proprietor of Autumn Records. Alternately known as We Have Come For Your Daughters after the motto pinned to the touring bus - which drew the ire of feminists - Medicine Ball Caravan was a thinly-veiled way of promoting Donahue's management clients, Stoneground. This expansive, revue-styled act was led by Sal Valentino, formerly of the Beau Brummels, and it also included several well-respected Bay Area musicians. B.B. King, Alice Cooper, Delaney And Bonnie and Doug Kershaw are among the other featured acts, but Stoneground remain at its core. Interesting rather than essential, Medicine Ball Caravan suggests a last-gasp attempt at exposing a 'gypsy-esque' notion of rock. It was not a great success and an attendant soundtrack album was also poorly received. Paradoxically, several portions featuring Stoneground were exhumed by Warner Brothers Records in a bid to help launch the group in Britain.

Medicine Head

John Fiddler (b. 25 September 1947, Darlaston, Staffordshire, England; guitar/vocals) and Peter Hope-Evans (b. 28 September 1947, Brecon, Powys, Wales; harmonica/jew's harp) were confined to the small clubs of England's Midlands, until a demo tape brought the duo to pioneering BBC disc jockey John Peel's Dandelion label. Their debut album, Old Bottles New Medicine, offered delicate, sparse, atmospheric songs, and crude, rumbustious R&B, a contrast maintained on a second set, Heavy On The Drum. The duo enjoyed a surprise hit single when '(And The) Pictures In The Sky' reached number 22 in 1971, but their progress faltered when Hope-Evans left the group. Ex-Yardbird Keith Relf, at this point Medicine Head's producer, joined Fiddler and drummer John Davies for the group's third album, Dark Side Of The Moon. Hope-Evans and Fiddler resumed their partnership in 1972, although session musicians were employed on their subsequent album, One And One Is One. The title track became a number 3 UK hit in 1973, while a second single, 'Rising Sun', reached number 11; as a result, the line-up was expanded to include Roger Saunders (b. 9 March 1947, Barking, Essex, England; guitar), Ian Sainty (bass) and ex-Family member Rob Townsend (b. 7 July 1947, Leicester, Leicestershire, England; drums). Further ructions followed the release of Thru' A Five and by 1976, Medicine Head was again reduced to the original duo. Two Man Band (1976) marked the end of their collaboration. Fiddler then joined British Lions, which otherwise comprised former members of Mott The Hoople, and recorded several solo singles before fronting 're-formed' Yardbirds, Box Of Frogs, in 1983. He currently works as a solo act. Hope-Evans assisted Pete Townshend on his White City soundtrack (1985), and later played in several part-time groups.

Meditation Singers

Originally titled Moments Of Meditation, this all-female gospel group was formed in April 1950 at the New Liberty Missionary Baptist Church in Detroit, Michigan, USA. Ernestine Rundless (lead soprano), Dellareese Early (lead and first soprano), Marie Waters (alto) and DeLillian Mitchell (tenor) were moulded by church directors Pastor E. Alan Rundless II and pianist Emory Radford. Their performances quickly brought them a sizeable local following, as did numerous appearances on radio shows. In 1952 they won the Golden Cup Jubilee, but by this time Early had left for a solo pop and acting career. Her replacement was Laura Lee Newton, while Carrie Williams expanded the group to a quintet. Newton, under the name Laura Lee, would also find consistent success as a soul singer in the late 60s and early 70s, reaching number 36 in the US charts with 'Woman's Love Rights' in 1967. At this point Reverend James Cleveland took a hand in the Meditation Singers' fortunes as arranger and writer. With the name abbreviated to Meditation Singers they released a series of records for Hob and Specialty Records that sold steadily in the gospel market. They were still going strong in the 90s (with Waters, Rundless and Newton all surviving the intervening decades).

Meditations

Jamaican vocal group comprising Ansel Cridland, Danny Clarke and Winston Watson. Clarke had previously been a member of The Righteous Flames, the group fronted by Winston Jarrett (which had, in turn, been formed from the ashes of Alton Ellis's Flames). Clarke left in 1975, forming the Meditations alongside Cridland and Watson. The trio, a roots group similar in style to the Mighty Diamonds, recorded a series of strong singles for producers Dobby Dobson and Lee Perry: 'Running From Jamaica', 'No Peace', 'House Of Parliament' and 'Much Smarter', songs that cast them as righteous Rastafarians who would have nothing to do with the system. Further hits for a variety of producers revealed their pedigree: 'Wake Up', 'Fly Your Natty Dread' and the massive 'Woman Is Like A Shadow' (1978). Their first LP, Message From The Meditations, was a minor classic. Resourceful beyond the limits of most bands, the Meditations rode out the dancehall era, cutting a series of strong, if hardly spectacularly successful, albums for a variety of labels. Their 1983 set, No More Friend, was favourably received, and they remain revered ambassadors of rasta reggae, and retain much goodwill in America to this day.

Meditations - John Coltrane

One of John Coltrane's classic religious suites, Meditations is a long and complex work from a period late in his career, when he was beginning to break his ties with the classic quartet, and augment the band with new members. Pianist McCoy Tyner, bassist Jimmy Garrison and drummer Elvin Jones are joined by tenor saxophonist Pharoah Sanders on the front line and drummer Rashied Ali. In five parts, joined by long improvised linking passages, Meditations is an intense, emotional and difficult work, and signalled the beginning of a fiercely challenging final period for Coltrane.

Medley, Bill

b. 19 September 1940, Santa Ana, California, USA. After several successful years with the Righteous Brothers, Medley embarked on a solo career in late 1967. Several relatively barren years followed, until Medley received a major push from A&M in 1971. Again, no hits were forthcoming, and in 1974, the Righteous Brothers reunited. Medley's second attempt at a solo career took place in 1981, five years after the mysterious murder of his wife Karen. This time he enjoyed some minor hits, which reached fruition during the second half of the 80s with his contribution to the movie Dirty Dancing. Collaborating with Jennifer Warnes, Medley found the perfect song in '(I've Had) The Time Of My Life', which reached number 1 in the US charts. Further film-related material saw Medley enjoy minor successes, most notably with a cover version of the Hollies' 'He Ain't Heavy, He's My Brother' from the soundtrack of Rambo III.

Meehan, Tony

Drummer Meehan (b. Daniel Joseph Anthony Meehan, 22 March 1943, Hampstead, London, England) worked with several late 50s' acts, including Vince Eager, Vince Taylor and the Vipers, before joining the Drifters, later the Shadows, in 1959. He left the group in 1961, in order to take up an A&R post with Decca, but later forged a successful partnership with another ex-Shadow. Jet Harris And Tony Meehan enjoyed three UK Top 5 singles, including the number 1 'Diamonds', before the former was involved in a serious car smash. Their partnership sundered, the drummer formed the Tony Meehan Combo for 'Song Of Mexico' (1964), but he failed to emulate earlier success. The short-lived group included bassist John Paul Jones, later of Led Zeppelin, but was disbanded when its leader reverted to backroom work. Meehan produced material for Trash and Tim Hardin, but his only reappearance as a performer was confined to 'Hooker Street' (1969), the b-side to his brother Keith's lone single.

b. Robert George Meek, 5 April 1929, Newent, Gloucestershire, England, d. 3 February 1967, London, England. Britain's premier independent record producer of the early 60s, Meek was equally renowned for his pioneering recording techniques and eccentric personality. His career began in 1954, when he joined IBC, the leading independent recording studio of the era. Originally an engineer, he worked on a number of hits, including Lonnie Donegan's 'Cumberland Gap', Frankie Vaughan's 'Green Door', Johnny Duncan's 'Last Train To San Fernando' and Humphrey Lyttelton's 'Bad Penny Blues'. He also turned his hand to songwriting, penning Tommy Steele's 'Put A Ring On Her Finger' in 1958. By 1960, he had set up Lansdowne Studios in west London, where he worked with producer Denis Preston on recordings by various popular jazz artists. An ill-advised expansion policy encouraged Meek to launch Triumph Records, which enjoyed a hit with Michael Cox's 'Angela Jones' before rapidly winding down its activities. Thereafter, Meek concentrated on leasing tapes to major labels, using the title RGM Sound. He worked from a converted studio situated above a shop in Holloway Road, north London, and it was here that he created the unusual sounds that were to become his hallmark. His first major hit as a producer was John Leyton's 'Johnny Remember Me', an atmospheric, eerily echo-laden affair which topped the UK charts in 1961. Leyton followed up with other Meek-produced successes, including 'Wild Wind', 'Son, This Is She' and 'Lonely City'. With Geoff Goddard composing suitably ethereal material, Meek enjoyed further vicarious chart action with Mike Berry ('Tribute To Buddy Holly') and backing group the Outlaws ('Swingin' Low' and 'Ambush'). By 1962, the increasingly inventive producer had reached his apogee on the spacy instrumental 'Telstar', which took the Tornadoes to the top of the charts on both sides of the Atlantic. He was now hailed as a genuine original, with an innovative flair unmatched by any of his rivals. The accolades were to prove short-lived. The mid-60s beat boom spearheaded by the Beatles seriously dented Meek's credibility and commercial standing. His work was increasingly regarded as novel, rather than important, and his love for gimmicks took precedence on recordings by Screaming Lord Sutch and others. Meek responded with the much publicized Heinz, who reached the Top 10 with the Eddie Cochran tribute, 'Just Like Eddie'. The swirling 'Have I The Right' provided a 1964 UK number 1 for the Honeycombs, but this was to be Meek's last major success. By 1965, he seemed something of an anachronism, and his production techniques seemed leaden and predictable rather than startling. The departure of songwriter Geoff Goddard weakened the supply of good material, and a motley series of flop records left record companies disenchanted. Meek's tempestuous personality and often violent behaviour alienated many old friends, while his homosexuality produced feelings of self-loathing and engendered a fear of imminent scandal. His mental instability worsened with successive personal and business problems, and on 3 February 1967, he was involved in a bizarre shooting incident in which he fatally shot his landlady before turning the gun on himself. It was the end of a sometimes brilliant but frustratingly erratic career.

Meeks, Carl

b. 1962, Kingston, Jamaica, West Indies. As a schoolboy, Meeks emulated the singing styles of top Jamaican musicians, and, determined to pursue a career in the recording industry, he realized that he would have to develop his own original style. In the mid-80s he auditioned with George Lemon who released his debut, 'No More Secrets', which led to a series of singles. He also worked with other producers, including the prolific Hugh 'Redman' James. James was proving to be one of Jamaica's top producers, releasing smash hits from Clement Irie, Thriller U and Meeks's 1987 hits, 'Weh Dem Fah', 'Haul And Pull Up Selector' and 'Rude Girl Sandra'. By 1988 Meeks performed alongside DJ Daddy Lilly for 'Lean On Me', and a classic tale of wasted emotions, 'Heard About My Love'. As a soloist, Meeks continued to enjoy hits with the conscientious 'Danger' and 'Tuff Scout'.

Meet Me In St. Louis

Released by MGM in 1944, this enchanting film traces the adventures of the Smith family as the seasons change from summer through spring in the US city of St. Louis during 1903/4. Based on The Kensington Stories by Sally Benson, Irving Brecher and Fred Finklehoffe's screenplay focuses on one of the Smiths' teenage daughters, Esther (Judy Garland), and her romance with the boy who lives next door to her in Kensington Avenue, John Truitt (Tom Drake). The cast was particularly fine: Esther's three sisters, Rose, Tootie and Agnes, were played by Lucille Bremer, Margaret O'Brien, and Joan Carroll; and the family group was completed by brother Lon Jnr. (Henry H. Daniels Jnr.), father and mother (Leon Ames and Mary Astor), grandpa (Harry Davenport) - and their long-time maid Katie (Marjorie Main). Also featured were June Lockhart, Hugh Marlowe, Robert Sully, and Chill Wills. The seemingly ordinary day-to-day happenings involving collusion between Rose, her mother and Katie to advance the time of the evening meal by an hour so that it will not coincide with a long-distance telephone call from Rose's boyfriend, Tootie's Halloween night escapades, Esther and John's mutual joy at the Christmas dance, and the possibility of the whole family moving to New York, resulted in a most extraordinary film. The move away from their beloved home does not materialize, and the whole family celebrate at the opening of 1904 St. Louis World Fair, singing 'Meet Me In St. Louis, Louis' (Andrew Sterling-Kerry Mills). Hugh Martin and Ralph Blane contributed three memorable songs for Judy Garland to sing: 'The Boy Next Door', 'Have Yourself A Merry Little Christmas', and the immortal 'The Trolley Song', which accompanied one of the most endearing sequences in any film musical. Garland also joined O'Brien for the charming 'Under The Bamboo Tree' (Bob Cole-J. Rosamond Johnson), and she and the rest of the young people (and audiences all over the world) brushed a tear from their eyes as Leon Ames (dubbed by Arthur Freed) and Mary Astor rendered the poignant 'You And I' (Freed-Nacio Herb Brown). The dances were staged by Charles Walters, and the film, which was directed with his usual style and flair by Vincente Minnelli, was photographed in Technicolor by George Folsey. Meet Me In St. Louis was an enormous commercial success, grossing over $5 million in US domestic theatre rentals alone - a fitting return for what is generally considered to be a masterpiece. Unfortunately, the magic did not extend to the 1989 Broadway stage adaptation which one critic called 'a lumbering and graceless project'. It ran for only 253 performances at the time, but revivals, complete with additional songs, were mounted in St. Louis in 1960 and 1991.

Mega City Four

Thrash pop outfit from Surrey, England, influenced by early punks such as Stiff Little Fingers and the Buzzcocks, stabilizing their output with a sustained melodicism and growing lyrical awareness. They started out in 1982 as Capricorn, who played a few gigs and recorded demos (including one 15-track affair entitled The Good News Tape). However, in 1986 original drummer Martin left, leaving the remaining members to undergo a rethink. A replacement, Chris Jones, was recruited from local bands Exit East and Moose Kaboose, joining Wiz (b. Darren Brown; vocals, guitar), Danny (b. Daniel Brown; rhythm guitar, backing vocals, brother of Wiz), and Gerry (b. Gerald Bryant; bass). Wiz had previously played one gig fronting a progressive rock band, Quilp, before joining Bryant in Capricorn, formed at Guildford technical college. On 1 January 1987, Mega City Four had their first practice. They took their name from the home base of Judge Dredd, the popular comic book enforcer. A demo appeared in March, and after nationwide gigs a self-financed single, 'Miles Apart', was recorded in the autumn. Although it took six months to surface, reviews were impressive and disc jockey John Peel added his patronage. In the wake of its success it was reissued by Vinyl Solution subsidiary Decoy Records, who became the band's permanent home. 'Distant Relatives' followed in November 1988, announcing Wiz's lyrical preoccupation with relationships, and was awarded Single Of The Week status by Steve Lamacq in New Musical Express. Another single, 'Less Than Senseless', arrived during a relentless 300-gig touring schedule throughout 1989. These experiences would result in the title of their debut album, Tranzophobia - a term invoked to convey the horror of touring for extended periods out of the back of a transit van. Though at the time it perfectly described the earnest, hard-working nature of the band, it later became an albatross around their necks when they found themselves unable to escape the lack of sophistication it implied. Despite this, Mega City Four, alongside peers and friends the Senseless Things, helped revitalize a flagging UK live scene with wholly committed performances. Sadly, Who Cares Wins saw many of the band's newly acquired critical following renounce their previous advocacy, on a set neutered by flat production. Frustrated by budget restrictions, the band elected to move to Big Life Records for future recordings. 'Words That Say' and 'Stop', the latter a Top 40 success in January 1992, prefaced the band's long-playing debut for their new home. Sebastapol Road was titled after the group's Farnborough rehearsal studio and comprised a succinct, energized collection of three-minute pop songs, with more highly evolved lyrical themes than had previously been the case. A live album, less perfunctory than efforts by bands without Mega City Four's onstage fluency, preceded 1993's Magic Bullets. With increasingly introverted songwriting from Wiz - though his words were as direct and anti-glamour as ever - this was another fine, considered set, its quality emphasized by the promotional single, 'Iron Sky'. However, the group's fans had also moved on, to new favourites such as Carter USM (one of many bands who started out as support act to MC4), and sales proved disappointing. They signed to Fire Records in 1995, and released Soulscraper the following year.

Megabass

Comprising Darren Ash (b. *c.*1968, Sussex, England) and Martin Smith (b. *c.*1968, Sussex, England), Megabass grew as an offshoot of the Music Factory (a team, including Andy Pickles and Ian Morgan of Jive Bunny who are well known for their 'megamixes' for nightclub DJs). The intention to record as a duo arose from a commission to provide a whole album of remixes titled Megabass, plus an excerpted single to promote the album. In 1990 their 'Time To Make The Floor Burn' single reached number 16 in the UK charts. A medley of mixes featuring artists such as Kid N' Play, Rebel MC, Black Box, Inner City, Technotronic and others, it was their sole chart hit.

Megadeth

This thrash metal quartet was founded in San Francisco, California, USA, by guitarist Dave Mustaine after leaving Metallica in 1983 (he co-wrote four songs on the latter's debut album, though he did not actually appear on it). Recruiting bassist Dave Ellefson, guitarist Chris Poland and drummer Gars Samuelson, Mustaine negotiated a contract with the independent Combat label. Working on a tight budget, Megadeth produced Killing Is My Business...And Business Is Good in 1985. This was a ferocious blast of high-energy thrash metal, weakened by a thin production. Nevertheless, Capitol Records, realizing the band's potential, immediately signed them, even though Mustaine was beginning to acquire a reputation for his outspoken and provocative manner. Peace Sells...But Who's Buying? was a marked improvement over their debut, both technically and musically. It was characterized by incessant, heavy-duty riffing, bursts of screaming guitar and lyrics that reflected Mustaine's outspoken perception of contemporary social and political issues. In 1988 Mustaine fired Poland and Samuelson (who then formed Fatal Opera), bringing in Jeff Young and Chuck Behler as replacements before the recording of So Far, So Good...So What! This built on their aggressive and vitriolic style, and included a cover version of 'Anarchy In The UK', with the Sex Pistols' guitarist Steve Jones making a guest appearance. Following two years of heroin-related problems, and the enforced departure of Poland and Behler, Mustaine reappeared in 1990 with guitar virtuoso Marty Friedman and drummer Nick Menza. Rust In Peace was released to widespread critical acclaim, combining an anti-nuclear message with the explosive guitar pyrotechnics of Friedman. Countdown To Extinction, meanwhile, was a bruising encounter that entertained more melody in the execution of its theme - that of impending ecological disaster. Reports of Mustaine's drug problems again overshadowed sessions for their sixth album, Youthanasia, recorded in Phoenix, Arizona, where three-quarters of the band now live. It was produced by Max Norman (who co-produced Countdown To Extinction and mixed Rust In Peace). Along with Slayer, Metallica and Anthrax, Megadeth remain at the forefront of the thrash metal genre, despite the vulnerability of their central creative force. In 1998 drummer Nick Menza left the band due to 'health problems', he was replaced by Jimmy Degrasso.

b. *c.*1970, USA. Contemporary jazz pianist Brad Mehldau has built an enviable reputation in his early career for his use of spacious phrasing and single-note figures and phrases. He chose this approach because 'it helps to bring more expression to the playing, more depth, particularly with ballads.' Others have analogised this technique as 'meditative'. He made his debut for Warner Brothers Records in 1995 with Introducing Brad Mehldau. Mainly comprising standards such as Duke Ellington's 'Prelude To A Kiss', this album also featured his own compositions such as 'Angst', which betrayed a stylistic debt to idols such as Art Tatum, Oscar Peterson and Herbie Hancock. Previously Mehldau had worked on recordings by Joshua Redman, Peter Bernstein, Christopher Hollyday and Jessie Davis. He has also toured with tenor saxophonist David Sanchez.

Meirelles, Helena

b. 1934, Matto Gross do Sul, Brazil. Singer and guitarist Meirelles was first 'discovered' by Guitar Player magazine in 1993, who made her their 'spotlight artist' of the month. However, by this time she was already a legend in her own country, despite having disappeared from view for a period of over 30 years - at which time she was believed to have been killed by a cowboy. What US critics marvelled at was the absolute ferocity and endurance levels of her flamenco-influenced guitar playing technique - employing a bull horn plectrum rather than the standard plastic version, because these prove prone to breaking given Meirelles' style. She had grown up on an old dirt road farm used by cattle transporters, where many passing musicians chose to stay. Because guitar playing was not viewed as a suitable profession for a woman at that time, from the age of six Meirelles practised the instrument in private. However, she never became a professional musician, having to take turns at the domestic tasks such as cattle-minding and crop raising. She married at 17 and had three children but refused to obey her first husband's instructions to give up playing guitar. After fleeing from home, her most regular venue became the local whore house where she would play for both the prostitutes and drunks. She played the 10-stringed Brazilian country guitar, and by now had reached a dazzling standard of musicianship - performing a mixture of songs she learned as a child back on Jaraco Farm with her own compositions. However, she then disappeared from view for several years at which time the aforementioned rumour of her demise circulated. The truth was that she had been subsisting raising her children, washing clothes and drinking hard liquor. Her return to nationwide, and eventual international prominence, was later celebrated with the release of her first, self-titled CD.

Meisner, Randy

b. 8 March 1946, Scottsbluff, Nebraska, USA. Meisner's musical career began in the early 60s as a member of local act, the Dynamics. He subsequently moved to Colorado, where he joined the Soul Survivors, later known as the Poor; but although this folk/country-rock act was active between 1964 and 1968, its recorded legacy was constrained to two singles. Meisner then became a founder member of Poco, but having played on Pickin' Up The Pieces, left following a disagreement to join ex-Poor alumni Allen Kemp and Pat Shanahan in Rick Nelson's Stone Canyon Band. In 1971, the bassist toured with Linda Ronstadt before joining fellow members Bernie Leadon, Glenn Frey and Don Henley in the Eagles. Meisner remained with this seminal act until 1977, when he left to pursue solo ambitions. The low-key I Really Want You Here Tonight was followed by the more successful One More Song, which spawned two US Top 30 hits in 'Deep Inside My Heart' and 'Hearts On Fire'. 'Never Been In Love' from Randy Meisner reached the same chart in 1982, but the artist then suspended his career. He re-emerged in 1989 when the original Poco line-up was reunited for Legacy, but former animosities quickly resurfaced. The following year, Meisner was involved in a new group, Black Tie, which enjoyed a hit on the country chart with a version of Buddy Holly's 'Learning The Game'.

Mekon

90s jungle artist Mekon is the pseudonym of John Gosling, formerly a member of both Psychic TV and William Orbit's Bass-O-Matic. His debut solo single was 'Phatty's Lunch Box'. The genesis of the follow-up single, 'Revenge Of The Mekon', was extremely unusual. Gosling had just finished reading the biography of Frankie Fraser, a friend of the London gangsters the Kray brothers, when, coincidentally, he met Fraser on the streets of Islington, London. He later contacted Fraser through his publishers and set up a recording session at which three hours of Fraser talking were recorded. The single was then mixed from these tapes, with Fraser's reminiscences of the underworld underpinned by Gosling's dub-heavy orchestration. Gosling was reportedly not frightened by Fraser's reputation, but certainly respectful of it: 'There's not gonna be any arguing about the publishing splits on the track. He can have what he wants.'

Mekons

Although initially based in Leeds, England, the Mekons made their recording debut for the Edinburgh-based Fast Product label in 1978. 'Never Been In A Riot', the outlet's first release, was the subject of effusive music press praise, and its joyous amateurism set the standard for much of the group's subsequent work. Having completed a second single, 'Where Were You', the Mekons were signed to Virgin Records where a line-up of Andy Carrigan (vocals), Mark White (vocals), Kevin Lycett (guitar), Tom Greenhalgh (guitar), Ross Allen (bass) and Jon Langford (drums, later guitar, vocals) completed The Quality Of Mercy Is Not Strnen. This unusual title was drawn from the axiom that, if you gave a monkey a typewriter and an infinite amount of time, it would eventually produce the complete works of Shakespeare, a wry comment on the group's own musical ability. Nonetheless, the Mekons' enthusiasm, particularly in a live setting, was undoubtedly infectious and has contributed greatly to their long career. Despite numerous personnel changes (over 30 different members to 1995), they have retained a sense of naïve adventurism, embracing world music, folk and roots material in their customarily ebullient manner. In the 90s three of the core members of the band (Greenhaigh, Langford and Sara Corina, Greenhaigh's violinist partner who joined in 1991) had relocated to Chicago, Illinois, USA, where the group enjoyed a loose recording contract with Quarterstick Records. This followed an unfortunate major label coalition with A&M Records. Other important contributors to the Mekons' legacy include Sally Timms, vocalist and full-time member since the late 80s, who has released a brace of solo albums and is based in New York, and drummer Steve Goulding (ex-Graham Parker And The Rumour), a part-time journalist who has worked with Pig Dog Pondering. Langford also worked with Goulding on his part-time country band, Jon Langford And The Pine Valley Cosmonauts, who issued an album in Germany in 1994, and released records with his own country rock side project, The Waco Brothers. He has also had numerous exhibitions of his paintings. The band's first release for over three years, 1996's King Of The Pirates, was a bizarre collaboration with American writer Kathy Acker.

Mel And Kim

One of Stock, Aitken And Waterman's acts, Mel (b. Melanie Susan Appleby, 11 July 1966, London, England, d. 19 January 1990) and sister Kim (b. Kim Appleby, 28 August 1961, London, England) were two East End, London girls with a neat line in pop dance routines. They both started their careers as models - a fact which would come back to haunt them when topless pictures of Mel turned up in Playboy and Penthouse magazines. Picked up by the Stock, Aitken And Waterman team, they saw 'Showing Out (Get Fresh At The Weekend)' reach number 3 in the UK during 1986, and the following year they gave their mentors their first chart-topper as producers with 'Respectable'. The girls even stayed on top of the charts when the charity single 'Let It Be', by Ferry Aid, to which they contributed, supplanted 'Respectable'. The group was now such hot property that their name was hijacked at Christmas 1987 by Mel Smith and Kim Wilde for their version of 'Rockin' Around The Christmas Tree'. The title track of their debut album (the initials F.L.M. stood for Fun, Love And Money) and 'That's The Way It Is' continued their string of UK Top 10 singles, but the hit records stopped when Mel was taken away from the 1988 Montreux Festival in a wheelchair. The official report was that she had a slipped disc, while press speculation intimated that it was something more serious. In late 1988, Kim smiled bravely in interviews and said that her sister was well on the way to recovery. However, the news soon broke that Mel was undergoing treatment for spinal cancer and she, too, showed her courage by allowing the press to publish pictures of her even though she was suffering the side effects of chemotherapy. Mel died in January 1990 from pneumonia. The following October, Kim carried on with her first solo single, 'Don't Worry'.

Cousins Mel Hardin and Tim McPherson were born and raised in Holly Springs, Mississippi, USA, and later moved to St. Louis, Missouri. They were signed to Gene Chandler's Bamboo label and reached the US Top 10 with 'Backfield In Motion' (1969). A vibrant single, it was followed by 'Good Guys Only Win In The Movies', after which Mel And Tim switched to Stax. The sumptuous 'Starting All Over Again', later covered by Johnnie Taylor, was another major R&B hit, but further singles, including 'I May Not Be What You Want' (from the film Wattstax), had less success.

b. George Militiades, 1 May 1909, London, England, d. 18 June 1965, London, England. An orchestra leader, composer, arranger, multi-instrumentalist and singer, Melachrino was the son of Greek parents. He learned to play a miniature violin, and wrote his first composition when he was five years old. He was already an accomplished musician by the age of 14 when he enrolled at the Trinity College Of Music, where he specialized in chamber music and the use of strings. At the age of 16, he wrote a string sextette that was performed in London. He resolved to learn to play every instrument in the orchestra, and succeeded, with the exception of the harp and piano. In 1927, he began his broadcasting career, playing and singing from the BBC studio at Savoy Hill. He strayed further and further away from his initial ambition to be a classical musician, playing jazz instead, and working in dance bands for leaders such as Bert Firman, Harry Hudson, Ambrose and Carroll Gibbons' Savoy Hotel Orchestra. In 1939, Melachrino formed his own dance band to play at the prestigious London venue the Café de Paris, until 1940. During the period of the 'Battle of Britain', he joined the British Army as a military policeman, eventually becoming a Regimental Sergeant-Major. He later toured in the Stars Of Battledress and was musical director of the Army Radio Unit, as well as the leader of the British Band of the Allied Expeditionary Forces. He also led the 50-piece 'Orchestra in Khaki', recruited from professional musicians serving in the ranks, who were much amused when he was introduced on broadcasts as 'the Sentimental Sergeant-Major'. The unit held its own against the American band led by Glenn Miller and the Canadian combination led by Robert Farnon, with both of whom Melachrino guested as vocalist on occasions during the war years.

While in the forces, he experimented with large string sounds, and after the war he ran two outfits, the Melachrino Strings and the George Melachrino Orchestra, both purveying the sentimental mood music so popular in the 50s, especially in the USA. The full orchestra consisted of 30 strings, 10 reeds, seven brass, two percussion, a harp and a piano. He formed the Melachrino Music Organization, creating work in concerts, broadcasting, recordings and film music. His film scores included Woman To Woman (1946), Code Of Scotland Yard (1948), No Orchids For Miss Blandish (1948), Story Of Shirley Yorke (1948), Dark Secret (1949), The Gamma People (1956) and Odongo (1956). In 1947, he contributed the music, with book and lyrics by Eric Maschwitz and Matt Brooks, to the revue Starlight Roof, which starred Fred Emney, Pat Kirkwood and Vic Oliver, and introduced Julie Andrews to London audiences. He also wrote the music for the ill-fated Lucky Boy, with lyrics by Ian Douglas. His other compositions included 'First Rhapsody' (his theme tune), 'Winter Sunshine', 'Vision D'Amour', 'Woodland Revel' and 'Portrait Of A Lady'. He had a UK chart entry in 1956 with the Italian melody 'Autumn Concerto', but, like Mantovani, who also specialized in lush string arrangements, his albums sold more in the USA than in the UK. His US hits included Christmas In High Fidelity, Under Western Skies and Immortal Ladies, a set of standards with girls' names as their titles, such as 'Laura', 'Dolores', 'Chloe' and 'Dinah'. Also popular was his series of mood records designed for various times of the day, such as Music For Daydreaming, Music For Relaxation, Music For Two People Alone, Music For Dining, Music for Reading, Music To Help You Sleep, and others. He died in 1965 following an accident at his home in Kensington, London. The Melachrino Strings and Orchestra continued to record into the 80s, conducted by Robert Mandell.

Melanie

b. Melanie Safka, 3 February 1947, New York, USA. One of the surprise discoveries of the 1969 Woodstock Festival with her moving rendition of 'Beautiful People', Melanie briefly emerged as a force during the singer-songwriter boom of the early 70s. Although often stereotyped as a winsome 'earth-mother', much of her work had a sharp edge with a raging vocal style very different from her peers. Her first US hit, the powerful 'Lay Down' (1970), benefitted from the glorious backing of the Edwin Hawkins Singers. In Britain, she broke through that same year with a passionate and strikingly original version of the Rolling Stones' 'Ruby Tuesday'. Candles In The Rain was a best seller on both sides of the Atlantic, with an effective mixture of originals and inspired cover versions. 'What Have They Done To My Song, Ma?' gave her another minor hit, narrowly outselling a rival version from the singalong New Seekers. Her last major success came in 1971 with 'Brand New Key', which reached number 1 in the USA and also proved her biggest hit in Britain. In 1972, Melanie founded Neighbourhood Records, and its parochial title seemed to define her career thereafter. Marginalized as a stylized singer-songwriter, she found it difficult to retrieve past glories. Sporadic releases continued, however, and she has often been seen playing charity shows and benefit concerts all over the world.

Melcher, Terry

b. 8 February 1942, New York City, New York, USA, d. 1991. The son of actress/singer Doris Day the artist's early recordings, credited to Terry Day, presaged his period as the youngest ever staff producer with the Columbia/CBS label. He brought singer Bruce Johnston to the company for Surfin' 'Round The World (1963), and together the pair oversaw the career of the Rip Chords, before recording a series of excellent singles as Bruce And Terry. Melcher's concurrent productions for Paul Revere And The Raiders proved particularly fruitful, engendering US Top 10 singles 'Kicks', 'Hungry' and 'Good Thing' (all 1966) and a run of eight consecutive albums. However, it is for work with the Byrds that this period is best recalled, and his empathetic skills enhanced the groups' early folk-rock sets, Mr. Tambourine Man and Turn! Turn! Turn!, as well as later selections, Ballad Of Easy Rider, Untitled and Byrdmaniax. In 1973, group members Roger McGuinn, Chris Hillman and Clarence White joined Johnston and Ry Cooder on Terry Melcher, but this introspective set failed to rise above cult status. The artist subsequently established his own label, Equinox, a name derived from an earlier production company. He enjoyed a measure of success with David Cassidy, but Melcher's attempt to rekindle his solo career with Royal Flush proved less rewarding. In 1978, Melcher, who many believe was the intended victim of the infamous Sharon Tate murders, left the US for Britain, reportedly in fear of his life from the remnants of the Charles Manson tribe. He subsequently remained out of the limelight.

b Ian Meldrum, 29 January 1946, in 'International Waters'. A likeable personality who has a high profile in the Australian rock industry. As compere of the long-running Australian television programme Countdown from 1974-87, Meldrum was in a position to influence and gain exposure for many up-and-coming bands, both local and international. With previous experience in television music and mime programmes, music journalism, management and production, he befriended many high-level music industry persons, and is credited as breaking Abba and Madonna in Australia. Since the show's demise, he has acted as consultant and has done media work, as well as supervising an offshoot of Countdown, called Countdown Revolution. His production of the Johnny Young song 'The Real Thing', sung by Russell Morris, ensures his place in Australian rock history.

Melendes, Lisa

b. East Harlem, New York, USA. This tiny Puerto Rican singer found immediate success in 1988's soul/dance scene when she made her debut with 'Make Noise', assisted by producer Carlo Berrios. 'Make Noise' was the result of her experiments with a new hybrid of street/dance music, which she christened 'new school'. A second hit single, 'Together Forever', sold nearly half a million copies, and topped the Billboard Dance and Hot 100 charts. Afterwards her career stalled, though an attempt to revive her fortunes was made in 1994 with True To Life, produced by hip-hop artist Greg Nice (Nice And Smooth). Preceded by the single 'Goody Goody', it heralded Melendes's new image - sultry looks and free-flowing dresses contrasting with heavy combat boots.

Melle Mel And The Furious 5

Melle Mel (b. Melvin Glover, New York City, New York, USA) was a typical black 'ghetto child' whose interest in music originally stemmed from the Beatles. He soon embraced the earliest sounds of hip-hop in the mid 70s, becoming a breakdancer with the D-Squad. As a DJ with his brother Kid Creole he was influenced by others in the profession like Klark Kent and Timmy Tim who used to talk rhymes whilst playing music. The pair started their own brand of rapping and around 1977 set up with another DJ, Grandmaster Flash - who gave Melle Mel his new name. Flash already had one MC - Cowboy - with him, and so the new team became Grandmaster Flash and the 3MCs. Over the next couple of years they were joined by Scorpio and then Rahiem. Spurred by the success Of 'Rapper's Delight' by the Sugarhill Gang, Flash's team recorded 'We Rap More Mellow' under the name The Young Generation. Both it and a second single ('Sugar Rappin') flopped but then they signed to Sugarhill Records as Grandmaster Flash and the Furious Five. Together they recorded one of rap's greatest standards, 'The Message'. A hugely significant record which took hip-hop away from braggadocio into social commentary, the featured vocalist was Melle Mel. Subsequent releases over the next few years came out under a wide variety of names and the battle for best billing plus squabbles with management and record company eventually led to the group splitting in two in 1984. A deep rift between Flash and Mel came about because, according to the latter: 'We'd known that Sugarhill was crooks when we first signed with 'em, so the plan had always been to build it up to a certain point where . . . they couldn't keep on taking the money that they was taking! That's what I'd been banking on, but those that left didn't seem to see it the same way'. Mel retained Cowboy and Scorpio and recruited another of his brothers King Louie III plus Tommy Gunn, Kami Kaze, and Clayton Savage. Flash had inaugurated a $5 million court action against Sylvia Robinson's Sugarhill label to attain full rights to the Grandmaster Flash name, which he lost. The group's new operating title was thus Grandmaster Melle Mel & The Furious Five. The name was forced on the band by Sugarhill, though it infuriated Flash and Mel himself was unhappy with it. Singles like 'Beat Street Breakdown Part I', and 'We Don't Work For Free' would fail to break the upper echelons of the charts, though Mel did appear on the intro to Chaka Khan's worldwide smash 'I Feel For You'. There was also a UK Top 10 hit with 'Step Off', after which his popularity cooled. By 1987 the mutual lack of success encouraged the separated parties to reunite as Grandmaster Flash, Melle Mel And The Furious Five for a Paul Simon hosted charity concert in New York. The intervening years between then and Mel's appearance on Quincy Jones' 'Back On The Block' were lost to drug addiction - painfully ironic, considering that Mel's best known record remains 'White Lines (Don't Do It)', an anti-drug blockbuster which was credited to Grandmaster Flash and Melle Mel. It first hit the charts in 1983 and re-entered on several occasions. Originally targeted specifically at cocaine, it was revamped in 1989 by Sylvia Johnson because of the crack boom. Its pro-abstinence stance was not physically shared by the protagonists. When Mel was in the studio in 1982, laying down the vocal track, he admits that the 'only thing I was thinking about in that studio was listening to the record, joking and getting high'. In 1994 news broke that Mel was back and fighting fit (taking the trouble to perform press-ups for interviewers to prove the point), and working on a new album with former Ice-T collaborator Afrika Islam. He also linked with Flash for his 'Mic Checka' radio show, but the 1997 comeback album, Right Now, proved to be a disappointing collection.

Mellencamp, John

b. 7 October 1951, Seymour, Indiana, USA. Mellencamp survived an early phase as a glam-rocker to become one of America's most successful mainstream rock singers of the past two decades. He played in local band Trash with guitarist Larry Crane (b. 1953), who remained with Mellencamp throughout the 80s. In 1976, David Bowie's manager Tony de Fries signed him to a recording deal. His name was changed to Johnny Cougar, he was given a James Dean-style image and a debut album rush-released. Chestnut Street Incident, released as a demo and consisting of mainly cover versions, was credited to Johnny Cougar and did not chart. He left MainMan and moved back to Indiana, formed the Zone and recorded the self-penned The Kid Inside. Shortly afterwards he signed to Riva Records, owned by Rod Stewart's manager Billy Gaff who presented him as 'the next Bruce Springsteen'. His first chart action came courtesy of John Cougar, which included the US Top 30 single 'I Need A Lover' in December 1979. Cougar and his band toured constantly, a strategy which paid off in 1982 when American Fool headed the US album chart (USA sales by 1996 were 5 million) while both 'Hurts So Good' and 'Jack And Diane' were million-sellers.

The following year he became John Cougar Mellencamp, eventually dropping 'Cougar' in 1989. With many of his songs dealing with social problems, Mellencamp was one of the organisers of the Farm Aid series of benefit concerts. His straight-ahead rock numbers also brought a string of big hits in the second half of the 80s. Among the most notable were 'Small Town', 'R.O.C.K. In The USA', 'Paper In Fire' (1987) and 'Cherry Bomb' (1988). Lonesome Jubilee used fiddles and accordions to illustrate bleak portraits of America in recession, while 'Pop Singer' from Big Daddy expressed Mellencamp's disillusionment with the current state of the music business. He took time off to concentrate on painting but returned with Whenever We Wanted, which recaptured the muscular rock sound of his earlier albums. In 1991, Mellencamp directed and starred in the film Falling From Grace. He continued to hit the US charts with amazing rapidity and, up until early 1991, he had charted 21 singles in the US Hot 100 of which nine were Top 10, with one number 1, 'Jack And Diane' in 1982. Despite the relative failure of 1993's Human Wheels, Mellencamp made a strong comeback with Dance Naked and the attendant Top 10 cover version of Van Morrison's 'Wild Night'.

Mellencamp suffered a major heart attack shortly after the release of Dance Naked, and following this major scare was sidelined for over a year. He returned in 1996 with Mr. Happy Go Lucky, on which his sound was augmented by the work of noted dance producer Junior Vasquez.

Mello K

Rapper Mello K boasts an intriguing marketing strategy: 'My rhymes are basically about females because they take to the music and they encourage guys to buy it'. Of West Indian descent, Mello K was brought up a native of New York, and first emerged as a serious artist in 1990. It was then that he was given the opportunity to work with Keith Sweat and Charlie Wilson from the Gap Band, subsequently forming his own posse, 40 Deep, hooking up with producer Monti Blues and reggae DJ Shawnie Ranks. Through Ranks Mello K debuted on his L.A. Boy Records. He also guested on the single 'Do Me', a slow-burning narrative reminiscent of lovers rock. It is this sort of material which gives Mello K his name, but he is equally capable of gruff, hard-nosed raps.

Mello-Kings

The Mello-Kings were responsible for one of the most durable doo-wop hits of the 50s. Despite the fact that their only hit, 'Tonite Tonite', never climbed higher than number 77 in the US charts, the single is still considered one of the most popular group harmony recordings of the era, more than three decades after its initial release. The group consisted of brothers Jerry and Bob Scholl, Eddie Quinn, Neil Arena and Larry Esposito. The quintet was formed in 1956 at a high school in Mount Vernon, New York, USA, under the guidance of manager Dick Levister. Originally named the Mellotones, the group was signed to the Herald label. 'Tonite Tonite' was written by Billy Myles, a staff composer for the label. The group was forced to change its name after the single's release, as another group had already claimed Mellotones. The record lasted only 10 weeks in the US charts, and the group was never able to repeat this success, although 'Tonite Tonite' returned in 1961, reaching number 95, due to a resurgence of interest in the doo-wop sound, and has been consistently voted among the top five doo-wop records of all time in radio polls, particularly in the New York area. A new Mello-Kings led by Jerry Scholl, whose brother Bob died on 27 August 1975, was still touring the rock 'n' roll revival circuit in the early 90s.

Mellon Collie And The Infinite Sadness - Smashing Pumpkins

A double album was always risky business in the days of vinyl; some of those pompous 70s efforts contained only four tracks. A double album in the CD age, with so much recordable time available (and expected) is potentially suicidal. Billy Corgan had no such concerns when he formulated the lyrics to over two dozen songs. Part 1, 'Dawn To Dusk', and Part 2, 'Twilight To Starlight', contain few potato peelings, and the project was deemed an unmitigated success. Despite the heavy nature of much of the music, the Smashing Pumpkins refused to resort to formulaic riffs, and the occasional use of exquisite strings was an inspired decision.

b. Kenneth Edward Mellons, 10 July 1965, Nashville, Tennessee, USA. Mellons is one of the few country artists to have been raised in Nashville and he has wanted to play country music since he was three years old. He grew up attending shows, festivals and the Grand Ole Opry and he worked at Opryland USA impersonating country performers. This led to an appearance on the Opry itself. Mellons is a honky tonk singer and songwriter and had a US country Top 10 hit with 'Jukebox Junkie'. On his first CD, he thanks his 'Honky Tonk Teachers', Lefty Frizzell, George Jones, Merle Haggard, Hank Williams and Keith Whitley 'for the lessons I've learned'. John Anderson and George Jones offer vocal support on a classic honky tonk song, 'He'll Never Be A Lawyer ('Cause He Can't Pass The Bar)'. He spent several months on the road opening for Billy Ray Cyrus and he has done much fund-raising for a Memphis children's hospital.

Mellotron

An early keyboard synthesizer, the mellotron was developed by Streetley Electronics of Sutton Coldfield in the West Midlands of England in the early 60s. It used pre-recorded tapes rather than electronic pulses to simulate various instruments, with each key triggering a different sound, from violin, guitar and brass to church organ and accordion. Early models offered a range of rhythms, including bossa nova, foxtrot, Dixieland and Viennese waltz. In the popular music field, jazz/R&B artist Graham Bond was a pioneer in using the Mellotron, and was the first person to extol its virtues by demonstrating the instrument to an amazed audience on UK television's Ready Steady Go! in 1964 It soon became highly popular among progressive rock bands. It dominated the sound of the Moody Blues' concept album Days Of Future Passed and was also used on the Beatles' 'Strawberry Fields Forever' and in the work of Barclay James Harvest, King Crimson and Procol Harum. During the 70s, the Mellotron was overtaken by more sophisticated synthesizers produced by Moog and others, although both Pink Floyd and Tangerine Dream transferred Moog sounds onto mellotron tapes in order to play them in chords.

Mellow Man Ace

b. Ulpiano Sergio Reyes, 12 April 1967, Havana, Cuba, though he moved to the US at the age of four. Ace was brought up in Los Angeles, where he made his entrance in 1990 with a debut rap LP on Capitol that swtiched between his native Spanish and English. With production offered by the Dust Brothers and Def Jef (among others), the most successful exposition was a bilingual rap over Santana's 'Evil Ways', entitled 'Mentirosa'. This was released as a single (US number 14), and he was among the key participants in the Latin Alliance project, but younger, more capable brothers have largely taken up the mantle of hispanic rap these days. These include his own blood brother, 'Sen Dog', of Cypress Hill.

Mellowmoods

An R&B vocal group from Harlem, New York City, New York, USA. The Mellowmoods began at the dawn of the doo-wop era, and made a brief impression on the recording scene with their deep street-corner sound. The members were Ray 'Buddy' Wooten, Bobby Williams, Monteith 'Monte' Owens, Alvin 'Bobby' Baylor, and Jimmy Bethea. Their one hit was 'Where Are You? (Now That I Need You)' (number 7 R&B) for Bobby Robinson's Robin label in 1951. They failed on their subsequent releases, 'I Couldn't Sleep A Wink Last Night' for Red Robin in 1952, and two more releases on Prestige. The group broke up after their last record in 1953, and Owens and Williams became members of the newly formed Solitaires.

b. 17 August 1926, Liverpool, Lancashire, England. Deeply involved in the UK trad scene of the late 40s and 50s, Melly sang with Mick Mulligan's band. In the 60s he switched careers, exploiting his interest in and knowledge of both music and art to become one of the UK's most ubiquitous critics and writers. He also became a popular television personality, and published the first volume in a series of three autobiographical works. In the early 70s Melly returned to music, performing regularly with John Chilton's band. He has continued to sing with Chilton, touring extensively and entertaining audiences with his broadly-based repertoire which encompasses early blues, popular songs of 20s and 30s vaudeville, and a smattering of later material, some of it written especially by Chilton, which suits his highly personal, orotund singing style.

Melodians

Vocal trio comprising Brent Dowe, Tony Brevett and Trevor McNaughton. Robert Cogle was also a member of the group throughout their career. He made a major contribution as songwriter on many of the trio's biggest hits, but apparently not as a vocalist. They started singing in Kingston's amateur talent contests from 1960, but did not record until April 1966, when they made four titles for Coxsone Dodd, only two of which were released. During 1967-68 the Melodians recorded a series of big local hits for the Treasure Isle label, owned by producer Duke Reid, that endure to this day as classics of the rocksteady school. The trio's cool, precise harmonies are showcased to near-perfection on 'You Don't Need Me', 'I Will Get Along', 'I Caught You', all released in 1967, and 'Come On Little Girl' in 1968. Later in 1968, the group made two more massive local hits for Sonia Pottinger - 'Little Nut Tree', freely adapted from the nursery rhyme, and the celebratory 'Swing And Dine'. The following year, while still continuing to record occasional titles for Pottinger's Tip-Top label ('No Nola'), they began an association with the producer Leslie Kong that was to bring them international success, firstly with 'Sweet Sensation' and then with the Rasta-influenced, anthemic 'Rivers Of Babylon', the latter reputedly selling 75,000 copies in the UK alone. They continued recording for Kong until his death in 1971, not only as a trio but as solo vocalists. Following this they recorded for Lee Perry, Harry J., Dynamics and Sonia Pottinger and Duke Reid again in 1972. Two years later the group split up. Brent Dowe recorded for Lee Perry in 1975 ('Down Here In Babylon'), and produced himself at Channel One the same year on the sublime 'Deh Pon The Wicked'. Tony Brevett enjoyed success again with 'Don't Get Weary', a self-production. In 1976, they re-formed, recording many of their old hits for producer Harry J., with backing by the Soul Syndicate band, but failed to maintain momentum. In the mid-80s the trio attempted a reunion, with little success; nevertheless, much of the music they made in the 60s remains emblematic of the best in rocksteady and reggae, and their recent stage shows at revival concerts have proved to be hugely popular.

Melodie MC

b. Kent Lövgren, Sweden. This rapper began his career as a breakdancer at the age of 12 - proving good enough to be entered in major championship events throughout his native Sweden. He maintained his allegiance to the hip-hop cause thereafter, releasing two moderately successful singles, 'Feel Your Body Movin'' and 'Take Me Away', in 1992. His breakthrough came the following year with 'Dum Da Dum', whose 'hip-house' stylings proved popular throughout Europe, especially in Germany where it sold over 200,000 copies. The follow-up single, 'I Wanna Dance', was less strong, but repeated the chart success, and acted as a prelude to a debut album for the Sidelake Virgin label.

Melody Maker

The oldest-established pop music newspaper in the world was founded as the house journal of London music publisher Lawrence Wright in 1926, but soon became an independent monthly aimed primarily at dance band musicians. On the cover of its first issue in January 1926 its banner read: A Monthly Magazine For All Who Are Directly Or Indirectly Interested In The Production Of Popular Music. After founding editor Edgar Jackson (1895-1967) left in 1929 to manage Jack Hylton's band, Melody Maker increased its jazz coverage. Composer Spike Hughes took over as record reviewer, and the paper sponsored a 1933 concert tour by Duke Ellington. In that year, Melody Maker became a weekly with a newspaper format. Ray Sonin took over from P. Mathison Brooks as editor in 1940 and was succeeded in 1949 by Pat Brand. With Max Jones (b. 1917) as its top jazz writer, by 1955, Melody Maker was selling 97,000 copies. However, the hostility to rock 'n' roll of some columnists saw the paper lose ground to New Musical Express (founded 1952) and to the newly launched Record Mirror. In 1956, Melody Maker published its first Top 20 singles chart but it did not wholeheartedly embrace the new pop music until 1963. When Jack Hutton replaced Brand, the paper was redesigned and Chris Welch was hired as its first pop journalist. One of the most important sections of Melody Maker was its classified advertisements, notably the 'musicians wanted' section. Wishbone Ash and Camel were among the numerous British rock bands that found drummers or guitarists through the Melody Maker small advertisements.

With the addition of other, younger writers, Melody Maker provided full coverage of the progressive rock and folk scenes of the 60s, until it was hit in 1970 by the defection of Hutton and most of the staff to set up a rival weekly, Sounds. Under Hutton's deputy, Ray Coleman, however, Melody Maker had its most successful period in the early 70s, with sales reaching a peak of 200,000. Although most of the staff were hostile to punk, Caroline Coon was brought in to sing its praises. The 80s were a period of falling sales for the paper and all its weekly rivals, as new teenybopper papers led by Smash Hits and monthlies for the older rock fan (Q, Mojo) siphoned off sections of its audience. Despite an injection of new writing talent, notably from Monitor, a new wave fanzine based at Oxford University, Melody Maker turned inwards, writing about the latest indie rock bands in a style peppered with in-jokes. By 1991, Sounds and Record Mirror had disappeared, while the New Musical Express led the market, reviewing mainstream rock as well as independent label favourites. Melody Maker followed and seems likely to remain second fiddle in a market that has become less relevant with the appearance of magazines such as Q, Mojo and Select. Allan Jones was editor when the magazine celebrated 70 years with a special issue in April 1996, although he must have found it frustrating to watch its readership continue to decline down to a meagre 55,000 copies by mid-1996 and 45,000 a year later.

Melony

Unrelated to the folk singer-songwriter of the early 70s who travelled under the same name, the 90s Melony are a trio from Stockholm, Sweden, who specialize in angular but commercial pop-rock. The group comprises comic-book translator Peter Kvint (guitar, vocals), Mana Eriksson (drums) and Gunnar Norden (bass), who originally formed to play at a friend's wedding. Following a domestic-only EP for Sweden's Soap label, they were signed by Minty Fresh Records' president Jim Powers for American and mainstream European releases in 1997. A debut album, Satisfaction, followed in August 1997, the songs dominated by pleasing hooks and melodies and Kvint's individualistic take on American pop culture - the best examples being 'Big Dipper' and 'Barbra Streisand Nose'.

Meltdown

Meltdown are a five-piece band formed by ex-Yardbirds drummer Jim McCarty. Previously responsible for writing epochal songs for the latter band, including 'Shapes Of Things', 'Still I'm Sad' and 'Over Under Sideways Down', McCarty started Meltdown in the 90s as an avenue for full-blooded R&B, mixing original material with blues classics written by Freddie King, Johnny Winter, Peter Green and others. The cast list behind Meltdown was certainly impressive; Ray Majors (guitar, vocals) was formerly with Mott The Hoople and the British Lions, and had previously worked with McCarty as part of Box Of Frogs in 1984. He then joined the drummer's pre-Meltdown combo, the McCarty Band, for live work, replacing Top Topham. Sam Johnson provides Meltdown with expressive slide guitar, though he was still a teenager at the band's inception. Despite his tender years he had already worked with Pete Hogman of the Five Dimensions and Dick Taylor of the Pretty Things. The other youngster in the band is keyboard player Steve Corley, a jazz prodigy from the Royal Academy Of Music. Female bass player/vocalist Nikki Racklin had already recorded solo and opened shows for Naked Truth and James. The group then set about a series of live UK dates, before mini-tours of Sweden and France.

Melton, Barry

b. 1947, Brooklyn, New York, USA. This superb, fluid electric guitarist began his career in the Instant Action Jug Band, a politically-inspired unit from Berkeley, California, USA. The group subsequently evolved into Country Joe And The Fish with whom Melton remained until their demise in 1970. His first solo album, Bright Sun Is Shining, was recorded soon afterwards, but this soul-based selection was viewed as disappointing in the light of the artist's acid-rock credentials. In 1972, the guitarist joined forces with Jay Levy (keyboards), Rick Dey (bass; the composer of 'Just Like Me' for Paul Revere And The Raiders) and Tony Dey (drums) in Melton Levy And The Day Brothers. The group completed a low-key album before Barry left to form a new unit with Grateful Dead lyricist Robert Hunter. This pattern of short-lived associations continued over the years, during which time Melton would record a further five albums, each of intermittent interest, yet without fully harnessing his obvious talent. He rejoined Country Joe McDonald on several occasions and, despite embarking on a new career as a lawyer, maintains a voracious appetite for live appearances. Since 1982, Melton has also been a cornerstone in the Dinosaurs, the definitive, if irregular, Bay Area 'supergroup'.

Melvin, Harold, And The Blue Notes

Formed in Philadelphia in 1954, the Blue Notes - Harold Melvin (b. 25 June 1939, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, USA, d. 24 March 1997), Bernard Wilson, Jesse Gillis Jnr., Franklin Peaker and Roosevelt Brodie - began life as a doo-wop group. In 1960, they enjoyed a minor hit with a ballad, 'My Hero', but failed to make a significant breakthrough despite several excellent singles. By the end of the decade only Melvin and Wilson remained from that early group, with John Atkins and Lawrence Brown completing the line-up. Two crucial events then changed their fortunes. Theodore 'Teddy' Pendergrass (b. 26 March 1950, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, USA), drummer in the Blue Notes' backing band, was brought into the frontline as the featured vocalist in place of the departing Atkins. A fifth singer, Lloyd Parkes, also joined the group, which was then signed by producers Gamble And Huff, whose sculpted arrangements and insistent rhythm tracks provided the perfect foil for the Pendergrass voice. His imploring delivery was best heard on 'If You Don't Know Me By Now' (1972), an aching ballad that encapsulated the intimacy of a relationship. Further singles, including 'The Love I Lost (1973) and 'Where Are All My Friends' (1974), enhanced Pendergrass's reputation and led to his demand for equal billing in the group. Melvin's refusal resulted in the singer's departure. However, while Pendergrass remained contracted to Philadelphia International and enjoyed considerable solo success, Melvin And The Blue Notes, with new singer David Ebo, moved to ABC Records. Despite securing a UK Top 5 hit with 'Don't Leave Me This Way' and a US R&B Top 10 hit with 'Reaching For The World' in 1977, the group was unable to recapture its erstwhile success. By the early 80s, they were without a recording contract, but continued to enjoy an in-concert popularity. They signed to Philly World in 1984, achieving minor UK hit singles the same year with 'Don't Give Me Up' and 'Today's Your Lucky Day'.

Melvins

The late Kurt Cobain of Nirvana described the US rock band the Melvins as his favourite group. Unsurprising, perhaps, as they are the only other band of note to originate from his home-town of Aberdeen in the USA (though they have since relocated to San Francisco), and he did once roadie for them. Drummer Dale Crover also played with Nirvana for a spell, while Cobain guested on and co-produced Houdini for the band. The other members of the Melvins, formed in 1984, were Buzz Osbourne (vocals, guitar) and Lori Beck (bass). Matt Lukin (Mudhoney) was also a floating member. Reputed to be more influenced by the heavy rock angle than many who have fallen under the generic title 'grunge', the Melvins are big fans of Black Sabbath and even released three solo albums in a tribute to the Kiss strategy of similar pretensions. A cover version of Flipper's 'Way Of The World' and 'Sacrifice' sat alongside Alice Cooper's 'Ballad Of Dwight Fry' on the cover album Lysol. Stoner Witch, their second album for Atlantic/East West, saw Crover and Osbourne joined by bass player Mark Deutrom, who had previously produced the band's first two albums. This time, they were working with Garth Richardson of Red Hot Chili Peppers and L7 fame. Two albums with Atlantic Records failed to break the band into the mainstream and they moved to a subsidiary for Stag. It was felt that a smaller label would be more supportive to the band, rather than being lost in the wave of releases from a large label.

Members

One of the many UK bands inspired by punk, the Members came together in the summer of 1977, when former university student Nicky Tesco and French expatriate Jean-Marie Carroll, now a bank clerk in the UK, started working together. With Tesco on vocals and Carroll as guitarist and chief songwriter, they recruited Gary Baker on guitar, Adrian Lillywhite (brother of producer Steve Lillywhite) on drums, and a bass player. The bassist left after only a couple of months and was replaced by British Airways technician Chris Payne. They were based in Camberley, Surrey, England, from where all the members (except Carroll) originated. The band's first recording - 'Fear On The Streets' - was for the Beggars Banquet punk compilation Streets. Despite this, it was Stiff Records that took the plunge and signed them. Their debut single, 'Solitary Confinement', was produced by Larry Wallis and earned them a contract with Virgin Records in November 1978, though by now Baker had departed and been replaced by Nigel Bennett. Their Virgin debut, 'Sound Of The Suburbs', was a hit in 1979, and was followed by the bloated but humorous reggae of 'Offshore Banking Business'. The b-side revisited 'Solitary Confinement', a song that the Newtown Neurotics would later update in the form of 'Living With Unemployment'. Their second album featured a guest appearance from Joe Jackson but it would be their last for Virgin, which they left in 1980. They were briefly signed to Island Records, but their third album came out on Albion Records, after which they disappeared. One other release of note is the Children Of 7's 'Solidarity' on Stiff, which featured both Carroll and Payne among the writing credits. More recently, 'Sound Of The Suburbs' featured as the title track to a nostalgic punk compilation that was advertised widely on UK television.

Membranes

Formed in Preston, Lancashire, in 1977, this UK punk group was based in the seaside town of Blackpool, later immortalized as 'Tatty Seaside Town'. Founder-member John Robb (b. 4 May 1961; bass) was initially joined by Mark Tilton (guitar), Martin Kelly (drums) and Martin Critchley (vocals), the latter soon departing as Critchley sidestepped from drums to keyboards, with 'Goofy Sid' Coulthart taking over behind the drumstool. Robb was to prove himself nothing if not a trier, organizing compilation appearances and inaugurating the near-legendary, near-indecipherable Blackpool Rox fanzine. Their first vinyl single was the 3-track 'Muscles' in 1981, gaining single of the week awards for its defiant, brash optimism and gaining ascendancy thanks to the turntable of Radio 1's John Peel. It remains one of the most memorable DIY efforts of the early 80s. Steve Farmery joined on guitar after its release, with Martin Kelly leaving the keyboard position vacant. They joined Rondolet Records for 'Pin Stripe Hype', watching the label close down shortly afterwards. This also saw off Farmery, leaving the band as a trio for much of the rest of their productive career. Missing out on the opportunity to be Creation Records' first featured artists (because of finance) sent them downmarket to Criminal Damage. It, too, proved a less than satisfactory home, and ultimately saw the group relocate to Manchester in 1983 in typically eternal optimism. The single that should have broken them was the acclaimed 'Spike Milligan's Tape Recorder', which somewhat predated the guitar barrage of Big Black and Sonic Youth. Distribution problems killed off the enthusiasm reciprocated by the media. The same problems applied to the 'Death To Trad Rock' 12-inch, after which Tilton left. Although they finally made their postponed mark on Creation with the disappointing The Gift Of Life, the band's fortunes were now in decline. Stan was replaced by Wallas as the band concentrated on the European circuit. Nick Brown was added on second guitar in 1987, followed in short order by Keith Curtis. Meanwhile, Robb was becoming more active as a freelance journalist for Sounds, Melody Maker and a host of other magazines. Despite the production services of Steve Albini (Big Black) on 1988's Kiss Ass Godhead, Wallas was the next departure, to be replaced by Paul Morley (ex-Slum Turkeys). However, total disintegration was imminent as Robb concentrated on his writing career, and launched his new dance project Sensurround.

Memorial Album - Hank Williams

Hank Williams died on the road, on his way to a gig in Canton, Ohio, on New Year's Day 1953. The Grand Ole Opry had discredited him as a drunk and he was the first rock star, living a squalid life of amphetamine and alcohol addiction and describing family quarrels in his songs. This album, the first to cash in on a musician's death, was issued in 10-inch and 12-inch formats with eight and 12 songs, respectively. Country music does not come any better and Hank Williams' influence is immense: Elvis Presley, Buddy Holly and Bob Dylan all owe him a debt. Play 'Move It On Over' next to 'Rock Around The Clock' and you will discover Bill Haley's listening habits.

Memory

Formed by members of the New York Life Assurance company in Lebanon, New Jersey, USA, in the autumn of 1976, Memory's music was more colourful than either those origins or their lacklustre choice of name would suggest. Comprising six multiracial computer database operatives, Jaime de Jesus (lead), Lesley Uhl (falsetto), Herb 'Iceman' Olson (baritone), Lou 'Big Lou' Benito (bass), Bobby 'Bobby Hep' Hepburn (first tenor) and Otis 'Big O' Harper (second tenor), they would meet after working hours in the company boardroom and practise their harmony singing. Perfecting oldies by the Drifters and other doo-wop groups of the 50s, their debut performance came at their employer's Christmas party in 1976. Afterwards they moved onto the local New Jersey club circuit, where they would spend several years cultivating an audience. Their first recording, 'Street Corner Serenade', was released in March 1981, at which time Olson was replaced on baritone by Greg Restivo. A second single, a cover version of the Drifters' 'Under The Boardwalk', followed, but it was to be their final release. They continued to perform, however, to appreciative doo-wop fans throughout their native New Jersey and nearby cities, until 1987. Afterwards the members returned to their seats behind VDU screens, although four of the band had taken new jobs outside the insurance industry.

Memphis Horns

The Memphis Horns, an offshoot of the Mar-Keys, boasted a fluid line-up throughout its history. The mainstays, trumpeter Wayne Jackson and tenor saxophonist Andrew Love, guided the group through its period at the Stax and Hi studios. Augmented by James Mitchell (baritone saxophone), Jack Hale (trombone) and either Ed Logan or Lewis Collins (tenor saxophone), the Horns appeared on releases by Al Green, Ann Peebles, Syl Johnson and many others. The group's eponymous debut album featured several members of the Dixie Flyers and, during the mid-70s, the Horns secured four R&B hits including 'Get Up And Dance' and 'Just For Your Love'. The 1978 album Memphis Horns II, featured as guest vocalists Michael McDonald, Anita Pointer and James Gilstrap. The Memphis Horns are, however, better recalled for their contributions to many of southern soul's finest moments. Andrew Love and Wayne Jackson maintained the Memphis Horns' name throughout the 80s and made appearances on U2's Rattle And Hum and Keith Richards' Talk Is Cheap (both in 1988). In 1990 the duo supported Robert Cray, and in 1991, 1992 and 1994 they played at the annual Porretta Terme Soul Festival in Italy which regularly attracts top soul acts from the Memphis area.

Memphis Jug Band

Perhaps the most important and certainly the most popular of the jug bands, the Memphis Jug Band flourished on record between 1927 and 1934, during which time they recorded some 80 tracks - first for Victor then later for Columbia/OKeh Records. On one occasion they moonlighted for Champion using the name the Picaninny Jug Band. Their repertoire covered just about every kind of music that anybody could wish to hear, and their personal appearances ran from fish-frys to bar mitzvahs. Recording for their own people, they restricted themselves to ballads, dance tunes (including waltzes), novelty numbers and blues. Usually a knockabout conglomeration, they could produce blues of feeling and beauty when required. The group had an ever-changing personnel that revolved around the nucleus of Charlie Burse and Will Shade. Other members included some of the stars of the Memphis blues scene such as Memphis Minnie, Casey Bill Weldon, Jab Jones, Milton Robey, Vol Stevens, Ben Ramey, Charlie Polk and Hattie Hart. Basically a string band augmented by such 'semi-legitimate' instruments as harmonicas, kazoos, washboards and jugs blown to supply a bass, the MJB had a constantly shifting line-up featuring violins, pianos, mandolins, banjos and guitars in different combinations. This, coupled with ever-changing vocalists, lent their music a freshness, vitality and variety that enables it to charm, entertain or move the listener as much today as it did during the great days of Beale Street. Although they ceased to record in 1934, this loose aggregation of musicians continued to work around Memphis until well into the 40s; some of its members were recorded again by researchers in the 60s.

Memphis Minnie

b. Lizzie Douglas, 3 June 1897, Algiers, Louisiana, USA, d. 6 August 1973, Memphis, Tennessee, USA. Raised in Walls, Mississippi, Memphis Minnie learned banjo and guitar as a child, and ran away from home at the age of 13 to play music in Memphis; she worked for a time with Ringling Brothers Circus. When in Mississippi, she played guitar with Willie Brown, and in the 20s made a common-law marriage with Casey Bill Weldon. However, she was with Kansas Joe McCoy by the time of their joint recording debut in 1929. Her guitar playing had a strong rhythm, coupled with the ragtime influence common among the Memphis musicians, and her singing was tough and swaggering. 'Bumble Bee' was a hit, and Joe and Minnie recorded extensively, both together and separately; their guitar duets were among the finest in blues. Apart from songs about sex and relationships, Minnie sang about her meningitis (calling it, with gallows humour, 'Memphis Minniejitis'), about her father's mule, 'Frankie Jean', and about the guitarist 'Mister Tango'. The McCoys moved to Chicago in the early 30s, but split up in 1935, apparently as a result of Joe's jealousy of his wife's success. By this time, Minnie's music was reflecting changing tastes, usually featuring a piano and string bass, and sometimes trumpet or clarinet and a drummer. She was a star of the Chicago club scene, as she continued to present herself on disc as the tough, independent woman she was in reality. In 1939, she began recording with her third husband, Little Son Joe (Ernest Lawlars) on second guitar. They were early users of amplification, and made swinging music, although it lacked the rich complexity of her early recordings. Her lyrics were of considerable originality, as on a graceful tribute to Ma Rainey, recorded in 1940, six months after Rainey's death. 'Me And My Chauffeur Blues', with its boogieing guitar, also became widely known. In the late 40s, Memphis Minnie ran a touring vaudeville company, and she continued to record after the war, playing tough electric guitar. Her efforts to keep up with trends were proving less successful, however, and in the mid-50s, she and Joe retired to Memphis. Joe was already unwell, and died in 1961, while Minnie was incapacitated from the late 50s, and lived out her life in nursing homes.

Memphis Slim

b. Peter Chatman, 3 September 1915, Memphis, Tennessee, USA, d. 24 February 1988. One of the most popular performers of the blues idiom, Memphis Slim combined the barrelhouse/boogie-woogie piano style of the pre-war era with a sophisticated vocal intonation. A prolific songwriter, his best-known composition, 'Every Day I Have The Blues', has been the subject of numerous interpretations, and versions by Count Basie and B.B. King helped establish the song as a standard of its genre. Although Slim began his career in 1934, deputizing for pianist Roosevelt Sykes, his reputation did not prosper until he moved to Chicago at the end of the decade. He supported many of the city's best-known acts, including John Lee 'Sonny Boy' Williamson, and, in 1940, became the regular accompanist to Big Bill Broonzy. The artist made his recording debut for the Bluebird label that year but remained with Broonzy until 1944, when he formed his own group, the House Rockers. In 1949 Slim enjoyed an R&B number 1 with 'Messin' Around', the first in a series of successful singles, including 'Blue And Lonesome' (1949), 'Mother Earth' (1951) and 'The Come Back' (1953). He remained a popular attraction in Chicago throughout the ensuing decade, but following prestigious appearances at New York's Carnegie Hall and the Newport Jazz Festival, the artist moved to Paris, where he was domiciled from 1961 onwards. Slim toured and recorded extensively throughout Europe, an availability that, perversely, has irritated blues purists who view his work as overtly commercial. His later work certainly lacked the purpose of the young musician, but by the time of his death from kidney failure in 1988, Memphis

Slim's role in the development of blues was assured.

Men At Work

Formed in Melbourne, Australia, in 1979, by singer Colin Hay (b. 29 June 1953, Scotland - emigrated to Australia aged 14) and guitarist Ron Strykert (b. 18 August 1957, Australia), initially as an acoustic duo. With the later addition of Greg Ham (b. 27 September 1953, Australia), John Rees (bass) and Jerry Speiser (drums), Men At Work performed for two years in small, inner-suburban pubs before being discovered and signed by CBS Records executive Peter Karpin. In 1981, the first single, 'Who Can It Be Now?', was an enormous Australian hit, soon followed by 'Down Under' and the album Business As Usual. The band's success surprised and infuriated home critics, who had written them off as derivative and insipid. However, blessed with three songwriters and supported by videos which showcased the band's sense of humour (and as a support act to Fleetwood Mac), Men At Work were able to achieve two US number 1 hits in 1982 with 'Who Can It Be Now?' and 'Down Under' and a US number 1 album that same year. Success followed again in the UK where 'Down Under' reached number 1 in early 1983, accompanied by Business As Usual topping the charts. By now, Men At Work could comfortably claim to be the world's most successful Australian pop group. The follow-up album, Cargo, sold well in the USA, reaching number 3, and provided two Top 10 singles in 'Overkill' and 'It's A Mistake'. Despite the album reaching the Top 10 in the UK, single success there was harder to sustain, with three singles reaching Top 40 status only. The third album, Two Hearts, sold less well, although it did achieve gold status in the USA, peaking at number 50. The original personnel had by now disintegrated, leaving Hay as the sole surviving member. The break-up in 1985 followed arguments over management and writing, and each member followed his own path. Hay, after recording a solo album, Looking For Jack (1987), recorded another, Wayfaring Sons, on MCA in 1990, as the Colin Hay Band, using Celtic music as its base.

Men They Couldn't Hang

In their seven-year span, The Men They Couldn't Hang combined folk, punk and roots music to create an essential live act alongside a wealth of recorded talent. The band emerged as the Pogues' sparring partners but, despite a blaze of early publicity and praise, they failed to follow them upwards, dogged as they were by numerous label changes. Busking in Shepherds Bush, Welsh singer Cush met up with bassist Shanne (who had been in the Nips with the Pogues' Shane MacGowan), songwriter and guitarist Paul Simmonds, Ricky Maguire (bass), Scottish guitarist and singer Phil ('Swill') Odgers and his brother John on drums, in time for a ramshackle folk performance at London's alternative country music festival in Easter 1984. Labelled as part of some 'cowpunk' scene, the band were quickly signed by Elvis Costello to his Demon label, Imp. A cover version of Eric Bogle's 'Green Fields Of France' in October 1984 became a runaway indie success, and a favourite on BBC disc jockey John Peel's show. While playing live, the Men matched their own incisive compositions with entertaining cover versions. June 1985's 'Iron Masters' was just as strong, if more manic, and was accompanied by an impressive and assured debut, The Night Of A Thousand Candles. Produced by Nick Lowe, 'Greenback' was less immediate, but its success swayed MCA to sign the group, resulting in 'Gold Rush' in June 1986. The group's second album, How Green Is The Valley, continued their marriage of musical styles and a political sensibility drawn from an historical perspective. 'The Ghosts Of Cable Street' exemplified these ingredients. A move to Magnet Records catalyzed perhaps their finest work, with the commercial 'Island In The Rain' and the listenable Waiting For Bonaparte. 'The Colours' received airplay, but only skirted the charts. Fledgling label Silvertone's Andrew Lauder (who had worked with the group at Demon) signed the group in time for 'Rain, Steam And Speed' in February 1989. Hot on its heels came Silvertown. Two further singles followed: 'A Place In The Sun' and 'A Map Of Morocco'. In 1990 they recorded their final studio album, for which the personnel was increased to six, with the addition of Nick Muir. On the strength of it, they gained a support slot to David Bowie at Milton Keynes. Shortly afterwards they disbanded, following a long farewell tour, and a live album, Alive, Alive - O. The band returned in 1996 with the addition of former Screaming Blue Messiahs drummer Kenny Harris. The celebratory return to Demon Records for Never Born To Follow showed a band who were no longer striving to prove anything, but unconsciously sounded more proficient and confident.

Men Without Hats

Formed in Montreal, Canada, in 1980, this act was the brainchild of siblings Ivan (vocals) and Jeremy (drums) Arrobas, who manufactured the remaining accompaniment on their records with synthesizers. An independent EP, Folk Of The 80s, created overseas cult interest to the extent that it was reissued on Britain's Stiff Records, along with an edit of its 'Antarctica' track as a single. However, just after the release of 1981's 'Nationale Seven', Jeremy left to allow composer Ivan to front a Men Without Hats with the brothers Stefan (guitar, violin) and Colin Doroschuk (keyboards), plus Allan McCarthy (drums). Produced by manager Marc Durand, Rhythm Of Youth reached number 14 in the USA in the wake of 'Safety Dance', a global smash born of a truce between electro-pop and medieval jollity that carried an anti-nuclear message over into an arresting video. A sure sign of its impact was a parody by 'Weird Al' Yankovic. No more hits came the group's way, but their recordings still received a fair critical consideration.

Not related to the film of the same name, Menace To Society offer reality or slice of life raps about their immediate surroundings in Inkster, a suburb of Detroit, Michigan. The group's lead rapper is AGQ (b. Kevin Riley; AGQ being an acronym for American Genuine Quality) alongside Rhythm Layer Riccola (b. Andre Brintley) and Frank Nitty (b. Franchot Hayes). Their debut single, 'Streets Of Hell', set out their agenda: 'Although some of our lyrics appear to be harsh, they come to you with the reality of today's street life.'

Mendes, Sergio

b. 11 February 1941, Niteroi, Brazil. A pianist, composer, arranger and bandleader, who is indelibly identified with the bossa nova boom of 60s. After touring North America with his own quintet, he settled there late in 1964, and worked on recordings with Antonio Jobim and Art Farmer. He founded Brasil '65, which later evolved into Brasil '66, a two women-four man, vocal-instrumental group which marketed 'a delicately-mixed blend of pianistic jazz, subtle Latin nuances, John Lennon/Paul McCartney style, some Henry Mancini, here and there a touch of Burt Bacharach, cool minor chords, danceable up-beat, gentle laughter and a little sex'. The initial ensemble consisted of Mendes (piano/vocals), Joses Soares (latin percussion/vocals), Bob Matthews (bass/vocals), Jao Palma (drums) and vocalists Janis Hansen and Lani Hall. Hall's husband, Herb Alpert, the owner, with Jerry Moss, of A&M Records, became Mendes' patron, and together in the late 60s, they produced a series of US chart albums. 'The Look Of Love', 'The Fool On The Hill', and 'Scarborough Fair' also made the US singles Top 20. During the 70s and 80s, Mendes recorded for several different labels, under a variety of names. His US and UK singles chart hit in 1983, 'Never Gonna Let You Go', was just credited to Sergio Mendes, and had vocals by Joe Pizzulo and Leza Miller. In 1984, he had minor success in the US with 'Alibis'. In 1990, when Sergio Mendes and Brasil 99 opened the new 600-seater Rio Showroom in Las Vegas, they gained 'resounding applause' and excellent reviews for the 'ascending American/Brazilian moods' of old favourites such as 'Manha De Carnaval' and 'Mas Que Nada'.

Mendoza, Vince

b. USA. A highly skilled arranger with multicultural influences, Mendoza has become very well known in Europe, thanks in large part to a spell as arranger and conductor with the German WDR Big Band, based in Cologne. Performances with this band have often featured visiting American jazzmen, among them Charlie Mariano, Peter Erskine, Dave Liebman and Michael Brecker, and British trombonist Dave Horler. Mendoza's writing incorporates classical music influences together with shades of Latin American music. His jazz influences evolve from a deep awareness of the music of Gil Evans and Miles Davis.

Mengelberg, Misha

b. 5 April, 1935, Kiev, Ukraine. Mengelberg was raised in Holland where, for 30 years, he has personified the Dutch avant garde. He characterizes himself as 'a rotten piano player' - if that is the case, wittier use has rarely been made of limitations. Mengelberg has consistently aligned himself with iconoclastic and provocative musicians, from straight music's Zen terrorists David Tudor and John Cage in the early 60s, to Eric Dolphy in 1963, to the members of the Dutch Instant Composers Pool, with whom he still works. Together with his longstanding ICP collaborator Han Bennink, he has been one of the main instigators behind three albums which have paid tribute to pianist Herbie Nichols - two with a small group that also featured Steve Lacy, and one with the ICP Orchestra. As an improviser, Mengelberg holds out for the 'responsibility to be different every day' and is against the jazzman's obsession with personal style and touch. All the same, his compositions reveal an identifiable preoccupation with irony, some pieces, in fact, dripping with sarcasm. The ICP Orchestra is currently the main outlet for his writing, but he also composes for the Berlin Contemporary Jazz Orchestra.

Mensah, E.T.

b. Emmanuel Teteh Mensah, 31 May 1919, Accra, Ghana, d. 19 July 1996. Known throughout West Africa as 'The King Of highlife', Mensah was the single greatest influence on the development of the style, in a career which stretches back to the mid-30s. His father was a keen guitarist and encouraged his son to seek out formal musical training. At primary school, he studied fife and flute, and was a key player in the school's marching band, going on to serve his apprenticeship with the Accra Rhythmic Orchestra between 1936 and 1944, employed first as a roadie, then as a saxophonist. In 1945, he joined the legendary Black And White Spots, before switching to the Tempos Band in 1947, succeeding Guy Warren as its leader a year later. The Tempos inaugurated a new era in Ghanaian highlife, downplaying the role of jazz-based reed and brass soloing, and expanding the traditional drum and percussion section to give more prominence to folk-based rhythm patterns. At the same time, the band incorporated Afro-Cuban rumbas and cha chas into its repertoire. The resultant style became known as big band highlife. In 1952, the Tempos were signed to West African Decca Records and quickly established themselves as Ghana's top highlife band with a string of hit singles, including 'Sunday Mirror', 'School Girl', 'Cherry Red' and 'You Call Me Roko'. Mensah's reputation spread throughout West Africa. From the late 40s onwards, he regularly toured throughout the region, inspiring local bands who until then had played largely imported jazz or Latin music, and encouraging them to include a far greater proportion of roots rhythms and song structures in their output. Alongside his stylistic innovations, Mensah did much to improve the lot of Ghanaian musicians in the 50s and early 60s - raising the wages of his sidemen to a level which permitted them to buy their own instruments (as opposed to the prevailing system of hiring them from the bandleader, to whom they were then effectively in a feudal relationship), and helping found the Ghana Musicians Union (at a time when royalty payments were practically unheard of). Under his leadership, the Tempos also served as finishing school to a large number of talented musicians, who went on to form important highlife bands under their own names - notable examples include the Red Spots and the Rhythm Aces. In the late 60s, big band highlife began to be perceived as outmoded, and - despite the 1969 release of one of his greatest ever albums, The King Of African Highlife Rhythm - Mensah went on to spend much of the 70s and early 80s employed as a pharmacist. Happily, the inevitable revival occurred in the mid-80s, along with renewed interest in Mensah himself. In 1982, he travelled to Nigeria to record the album Highlife Giants Of Africa with Victor Olaiya. In 1986 he undertook a critically-acclaimed tour of the UK, France and The Netherlands. British label Retro-Afric also issued two highly regarded compilations of vintage Mensah songs. Between these releases he was awarded an honorary Ph.D and given the title 'Okunini' from the government of Ghana, the highest accolade the country has to offer.

Mensah, Kwaa

b. 1920, Lagos, Nigeria, d. 1991, Ghana. Alternatively known as either 'the godfather of palm-wine highlife' or simply 'the king of palm-wine', Mensah was instructed on the guitar by his uncle, Kwame (Sam) Asare. Asare had been among the very first practitioners of palm-wine music, which grew in Ghana's ports as a hybrid of several influences, notably the two-finger guitar style of Kru fishermen. Arare became the first Ghanaian musician to record (for Zonophone) after travelling to London in 1928. Kwaa Mensah soon inherited his position as palm-wine's most celebrated guitarist. He spent much of his youth in Cape Coast, initially supporting his uncle's performances. He was initially responsible for introducing the guitar to the kon komba style, where previously brass has occupied the leading position. Afterwards he became synonymous with palm-wine. His first own-name band was formed in 1951, and quickly amassed a discography of over 500 78s. These made him a houeshold name throughout Ghana and neighbouring territories, though his popularity dipped during the 60s and early 70s when electric guitar dominated. He underwent something of a renaissance in 1975, however, with the release of his debut album, Wawo Christo. This led to USA support slots with Wulomei, and several high profile showcases back in Ghana. Numerous cassette albums were released, but when Mensah died in 1991 there remained a dearth of more orthodox releases to document his career, which has been instrumental in introducing a musical form once again enjoying popularity throughout the region.

Menswear

The rise of Menswear was one of 1995's biggest UK media events. They appeared on the BBC Television chart show Top Of The Pops performing 'I'll Manage Somehow' before they had even released a single. When 'Daydreamer', the first song they had written together, was released as a single, it peaked at number 14 in the UK charts. The group was founded by Johnny Dean (b. John Hutchinson Dean, 12 December 1971, Salisbury, England; vocals), Chris Gentry (b. 23 February 1977, Southend, England; guitar) and Stuart Black (b. Stuart Lee Black, 1 April 1974, Walthamstow, London, England; bass). The line-up was completed with the addition of Matt Everett (b. Matthew Stephen Everett, 13 August 1972, Birmingham, England; drums) and Simon White (b. Simon Ian White, 1 July 1977, Moseley, Birmingham, England; guitar). Original drummer Todd Parmenter had been replaced in late 1994, the group having formed officially on 13 October 1994. Their debut gig five days later was reportedly 'filled with A&R men'. Much of the initial attention stemmed from the fact that their career was steered by local London celebrities Howard Gough (former manager of Lush) of Laurel Records and their manager Adrian. 'Daydreamer' was accused by some of plagiarizing Wire, while Nuisance possessed a few reasonable tunes, but nothing approaching the songwriting required to justify their early claims or the initial press interest. Everett left the band in July 1996 and was replaced by their percussion roadie Tud.

Mental As Anything

Utilizing elements of rockabilly, rock and R&B combined with an energetic live act, Mental As Anything has proved a lasting, popular live and recording outfit. The group's debut album introduced Reg Mombasa (b. Chris O'Doherty, New Zealand; guitar, vocals), Wayne Delisle (b. Australia; drums) and the three songwriters: Martin Plaza (b. Martin Murphy, Australia; vocals, guitar), Greedy Smith (b. Andrew Smith, Australia; keyboards, harmonica, vocals) and Peter O'Doherty (b. New Zealand; bass). Despite their different writing styles, Get Wet achieved success, particularly with the enigmatically titled single 'The Nips Are Getting Bigger'. Their most fortuitous album, Cats And Dogs, saw the production smooth out the rough edges, and subsequent albums have maintained a high standard, with single releases constantly charting in Australia (two dozen to the end of 1990). Their single, 'Live It Up' gained considerable chart success in the UK in 1987, when it spent 13 weeks at number 3. Plaza has also released solo recordings which have enjoyed high sales in Australia.

Mental Hippie Blood

Comprising Michael Oran (vocals), Mikael Jansson (guitar), Jonas Pettersson (guitar), Lake Skoglund (bass) and Anders Odenstrand (drums), Swedish heavy metal band Mental Hippie Blood formed in 1992. Their name gave some clue as to the nature of their music - a brutal collision of 60s psychedelia and acid rock (notably the work of Jimi Hendrix) with contemporary hard rock (especially groups such as Anthrax). The group evolved after Oran returned from a period in the USA and replaced the original singer in a long-running band known as the Glorious Bankrobbers - the original nucleus for the members of Mental Hippie Blood. Their debut album and attendant single, 'Don't Talk', saw the press locate them at the forefront of a new wave of Swedish heavy metal. In particular, their lyrics were celebrated for the complete absence of 'Norse Gods or magic swords'.

Menza, Don

b. 22 April 1936, Buffalo, New York, USA. In 1960, after military service, during which he had become adept as both an instrumentalist and an arranger, tenor saxophonist Menza joined the Maynard Ferguson band. He was then briefly with Stan Kenton but opted to return to his home town, showing a preference for small-group work. In the mid-60s, he lived and worked in Germany. In 1968, he returned to the USA, playing in the Buddy Rich big band. Resident in Los Angeles throughout the next decade, Menza developed his writing, both as arranger and composer. In particular, he wrote for Louie Bellson, with whom he also played and recorded. In the 80s, he played with several Los Angeles-based big bands, including that led by Bill Berry, and also led his own big bands and small groups. He toured extensively, at home and overseas, usually appearing as a single. His thorough musical background and eclectic tastes - he admires and has studied the work of many classical composers - has also allowed him to work in non-jazz contexts. A fiery, aggressive performer, Menza's writing shows his bebop leanings, which he brings even into his big band work.

Mercedes Ladies

A very early hip-hop group, the first all-female such aggregation, which featured Zena Z, Debbie D, Eva Deff, Sherry Sheryl, alongside DJs RC and Baby D. Their origins in the Bronx, they were often to be found supporting the Funky Four at house parties and jams. Baby D, whose sassy 'frontin'' earned her lessons at the hands of Grandmaster Flash himself, would go on to a contract for East West, then Polydor, recording the LPs Dream About You and ESP.

Mercer, Johnny

b. John Herndon Mercer, 18 November 1909, Savannah, Georgia, USA, d. 25 June 1976, Los Angeles, California, USA. A distinguished lyricist, composer and singer, Mercer was an important link with the first generation of composers of indigenous American popular music such as Jerome Kern and Harry Warren, through to post-World War II writers like Henry Mancini. Along the way, he collaborated with several others, including Harold Arlen, Hoagy Carmichael, Gene DePaul, Rube Bloom, Richard Whiting, Victor Schertzinger, Gordon Jenkins, Jimmy Van Heusen, Duke Ellington, Billy Strayhorn, Matty Malneck, Arthur Schwartz and more. Most of the time, Mercer wrote the most literate and witty lyrics, but occasionally the melody as well.

He moved to New York in the late 20s and worked in a variety of jobs before placing one of his first songs, 'Out Of Breath And Scared To Death Of You', (written with Everett Miller), in the The Garrick Gaieties Of 1930. During the 30s, Mercer contributed the lyrics to several movie songs, including 'If You Were Mine' from To Beat The Band, a record hit for Billie Holiday with Teddy Wilson, 'I'm An Old Cowhand' (words and music) (Rhythm On The Range), 'Too Marvellous For Words' (co-written with Richard Whiting for Ready, Willing And Able), 'Have You Got Any Castles, Baby?' (Varsity Show), 'Hooray For Hollywood' (Hollywood Hotel), 'Jeepers Creepers' (Going Places) and 'Love Is Where You Find It' (Garden Of The Moon). Mercer's other songs during the decade included 'Fare-Thee-Well To Harlem', 'Moon Country', 'When A Woman Loves A Man' (with Gordon Jenkins and Bernard Hanighan), 'P.S. I Love You', 'Goody Goody', 'You Must Have Been A Beautiful Baby', 'And The Angels Sing', 'Cuckoo In The Clock', 'Day In - Day Out' and 'I Thought About You'. In the 30s he appeared frequently on radio, as MC and singer with Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman and Bob Crosby. With his southern drawl and warm, good-natured style, he was a natural for the medium, and, in the early 40s, had his own show, Johnny Mercer's Music Shop. During this period, Mercer became a director of the songwriter's copyright organization, ASCAP. Also, in 1942, he combined with songwriter-turned-film-producer, Buddy De Sylva, and businessman, Glen Wallich, to form Capitol Records, which was, in its original form, dedicated to musical excellence, a policy which reflected Mercer's approach to all his work.

He had previously had record hits with other writers' songs, such as 'Mr Gallagher And Mr Sheen' and 'Small Fry', along with his own 'Mr. Meadowlark' (a duet with Bing Crosby), and 'Strip Polka'. For Capitol, he continued to register in the US Hit Parade with popular favourites such as 'Personality', 'Candy'; and some of his own numbers such as 'G.I. Jive', 'Ac-Cent-Tchu-Ate The Positive', 'Glow Worm'; and 'On The Atchison, Topeka, And The Santa Fe', which was also sung by Judy Garland in the film The Harvey Girls (1946), and gained Mercer his first Academy Award. His other 40s song successes, many of them from movies, included 'The Waiter And The Porter And The Upstairs Maid' (from Birth Of The Blues); 'Blues In The Night' and 'This Time's The Dream's On Me' (Blues In The Night); 'Tangerine', 'I Remember You' and 'Arthur Murray Taught Me Dancing In A Hurry' (The Fleet's In), 'Dearly Beloved' and 'I'm Old Fashioned' (You Were Never Lovelier) (Kern); 'Hit The Road To Dreamland' and 'That Old Black Magic', Billy Daniels' identity song, (Star Spangled Rhythm), 'My Shining Hour' (The Sky's The Limit) and 'Come Rain Or Come Shine', 'Legalize My Name' and 'Any Place I Hang My Hat Is Home', from the stage show St. Louis Woman (Arlen).

Two particularly attractive compositions were 'Fools Rush In' (with Rube Bloom), which was a big hit for Glenn Miller and the movie title song 'Laura', with Mercer's lyric complementing a haunting tune by David Raksin. Mercer's collaboration with Hoagy Carmichael produced some of his most memorable songs, such as 'Lazybones', 'The Old Music Master', 'Skylark', 'How Little We Know' and the Oscar-winning 'In The Cool, Cool, Cool Of The Evening', sung by Bing Crosby and Jane Wyman in the film Here Comes The Groom (1951). In the same year, Mercer provided both the music and lyrics for the Broadway show, Top Banana, a 'burlesque musical' starring Phil Silvers and a host of mature funnymen. The entertaining score included the witty 'A Word A Day'.

The 50s were extremely productive years for Mercer, with songs such as 'Here's To My Lady', 'I Wanna Be Around' (later successful for Tony Bennett), and yet more movie songs, including 'I Want To Be A Dancing Man', 'The Bachelor Dinner Song' and 'Seeing's Believing', sung by Fred Astaire in The Belle Of New York; 'I Like Men' (covered by Peggy Lee), 'I Got Out Of Bed On The Right Side' and 'Ain't Nature Grand' from Dangerous When Wet; and 'Something's Gotta Give' and 'Sluefoot' (words and music by Mercer) from another Fred Astaire film, Daddy Long Legs. Mercer also provided additional lyrics to 'When The World Was Young' ('Ah, The Apple Trees'), 'Midnight Sun', 'Early Autumn' and 'Autumn Leaves'. The highlight of the decade was, perhaps, Seven Brides For Seven Brothers (1954). Starring Howard Keel and Jane Powell, Mercer and Gene DePaul's 'pip of a score' included 'Spring, Spring, Spring', 'Bless Your Beautiful Hide', 'Sobbin' Women', 'When You're In Love', and 'Goin' Courtin', amongst others. Two years later Mercer and DePaul got together again for the stage show Li'l Abner, starring Stubby Kaye, and including such songs as 'Namely You', 'Jubilation T. Cornpone' and 'The Country's In The Very Best Of Hands'. It ran on Broadway for nearly 700 performances and was filmed in 1959.

The early 60s brought Mercer two further Academy Awards; one for 'Moon River' from Breakfast At Tiffany's (1961), and the other, the title song to The Days Of Wine And Roses (1962). 'Moon River' was the song in which Mercer first coined the now- famous phrase, 'my huckleberry friend'. Danny Williams took the former song to the UK number slot in 1961, while namesake Andy Williams and Mercer's co-composer Henry Mancini both scored US Top 40 hits with the latter in 1963. Mancini also wrote other movie songs with Mercer, such as 'Charade', 'The Sweetheart Tree' (from The Great Race) and 'Whistling Away The Dark' (Darling Lili). In the early 70s, Mercer spent a good deal of time in Britain, and, in 1974, wrote the score, with André Previn, for the West End musical The Good Companions. He died, two years later, in 1976.

Several of his 1,000-plus songs became an integral part of many a singer's repertoire. In 1992, Frank Sinatra was still using 'One For My Baby' (music by Harold Arlen), 'the greatest saloon song ever written', as a moving set-piece in his concert performances. 'Dream' (words and music by Mercer), closed Sinatra's radio and television shows for many years, and the singer also made impressive recordings of lesser-known Mercer items, such as 'Talk To Me, Baby' and 'The Summer Wind'. Memories of his rapport with Bing Crosby in their early days were revived in 1961, when Mercer recorded Two Of A Kind with Bobby Darin, full of spontaneous asides, and featuring Mercer numbers such as 'Bob White' and 'If I Had My Druthers', plus other humorous oldies, like 'Who Takes Care Of The Caretaker's Daughter' and 'My Cutie's Due At Two-To-Two Today'. Several artists, such as Marlene VerPlanck, Susannah McCorkle, and Nancy LaMott, have devoted complete albums to his work, and in 1992 Capitol Records celebrated its 50th anniversary by issuing Too Marvellous For Words: Capitol Sings Johnny Mercer, which consistedof some of the label's most eminent artists singing their co-founder's popular song lyrics.

b. 3 February 1900, Birmingham, Staffordshire, England, d. 20 April 1984, Pittsfield, Massachusetts, USA. A celebrated and influential cabaret singer, as a young girl Mercer was educated at convent school, and underwent classical voice training. Her mother was a white variety singer and actress, her father a black American jazz singer who died before she was born.

Her mother remarried and became popular in music hall in the UK, sometimes touring overseas. In her teens, Mercer became a professional dancer, and made one of her first appearances in a London production of Lew Leslie's Blackbirds, which starred Florence Mills. By the early 20s, she had become a singer, performing in various parts of Europe and the Middle East. Before the end of the decade she had settled in Paris, and was soon a featured attraction at the renowned Bricktop's nightclub, mixing with and entertaining the 'lost generation' of American expatriates which included songwriters Cole Porter and Vincent Youmans, as well as leading literary figures such as Gertrude Stein and Ernest Hemingway. In 1938 Mercer visited New York, and by 1941 had begun the first of two long residencies in the city, at Tony's, and later at the Byline Room, which continued until 1957. In later years she also became associated with the Café Carlyle where Bobby Short regularly holds court, and recorded two live albums with him. In the 70s she worked at the St. Regis Room, appeared at Carnegie Hall and on UK television in Miss Mercer In Mayfair. In 1974 she received Stereo Review Magazine's Award of Merit, which was renamed the Mabel Mercer Award in 1984. On being chosen as its first recipient, Frank Sinatra said: 'Mabel Mercer taught me everything I know, she is the finest music teacher in the world'. She retired in 1979, but was back on stage at the 1982 Kool Jazz Festival, singing a programme of songs by Alec Wilder. The composer is said to have written one of his most appealing songs, 'While We're Young', especially for her. Her final performance was at a charity benefit in November 1983, and in the same year she was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the nation's highest civilian award, by President Reagan. One of the most respected singers, greatly admired by fellow artists and also by the composers whose work she performs, Mercer's voice had a good range and a deep, melodious sound. Although she would sometimes use jazz phrasing, she was never a jazz singer, but remained one of the finest cabaret or supper-club singers of her generation. Her greatest talent lay in her masterly delivery of lyrics to which she brought intimacy and affection.

Merchant, Natalie

b. 26 October 1963, Jamestown, New York, USA. Having originally sung in a church choir, Merchant joined the highly regarded 10,000 Maniacs in 1981 while studying at Jamestown Community College in New York. She would eventually leave that group over a decade later in 1992, three years before she made her solo bow. Merchant self-evidently relished the control afforded her by this enterprise, writing all the lyrics and music for her debut album, Tigerlily, which she also produced. She had made her intentions to leave known to her former band as early as 1990, but only jumped ship after their label, Elektra Records, offered her a solo contract. When she took it up they promptly dropped 10,000 Maniacs. Her reflections on her time in the band were revisited on Tigerlily's 'I May Know The Word', which amplified some of the frustration she felt in the later stages of their career (though the break-up was generally amicable). However, she still felt the need to recruit a core backing band, with Jennifer Turner (lead guitar), Peter Yanowitz (drums) and Barry Maguire (bass, guitar) as her accomplices. The most obvious change from her 10,000 Maniacs days signalled by Tigerlily was the vocal emphasis. Always a distinctive, affecting singer, her vocals were now mixed much higher and were less prone to smothering by the Maniacs' multi-layered musicianship.

Merciless

b. Leonard Bartley, 1971, Kingston, Jamaica, West Indies. Merciless learnt his craft on the sound systems and in 1994, his debut with singer and producer Rula Brown, 'Lend Out Mi Mercy', was an international success. Sounding not dissimilar to Bounty Killer he warned, 'The reason why they call mi Merciless - I len out no mercy - mi no get it back yet - you dis Merciless - well a dead'. The chant led to numerous hits, assuring his status as one of the island's top DJs. Collaborations with Anthony Red Rose and Malvo ('You Are Mi Heart') and Little Hero with Action Fire ('Thief In The Night' and 'God Alone') were dancehall favourites. The Big Yard label released Merciless's 'Mavis', which made references to domestic violence, and became the top reggae single of 1995 (the rhythm was also used for Shaggy's chart-topping 'Mr Boombastic'). His follow-up at the end of 1995, 'Gun From Paris', signalled a return to the Annex label, where the majority of his hits originated. The in-house producers at Annex, Harvel Hart and Delroy Schobourgh, recorded him in combination with Queen Yemisi for 'Sexy Lover'. Through the Taxi production team of Sly Dunbar and Robbie Shakespeare, he entered the Jamaican Top 10, praising 'Girls From Near And Far', and a version of the Melodians' 'Rivers Of Baylon', retitled 'Rivers Of Girls', ensured that his high profile was maintained. The conscientious revival found Merciless praising his mother over a Rastafarian burra-drumming version of Bob Marley's 'Redemption Song', entitled 'Mama Cooking'.

Mercury Records

Mercury was founded in 1947 by booking agent Irving Green, Jerry Fischer, Art Talmadge and Berle Adams. One of its first executives was John Hammond (Snr.)

who hired Mitch Miller as musical director. With Nat Tarnapol (later to found Brunswick) and Clyde Otis (the first black A&R chief of a major company) were instrumental in the company's development. Mercury had R&B success with Dinah Washington, Brook Benton and Eddie 'Cleanhead' Vinson. It's jazz artists included Albert Ammons, Jay McShann, Cootie Williams and Buddy Rich. In the rock 'n' roll era, Mercury had hits with both black vocal groups (the Platters and the Penguins) and white cover-version artists (Georgia Gibbs, and the Crewcuts). Through its southern A&R scout Shelby Singleton, Mercury also picked up artists like the Big Bopper and Bruce Channel.

In 1961, Mercury was purchased by the Dutch-owned Philips label, (soon to become PolyGram) but the management remained unchanged. There was a move into country with the Nashville-based Smash Records, run by producer Jerry Kennedy, who worked with Jerry Lee Lewis, Charlie Rich and Tom T. Hall. From 1964-67, the label ran Limelight, a jazz subsidiary (including Oscar Peterson), and the King/Starday catalogue of R&B and country recordings. In 1965, Philips/Mercury bought the famous King/Starday catalogue of R&B and country recordings.

During the 70s, the Mercury group was the main source of US talent for the giant PolyGram corporation, providing hits from the Ohio Players, the Gap Band, Rod Stewart, Graham Parker, 10cc, Rush and Bachman-Turner Overdrive. The company subsequently specialized in heavy metal talent, signing Bon Jovi, Cinderella, L.A. Guns, Kiss and, from its European sister companies, Def Leppard and the Scorpions. Its major rock acts were John Mellencamp and INXS. In the 80s, Mercury maintained its black music activities through a resuscitated Smash (for rap artists) and a new soul music label, Wing, whose early 90s roster included Vanessa Williams, Michael Morales and Tony! Toni! Tone!

Mercury Rev

A six-piece band from Buffalo, New York State, USA, Mercury Rev burst onto the music scene in 1991 to unanimous critical acclaim for their enterprising mix of Pink Floyd and Dinosaur Jr dynamics. However, the sounds produced by Jonathan Donahue (vocals, guitar, ex-Flaming Lips), David Fridmann (bass), Jimmy Chambers (drums), Sean 'Grasshopper' Mackowiak (guitar), Suzanne Thorpe (flute) and David Baker (vocals, guitar) remain difficult to classify. Their album, Yerself Is Steam, although practically ignored in their native country, created the sort of snowballing press acclaim in the UK that has rarely been accorded a debut. The Melody Maker's comment: 'Universally acclaimed by UK critics as the draughtsmen behind the first, and so far only, great rock long player of 1991', was among the more conservative of the plaudits, and with only a handful of gigs under their belt they were to be seen filling support slots for the likes of My Bloody Valentine and, incredibly, Bob Dylan. Disc jockey John Peel summed up their appeal by stating that: 'Unlike many bands, you can't tell what's in their record collection'. The press undoubtedly saw them as the next step forward from the previous wave of influential US guitar bands such as the Pixies, Sonic Youth and Dinosaur Jr. However, the ability to capitalize on this flying start rested, rather precariously, on their ability to remain together as a collective unit. A variety of stories filtered through concerning their self-destructive, almost psychotic behaviour. Already banned from one airline due to Donahue trying to remove Mackowiak's eye with a spoon, another minor crisis concerned Fridmann's disposal of the band's entire advance for their 'Carwash Hair' single on a holiday for his mother in Bermuda, without telling anyone. The band's writing and recording takes place in a similar, reckless manner: 'Basically, it's whoever shouts loudest, or who has the biggest punch'. However, even by Mercury Rev's standards David Baker offered an unsettled musical visage, often simply stepping off the stage during performances to fetch a drink, and enriching the surreal nature of their songs with lines like: 'Tonight I'll dig tunnels to your nightmare room' in 'Downs Are Feminine Balloons'. This was drawn from Boces, another complex journey through multitudinous musical motifs and styles, producing a sonic anomaly drawing on the traditions of left-field art rockers such as Wire, Pere Ubu and Suicide. Baker was eventually deselected when his behaviour became intolerable in February 1994, with the miscreant electing to set out on a solo career instead. Reduced to a quintet, See You On The Other Side provided no other evidence of a reduction in the band's talents, revealing instead a more focused, though no less exciting or adventurous, sound. The band were further reduced to Mackowiak and Donahue in June 1997 following their signing to V2 Records.

Mercury, Freddie

b. Frederick Bulsara, 5 September 1946, Zanzibar, Africa, d. 24 November 1991, London, England. Best known as the flamboyant lead singer of the multimillion selling UK group Queen, Mercury also branched out into extra-curricular musical activities. In 1973, while Queen were about to release their debut album, Mercury recorded a revival of the Beach Boys' 'I Can Hear Music' under the glam rock name Larry Lurex. It was not until late 1984 that he again attempted a solo work, this time with the UK Top 20 hit 'Love Kills', from the Giorgio Moroder soundtrack to the film Metropolis. A second solo single, 'I Was Born To Love You', reached the UK Top 20 early the next year. A solo album and some lowly-placed solo singles followed. In 1986, Mercury contributed some tracks to the cast recording of Dave Clark's musical Time. His greatest solo success, however, came in 1987, with a kitsch revival of the Platters' 'The Great Pretender', which reached the UK Top 5. Later that year, Mercury emphasized his immemorial love of opera by teaming up with Monserrat Caballe for the grandiloquent 'Barcelona', another Top 10 success. An album of the same title was also successful and, in late 1988, the operatic duo played a major show at the Avinguda De Maria Cristina Stadium in Barcelona. Mercury retained a low profile thereafter, and, following much speculation over his health, in November 1991 he finally admitted that he was suffering from AIDS. Within forty-eight hours, on 24 November, he died from bronchial pneumonia at his Knightsbridge home. A major concert was arranged in April 1992 at London's Wembley stadium. Known as the Freddy Mercury Aids Benefit, it attracted the largest ever worldwide viewing audience when televised live.

Mercy

Formed by Jack Sigler Jnr. (b. 1950, Tampa, Florida, USA) in the late 60s, Mercy enjoyed one best-selling single in 1969, the ballad 'Love (Can Make You Happy)'. Following several membership changes (Sigler the only remaining original), the band were heard by movie producer George Roberts. He used the group's future hit, penned by Sigler, in a film called Fireball Jungle, but the film was never released. The group managed to place the single with the small Sundi label and, with distribution via Warner Brothers, made it to number 2 on the national US charts. The group managed one further minor chart single and an album before they disbanded owing to lack of commercial success.

Mercy Dee

b. Mercy Dee Walton, 30 August 1915, Waco, Texas, USA, d. 2 December 1962, Murphy's, California, USA. From an early interest in the piano, stimulated by the many local players of the instrument, Mercy Dee developed an instantly recognizable blues style, with much use of trills and crashing treble chords, complemented by lyrics packed with powerful, memorable imagery. After moving to California in his 20s, he recorded in a variety of settings between 1949 and 1955, even including rock 'n' roll and pop, but it was in slow blues, such as the much-covered 'One Room Country Shack', and humorous numbers such as 'GI Fever' that he could be heard at his best. An album for Arhoolie recorded in the early 60s is particularly worthwhile, as it concentrated on those aspects of his music.

Mercyful Fate

This seminal black metal act was formed in Copenhagen, Denmark, in 1980 by vocalist King Diamond (b. Kim Bendix Petersen, 14 June 1956, Copenhagen, Denmark) and guitarist Hank Shermann with Michael Denner (guitar), Timi Grabber Hansen (bass) and Kim Ruzz (drums). The band's first vinyl appearance was with 'Black Funeral' on the Metallic Storm compilation, before A Corpse Without Soul (aka Nuns Have No Fun) saw the full debut of their heavy yet intricate guitar-based approach, and of King Diamond's unique vocal style, which ranged from deep bass growls to falsetto shrieks. Melissa, with a name taken from the human skull owned by Diamond and used as a stage prop, fulfilled Mercyful Fate's promise, and the band became one of the mainstays of the black metal underground with their occult lyricism and theatrical approach (though Diamond's facial make-up later prompted legal action from Kiss's Gene Simmons over alleged similarities to his 'God Of Thunder' persona). Don't Break The Oath was a more mature work, as the band reaped the benefits of extensive touring with a tighter sound. However, when they regrouped after further successful live work to record a third album, Shermann's determination to pursue a surprising AOR direction saw the band split, with Diamond going on to a solo career with Hansen and Denner in tow, while Shermann formed Fate. The posthumous release of In The Beginning, containing the debut mini-album plus BBC session tracks, seemed to be an epitaph for Mercyful Fate. However, the heavier approach of Shermann and Denner's Zoser Mez led to the re-formation of the old band, with Ruzz replaced by Morten Nielsen on In The Shadows, and by Snowy Shaw on tour (the latter taking up the position permanently).

The record recalled Don't Break The Oath's style, and also featured a guest appearance by Metallica's Lars Ulrich on 'Return Of The Vampire', a song resurrected from the band's second demo in 1982. Before 1994's Time, Hansen was replaced on bass by Sharlee D'Angelo, as the group toured the USA with Flotsam & Jetsam and Cathedral (live recordings from which were released as The Bell Witch EP). When Time did emerge, it provided unexpected diversions, with the Middle-Eastern flavour of 'The Mad Arab' and the serenity of 'Witch's Dance' rubbing shoulders with more traditional Mercyful Fate concerns ('Nightmare Be Thy Name', etc.).

Merger

Merger formed in the mid-70s, and the line-up comprised Barry Ford (lead vocals, guitar), Winston Bennett (vocals, guitar), Ivor Steadman (bass), Mike Osei (drums) and Tony Osei (keyboards). Their 1977 debut, Exiles In A Babylon, featured the keyboard skills of Mike Dorane, who had been involved in the UK reggae scene for a number of years. Initially, the set was released in West Africa, only surfacing in the UK following a remix. Bennett had previously recorded in 1968 as part of Errol Daniels And The Garments, and prior to Merger, recorded Seeds Of The Earth with Ivor Steadman for EMI Records. The name Merger described the fusion of reggae and other sounds, along with the fact that the band members were of Ghanaian and Jamaican parentage. The group played their first gig at Brixton's Cloud club, a concert that resulted in an ardent following. Their reputation spread and they attracted an abundance of media attention. The release of 'Ghetto Child' and a tribute to Steve Biko were popular releases. In 1978 Barry Ford elected to pursue a solo career and was replaced by Far I and Ras Damjuma. The group maintained a low profile until Bob Dylan chose them to play at his outdoor concert in Blackbushe Aerodrome. Following his departure from the group, Ford returned to Jamaica where he teamed up with Pablo Black, Bagga Walker and Freddie McGregor to record Cool Breeze Blowing, featuring the title track, 'JA People' and 'Curfew'. Ford was also reacquainted with Pam Nestor, and they recorded 'Hiding And Seeking No More', which was remixed in the UK by Dennis Bovell in 1979. In 1980 Merger's new line-up recorded Armageddon Time at the Rock City Studios in London. In 1996 Winston Bennett released Prisoner Of Love which contained two tracks recorded in 1980 with Merger.

b. London, England. Hardly the 'new rap messiah' that his second album proclaimed him to be, Merlin nevertheless cut an intriguing figure in the British rap scene of the 90s. He was still a teenager when the record was released, but he had already chalked up a fair reputation for his late 80s releases on Rhythm King (including being arrested for stealing cheques from Mute Records just before he made an appearance on Top Of The Pops. One of the most notable examples of his craft was the single, 'Born Free', with its prototype UK hip-hop lyrics.

Merman, Ethel

b. Ethel Agnes Zimmermann, 16 January 1909, Astoria, New York, USA, d. 15 February 1984, New York, USA. One of the most celebrated ladies of the Broadway musical stage, a dynamic entertainer, with a loud, brash, theatrical singing style, flawless diction, and extravagant manner, who usually played a gutsy lady with a heart of gold. She worked first as a secretary, then sang in nightclubs, eventually graduating to the best spots. Noticed by producer Vinton Freedley while singing at the Brooklyn Paramount, she was signed for George and Ira Gershwin's Broadway show Girl Crazy (1930), and was a great success, stopping the show with her version of 'I Got Rhythm', a song which became one of her life-long themes. She was equally successful in George White's Scandals (1931), in which she co-starred with Rudy Vallee, and sang 'My Song' and 'Life Is Just A Bowl Of Cherries'; and Take A Chance (1932), when her two big numbers were 'Eadie Was A Lady' and 'Rise 'N' Shine'. In 1934, Merman starred in Anything Goes, the first of five Cole Porter musical shows in which she was to appear. The score was top drawer Porter, full of song hits such as 'I Get A Kick Out Of You', 'All Through The Night', 'You're The Top' (one of the composer's renowned 'list' songs'), 'Anything Goes' and 'Blow, Gabriel, Blow'. Merman also appeared in the 1936 film version of the show with Bing Crosby. The other Porter productions in which she appeared were Red, Hot And Blue! (1936), co-starring Jimmy Durante and Bob Hope, with the songs, 'Down In The Depths (On The Ninetieth Floor)', 'It's De-Lovely' and 'Ridin' High'; DuBarry Was A Lady (1939), with 'But In The Morning, No!', 'Do I Love You?', 'Give Him The Oo-La-La', 'Katie Went To Haiti' and 'Friendship'; Panama Hattie (1940), featuring 'I've Still Got My Health', 'Let's Be Buddies', 'Make It Another Old-Fashioned, Please' and 'I'm Throwing A Ball Tonight'; and Something For The Boys (1943) with 'Hey, Good Lookin'', 'He's A Right Guy', 'Could It Be You' and 'The Leader Of A Big Time Band'. Merman's longest-running musical was Irving Berlin's Annie Get Your Gun (1946), which lasted for 1,147 performances. As the sharp-shooting Annie Oakley, she introduced such Berlin classics as 'They Say It's Wonderful', 'Doin' What Comes Naturally', 'I Got The Sun In The Morning', 'You Can't Get A Man With A Gun', and the song which was to become another of her anthems, 'There's No Business Like Show Business'. Merman's next Broadway show, Call Me Madam, again had an Irving Berlin score. This time, as Sally Adams, ambassador to the mythical country of Lichtenburg, she triumphed again with numbers such as 'Marrying For Love', 'You're Just In Love', 'The Best Thing For You', 'Can You Use Any Money Today?', and 'The Hostess With The Mostes' On The Ball'.

She also starred in the 1953 film version of the previous show, with George Sanders, Donald O'Connor, and Vera-Ellen. Often cited as the peak of Merman's career, Gypsy (1959), with a magnificent score by Jule Styne and Stephen Sondheim, saw her cast as the domineering mother of the legendary stripper Gypsy Rose Lee, and Merman gave the kind of performance for which she had never before been asked. Her songs included 'Some People', 'Small World', 'You'll Never Get Away From Me', 'Together', 'Rose's Turn', and her triumphant hymn, 'Everthing's Coming Up Roses'. Apart from a brief revival of Annie Get Your Gun (1966), and a spell as a replacement in Hello, Dolly!, (she had turned down the role when the show was originally cast), Gypsy was Merman's last Broadway musical appearance. Although the stage was her metier, she made several successful Hollywood films such as We're Not Dressing (1934), Kid Millions and Strike Me Pink (both 1935 with Eddie Cantor) Alexander's Ragtime Band (1938), with Tyrone Power, Alice Faye, and Don Ameche; and There's No Business Like Show Business (1954), in which she sco-tarred with Dan Dailey, Donald O'Connor and Marilyn Monroe.

There were also non-singing roles in comedy films such as It's A Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World (1963), The Art Of Love (1965) and Airplane! (1980). Merman appeared regularly on television from the 50s through to the 70s in specials and guest spots, merely because she was Ethel Merman, and also starred in cabaret. In 1953 she teamed up with another Broadway legend, Mary Martin, for the historic Ford 50th Anniversary Show, highlights of which were issued on a Decca album. On the same label was her Musical Autobiography (2-album set). Besides the many hits from her shows, her record successes included 'How Deep Is The Ocean', 'Move It Over', and four duets with Ray Bolger, 'Dearie', 'I Said My Pajamas (And Put On My Prayers)', 'If I Knew You Were Comin' I'd've Baked A Cake', and 'Once Upon A Nickel'. After a distinguished career lasting over 50 years, Merman's final major appearance was at a Carnegie Hall benefit concert in 1982. A year after her death in 1984, a biographical tribute show entitled Call Me Miss Birdseye: Ethel Merman - The Lady And Her Music, was presented at the Donmar Warehouse Theatre in London. In 1994 the US Post Service somewhat optimistically mounted a search for an 'Ethel Merman Soundalike' ('no lipsynching!') in conjunction with the release of the Legends of American Music stamps. The first prize was, appropriately enough, an appearance in the Broadway hit musical Crazy For You.

b. 1899, USA, d. 1973. A competent exponent of violin, saxophone and clarinet, Meroff's first professional engagements were in vaudeville. When he decided to form his own dance band in the mid-20s, he managed to recruit some of the top sidemen of the day. At various times these included Norman Hendrickson, Harold White, Gene Gory, Pete Ross, Bill Hughes, Hymie Milrod, Al de Vito, M. Clauberg, Phil Grossi, Wild Bill Davison, Joe Rullo, Joe Quartell, Lenny Cohen, Tony Ciccone, Arnold Pritikin, Al Nillson, George Physter, Bennie Metz, Roy Cole, Al King, Larry Powell, Elmer Eberhardt, Meyer Drumzinsky, Vernon Brown, Jack Marshall, Irving Barnett, Don Ellis, Bill Gollin, Marty Ross, Phil Stevens, Johnny Perrin, Danny Lynch, Al d'Artega, Fred Brown, 'Mouse' Powell, 'Pappy' Graham, Santo Pecora, Tommy Thomas, Carl Osborne, Rudy Bundy and 'Red' Pepper. Given its impetus by Meroff's engaging personality, the band concentrated on a highly skilled blend of jazz and dance band songs, the best known of which included 'What's The Use Of Cryin'?', 'Wherever You Go' and their theme song, 'Diane'. There was also a strong element of showmanship, with Merroff himself conducting the stage show. The group played predominantly in the Chicago vicinity, and were at their most prolific during the late 20s and early 30s, with releases on the Victor, OKeh and Columbia Records labels. There were also sporadic trips to New York for theatre and hotel engagements. By the advent of World War II, Meroff had retired the band to pursue other interests.

Merrell And The Exiles

Formed in Lancaster, California, USA, in 1963, Merrell And The Exiles were formed by Merrell Fankhauser (vocals, guitar), Mark Thompson (guitar), Larry Willey (bass) and Randy Wymer (drums). Their first two singles, 'Send Me Your Love' and 'Tomorrow's Girl', echoed the folk-rock style of the Searchers. Jeff Cotton (guitar), John Day (organ) and John French (drums) took over from the rest of the band and supported Fankhauser on 'Sorry For Yourself' (1965), which won the dance contest on Dick Clark's television programme American Bandstand. 'Can't We Get Along' (1966) was the Exiles' last single. Fankhauser then recorded a handful of tracks with various musicians which, when compiled with several Exiles' masters, were released without his consent as Fapardokly. He then formed a new group, Merrell Fankhauser And HMS Bounty with another refugee from the Impacts, Bill Dodd. Of the other former Exiles, both Wymer and Willey joined in Mu, while John French and Jeff Cotton achieved fame as members of Captain Beefheart And His Magic Band.

Merrick, David

b. David Margulois, 27 November 1911, St. Louis, Missouri, USA. One of the most colourful and controversial theatrical producers and impresarios in the post-World War II years, Merrick is said to believe that his life began on 4 November 1954, the night a musical called Fanny opened at New York's Majestic Theatre. After an early, insecure life as the son of a weak father and mentally disturbed mother, Merrick trained as a lawyer before moving into the world of theatre as an associate producer in the late 40s. His production of Fanny ran for 888 performances on Broadway, and was followed by a series of successful shows, including the musicals Jamaica, Destry Rides Again, Take Me Along, Vintage '60, Irma La Douce, Do Re Mi, Carnival, I Can Get It For You Wholesale, Stop The World - I Want To Get Off, 110 In The Shade, The Roar Of The Greasepaint - The Smell Of The Crowd, How Now, Dow Jones, The Happy Time, Sugar, Mack And Mabel and Very Good Eddie (1975 revival). Among his greatest triumphs were Gypsy (1959), Oliver!, Hello, Dolly! (1964), I Do! I Do! (1966), Promises, Promises (1968) and 42nd Street (1980). The latter ran for 3,486 performances, his most enduring Broadway production to date. Along the way, there were several failures, such as Oh, What A Lovely War! (1964), Foxy (1964) and Pickwick (1965). In addition, Breakfast At Tiffany's (1966) folded during previews, while Mata Hari (1967) and The Baker's Wife (1976) closed out of town. However, with his sheer determination and flair for publicity, Merrick managed to wring every ounce of possibility out of even the most ailing shows. One of his most famous stunts came in 1961 during the run of the disappointing Subways Are For Sleeping. A member of his staff arranged for seven members of the public, with the same names as the leading New York drama critics, to be quoted in newspaper advertisements for the show ('7 Out Of 7 Are Ecstatically Unanimous About Subways Are For Sleeping', ran the copy). When it was published, each of these 'namesakes' appeared opposite a rave quote that the Merrick organization had apparently culled from old reviews of some of Broadway's greatest hits. Such outrageous, but immensely profitable, behaviour came to a temporary halt in February 1983, when Merrick suffered a debilitating stroke that seriously impaired his powers of speech. After initially handing over the reins to others, in 1985 he regained control of his affairs, and has subsequently presented an all-black revival of Oh, Kay! (1990), and a stage adaptation of the popular movie State Fair (1996). The last of the great American showmen, throughout his career Merrick has been admired, feared, detested and respected - but never ignored. His several Tony Awards and nominations have included one for Hello, Dolly!, and special Tonys in 1961 and 1968 'in recognition of his fabulous production record'.

Merrill, Bob

b. Henry Robert Merrill Levan, 17 May 1920, Atlantic City, New Jersey, USA, d. 17 February 1998, Beverly Hills, California, USA. A popular songwriter for Tin Pan Alley, a screenwriter, and a distinguished composer, lyricist and librettist for the musical theatre. Merrill grew up in Philadelphia, and was educated at Temple University. Having enjoyed his first taste of the theatre when he took a temporary job at the Buck's County Playhouse, Merrill moved to New York in 1942, and performed as a comedian and mimic in nightclubs and vaudeville. While serving in the US Army during World War II, he wrote and produced troop shows, and subsequently moved to Hollywood to work as a scriptwriter for NBC Television and Columbia Pictures. He also spent some time as a dialogue coach and casting director, and acted in a few movies. In the late 40s, encouraged by the country-style comedienne Dorothy Shay, who asked him to write some songs for her, Merrill collaborated on 'Lover's Gold' (music: Morty Nevins), 'The Chicken Song' (with Terry Shand) and 'Fool's Paradise' (words and music: Merrill). In 1950, he had his first success with the lively 'If I Knew You Were Comin', I'd Have Baked A Cake' (Al Hoffman and Clem Watts), which was a hit in the USA for Eileen Barton, Georgia Gibbs, Benny Strong, Ethel Merman with Ray Bolger, and Art Mooney. Merrill teamed again with Hoffman on 'Where Will The Baby's Dimple Be?', but he provided his own words and music to Guy Mitchell novelty hits such as 'Sparrow In The Tree Top', 'My Truly, Truly Fair', 'Belle, Belle, My Liberty Belle', 'Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania', 'Feet Up (Pat Him On The Po-Po)', 'She Wears Red Feathers', 'Look At That Girl', 'Chicka Boom' and 'Cuff Of My Shirt'. Several other artists, both in the USA and UK, had chart successes with Merrill numbers, including the Caravelles ('You Don't Have To Be A Baby To Cry'), Lita Roza and Patti Page (('How Much Is That) Doggie In The Window?' - UK and US number 1), Rosemary Clooney ('Mambo Italiano'), Dickie Valentine ('All The Time And Everywhere'), Sarah Vaughan ('Make Yourself Comfortable'), Teresa Brewer ('Sweet Old Fashioned Girl'), Sammy Kaye And His Orchestra ('Walkin' To Missouri'), Arthur Godfrey, Mindy Carson ('Candy And Cake'), and more.

Progressing from pop songs to the musical theatre was difficult, and Merrill's first Broadway show, New Girl

In Town, began as a projected film. When MGM decided against his musical adaptation of Eugene O'Neill's play, Anna Christie, Merrill took it to the distinguished author and director, George Abbott. He wrote the book, and with Merrill's sprightly score ('Flings', 'If That Was Love', 'Yer My Friend Aintcha?', 'Did You Close Your Eyes?'), New Girl In Town opened on Broadway in May 1957. Producer David Merrick was more than impressed, and some two years later he was at the helm when Merrill and librettists Joseph Stein and Robert Russell musicalized another O'Neill play, Ah, Wilderness. Take Me Along (1959) had a charming, nostalgic score, including 'But Yours', 'Little Green Snake', 'We're Home' and 'Promise Me A Rose'. Like New Girl In Town, it ran for more than 400 performances, but Merrill's next show, Carnival (1961), did even better, residing in New York for 719 performances. Based on a Paul Gallico story, which was turned into the 1953 hit film Lili, starring Leslie Caron, Merrill and bookwriter Michael Stewart created a magical musical comedy containing a delightful variety of songs, such as 'Yes, My Heart', 'Her Face', 'Yum-Ticky-Tum-Tum', and the gently swaying 'Love Makes The World Go Round'. In 1964, Merrill contributed 'Elegance' and 'Motherhood March' to Jerry Herman's Carol Channing vehicle, Hello, Dolly!, before collaborating with composer Jule Styne on the score for the smash hit Funny Girl ('People', 'Don't Rain On My Parade', 'You Are Woman, I Am Man', 'The Music That Makes Me Dance'). Ironically, Funny Girl lost out to Hello, Dolly! in the Tony Awards, but the show elevated Barbra Streisand to stardom, and the cast album won Grammy awards for Merrill and Styne. Although the pair wrote the music and lyrics for the animated television special Mr. Magoo's Christmas Carol (1963) and a television musical starring Liza Minnelli, The Dangerous Christmas Of Red Riding Hood (1965), Merrill's later stage projects proved disappointing. Breakfast At Tiffany's (1966) closed during previews, Henry, Sweet Henry (1967) folded after only 80 performances, and Prettybelle (1971, with Styne) failed to reach Broadway. However, Sugar (1972, Styne), based on the highly successful Billy Wilder film Some Like It Hot, ran for 505 performances, and in a production that reverted to the title of the movie, became a short-lived showcase for the popular UK entertainer Tommy Steele in 1992. Completing the sad sequence, The Prince Of Grand Street (1978), starring Robert Preston, closed during its pre-Broadway try-out and Hannah ... 1939, in which Julie Wilson gave a thrilling performance as a dressmaker in Nazi-occupied Czechoslovakia, had a brief stay off-Broadway in 1990. Three years later Merrill teamed with Styne once more (under the pseudonym of Paul Stryker) to provide extra lyrics for The Red Shoes, which lasted for just three days. Failures these later shows certainly were, but there was always a song or two in each of them that bore the Merrill stamp of style and humour. In 1984, 37 selections from his prolific output were assembled in a four-character off-Broadway musical entitled We're Home. In between the forays to Broadway, Merrill continued to be associated with the film world, co-writing screenplays such as Mahogany (1975), starring Diana Ross, and W.C. Fields And Me (1976) with Rod Steiger. He also wrote the songs for The Wonderful World Of The Brothers Grimm (1962). Despite suffering from a chronic illness, Merrill was still working through the 90s until his death from 'self inflicted gunshot wounds while sitting in a car outside his Los Angeles home'.

Merrill, Helen

b. 21 June 1929, New York City, New York, USA. Merrill's early career found her singing in exalted bebop company. Among the major artists with whom she sang in the late 40s were Charlie Parker, Miles Davis and Bud Powell. She spent part of the 50s outside music, but continued to make a few records with notable figures such as Clifford Brown; by the end of the decade, was resident in Italy and a familiar figure at European festivals. In the early 60s, she returned to the USA but had difficulty in attracting the attention of either radio and television networks or the major record companies. She did make a handful of records backed by leading musicians such as Thad Jones, Ron Carter, Richard Davis, Elvin Jones and Jim Hall. By the late 60s, Merrill was again resident outside the USA, this time in Japan, where her talents were much appreciated. Back in the USA in the mid-70s, she was still largely overlooked but was periodically recorded, again with excellent jazz backing from the likes of Teddy Wilson, John Lewis and Pepper Adams. In November 1994, Merrill reappeared on the scene, promoting a new album and planning a UK and European tour for 1995. One of the most musical of singers, Merrill customarily explores the emotional depths of the lyrics of songs, imbuing them with great passion.

Merrily We Roll Along

Two of the musical theatre's current heavyweights went into the Broadway ring during the the 1981/2 season, and the result of the contest gave theatre-goers on both sides of the Atlantic a foretaste of the significant shift in the balance of power that was about to take place during the next 10 years. The English champion, Andrew Lloyd Webber with his Joseph And The Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat scored 747 performances, and the native New Yorker, Stephen Sondheim, with Merrily We Roll Along, only 16 performances. Prior to the latter show's debut at the Alvin Theatre on 16 November 1981, the smart money was on a Sondheim show that eschewed his usual brittle exposition of contemporary life, in favour of a more traditional style of entertainment - musical comedy - and that is what Sondheim claimed it was originally intended to be. George Furth's book was based on the 1934 play by George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart.

The story, which is told in flashback, tells of a successful composer, Franklin Shepard (as a young man - Jim Walton; aged 43 - Geoffrey Horne), a lyricist, Charles Kringas (Lonny Price), and a mutual friend of the pair, Mary Flynn (Ann Morrison). Shepard is the central character, and the details of his wasted life - the betrayal of his wife and friends in the pursuit of money and glory over a period of some 20 years - are revealed before the final scene, in which - because in this piece the end is the beginning - the friends are meeting in 1957 for the first time. Sondheim constructed the score in what he called 'modular blocks' - the release of one song would be the verse of another, and the chorus of that one could serve as the release of the next, and so on. Some of the songs, such as 'Opening Doors', 'The Hills Of Tomorrow', and 'Good Thing Going'. were based on the same tune - it was Sondheim at his most inventive, and, at least, the composer was nominated for a Tony Award. The rest of the numbers included 'Not A Day Goes By', 'Franklin Shepard Inc.', 'Bobby And Jackie And Jack', 'Like It Was', 'It's A Hit', 'Now You Know', 'Meet The Blob', and 'Merrily We Roll Along'.

Most aspects of the production came in for severe criticism: Eugene Lees's sparse sets, Larry Fuller's choreography, and a cast that was considered by many to be far too young and inexperienced. The celebrated partnership between Sondheim and director and producer Hal Prince came - perhaps temporarily to an end - with this production. As with most, if not all, Sondheim shows, this one continued to live on far beyond its two-weeks run in New York, via the excellent Original Cast album, and various provincial productions. One such, was mounted by the Leicester Haymarket Theatre in England, in 1992, the starting-off point for many fine original musicals and revivals. It starred Michael Cantwell, Maria Friedman, Evan Pappas, Gareth Snook, and Jacqueline Dankworth, the daughter of jazz musicians John Dankworth and Cleo Laine.

Merritt, Max, And The Meteors

Formed in New Zealand in 1956. Max Merritt was influenced by black R&B and soul records imported by American Naval personnel stationed in New Zealand, which subsequently meant the Meteors were foremost in presenting this new music to New Zealand audiences on album and via several hit singles. Outgrowing their local market, the band visited Australia in late 1964, but soon relocated permanently. They released five singles, none of which sold well, but the high standard of musicianship within the group made it a popular live act, often winning praise from fellow musicians. A road accident left Merritt with one eye and the drummer, Stewie Spears, was permanently injured, which proved a difficult setback for the band to overcome. The band had an Australian hit single with 'Western Union Man' in late 1969. The accompanying album also sold well and the band departed for the UK in October 1970. After management problems which produced a state of limbo, they managed to ensconce themselves in the pub rock scene. By 1975, the group had signed with Arista and gained success with the single 'Slipping Away', and two albums, A Little Easier and Out Of The Blue. Merritt spent much of 1978 in the USA, but despite a couple of more album releases, his career faded. Spears died in 1986, while Merritt retired to Los Angeles, where he found employment as a film set carpenter, although he still tours occasionally in Australia.

Merry Macs

This vocal group was formed in the 20s in Minneapolis, Minnesota, USA and consisted of the McMichael brothers, Ted (baritone), Judd (tenor) and Joe (tenor). In 1926 Eddie Dunsteder invited them on to his radio show in Minneapolis and called them the Mystery Trio. Later they toured the country as the Personality Boys after meeting band leader Joe Haymes. By 1930 Cheri McKay had been added to the trio to sing melody lines (the role which their mother had originally taken) and they became the Merry Macs. The group signed to Victor Records in 1932 and released 'The Little White Church On The Hill'. They also appeared at the Chicago Theatre and appeared on NBC Radio. McKay was replaced with with Helen Carroll and the group pressed on, headlining shows across the country with Glenn Miller and other orchestras and big bands. They also appeared alongside Jack Benny in the film Love Thy Neighbor. After signing a contract with Universal Studios in 1938 they also appeared with Abbott And Costello in Ride 'Em Cowboy and Bing Crosby in Mr. Music. By this time the group had moved to Decca

Records, and had had a national hit with 'Ta Ha Wa Nu Wa (Hawaiian War Chant)', which introduced their third female partner, Mary Lou Cook. After one further major success, 'The Hut Hut Song', she was replaced by Marjory Garland in 1941. Garland quickly proved herself the definitive female member of the group, remaining with them until their demise in 1964. (She later married Judd.) During the war years the Merry Macs made their allegiances known with the popular 'Praise The Lord And Pass The Ammunition' call to arms. They also enjoyed their biggest hit in 1944 with 'Mairzy Doats' which stayed at number 1 in the Billboard charts for five weeks. Joe McMichael died shortly after this, and was subsequently replaced first by Clive Erard and then more permanently by Dick Baldwin. Further success in the late 40s came with 'Sentimental Journey' and 'Laughing On The Outside', but by the end of the decade the group's commercial fortunes were declining. They continued to tour widely, with Vern Rowe taking over from Baldwin in 1954, while the group's contract moved from Decca to Capitol and finally Era Records. They retired in 1964, although a reunion concert took place in 1968 at the Hollywood Bowl. The name has been resurrected more permanently as a live act featuring various original members' children.

Merry Widow, The

A perfect example of the kind of Viennese operetta that was so popular in the early part of the 20th century before it was overtaken by the more contemporary shows of Jerome Kern and the other pioneers of musical comedy. With it's superb score by Franz Lehár, The Merry Widow was first offered to the public at the Theatre an der Wien in Vienna, on 30 December 1905, under the title of Die Lustige Witwe. The book, by Victor Leon and Leo Stein, was based on Henri Meilhac's play L'Attaché d'Ambassade. Eighteen months later, on 8 June 1907, when it was presented by George Edwardes at Daly's Theatre in London, the show had a new book by Basil Hood (who declined to be credited), and English lyrics by Adrian Ross. The classic story concerns the arrival in France of Sonia Sadoya (Lily Elsie), a wealthy widow from Marsovia, who is hunting for a husband. If she marries a Frenchman, her millions will be lost for ever to the impoverished principality, and Ambassador Baron Popoff (George Graves) will be out of a job. Prince Danilo (Joseph Coyne), a secretary to the legation, is instructed to make sure that a Franco-Marsovian union does not take place, preferably by marrying the lady himself. The joyous and memorable score contained several enduring favourites such as 'Maxim's', 'I Love You So' (also know as the 'Merry Widow Waltz'), 'Love In My Heart Awakening', 'Vilia', 'Women', 'Home', 'A Dutiful Wife', 'The Girls At Maxim's, and 'Silly, Silly Cavalier'. Enthusiastic audiences, with the ladies dressed in their 'Merry Widow' attire, flocked to the theatre for 778 performances - it was a tremendous success. The 1907 New York production, with Ethel Jackson, ran for a year, and was followed by several Broadway revivals through to the 40s. West End audiences, too, saw the show on many occasions, including 1958 (with June Bronhill), 1969 (with Lizbeth Webb), and 1985 (Helen Kuchareck). All the revivals to date have had revised books and scores. Many other professional and amateur productions are taking place constantly throughout the world, one of the most recent being that mounted by the Paper Mill Playhouse, New Jersey, USA, in 1991. Three film versions have been released: in 1925 (silent), in 1934 with Jeanette Macdonald and Maurice Chevalier, and a 1952 remake with Fernando Lamas and Lana Turner.

Merry-Go-Round

Formed in Hawthorne, California, USA, in 1966, the Merry-Go-Round were bit players in the Los Angeles pop scene at the same time groups such as the Doors and Buffalo Springfield were gaining national success. Original members Emitt Rhodes (keyboards/bass) and Gary Kato (lead guitar) were influenced by the harmonies and melodies of the Beatles. Completing the group with Bill Rinehart (guitar/bass) and Joel Larson (drums), they signed with A&M Records and recorded a single, 'Live', which was successful locally in southern California but barely gained notice in the rest of the US. A follow-up single, 'You're A Very Lovely Woman', and the group's only album, a self-titled effort also released in 1967, were ignored outside of LA. The group disbanded in 1969, and Rhodes embarked on a solo career, releasing four albums, before disappearing from the pop scene. Rhino Records issued a compilation of the group's issued and unissued recordings in 1985, and the Bangles recorded their 'Live' for their debut album.

Merryweather, Neil

Having made his recording debut with John Richardson and Robin Boers, bassist Merryweather achieved minor fame in 1969 with the release of Word Of Mouth. Although ostensibly a vehicle for his group, the set is better recalled for stellar contributions made by Steve Miller, Barry Goldberg and Charlie Musselwhite, each of whom shared the artist's apprenticeship on Chicago's thriving R&B and blues circuit. The latter two musicians also contributed to Ivar Avenue Reunion, before Merryweather formed a more permanent group around Lynn Carey (vocals), J.J. Velker (keyboards), Ed Roth (keyboards) and Coffi Hall (drums). Having completed Vacuum Cleaner, credited to 'Merryweather And Carey', the bassist and vocalist formed Mama Lion in 1972. The itinerant Merryweather also established two subsequent units, the Spacerangers and Eyes, but has been unable to secure commercial success.

Merseybeats

Originally called the Mavericks, this Liverpudlian quartet comprised Tony Crane (vocals/lead guitar), Billy Kinsley (vocals/bass), David Ellis (rhythm guitar) and Frank Sloan (drums). In 1962, long before the Beatles put Liverpool on the musical map, they rechristened themselves the Merseybeats. Early line-up changes saw Ellis and Sloan replaced by Aaron Williams and John Banks. By mid-1963, Beatlemania had engulfed the UK, and A&R representatives descended upon Liverpool in search of talent. The Merseybeats were scooped up by Fontana and initially signed by Brian Epstein, but left their new mentor within weeks, following an argument over image. Burt Bacharach and Hal David's 'It's Love That Really Counts' gave them a minor hit, but it was the relatively unknown songwriter Peter Lee Stirling (see Daniel Boone) who penned their biggest hit, 'I Think Of You'. Although essentially balladeers on single, the group's EPs had a grittier edge. The On Stage EP, with its use of monochrome photography, was extremely progressive in design terms, as it did not feature the band on the cover, while their debut album included a variety of old musical standards. Pop star pressures prompted founding member Kinsley to leave the group briefly, but he returned in time for their third major hit, 'Wishin' And Hopin''. Other members included Bob Garner, who was himself replaced by Johnny Gustafson from the Big Three. The eclipse of the Mersey Sound eventually took its toll on the group, although a change of management to Kit Lambert brought two more minor hits, 'I Love You, Yes I Do' and 'I Stand Accused'. In January 1966, the group split, paving the way for hit duo the Merseys. In later years, Tony Crane reactivated the group, which still performs regularly on the cabaret circuit.

Merseys

From the defunct Merseybeats, Tony Crane (vocals/lead guitar) and Billy Kinsley (vocals/bass) emerged as the Merseys. For their backing group, they employed Liverpool hopefuls, the Fruit Eating Bears. With manager Kit Lambert encouraging a fresh direction, the duo covered an old McCoys b-side, 'Sorrow', which climbed to number 4 in the UK charts. Lambert next invited Pete Townshend to compose a follow-up, 'So Sad About Us', but despite some good reviews, it failed to chart. Further attempts with 'Rhythm Of Love' and 'The Cat' brought no success and the duo reluctantly moved into cabaret, employing various additional musicians under their old name, the Merseybeats. Kinsley later re-emerged as a hit artist in the 70s, leading Liverpool Express. A small footnote was added to the Merseys' career when their first two singles were belatedly covered by David Bowie and the Jam, respectively.

Merton Parkas

One of several late 70s mod revivalists to make the UK charts, the Merton Parkas began life as the Sneakers in south Merton, London around 1975, playing old Motown classics. The line-up comprised brothers Mick (b. 11 September 1958; keyboards) and Danny Talbot (vocals), Neil Wurrell (bass) and Simon Smith (drums), and they chose their new name from Merton (the area of south London from which they came) and Parka (the ubiquitous item of mod attire). The Merton Parkas were great live favourites at the Bridgehouse in Canning Town, London, but were unable to appear on the Mods Mayday '79 live compilation because they were negotiating contracts with Beggars Banquet, after the label's first signing, the Lurkers, had recommended them. They were one of the first neo-mod bands to record, and their debut single, 'You Need Wheels', was a hit in August 1979. Unfortunately, the rather trite lyrics had the Mertons branded as a novelty act, and they were often unfairly dismissed as bandwagon jumpers. Subsequent singles such as 'Plastic Smile', 'Give It To Me Now' (produced by Dennis Bovell of Matumbi), and 'Put Me In The Picture' failed to match the success of their debut. Mick Talbot was meanwhile making his name as an in-demand keyboard player on the Jam's Setting Sons and an album by the Chords. The Mertons soon disbanded and Talbot went on to join Dexys Midnight Runners and the Bureau and appeared in the Style Council. Smith, meanwhile, joined the psychedelic revivalists Mood Six, and spent a while with the Times, before returning to the reformed Mood Six.

Mertz, Paul

b. Paul Madeira Mertz, 1 September 1904, Reading, Pennsylvania, USA. Mertz played piano in various local bands while a student and in 1922 he joined Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey's first band, the Wild Canaries. Later that year he played in Detroit while completing his studies at the city's university. For the greater part of the 20s Mertz worked with several of band contractor Jean Goldkette's orchestras, playing piano and also arranging. He also took part in many recording sessions including some with Bix Beiderbecke and Frank Trumbauer. He had a short spell with Fred Waring, during which he visited Europe. Although he occasionally played in and recorded with jazz groups in the 30s, his main activity in the decade was playing and composing in film studios in Hollywood. He worked successively for Paramount, Columbia and MGM, then continued his film work into the 60s as a freelance. A thoroughly skilled musician, Mertz's early interest in jazz was but a passing phase; his film studio work proving to be much more consistent and financially rewarding.

Mesner Brothers

Leo and Edward Mesner formed Philo Records in 1945 at Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood, California, USA, changing the label name to Aladdin the following year. The company had early sales with Helen Humes, Wynonie Harris and Lester Young, but enjoyed its biggest successes after signing Texan musicians Charles Brown and Johnny Moore ('Driftin' Blues'), Amos Milburn ('Chicken Shack Boogie') and Lightnin' Hopkins in 1945 and 1946. Aladdin continued to be one of the major west coast independents throughout the 40s and early 50s with recordings by Floyd Dixon, Gatemouth Brown, Pee Wee Crayton, Lloyd Glenn and Peppermint Harris (five more Texans), Louis Jordan, Lowell Fulson, Big Jay McNeely, Lynn Hope, and the Five Keys.These artists invariably benefitted from the instrumental and arrangemental expertise of Maxwell Davis. In the mid-50s, Aladdin's biggest sales came with the boy/girl duets of Shirley And Lee ('Let The Good Times Roll') and Gene And Eunice ('Ko Ko Mo'), but sales gradually decreased into the late 50s, despite the brief success of Thurston Harris in 1957, and the following year, the Mesners sold their label to Lew Chudd of Imperial Records.

Message From The Country - The Move

At the time that Roy Wood and Jeff Lynne were recording this album, most of their artistic energy was going into the creation of the Electric Light Orchestra. Wood's 'It Wasn't My Idea To Dance' has the same dissonance that characterized the first ELO album, and, with a little cello, could easily pass as a track from that record. The pop sensibility that shone through the Move's early work was still there, but the group was losing its artistic focus, although as a performing unit it was at its peak. When they set their sights on a specific goal, such as 'The Minister', with its 'Paperback Writer' feel, or the title track, with its Beach Boys a cappella coda, the results were magical.

b. Michael Messer, England. Alongside Bob Greenwood and Steve Phillips, Messer is the pre-eminent UK guitarist to incorporate the national steel guitar, as well as slide guitar, into his acoustic performances. He won the UK Acoustic Blues Artist of the Year award in 1991, sponsored by British Blues Connection, though this was as much an endorsement for his capacity for incorporating styles other than the blues into his playing. Musical ideas borrowed from Hawaiian slide guitar, reggae, jazz and King Sunny Ade's worldbeat sound all illuminate his playing. The latter style was particularly evident on the breakthrough album that won him his initial strong notices, Slidedance: 'If you look at what was happening in this country, and also what I was doing at that time, there's a big world music influence, which we were all very into - I was also, at that time, producing tracks with S.E. Rogie and with Ted Hawkins . . . I intentionally made the album so it wasn't a blues album.' The same description could equally apply to his 1993 collaboration with Terry Clarke and the Lubbock, Texas, guitarist Jesse Taylor, entitled Rhythm Oil. The tour that accompanied its release saw Messer experiment further with elements including house and reggae, with a version of Fred McDowell's 'Worried Life' offering an outstanding distillation of blues and contemporary music. He also tours regularly with his own band, featuring Ed Genis (rhythm guitar) and Andy Crowdy (stand up bass). Further evidence of his standing came when Newtone Strings launched a new brand of strings with Messer's name attached, specifically aimed at the national guitar.

Messiah

Ali Ghani and Mark Davies, from Hounslow, Middlesex, England and Barnet, Hertfordshire, England respectively, met while students at the University Of East Anglia. They represent the talent behind the Messiah name, which moved from the independent Kickin' Records to WEA in 1993. The major doubtless saw Messiah as accessible rave which they could market. Their debut album was completed with the aid of Def American's Rick Rubin, who saw the group as the perfect embodiment of dance with which to convert an American audience. Old habits died hard however, and he hooked them up with Ian Astbury of the Cult to produce one of their debut album's tracks. He had picked the band up from their previous American base, Moby's Instinct label. Their debut for WEA arrived with the aid of Precious Wilson's vocals, and included re-runs of their previous club favourites '20,000 Hardcore Members', 'Temple Of Dreams' (based on This Mortal Coil's 'Song To The Siren'), 'I Feel Love' and 'There Is No Law'. The middle two of that quartet had given the band Top 20 crossover hits too. In addition they unveiled the impressive 'Thunderdome', with remixes from Spicelab, Secret Knowledge and Gods Underwater.

- ALBUMS: Beyond Good And Evil (Kickin' 1991)★★★, 21st Century Jesus (WEA 1993)★★★.

Messiah Force

Formed in Jonquire, Canada, in 1984, the band consisted of Lynn Renaud (vocals), Bastien Deschênes (guitar), Jean Tremblay (guitar), Eric Parisé (bass) and Jean-Francois Boucher (drums). The band was essentially formed from the ashes of two local power metal bands, Exode and Frozen. Utilizing a sound that was reminiscent of early Warlock, the band released their debut, The Last Day, on the small independent Haissem Records label in 1987. Though a strong power metal release, the album went largely unnoticed, resulting in the band's demise soon after its release.

- ALBUMS: The Last Day (Haissem 1987)★★★.

b. USA. A graduate of New York's Institute Of Musical Arts, Messner was one of a family of five musical brothers, with his specialism spanning all the reed instruments. His hotel orientated dance band, formed in New York City, New York, USA, in 1936, included musicians Shorty Skipper, Charles Cerborra, Shanty Diamant, Huff Allen, George Ward, Will Cottrell, Paul Kuhl, Augie Gonzales, Dick Cornell, Al Dell, Charles Gallant, Bobby King and Russell Moss. The singers were Gladys Tell, James D'Arcy and Mindy Carson. They spent several years playing at the Hotel MacAlpin in New York, with radio appearances on the Spotlight Bands and Fitch Bandwagon shows. They recorded widely for Vocalion, Bluebird, Varsity, Decca and Brunswick Records, which hosted original material including 'Catching The 802 Local', 'Toy Piano Minuet', 'Toy Piano Jump' and their theme tune 'Can't We Be Friends?'. The band also appeared in a handful of Paramount films. When Messner entered the services during World War II he broke the orchestra up, and never again resumed work as a bandleader. His new career was as a writer and producer of jingles for television and radio.

Metal Box - PiL

Determined to dispel musical preconceptions, former Sex Pistols singer Johnny Rotten undertook a radical path with his next venture. On Metal Box he unleashed a torrent of vocal styles, alternately pleading, moaning or wailing over a sound drawn equally from Jamaican dub or German experimentalists Can. Bassist Jah Wobble provides the fluid skeleton with throbbing, sinewy lines and patterns, while Keith Levene adds instinctive flourishes on both guitar and keyboards. Impressionistic rather than defined, the material owes its strength to the quartet's determination to challenge and their disavowal of compromise.

Metal Church

Formed in Seattle, USA, in 1982, Metal Church initially comprised David Wayne (vocals), Kurt Vanderhoof (guitar), Craig Wells (guitar), Duke Erickson (bass) and Kirk Arrington (drums). Their first album was a phenomenal debut, brimming with energy and promise. The style was the then-evolving thrash metal sound, and Metal Church executed their own brand with precision. The Dark was a strong follow-up, but failed to surpass the debut, and Wayne left at this point to be replaced by Mike Howe for the recording of Blessing In Disguise, another commendable effort. Vanderhoof then retired from the band's ranks owing to his dislike of touring, and was replaced by John Marshall, previously guitar technician for Metallica. Metal Church have proved to be a consistently excellent band, but have failed to rise to the level of success suggested by their first album. Personnel changes and short tenures with their record companies have undoubtedly contributed to their underachievement.

- ALBUMS: Metal Church (Ground Zero 1985)★★★★, The Dark (Elektra 1987)★★★, Blessing In Disguise (Elektra 1989)★★★, The Human Factor (Epic 1991)★★, Hanging In The Balance (Blackheart 1994)★★.

Metal Machine Music - Lou Reed

One of rock's most controversial releases, Metal Music Machine was viewed as artistic suicide by most contemporary reviewers. Fierce electronic passages converge with wailing feedback in a cascade of noise echoing the avant garde compositions of Stockhausen, Xenakis and LaMonte Young. Its release followed a period of considerable commercial success - but to interpret determinism as mere self-indulgence is misleading. Reed's work from the Velvet Underground onwards invariably operated at the cutting edge and this departure, however radical, simply showed another facet of a performer who rejects compromise.

Metalheadz

Metalheadz rose to prominence in the early 90s as home to jungle's first global superstar - Goldie. He makes up the nucleus of Metalheadz in collaboration with Fabio and Grooverider, two DJs who made their name on the hardcore rave scene of the early 90s, and Ronnie Randall, the more elusive fourth member. Together they have fashioned Metalheadz into an all-conquering drum 'n' bass collective. Their Angel EP was one of the first records to invoke the 'intelligent techno' description in the mid-90s, before 'jungle' or 'junglist' had been coined to describe their employment of dubplates and frenetic breakbeats. While that effort was Goldie's own work, other releases under the Metalheadz banner come from disparate sources, such as 'Here Come The Drums' (by extended family member Doc Scott) and 'Predator' (by Photek collaborator Peshay). With Goldie's brief relationship with Björk dominating the headlines, Metalheadz adopted the Blue Note club in London's Hoxton Square as their new residency in 1995. This has subsequently become jungle's first home, with a fleet of celebrities including Tricky, Malcolm McLaren, recent drum 'n' bass acolyte David Bowie and former members of Duran Duran among those who have attended. The team has expanded to include female DJs Kemistry And Storm (who were responsible for first introducing Goldie to hardcore) and MC Cleveland Watkiss in addition to the core quartet. As well as the club, there is also a Metalheadz label, run on a day-to-day basis by Kemistry And Storm.

Metallica

The most consistently innovative metal band of the late 80s and early 90s was formed in 1981 in California, USA, by Lars Ulrich (b. 26 December 1963, Copenhagen, Denmark; drums) and James Alan Hetfield (b. 3 August 1963, USA; guitar, vocals) after each separately advertised for fellow musicians in the classified section of American publication The Recycler. They recorded their first demo, No Life Til' Leather, with Lloyd Grand (guitar), who was replaced in January 1982 by David Mustaine, whose relationship with Ulrich and Hetfield proved unsatisfactory. Jef Warner (guitar) and Ron McGovney (bass) each had a brief tenure with the group, and at the end of 1982 Clifford Lee Burton (b. 10 February 1962, USA, d. 27 September 1986; bass), formerly of Trauma, joined the band, playing his first live performance on 5 March 1983. Mustaine departed to form Megadeth and was replaced by Kirk Hammett (b. 18 November 1962, San Francisco, California, USA; guitar). Hammett, who came to the attention of Ulrich and Hetfield while playing with rock band Exodus, played his first concert with Metallica on 16 April 1983. The Ulrich, Hetfield, Burton and Hammett combination endured until disaster struck the band in the small hours of 27 September 1986, when Metallica's tour bus overturned in Sweden, killing Cliff Burton. During those four years, the group put thrash metal on the map with the aggression and exuberance of their debut, Kill 'Em All, the album sleeve of which bore the legend 'Bang that head that doesn't bang'. This served as a template for a whole new breed of metal, though the originators themselves were quick to dispense with their own rulebook. Touring with N.W.O.B.H.M. bands Raven and Venom followed, while Music For Nations signed them for European distribution. Although Ride The Lightning was not without distinction, notably on 'For Whom The Bell Tolls', it was Master Of Puppets that offered further evidence of Metallica's appetite for the epic. Their first album for Elektra in the USA (who had also re-released its predecessor), this was a taut, multifaceted collection that both raged and lamented with equal conviction. After the death of Burton, the band elected to continue, the remaining three members recruiting Jason Newsted (b. 4 March 1963; bass) of Flotsam And Jetsam. Newsted played his first concert with the band on 8 November 1986. The original partnership of Ulrich and Hetfield, however, remained responsible for Metallica's lyrics and musical direction. The new line-up's first recording together was The $5.98 EP - Garage Days Revisited - a collection of cover versions including material from Budgie, Diamond Head, Killing Joke and the Misfits, which also served as a neat summation of the group's influences to date. Sessions for ...And Justice For All initially began with Guns N'Roses producer Mike Clink at the helm, before the group opted to return to Johnny Zazula, a realtionship they had begun with Ride The Lightning. A long and densely constructed effort, this 1988 opus included an appropriately singular spectacular moment in 'One', also released as a single, while elsewhere the barrage of riffs somewhat obscured the usual Metallica artistry. Songs continued to deal with large themes - justice and retribution, insanity, war, religion and relationships, on 1991's Metallica. Compared to Kill 'Em All nearly a decade previously, however, the group had grown from iconoclastic chaos to thoughtful harmony, hallmarked by sudden and unexpected changes of mood and tempo. The MTV-friendly 'Enter Sandman' broke the band on a stadium level. Constant touring in the wake of the album ensued, along with a regular itinerary of awards ceremonies. There could surely be no more deserving recipients, Metallica having dragged mainstream metal, not so much kicking and screaming as whining and complaining, into a bright new dawn when artistic redundancy seemed inevitable. Metallica was certified as having sold nine million copies in the USA by June 1996, and one month later Load entered the US charts at number 1. The following year's Re-Load collected together more tracks recorded at the Load sessions, and featured 60s icon Marianne Faithful on the first single to be released from the album, 'The Memory Remains'.

Metallica - Metallica

For the band who helped change the traditional face of contemporary heavy metal, Metallica were never found wanting in innovation. Nevertheless, 1991's album of the same name appeared as a significant burst of ideas, surprising even their most ardent of fans. Songs were stripped down to comparatively palatable lengths and subtle orchestration was introduced, with vocalist James Hetfield dropping his infamous growl for a warm, accomplished vocal. 'Enter Sandman' and the lilting 'Nothing Else Matters' revealed both sides of their clever songwriting temperament, contributing to this unabashed masterstroke of sincerity and overwhelming musical confidence.

Metcalf, Louis

b. 28 February 1905, Webster Groves, Missouri, USA, d. 27 October 1981. Metcalf was playing trumpet professionally by his early teenage years and spent some five years with Charlie Creath. The 20s were Metcalf's finest decade. Based in New York, he worked and sometimes recorded with blues singers and a galaxy of important jazz artists, including Sidney Bechet, Duke Ellington, J.C. Higginbotham, James P. Johnson, Albert Nicholas, Luis Russell, Jelly Roll Morton and King Oliver. In the 30s and 40s, Metcalf sometimes moved away from New York, frequently visiting Canada as a bandleader. Although his career profile was now much lower he still played with leading figures, including Lester Young and Billie Holiday. He played on through the 50s and 60s, often working at clubs in New York; but Metcalf's later years were overshadowed by his earlier successes. A gifted, blues-orientated trumpeter, with a precisely-articulated style, Metcalf's was an original talent whose recorded work offers only tantalizing glimpses of a major jazz artist.

Meteors

The Meteors were the first UK group to combine punk's energy with raw 50s rockabilly and invent a new musical form — psychobilly. In the USA, the Cramps had discovered a similar formula, but theirs was less violent and more dramatic. Together, they influenced a whole movement and an accompanying youth culture during the 80s, which enabled the Meteors to record some 15 albums over 10 years. In the late 70s, P. Paul Fenech (singer, guitarist) and Nigel Lewis (double bass, vocals) were churning out rockabilly and rock 'n' roll standards in acts such as the Southern Boys and, as a duo, Rock Therapy. Around 1980, drummer Mark Robertson was recruited, coinciding with a name change to Raw Deal, and they appeared on Alligator Records' Home Grown Rockabilly compilation. After a name change to the Meteors, the band issued a debut EP, Meteor Madness, jammed with compulsive, raw rockabilly, with lyrics drawing inspiration from graveyards and vampiric legend, all performed in a crazed, headlong amphetamine rush to the end of the song. 'Radioactive Kid' followed suit, and In Heaven was issued on their own Lost Souls label. Around the same time, the Meteors recorded an EP featuring a cover version of the Electric Prunes' 'Get Me To The World On Time' under the guise of the Clapham South Escalators. Robertson left soon afterwards and was replaced by Woody, but after releasing demos, Lewis also departed to form the Tall Boys. Fenech was left to soldier on, bringing in electric bassist Mick White and Russell Jones for August 1982's 'Mutant Rock'. Another personnel change (Steve 'Ginger' Meadham joining on drums) preceded the Meteors' second album, Wreckin' Crew, early in 1983, featuring the previous single, a wild cover version of John Leyton's 'Johnny Remember Me'. That same year saw another departure, with White forming his own psychobilly act, the Guana Batz. His position was filled by Rick Ross for a national tour, captured on Live. Unfortunately, Ross left for the USA and in his place came Ian 'Spider' Cubitt, to record Stampede, 'I'm Just A Dog' and 'Fire, Fire'. Monkey's Breath, featuring new bassist Neville Hunt, surfaced in September 1985, alongside a cover version of Creedence Clearwater Revival's 'Bad Moon Rising'. After two more unofficial offerings (Live II and Live And Loud), the Meteors covered Jan And Dean's 'Surf City' and completed Sewertime Blues. Don't Touch The Bang Bang Fruit featured a version of the Stranglers' 'Go Buddy Go'. By this time, Spider's place had been filled by Toby 'Jug' Griffin and Austin H. Stones briefly deputized on bass. Lee Brown (ex-Pharaohs) took on a more permanent role on bass, in time for another punk cover version in the Ramones' 'Somebody Put Something In My Drink'. Hot on its heels came Only The Meteors Are Pure Psychobilly, featuring new recordings of old 'classics'. Newer material was included on Mutant Monkey And The Surfers From Zorch later that year, although 'Rawhide' proved to be another popular cover. Even more powerful was Undead, Unfriendly And Unstoppable, which benefited from new drummer Mark Howe. The release of 'Please Don't Touch' proved that, despite waves of imitators, the Meteors were still the most vibrant psychobilly band around. However, by the 90s the trail had finally run cold on the seemingly ever-resilient Meteors.

Meters

This fundamental quartet, Art Neville (b. Arthur Lanon Neville, 17 December 1937, New Orleans, Louisiana, USA; keyboards), Leo Nocentelli (guitar), George Porter (bass) and Joseph 'Zigaboo/Ziggy' Modeliste (drums), came together during informal sessions held in various New Orleans nightclubs. Initially known as Art Neville and the Neville Sounds, they were spotted by producers Allen Toussaint and Marshall Sehorn, who signed the unit to their Sansu label to work on sessions for the duo's other artists, including Lee Dorsey and Betty Harris. Redubbed the Meters, the group's first singles, 'Sophisticated Cissy' and 'Cissy Strut', reached the US R&B Top 10 in 1969. These tough instrumentals mixed the bare-boned approach of Booker T. And The MGs with the emergent funk of Sly Stone, a style consolidated on several further releases and the unit's three albums for the Josie label. This canvas was broadened on a move to Warner Brothers/Reprise in 1972, where a series of critically acclaimed albums, including Cabbage Alley and Rejuvenation, reinforced their distinctive, sinewy rhythms. Such expertise was also heard on many sessions, including those for Robert Palmer, Dr. John and Paul McCartney, while in 1975, the group supported the Rolling Stones on their North American tour. Cyril Neville (vocals, percussion) was added to the line-up at this time, but the Meters found it difficult to make further commercial progress. In 1976, Art and Cyril joined Charles and Aaron Neville on a project entitled the Wild Tchoupitoulas. Led by an uncle, George Landry (Big Chief Jolly), this was the first time the brothers had played together. When the Meters split the following year, the quartet embarked on a new career, firstly as the Neville Family Band, then as the Neville Brothers.

b. 12 August 1954, Kansas City, Missouri, USA. Although classed as a jazz guitarist, Metheny has bridged the gap between jazz and rock music in the same way that Miles Davis did in the late 60s and early 70s. Additionally, he has played a major part in the growth of jazz with the younger generation of the 80s. His first musical instrument was a French horn, and surprisingly he did not begin with the guitar until he was a teenager. His outstanding virtuosity soon had him teaching the instrument at the University Of Miami and the Berklee College Of Music in Boston. He joined Gary Burton in 1974, and throughout his three-album stay, he contributed some fluid Wes Montgomery-influenced guitar patterns. Manfred Eicher of ECM Records saw the potential and initiated a partnership which lasted for 10 superlative albums. He became, along with Keith Jarrett, ECM's biggest selling artist, and his albums regularly topped the jazz record charts. Metheny is one of the few artists to make regular appearances in the pop album charts; such is the accessibility of his music. Both Bright Size Life, featuring the late Jaco Pastorious and Watercolours, though excellent albums, still showed a man who was feeling his way. His own individualistic style matured with Pat Metheny Group in 1978.

Together with his musical partner (and arguably, his right arm), the brilliant keyboardist Lyle Mays, he initiated a rock group format that produced album after album of melodious jazz/rock. Following a major tour with Joni Mitchell and Pastorious (Shadows And Light), Metheny released New Chautauqua and demonstrated an amazing dexterity on 12-string guitar and, against the fashion of the times, made the US Top 50. He returned to the electric band format for American Garage, which contained his country-influenced '(Cross The) Heartland'. The double set 80/81 featured Michael Brecker, Jack DeJohnette, Charlie Haden and Dewey Redman, and was more of a typical jazz album, featuring in particular the moderately avant garde 'Two Folk Songs' The record still climbed the popular charts. During this time, Metheny constantly won jazz and guitarist polls. Mays' keyboards featured prominently in the group structure, and he received co-authorship credit for the suite As Falls Wichita, So Falls Wichita Falls. Metheny had by now become fascinated by the musical possibilities of the guitar synthesizer or synclavier. He used this to startling effect on Offramp, notably on the wonderfully contagious and arresting 'Are You Going With Me?'. The double set Travels showed a band at the peak of its powers, playing some familiar titles with a new freshness. The short piece 'Travels', stands as one of his finest compositions, the low-level recording offers such subtle emotion that it becomes joyously funereal. Rejoicing was a modern jazz album demonstrating his sensitive interpretations of music by Horace Silver and Ornette Coleman. First Circle maintained the standard and showed a greater leaning towards Latin-based music, still with Metheny's brilliant ear for melody; additionally the track 'If I Could' displayed the same sparse subtlety of Travels. In 1985, he composed the film score for The Falcon And The Snowman which led to him recording 'This Is Not America' with David Bowie. The resulting Top 40 US hit (number 12 in the UK), brought Metheny many new young admirers. The concert halls found audiences bedecked in striped rugby shirts, in the style of their new hero.

Ironically, at the same time, following a break with ECM, Metheny turned his back on possible rock stardom and produced his most perplexing work, Song X, with free-jazz exponent Ornette Coleman. Reactions were mixed in reviewing this difficult album - ultimately the general consensus was that it was brilliantly unlistenable. He returned to more familiar ground with Still Life (Talking) and Letter From Home, although both showed a greater move towards Latin melody and rhythm. In 1990, Reunion was released, a superb meeting with his former boss Gary Burton and a few months later together with Dave Holland and Roy Haynes he made Question And Answer. Additionally he was heavily featured, along with Herbie Hancock, on the excellent Jack DeJohnette album, Parallel Realities. He continued into the 90s with Secret Story, an album of breathtaking beauty. Although the album may have made jazz purists cringe it was a realisation of all Metheny's musical influences. His second live album The Road To You did not have the emotion of Travels. It was something to keep the fans quiet before he unleashed an exciting recording with John Scofield, both guitarists having been sharing the honours at the top of jazz polls for the past few years. Zero Tolerence For Silence can only be described as astonishing - for many this wall of sound guitar was a self-indulgent mess. After repeated play the music does not get any easier, but at least we can understand his motives more and appreciate what a bold move this thrash metal outing was. Metheny found himself reviewed in the Heavy Metal press for the first (and last) time. We Live Here was a return to familiar ground, and a familiar position at the top of the jazz charts. He has an extraordinary sense of melody and his work neither rambles nor becomes self-indulgent; much credit must also be given to the like-minded Lyle Mays, whose quiet presence at the side of the stage is the backbone for much of Metheny's music.

Method Of Destruction

Following his work in legendary New York hardcore act Stormtroopers Of Death, vocalist Billy Milano formed M.O.D. (as they are commonly known) with Tim McMurtrie (guitar), Ken Ballone (bass) and Keith Davis (drums). The quality of the groove-based hardcore on USA For MOD was overshadowed by controversy over apparently racist and near-fascist lyrics, although Milano later explained in an open letter to the press that his aim was to illustrate prejudice by writing from the bigot's perspective in the first person, thus stirring up truly negative reactions to these attitudes in the process. Milano subsequently noted that many of the most contentious lyrics were written by Anthrax's Scott Ian for the SOD. The subsequent tour, while successful, proved unhealthy for MOD, with McMurtrie breaking his leg and continuing in a wheelchair, while Ballone broke his arm, and the line-up split after the tour. Milano was then joined by guitarist Louie Svitek, bassist John Monte (who had toured in place of the injured Ballone) and drummer Tim Mallare for the lyrically lighter Surfin' MOD, where Milano's sense of humour shone through, and the new band moved towards a metal/hardcore crossover style. Gross Misconduct maintained the quality, although Milano peppered the lyric sheet with explanations as he once more tackled serious subject matter. However, personal problems enforced Milano's departure from the music scene, with Svitek and Monte going on to form Mindfunk. MOD were revived as a trio in 1992 after the SOD reunion, with Milano (adopting the bassist role as he had in his days with the Psychos), drummer Dave Chavarri and the returning McMurtrie on guitar for Rhythm Of Fear, sounding like the band had never been away. Despite a rather fluid line-up thereafter, Devolution showed that Milano - now rhythm guitarist, with Rob Moscheti on bass - was still producing strong and relevant hardcore to match the likes of Biohazard and Sick Of It All.

Metro

Although several important American producers made the trip to Poland to view this musical which debuted at the Teatr Dramatyzezny in Warsaw in January 1991, it was finally transferred to New York's Minskoff Theatre on 16 April 1992 by its original impresario, Wiktor Kubiak. Touted as a cross between Hair and A Chorus Line, the show had music composed by Janusz Stoklosa, who also provided the musical direction, as well as vocal and orchestral arrangements, and a score by Agata and Maryna Miklaszewska. Mary Bracken Phillips wrote the English lyrics, and collaborated on the English book with Janusz Jozefowicz, who handled the choreography and directed. Set in post-communism Eastern Europe, the story concerns two brothers, Philip (Olek Krupa) and Jan (Robert Janowski). Philip administers a state theatre which attempts to put on commercial productions, while Jan struggles with his conscience in his subway habitat. He is joined deep down below by several more similarly tortured performing souls who have failed to qualify for Philip's current musical production, Europe Without Borders. Among them is Anka (Katarzyna Groniec), a more than usually weird character, who writes intense poems and falls for Jan in a big way. Miffed by Philip's rejection of their talents, the Subway Players mount their own musical which attracts the attention of the press - and Philip - who offers to produce it at his theatre. The moment of truth has arrived: will these hippie types put aside their principles and sell out? Never fear, after a nominal period of soul-searching, of course they do. The score, which was nominated for a Tony Award, was a mishmash of contemporary pop, and bore the unmistakable influence of Andrew Lloyd Webber. It consisted of 'Metro', 'My Fairy Tale', 'But Not Me', 'Windows', 'Bluezwis', 'Love Duet', 'Tower Of Babel', 'Benjamin Franklin', 'Uciekali', 'Waiting', 'Pieniadze', 'Love Duet II', and 'Dreams Don't Die'. Much of the $3 million budget was obviously blown on high-tech effects, with lots of lasers, synthesizers, and a revolving platform that seemed to be in perpetual motion.

Actors' Equity, understandably concerned about the large cast of around 40 foreign actors jeopardizing US members' jobs, gave the show their blessing, with the proviso that Americans would take over after the initial 16-week run. They need not have worried - Metro collapsed after 24 previews and 13 performances.

b. Donovan Harris, *c.*1960, Western Kingston, Jamaica, West Indies. After leaving school he worked as a welder, following in the footsteps of many legendary reggae performers. In his leisure time he went to the local dances, and when given the opportunity to chat on the sound, the enthusiastic audience response inspired him to pursue a career as a DJ. He initially decided to call himself Peter Ranking, but discovered that another DJ used that name and had enjoyed a minor hit with 'Sukiyaki'. Harris was a resident DJ on the sound Metromedia and adopted the pseudonym Peter Metro. He recorded his debut outing, 'Jamaica Salute', and was soon found voicing a number of recordings for a variety of producers. An unusual characteristic of his recordings was his use of Spanish, which won him many fans in South America, and this is particularly notable on 'Water Jelly' and the introduction to 'Fisherman Connection'. Working with Yellowman and Fathead, his popularity increased following the release of 'Water Pumpee'. He also recorded a version of Michael Jackson's 'The Girl Is Mine' in combination with Yellowman, which became a big hit. Metro's success inspired his brother Squiddly Ranking to become resident DJ on the Gemini Sound System, where he frequently clashed with Yellowman. Always an innovative performer, Metro recorded 'Yardie And Cockney' in combination with a white English DJ, Dominic, and is acknowledged as the first multilingual toaster. The duo gave a respectable performance at the 10th Reggae Sunsplash festival, but the novelty was short-lived. Metro re-emerged as the veteran DJ on UB40's 1998 Dancehall compilation.

Metroplex

Juan Atkins' Detroit record label, which housed several of his greatest moments as Model 500 ('No UFO's', 'The Chase', 'Off To Battle', 'Interference'). In the 90s it has gone on to be operated under the aegis of Mike Banks' Submerge organisation.

Metropolis

Inspired by Fritz Lang's 1926 classic silent film of the same name, this lavish stage musical went on display at the Piccadilly Theatre in London on 8 March 1989. Native New Yorker Joe Brooks was the main creative force behind the project, and he composed the music, as well as collaborating with Dusty Hughes on the book and lyrics. Despite a few shifts in emphasis, the story, 'part sci-fi spectacle, part romance-thriller', stays close to the original movie, and is set around the year 2000. In a towering high-tech city populated by two classes, a vast underground machine centre full of workers supplies the idle rich on the surface with all their power. This carefully organized and terrifying system hits a snag when Steven (Graham Bickley), son of John Freeman, Master of the Metropolis, a Citizen Kane-type figure played by Brian Blessed, goes slumming deep down below and falls in love with revolutionary leader Maria (Judy Kuhn). Meanwhile, the ruthless Master is in possession of a robot clone of Maria called Futura, and is scheming to use her against the workers. In this kind of situation a happy ending is too much to expect, but by curtain time the nuclear winter, brought about by the serf uprising, is tempered with a certain feeling of optimism, with nature slowly coming back to life. In the middle of all this revolutionary symbolism and expressionism, was the scientist Warner (Jonathan Adams), and a cast which also included Paul Keown, Stifyn Parri, Lindsey Danvers, Colin Fay, Megan Kelly, Robert Fardell, and Lucy Dixon. However, the star of the piece was Ralph Koltai's spectacular set, an hydraulic masterpiece involving a vast conglomeration of stairways, pipes, and ramps, with circular, see-through elevators gliding silently up and down. This was enhanced by David Hersey's stunning lighting display, and a high-decibel, rock-flavoured score which featured '101.11', 'Hold Back The Night', 'The Machines Are Beautiful', 'He's Distant From Me Now', 'Elitists Dance', 'Children Of Metropolis', 'One More Morning', 'It's Only Love', 'Bring On The Night', 'You Are The Light', 'The Sun', 'There's A Girl Down Below', 'Futura', 'Nothing Really Matters', 'This Is My Time', 'Listen To Me', 'Learning Song', 'This City's On Fire', 'When Maria Wakes', 'Futura's Promise', 'Haven't You Finished With Me?', 'Let's Watch The World Go To The Devil', 'One Of These Nights', and 'Metropolis'. The imaginative choreography was by Tom Jobe, and the epic production was impressively staged by the prolific French director, Jérome Savary. Faced with critical reaction ranging from 'a triumph of visual style' to 'plumbed new depths', Metropolis could only manage a six-month run before closing early in September with the reported loss of its complete £2.5 million investment. Ironically, Lang's original movie nearly bankrupted UFA, Germany's largest film production company. In the early 90s there were several reports of US productions of Metropolis - the stage musical - at locations such as Chicago, the University of Texas at El Paso, East Peoria, Illinois, and Charlotte in North Carolina.

Metsers, Paul

b. 27 November 1945, Noordwijk, Holland. In 1952, Metsers emigrated to New Zealand and was influenced by the American folk music that was available on record during the 60s. He bought his first guitar in 1963, and soon started writing songs. Paul arrived in the UK in 1980, and spent almost two years touring round in a Volkswagen camper playing 'floor spots' in folk clubs to get himself noticed. He was rewarded with club and festival bookings the length and breadth of the country. The environment and 'green issues' have always figured largely in his songwriting, even before it became fashionable, and his first anti-pollution song, 'Now Is The Time', was written in 1969. By the time that Caution To The Wind was available, Metsers, was already established as an artist and performer of note. In The Hurricane's Eye contained the excellent 'Peace Must Come', and 'River Song'. The Paul Metsers Songbook, published in 1986, contained many of the songs from Paul's first four albums, but only one that would appear on Fifth Quarter. He was able to combine a busy touring schedule with campaigning for environmental pressure groups, but in November 1989, he decided to devote more time to his family. Now living in Cumbria, and working as a joiner as well as keeping bees, Metsers still performs occasionally.

Mexican Hayride

Master showman Mike Todd was renowned for his spectacular productions, and this show, one of the most lavish and successful of the World War II period, was certainly no exception. It opened at the Winter Garden Theatre in New York on 28 January 1944, and was still around well over a year later. The book, by Herbert and Dorothy Fields, follows Joe Bascom (Bobby Clark), an ex-numbers racketeer from the USA who is on the run in Mexico from the police - and various ladies - through a series of hilarious adventures and disguises. Cole Porter's Latin-styled score was full of good things such as 'I Love You', which was sung in the show by Wilbur Evans, and later became a US number 1 record for Bing Crosby. The other lively and attractive numbers included 'Sing To Me, Guitar', 'Abracadabra', 'Carlotta', 'There Must Be Someone For Me', 'Girls', and 'Count Your Blessings'. Bobby Clark was the man they all came to see, and he was at the top of his form. The veteran comedian had spent around 17 years in vaudeville in partnership with Paul McCullough before he broke through on Broadway in 1922. June Havoc, sister of the legendary Gypsy Rose Lee, was also in the cast of Mexican Hayride, along with George Givot, Luba Malina, Corinna Mura, Edith Meiser, Bill Callahan, Paul Haakon, and Candy Jones. The 1948 film version starred Abbott And Costello, but Porter's songs were dropped so the film was not classed as a musical.

b. Rudolph Grant, Plaisance, Guyana. Grant and his family settled in the UK in 1967. Grant made his debut in 1969 as Little Brother Grant for the release of 'Let's Do It Tonight'. His brother Eddy Grant began performing in the Equals, who had a number of hits in the late 60s. Rudy, recording as the Mexicano, began his career as a DJ with 'Gorilla In Manilla' and 'Cut Throat', a tale of the Mexicano's quest to find I. Roy and Prince Jazzbo so that he could spit in their eyes. While Mexicano pursued his career in recording, Eddy Grant used the royalties from his time with the Equals to set up his own Coach House Recording Studio, working with various groups including the Pioneers. Mexicano's career surged when in 1977 at the Coach House he recorded a tribute to the popular television series Starsky And Hutch, entitled 'Move Up Starsky', a DJ version of Bob Marley's 'I'm Still Waiting'. The single topped the UK reggae chart and inspired a response from the modestly titled Superstar, 'Move Up Hutch', which failed to match the success of the original. Mexicano's hit was followed by 'Lover's Conversation', which did not enjoy the success of its predecessor. He voiced further Pioneers tracks (most significantly 'Harry The Fool', 'Rock It' and Lonely Street') with a number of notable reggae celebrities including Sidney Crooks, Danny Ray, Clement Bushay and Jackie Edwards. In 1980 Mexicano was the featured DJ on Jackie Robinson's interpretation of 'Jamaican Child' with the Lloyd Charmers-produced 'Better Love Next Time'. By 1981 Mexicano's career changed direction when he decided to sing as Rudy Grant. He recorded a version of John Lennon's 'Woman' and Stevie Wonder's 'Lately' for Ensign Records, the latter of which entered the UK pop chart. The success of the single led to a contract with Stiff Records, who released 'Trial By Television', which failed to generate interest within the reggae community. In 1983, still courting the major labels, he recorded 'Everyday People' for RAK Records.

b. 1 January 1884, Boston, Massachusetts, USA, d. 28 August 1959, New York, USA. A prolific composer of popular songs from 1909 to the late 40s, Meyer was a self-taught pianist who worked in department stores in Boston and New York before getting a job as a song plugger with a firm of music publishers. He began to have his songs published in 1909, and these included 'I'm Awfully Glad I Met You' and 'You Taught Me How To Love You (Now Teach Me To Forget)' (with Jack Drislane and Alfred Bryan). Meyer composed several other songs with Bryan, including 'I've Got Your Number', 'Bring Back My Golden Dreams', 'Beautiful Anna Bell Lee' and 'Her Beaus Are Only Rainbows'. Several of his numbers were also used in early talkies such as Broadway Babes and Footlights And Fools, starring Colleen Moore. He also contributed songs to the 1916 Broadway musical Robinson Crusoe Jnr. ('Where Did Robinson Crusoe Go With Friday On Saturday Night?') and the 1924 all-black revue Dixie To Broadway (1924) ('Mandy, Make Up Your Mind' and 'I'm A Little Blackbird Looking For A Bluebird'). His 'In The Land Of Beginning Again' (lyric by Grant Clarke), written in 1919, was used in the popular Bing Crosby movie The Bells Of St Mary's (1945). Meyer's other songs included 'For Me And My Gal' (with Edgar Leslie and Ray Goetz), 'Everything Is Peaches Down In Georgia' (with Grant Clarke and Milton Ager), 'My Song Of The Nile', 'Tuck Me To Sleep In My Old 'Tucky Home', 'I Believe In Miracles', 'There Are Such Things', 'If He Can Fight Like He Can Love, Good Night Germany', 'I'm Sure Of Everything But You', 'I'm Growing Fonder Of You', 'If I Only Had A Match' and 'In A Little Book Shop'. In 1952 his 'Dixie Dreams', written with Arthur Johnston, Grant Clarke and Roy Turk, was included in Somebody Loves Me, the bio-pic of vaudeville headliners Blossom Seeley and Benny Fields, which starred Betty Hutton. Meyer's other collaborators included Sam M. Lewis and Joe Young. Together with two more contemporaries, Edgar Leslie and Billy Rose, Meyer formed the Songwriters' Protective Association in 1931.

Meyer, Joseph

b. 12 March 1894, Modesto, California, USA, d. 22 June 1987, New York, USA. A composer of popular songs, mainly for films and the stage, from the early 20s through the 40s, Meyer studied the violin in Paris and worked as a cafe violinist when he returned to the USA in 1908. After military service in World War I, he spent some time in the shipping business before taking up songwriting. In 1922, with Harry Ruby, he wrote 'My Honey's Lovin' Arms', which became a hit for Benny Goodman, Isham Jones and the California Ramblers, and was successfully revived on Barbra Streisand's debut album in 1963. During the 20s and 30s, Meyer composed the songs for several stage shows, including Battling Buttler ('You're So Sweet' and 'As We Leave The Years Behind') and Big Boy (starring Al Jolson singing 'California, Here I Come'). Another song from Big Boy, 'If You Knew Susie', was later associated with Eddie Cantor. Meyer also contributed to Gay Paree ('Bamboo Babies'), Andre Charlote's Revue Of 1925 ('A Cup Of Coffee, A Sandwich, And You'), Sweetheart Time ('Who Loves You As I Do?'), Just Fancy ('You Came Along'), Here's Howe ('Crazy Rhythm' and 'Imagination'), Lady Fingers ('There's Something In That', 'An Open Book' and 'I Love You More Then Yesterday'), Wake Up And Dream, Jonica, Shoot The Works ('Chirp, Chirp'), the Ziegfeld Follies Of 1934 and New Faces Of 1936 ('It's High Time I Got The Low-Down On You'). His film songs included 'I Love You, I Hate You' (Dancing Sweeties), 'Can It Be Possible?' (The Life Of The Party), 'Oh, I Didn't Know', 'It's An Old Southern Custom', 'It's Time To Say Goodnight', 'I Got Shoes, You Got Shoesies' and 'According To The Moonlight' (George White's 1935 Scandals). His other popular numbers included 'Clap Hands, Here Comes Charley' (the signature tune of pianist, Charlie Kunz), 'Sweet So And So', 'Just A Little Closer', 'How Long Will It Last?' (used in the 1931 Joan Crawford-Clark Gable drama Possessed), 'Isn't It Heavenly?', 'I Wish I Were Twins', 'And Then They Called It Love', 'Hurry Home', 'Love Lies', 'Let's Give Love A Chance', 'Passe', 'But I Did', 'Fancy Our Meeting', 'I've Got A Heart Filled With Love', 'There's No Fool Like An Old Fool', 'Idle Gossip' and 'Watching The Clock'. His collaborators included Billy Moll, Billy Rose, Al Dubin, Jack Yellen, Cliff Friend, Buddy De Sylva, Herb Magidson, Al Jolson, Phil Charig, Irving Caesar, Carl Sigman, Frank Loesser, Eddie De Lange, and Douglas Furber. Meyer died after a long illness at the age of 93.

Meyers, Augie

b. 1941, San Antonio, Texas, USA. Meyers is best known as the organist in the Sir Douglas Quintet on their 60s hits, including the classics 'She's About A Mover' and 'Mendocino'. He has recorded on his own, and more importantly, perhaps, has influenced the keyboard players in groups such as Elvis Costello's Attractions and Joe 'King' Carrasco's Crowns. Meyers, who also plays accordion, first appeared on record in 1958, with a group called Danny Ezba And The Goldens. In 1964, producer Huey P. Meaux was assembling a Texan rock group to combat the British Invasion and teamed Meyers with San Antonio singer/songwriter/guitarist Doug Sahm. The Sir Douglas Quintet disbanded in 1967, when Sahm moved to San Francisco and Meyers formed Lord August and the Visions Of Lite. He then joined Sahm in San Francisco and the Quintet was reborn, only to break up again in 1971. Meyers began releasing a string of solo albums that year. In 1990, he teamed up with Sahm and fellow Texans Flaco Jimenez and Freddy Fender to form the Texas Tornados.

Mezzoforte

Until the arrival of the Sugarcubes, jazz-fusion band Mezzoforte were Iceland's best-known musical export. The group was formed in 1977 at a Rekjavik high school by Fridrik Karlsson (guitar), Eythor Gunnarsson (keyboards), Johann Asmundsson (bass), Gunnlaugur Briem (drums) and Kristin Svararsson (saxophone). They signed a recording contract with local label Steinar and the second album contained the exuberant 'Garden Party' which was a Top 20 hit in the UK in 1983. The tune was covered in the USA by Herb Alpert who performed it at half-speed, reportedly because he had learned the piece from a 45 rpm single accidentally played at 33. The follow-up 'Rockall' was only a minor hit but it was adopted as a signature tune by radio chart shows in The Netherlands and Britain. For a brief period, the group was based in London and in the mid-80s Mezzoforte played the European jazz festival circuit with vocalists Chris Cameron and Noel McCalla, formerly with Moon and Mike Rutherford's group. In 1990, Karlsson formed a jazz/funk band Point Blank featuring singer Ellen Kristjansdottor and members of Mezzoforte.

Mezzrow, Mezz

b. Milton Mesirow, 9 November 1899, Chicago, Illinois, USA, d. 5 August 1972. After playing club dates in and around his home town during the 20s, clarinettist Mezzrow moved to New York where he became a popular figure, partly owing to his other career as a supplier of marijuana. In the 30s he recorded with Sidney Bechet and Tommy Ladnier on the famous sessions organized by French critic Hugues Panassie, and in the 40s formed his own King Jazz record label to record Bechet and other important jazz artists. In the 50s, he moved to France, touring from a Paris base with visiting musicians (who included Lionel Hampton, Lee Collins and Zutty Singleton), recording and enjoying a level of adulation he had never achieved in his own country. A vehement anti-segregationist, Mezzrow wholly identified with black music and musicians, even to the extent of occasionally 'passing' for black in order to play with his idols. Much written about, critically by Eddie Condon and hyperbolically by himself, Mezzrow's image suffered and he was often dismissed by jazz commentators. In fact, despite the often outrageous claims he made in his racily extravagant autobiography, Mezzrow did much to foster jazz. In his early years in Chicago he encouraged many young musicians, even if later he claimed to have taught them how to play. He was tireless in setting up record dates and he boldly formed multi-racial bands during a period when such groups were rarely seen or heard. Mezzrow's clarinet style was earthy and at times elementary, but among the many records he made are flashes of a genuine feeling for the blues. His autobiography is witty, anecdotal and a classic of its kind.

This folk group evolved out of the thriving coffeehouse circuit prevailing in Honolulu, Hawaii, in the early 60s. Douglas Farthing Hatelid, better-known as Chip Douglas (vocals/banjo/bass), was a member of the Wilcox Three, an act closely modelled on the Kingston Trio. Indeed, when Dave Guard left the Kingston Trio, Douglas was a possible replacement. Guard then formed the Whiskeyhill Singers, which included vocalist Cyrus Faryar. In the meantime Douglas formed a duo with Stan White (vocals), which in turn became the Lexington Three with the arrival of Henry 'Tad' Diltz (vocals/banjo). In 1962, following the break-up of the Whiskeyhill Singers, Faryar joined the trio which became firstly the Lexington Four and then the Modern Folk Quartet. The group moved to Los Angeles in spring 1963, and played a residency at the Troubador club. White left the band following an argument with manager Herbie Cohen and was replaced by Jerry Yester, formerly of the Inn Group and New Christy Minstrels. The Modern Folk Quartet showcases their vigorous, close harmonies and contains their own songs as well as material written by Dino Valenti, John Stewart and Bob Gibson. The group abandoned their traditional sound upon hearing the Beatles and their November 1964 single 'The Love Of A Clown'/'If All You Think', both Yester compositions, pre-dates the Byrds in its blend of folk music, harmonies and British Beat. Their 1965 single, 'Every Minute Of The Day', was followed by them working with producer Phil Spector. One track with Spector, 'This Could Be The Night', was completed but the finished master was shelved for 20 years. Individual MFQ members also assisted on sessions for the Ronettes and Righteous Brothers before the group, known now as the Modern Folk Quintet following the addition of drummer Eddie Hoh, resurfaced on Lou Adler's Dunhill label. Two more singles, 'Night Time Girl' and 'I Had A Dream Last Night', were released before the MFQ went their separate ways in 1967. Douglas briefly joined Gene Clark Group and the Turtles before finding fame as a producer, notably with the Monkees. Yester went solo before joining the Lovin' Spoonful. He then worked with his wife, Judy Henske, and produced and arranged for Tim Buckley and Tom Waits. Faryar undertook session work before completing two exceptional singer-songwriter albums while Diltz found fame as a photographer. The members re-formed in 1976 but outside commitments soon brought this to an end. In 1984 they re-formed again for Moonlight Serenade, a collection of standards issued on John Stewart's Homecoming label. Jerry's brother, Jim Yester, formerly of the Association replaced Diltz for live appearances. A single taken from Bamboo Saloon, 'Sister Golden Hair', reached the Japanese chart. The group still remain active in Hawaii.

'Mother, Father, Sister, Brother' or MFSB (and there was a less flattering alternative), was the house band employed by producers Gamble And Huff. Jesse James, Bobby Martin, Norman Harris, Ronnie Baker, Earl Young, Roland Chambers and Karl Chambers came to prominence as the uncredited performers on 'The Horse', a hit for Cliff Nobles And Co. in 1968. As the James Boys, the septet replicated that hit with a cash-in release, 'The Mule', and the unit also recorded under other names, including the Music Makers and Family. It was as the instrumental muscle behind the Philadelphia International stable and artists such as the O'Jays and Harold Melvin And The Blue Notes that the group garnered its reputation. 'TSOP (The Sound Of Philadelphia)', the theme from television's Soul Train show, was a million-selling single in 1974, but later releases failed to match its exuberance and purpose. Undeniably rhythmic and undoubtedly competent, MFSB nonetheless lacked the focal point that the Three Degrees' voices provided on those early successes.

MGM Records

Founded in Hollywood, California in 1946, the label was initially viewed as an outlet for soundtracks derived from the parent Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film company. Its roster was later expanded to include black ballad singers Billy Eckstine and Ivory Joe Hunter, as well as country star Hank Williams. The label was noticeably reticent about embracing rock 'n' roll, but in 1958, scored a major success with Conway Twitty's 'It's Only Make Believe'. Marvin Rainwater and Jimmy Jones were briefly in the spotlight, but MGM enjoyed consistent chart placings with releases by Connie Francis. Between 1958 and 1963, this highly-popular singer scored 11 million-selling singles, including 'Lipstick On Your Collar' and 'Mama'. MGM secured brief success with Sam The Sham And The Pharaohs, whose 'Wooly Bully' became a staple part of mid-60s' groups' repertoires, and the label also enjoyed a fruitful relationship with English producer Mickie Most during the 'British Invasion', when proteges Herman's Hermits and the Animals secured several hit singles. The latter group's lead singer, Eric Burdon, remained with the label during his transformation from pop singer to counter-culture proselytizer, while a Verve subsidiary was responsible for 'progressive' signings, such as the Velvet Underground and Mothers Of Invention. A further diminution, Verve/Folkways, drew its initial releases from the Folkways roster, including such respected acts as Dave Van Ronk and the New Lost City Ramblers. Later renamed Verve/Forecast, this particular endeavour launched the Blues Project, Tim Hardin, Richie Havens and Laura Nyro. MGM itself attempted to gain a foothold in the underground movement with the notorious 'Boss Town' hype when, in 1968, they signed several undistinguished groups from the Boston area, including the Ultimate Spinach, the Beacon Street Union and Orpheus, in an attempt to create a 'second San Francisco'. The result was a commercial and financial disaster, and, having lost $4 million on the project, MGM invited entrepreneur Mike Curb to take control of the record company. Most of the staff were fired, 'drug-oriented' acts were dropped, but such draconian measures failed to reverse now-ailing fortunes. MGM later ceased recording new acts and while its back catalogue was absorbed by Polydor, the rights to its extensive film soundtrack library were later secured by EMI.

Miami Showband

Formed in Eire during 1961, the Miami comprised Jimmy Harte (vocals), Murty Quinn (trombone), Clem Quinn (lead guitar), Martin Phelan (saxophone), Tommy O' Rourke (trumpet), Denis Murray (bass guitar) and Tony Bogan (drums). After a year on the road, Harte emigrated to America and was replaced by Dickie Rock. It was at that point that the Miami scaled the Irish pop charts, with a string of number 1 hits courtesy of Dickie Rock's velvet tenor. Songs such as 'There's Always Me', 'From The Candy Store On The Corner' and 'Every Step Of The Way' were Rock classics in Eire. In addition to Rock's vocal contributions, however, other members of the Miami were featured vocalists. Clem Quinn followed the Royal Showband's 'hucklebuck' craze by issuing 'Buck's Polka', which reached Eire's Top 10. Murty Quinn achieved a similar chart placing with 'One Kiss For Old Time's Sake' early the following year. A disagreement with Rock over money prompted Phelan, O'Rourke and the Quinns to form the offshoot Sands in 1967. A reformed Miami stayed with Rock until 1972, when he elected to continue as a soloist. Thereafter, vocalist Fran O'Toole assumed centre stage, and the band continued to enjoy occasional hits during the 70s, such as 'Clap Hands Stamp Your Feet'. In the early hours of 31 July 1975, the Miami were returning from a gig in Banbridge, when they were flagged down by several members of the Ulster Volunteer Force. A bomb was then planted in their van which unexpectedly exploded. The hostage musicians attempted to flee and were callously shot in the back by their captives. Fran O'Toole, Des Lee (Desmond McAlea) and Tony Geraghty were killed, while Stephen Travers was seriously injured. The appalling murders did irreparable damage to the showband scene in the north of Ireland, tolling the death knell for an era of musical innocence and non-sectarianism.

Mice

Before founding Mice, Julianne Regan (b. Coventry, England) had made her name with 80s neo-gothic group All About Eve, a moderately successful outfit she formed after furtive musical beginnings as a part-time member of Gene Loves Jezebel and as a writer for ZigZag magazine. After All About Eve failed to yield anything beyond cult status, she spent 'two full years on the dole, doing shit piecework (cleaning studios and transcribing market research questionnaires) and writing songs'. Eventually she linked up with guitarist Bernard Butler, but their attempts to record an album together ended in acrimony. By 1995 she had regrouped and pieced together a new group consisting of her brother-in-law and co-songwriter Tim McTighe (bass) and Christian Hayes (guitar, ex-Levitation), along with three former All About Eve colleagues, Mark Price (drums), Andy Cousin (bass) and Marty Willson-Piper (guitar, ex-Church). However, she was keen to stress the differences between the neo-folk of All About Eve and her present, more guitar pop-orientated ensemble. The group found immediate independent chart success with their first three singles, 'Mat's Prozac' (November 1995), 'The Milkman' (April 1996) and 'Dear Sir' (July 1996), before embarking on sessions for their debut album, ... Because I Can. Recorded over a 12 month period and featuring Gary Stout as engineer, it included a free, limited edition CD featuring Radio 1 session versions of the group's three singles and their live favourite, 'Blue Sonic Boy'.

Michael, George

b. Georgios (Yorgos) Kyriacos Panayiotou, 25 June 1963, Finchley, London, England. Michael first served his pop apprenticeship in the million-selling duo Wham!, the most commercially successful, teen-orientated group of the 80s. His solo career was foreshadowed in 1984's 'Careless Whisper', a song about a promiscuous two-timer with the oddly attractive line: 'Guilty feet have got no rhythm'. By the time Wham! split in 1986, Michael was left with the unenviable task of reinventing himself as a solo artist. The balladeering 'Careless Whisper' had indicated a possible direction, but the initial problem was one of image. As a pin-up pop idol, Michael had allowed himself to become a paste-board figure, best remembered for glorifying a hedonistic lifestyle and shoving shuttlecocks down his shorts in concert. The rapid transition from dole queue reject to Club Tropicana playboy had left a nasty taste in the mouths of many music critics. Breaking the Wham! icon was the great challenge of Michael's solo career, and his finest and most decisive move was to take a sabbatical before recording an album, to allow time to put his old image to rest. In the meantime, he cut the chart-topping 'A Different Corner', a song stylistically similar to 'Careless Whisper' and clearly designed to show off his talent as a serious singer-songwriter. Enlivening his alternate image as a blue-eyed soul singer, he teamed up with Aretha Franklin for the uplifting 'I Knew You Were Waiting', a transatlantic chart topper. Michael's re-emergence came in 1988, resplendent in leather and shades and his customary designer stubble. A pilot single, 'I Want Your Sex' was banned by daytime radio stations and broke his string of number 1s in the UK. Faith followed, and was not only well-received but sold in excess of 10 million copies. The album spawned a plethora of hit singles in the USA, including the title track, 'Father Figure', 'One

More Try' and 'Monkey'. Equally adept at soul workouts and ballads, and regarded by some as one of the best new pop songwriters of his era, Michael seemed set for a long career. In 1990, he released his second album, Listen Without Prejudice, Vol.1, a varied work which predictably sold millions. The first single from the album, 'Praying For Time' reached number 1 in the USA. In the UK, however, the comeback single was merely a Top 10 hit, suggesting that his status as a singles exponent in his homeland had markedly declined. Still dissatisfied with his media image, Michael announced that he would cease conducting interviews in future and concentrate on pursuing his career as a serious songwriter and musician. In 1992 the Sunday Times announced his arrival as one of the richest men in the UK. However, a court clash with his record label Sony dominated his activities in 1993 and 1994 (and was estimated to have cost him $7 million), with Michael arguing that his contract rendered him a 'pop slave' and demanding to be released from it. Mr Justice Jonathan Parker ruled in Sony's favour and Michael stated he would appeal, and also insisted that he would never again record for the label. In July 1995 it looked likely that Michael had managed to free himself from Sony - but only at the cost of $40 million. The buy-out was financed by David Geffen's new media empire, Dreamworks, and Virgin Records, who were also reputed to have paid him an advance of £30 million for two albums. The first was Older, one of the decade's slickest productions. Although the album became a huge success there was no great depth to the songs underneath the immaculate production. Michael announced the formation of his own record label Aegean Records, in February 1997. On April 7 1998 he was arrested for 'lewd behaviour' in a toilet cubicle at the Will Rogers Memorial Park in Beverly Hills, California. Michael later confirmed his long-rumoured homosexuality and was sentenced to perform community service.

Michaels, Lee

b. 24 November 1945, Los Angeles, California, USA. This multi-instrumentalist, aka Mike Olsen, began his career with the Sentinels, a San Luis Obispo-based surf group which included Merrell Fankhauser and drummer John Barbata (later to join Jefferson Airplane/Starship). Michaels later joined Barbata in the Strangers, a group led by Joel Scott Hill, before moving to San Francisco in 1965. He enjoyed a spell in the Family Tree, a Beatles-influenced attraction, before embarking on a solo career in 1968. A popular fixture of the city's ballrooms, his dexterity was confirmed with Recital, on which he played all the instruments, as well as serving as producer and arranger. Lee Michaels, culled from a lengthy studio jam with drummer Frosty, reaped due commercial rewards, but the artist was unable to maintain a consistency. 5th contained the US Top 10 hit, 'Do You Know What I Mean', but subsequent releases lacked a coherent purpose. Despite undoubted studio techniques and his gifted guitar and keyboard skills, Michaels later withdrew from active performing.

b. Michele'le (pronounced Me-Shell-Lay) Toussaint, *c.*1972, Los Angeles, California, USA. One time girlfriend and protégée of Dr Dre, Michel'le's career exploded and then disappeared with equal velocity, after she retired to have a baby. She first came to prominence as a backing vocalist for Dre's World Class Wreckin' Cru, before guesting on the D.O.C.'s remarkable debut album. Her own 1990 set brought immediate platinum status, preceded as it was by the US Top 10 single, 'No More Lies'. She also appeared on the pro-awareness single 'We're All In The Same Gang' alongside other members of the NWA posse with Hammer, Tone Loc, Digital Underground and Young MC.

Michelot, Pierre

b. 3 March 1928, Saint Denis, France. Michelot studied classical bass from the age of 16, but it was the playing of Jimmy Blanton and Oscar Pettiford which attracted him to jazz. He played with Rex Stewart in 1948, toured Europe with Kenny Clarke and recorded with Coleman Hawkins. Although such experience must have sharpened his playing, he only got the chance because he was already an accurate, melodic player who could provide a band with a springy rhythm. Throughout the 50s he worked in Paris clubs with Django Reinhardt, tenor players Lester Young, Don Byas, Dexter Gordon, Zoot Sims and Stan Getz. Among his recordings were sessions with Miles Davis in 1956/7, and pianist Bud Powell in the early 60s. Meanwhile he was writing arrangements for trumpeter Chet Baker, Kenny Clarke and for session work. For 15 years, from 1959, he worked with Jacques Loussier's Play Bach Trio. He took part in the filming of Tavernier's Round Midnight in 1986.

Michigan And Smiley

Papa Michigan Fairclough and General Smiley Bennett began their career in the early 80s at Studio One under the direction of Coxsone Dodd. The duo recorded their number 1 hit 'Rub A Dub Style' over the original master tape for Alton Ellis's 'I'm Just A Guy', followed by the equally popular 'Nice Up The Dance'. Although Dodd released hits in the dancehall style, the sessions proved to be his swan-song before relocating to New York. The duo were able to overcome this setback by recording at Tuff Gong Studio the classic 'One Love Jamdown', produced by Jahmet Enwright, which was released as a double a-side with Freddie McGregor's 'Jogging'. Michigan And Smiley gave a dynamic performance at the annual Reggae Sunsplash Festival in 1981, which led to a debut appearance in the UK where they topped the bill at the Black Echoes Reggae Awards Show. In 1982 Henry 'Junjo' Lawes productions dominated the dancehall, introducing current DJs to a wider audience without attenuating the sound. Michigan And Smiley recorded a grim warning to prospective philanderers, 'Diseases', and the song inspired Yellowman to record an identical version alongside his sparring partner, Fathead. Throughout the 80s Michigan And Smiley sustained attention in the album charts with the releases Step By Step, Sugar Daddy, Back In The Biz and Reality Must Rule Again. The duo enjoyed a revival in the 90s when some of their earlier hits resurfaced through VP in the USA.

Mickey And Sylvia

McHouston 'Mickey' Baker (b. 15 October 1925, Louisville, Kentucky, USA) and Sylvia Vanderpool (b. 6 March 1936, New York City, New York, USA). This popular duo began recording together in 1956 and enjoyed an US R&B chart-topper that year with 'Love Is Strange', which peaked at number 11 in the US pop chart the following year. This enduring call-and-response song is rightly regarded as a classic of its genre, and later became a minor UK hit when recorded by the Everly Brothers. Mickey and Sylvia had further success with 'There Oughta Be A Law' (1957) and, after a brief hiatus as a duo, 'Baby You're So Fine' (1961), but their career together was undermined by commitments elsewhere. Prolific session work for Atlantic, Savoy, King and Aladdin earned the former the epithet Mickey 'Guitar' Baker, while the latter had made her recording debut with jazz trumpeter Oran 'Hot Lips' Page as early as 1950.

In 1973, she began recording as Sylvia, and later achieved notable success as an entrepreneur through her ownership of Sugar Hill Records, early champions of the rap/hip-hop scene.

Microdisney

This incendiary pop/folk group was formed in Cork, Eire, in 1980. There was little cohesion in their early formations: 'We used to be much more frenzied in those days, a Fall-type mess, and our line-up was always changing. Originally Sean (O'Hagan) was going to play guitar and I (Cathal Coughlan) was going to recite poetry, then one week it was guitar, bass, drums, then guitar keyboard and violin, then we had a drum machine. . .' After settling on the more traditional formation of drums, guitars, bass and keyboards, the band began releasing singles which were eventually collected together on We Hate You White South African Bastards. The title was typically inflammatory, and in direct opposition to that of their long-playing debut, Everybody Is Fantastic. An early clue to their subversive nature, on the surface Microdisney were purveyors of accessible and restrained pop music. This attracted Virgin Records, but the band had a dark edge in Coughlan's bitter lyricism. Their Virgin debut, 'Town To Town', dented the lower regions of the charts and was quickly followed by Crooked Mile. However, Microdisney elected to bite the hand that fed them with the near-hit 'Singer's Hampstead Home', which thinly masked an attack on Virgin's fallen idol, Boy George. They bowed out with 39 Minutes, by which time the vitriol was really flowing, counterbalanced as ever by O'Hagan's delicate country guitar. Despite critical acclaim, Microdisney's sales had remained disappointingly in the cult bracket. O'Hagan went on to form the High Llamas, while Coughlan's Fatima Mansions did much to spice up the late 80s and early 90s.

Micus, Stephan

b. 19 January 1953, Stuttgart, Germany. Micus made his first overseas trip to Morocco at the age of 16. Since then he has travelled all over the world, studying traditional wind and string instruments, including the Japanese shakuhachi and sho, the Indian sitar and dilruba, as well as a range of percussion instruments from China, Korea, Bali, Java, Tibet and Ireland. For East Of The Night he designed a new type of 10- and 14-string guitar with resonant strings like that of the sitar. He has given concerts in Europe (including one in Düsseldorf with Oregon), the USA, Japan, Taiwan, Israel and Afghanistan. In 1977, his ballet, Koan, received its premiere in Cologne. Further performances included London, Paris and New York. The Music Of Stones, his compositions for the resonating stone sculptures of Elmar Daucher, were recorded in the atmospheric ambience of Ulm Cathedral and proved to be among his most inspired work. In the recording studio Micus has preferred to work as a soloist, making sensitive use of multi-track playback techniques. His compositions, which are often based on improvisation and always difficult to classify, have been widely acclaimed for their meditative and spiritual qualities. Micus's expressed intention is not to play traditional music, but to search for fresh possibilities by using traditional instruments in unconventional combinations. On this subject the jazz writer Joachim E. Berendt, has written: 'He plays them with a profound internationalization of their tradition and spirituality, uniting their sounds in a musical river which makes the stream of inner consciousness audible'.

Middle Of Nowhere - Hanson

If you can forget the fact that this trio of brothers were not old enough to drive a car when the album was recorded, and still have their school lessons while on the road, you can enjoy it for what it is. Zac is the youngest, and plays drums and has great timing. Isaac is now 17 and is almost the grown-up, and Taylor is the perfect poser. Hanson are a pop phenomenon in the way the Jackson Five were; they are very, very good at what they do and show a scarily mature grasp of the fundamentals of writing a commercial pop/rock song. They could have a long future.

Middle Of The Road

Originally known as Los Caracas when they performed throughout Europe, this Scottish quartet featured singer Sally Carr, backed by Ian Lewis, Eric Lewis and Ken Andrew. An astute cover of a novelty Continental song 'Chirpy Chirpy Cheep Cheep' saw them outsell a rival version by Mac And Katie Kissoon and hog the UK number 1 spot for five weeks during the summer of 1971. The follow-up, 'Tweedle Dee, Tweedle Dum' (a song about two feuding Scottish clans) had already reached the top in Sweden, Denmark and Norway prior to its UK release, where it climbed to number 2. Further lightweight hits in the early 70s included 'Soley Soley', 'Sacramento' and 'Samson And Delilah', paving the way for many successful seasons in cabaret.

Middleton, Velma

b. 1 September 1917, St. Louis, Missouri, USA, d. 10 February 1961, Sierra Leone. During the 30s, Middleton sang and danced in various clubs, sometimes as a solo, often in the chorus line. In 1942, she was hired to sing with the Louis Armstrong big band and remained when the All Stars were formed, touring the world and, as a result, becoming far more famous than many other, better singers. She was still touring with Armstrong when she collapsed and died in Sierra Leone in February 1961. Although her singing style was uninspired, Middleton had an earthily infectious sense of humour that blended with Armstrong's, and their performances together were always hugely entertaining.

Midler, Bette

b. 1 December 1945, Paterson, New Jersey, USA. As a singer, comedienne and actress, Midler rose to fame with an outrageous, raunchy stage act, and became known as 'The Divine Miss M', 'Trash With Flash' and 'Sleaze With Ease'. Her mother, a fan of the movies, named her after Bette Davis. Raised in Hawaii, as one of the few white students in her school, and the only Jew, she 'toughened up fast', and won an award in the first grade for singing 'Silent Night'. Encouraged by her mother, she studied theatre at the University of Hawaii, and worked in a pineapple factory and as a secretary in a radio station before gaining her first professional acting job in 1965 in the movie Hawaii, playing the minor role of a missionary wife who is constantly sick. Moving to New York, she held jobs as a glove saleswoman in Stern's Department Store, a hat-check girl, and a go-go dancer, before joining the chorus of the hit Broadway musical Fiddler On The Roof in 1966. In February 1967, Midler took over one of the leading roles, as Tzeitel, the eldest daughter, and played the part for the next three years. While singing late-night after the show at the Improvisation Club, a showcase for young performers, she was noticed by an executive from the David Frost television show, and subsequently appeared several times with Frost, and on the Merv Griffin Show. After leaving Fiddler On The Roof, she performed briefly in the off-Broadway musical Salvation, and worked again as a go-go dancer in a Broadway bar, before taking a $50-a-night job at the Continental Baths, New York, singing to male homosexuals dressed in bath towels. Clad in toreador pants, or sequin gowns, strapless tops and platform shoes - uniforms of a bygone age - she strutted her extravagant stuff, singing songs from the 40s, 50s, and 60s - rock, blues, novelties - even reaching back to 1929 for the Harry Akst/Grant Clarke ballad 'Am I Blue?', which had been a hit then for Ethel Waters. News of these somewhat bizarre happenings soon got round, and outside audiences of both sexes, including show people, were allowed to view the show. Offers of other work flooded in, including the opportunity to appear regularly on Johnny Carson's Tonight show.

In May 1971, she played the dual roles of the Acid Queen and Mrs Walker in the Seattle Opera Company's production of the rock opera Tommy and, later in the year, made her official New York nightclub debut at the Downstairs At The Upstairs, the original two-week engagement being extended to 10, to accommodate the crowds. During the following year, she appeared with Carson at the Sahara in Las Vegas, and in June played to standing room only at Carnegie Hall in New York. In November, her first album, The Divine Miss M, was released by Atlantic Records, and is said to have sold 100,000 copies in the first month. It contained several of the cover versions that she featured in her stage act, such as the Andrews Sisters' 'Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy', the Dixie Cups' 'The Chapel Of Love', the Shangri-Las' 'The Leader Of The Pack' and Bobby Freeman's 'Do You Want To Dance?'. The pianist on most of the tracks was Barry Manilow, who was Midler's accompanist and musical director for three years in the early 70s. The album bears the dedication: 'This is for Judith'. Judith was Midler's sister who was killed in a road accident on her way to meet Bette when she was appearing in Fiddler On The Roof. Midler's second album, Bette Midler, also made the US Top 10. In 1973, Midler received the After Dark Award for Performer Of The Year, and soon became a superstar, able to fill concert halls throughout the USA. In 1979, she had her first starring role in the movie The Rose, which was loosely based on the life of rock singer Janis Joplin. Midler was nominated for an Academy Award as 'Best Actress', and won two Golden Globe Awards for her performance. Two songs from the film, the title track (a million-seller), and 'When A Man Loves A Woman', and the soundtrack album, entered the US charts, as did the album from Midler's next film, Divine Madness, a celluloid version of her concert performance in Pasadena, California. After all the success of the past decade, things started to go wrong in the early 80s. In 1982, the aptly named black comedy, Jinxed!, was a disaster at the box office, amid rumours of violent disagreements between Midler and her co-star Ken Wahl and director Don Siegel. Midler became persona non grata in Hollywood, and suffered a nervous breakdown. She married Martin Von Haselberg, a former commodities broker, in 1984, and signed to a long-term contract to the Walt Disney Studios, making her comeback in the comedy Down And Out In Beverly Hills (1985), with Nick Nolte and Richard Dreyfuss.

During the rest of the decade she eschewed touring, and concentrated on her acting career in a series of raucous comedy movies such as Ruthless People (1986), co-starring Danny De Vito, Outrageous Fortune (1987) and Big Business (1988). In 1988, Beaches, the first film to be made by her own company, All Girls Productions (their motto is, 'We hold a grudge'), gave her one of her best roles, and the opportunity to sing songs within the context of the story. These included standards such as 'Ballin' The Jack', Cole Porter's 'I've Still Got My Health', 'The Glory Of Love', 'Under The Boardwalk', and 'Otto Titsling'. Also included was 'Wind Beneath My Wings', by Larry Henley and Jeff Silbar, which reached number 1 in the US charts. Midler's recording won Grammys in 1990 for 'Record Of The Year' and 'Song Of The Year'. In 1990, Midler appeared in Stella, a remake of the classic weepie, Stella Dallas, in which she performed a hilarious mock striptease among the bottles and glasses on top of a bar, and Scenes From A Mall, a comedy co-staring Woody Allen. Her appearance as a USO entertainer in World War II, alongside actor James Caan, in For The Boys (1991), which she also co-produced, earned her a Golden Globe award for Best Actress. The movie showed her at her best, and featured her very individual readings of 'Stuff Like That There' and 'P. S. I Love You'. In the same year, she released Some People's Lives, her first non-soundtrack album since the 1983 flop, No Frills. It entered the US Top 10, and one of the tracks, 'From A Distance', had an extended chart life in the USA and UK. By the early 90s she was planning to revive her musical career, and in 1993 brought a spectacular new stage show to Radio City Music Hall. The lavish three-hour concert, her first for 10 years, was called Experience The Divine, and seemed as 'gaudy and outrageously tasteless as ever'. In 1994 Midler won an Emmy Nomination, along with Golden Globe and National Board of Review Awards for her outstanding performance as Rose in a CBS television musical production of Gypsy. In 1995, she recorded her first studio album for five years, Bette Of Roses.

Midnight Blue - Kenny Burrell

From the first sight of Reid Miles' brilliant typography on the cover you know what you are getting. Smooth smootchy jazz guitar played at the pace of a slow loris - quite magnificent in its sparing qualities. Kenny Burrell, together with Grant Green and Wes Montgomery, defined this style. 'Chitlins Con Carne' is a late-night feast while 'Midnight Blue' is smokey and soulful, and yes, Van Morrison did borrow the intro for 'Moondance'. There is subtle support from Major Holley Jnr. (bass), Bill English (drums), Ray Barretto (conga) and lustrous understated tenor from the omnipresent Stanley Turrentine.

Midnight Love - Marvin Gaye

Leaving the safety and familiarity of Tamla/Motown has seen many artists take a flight to obscurity. Marvin Gaye turned it on its head and made his most successful album for over ten years. The pivotal track is 'Sexual Healing', an idea given to him by his biographer David Ritz and co-written with Odell Brown. This track alone is worth the price of the album (even though it was a single). It oozes greatness with every second and was the last great Marvin Gaye song. And for the record, he played drums, piano, organ, bells, synths and bongos. A premier voice lost to the world.

- Tracks: Midnight Lady; Sexual Healing; Rockin' After Midnight; 'Til Tomorrow; Turn On Some Music; Third World Girl; Joy; My Love Is Waiting.
- First released 1982
- UK peak chart position: 10
- USA peak chart position: 7

Midnight Marauders - A Tribe Called Quest

A second take on A Tribe Called Quest's lush formula. This time there was a rejection of purely Afrocentric rhymes, picking up on the chill breeze of gangsta rap that was blowing through hip-hop in 1993. They did, however, maintain their allegiances to 'positivity', rather than empty braggadocio or gun-slinging rhetoric. It saw them maintain their high profile in rap, as members variously siphoned off time to build film and production careers.

Midnight Oil

Formed in Sydney, New South Wales, Australia, in 1975, and then known as Farm, this strident band has pioneered its own course in Australian rock without relying on the established network of agencies and record companies. The original nucleus of the band comprised Martin Rotsey (guitar), Rob Hirst (drums) and Jim Moginie (guitar). They were later joined by law student Peter Garrett (lead vocals). The outfit became notorious for always insisting on total control over its recorded product and media releases, including photos, and when booking agencies denied the band gigs, the members organized their own venues and tours, taking advantage of the group's large following on the alternative rock scene. Joined by Dwayne 'Bones' Hillman (bass) in 1977 and changing their name to Midnight Oil, the group took a couple of album releases to refine its songwriting style, principally by Moginie and Hirst. As Head Injuries went gold in Australia, the imposing shaven-headed Garrett, who had by now received his law degree, began to make known his firm views on politics. Having signed a worldwide contract with CBS/Columbia Records, it was 10,9,8,7,6,5,4,3,2,1, that saw the band gain mainstream radio airplay. Featuring songs about the environment, anti-nuclear sentiments, anti-war songs and powerful anthems of anti-establishment; it also propelled the band into the international market place. The band performed at many charity concerts, promoting Koori (Australian aborigines) causes in Australia and the loquacious Garrett almost gained a seat in the Australian parliament in 1984 while standing for the Nuclear Disarmament Party. The following album saw the band tour the USA and Europe, and Rolling Stone writers voted the album one of the best of 1989, despite a low profile there. While many regard Red Sails In The Sunset as their best work, the subsequent albums have been equally highly regarded. The group's peak album chart positions in the UK and USA were achieved with Diesel And Dust reaching the UK Top 20 and US number 21, while in the USA the follow-up, Blue Sky Mining, emulated that position. The band continued its antagonistic attitude towards major industrial companies in 1990, by organizing a protest concert outside the Manhattan offices of the Exxon oil company, who were responsible for the Valdez oil slick in Alaska. Although recent studio releases have failed to reach the peaks of previous albums, the band are still a powerful live act.

Midnite Follies Orchestra

The Orchestra was formed in the UK during 1978 by pianist Keith Nichols and arranger Alan Cohen to specialize in the repertoire of the 20s and 30s, and to play originals written in a similar style. After a memorable first night at London's 100 Club, the band were signed to EMI for which they have recorded since using the cream of British mainstream musicians - Alan Elsdon, Digby Fairweather, Pete Strange (trombone), John Barnes, Olaf Vas and Randolphe Colville (saxophones). The orchestra regularly play on radio and television, and in tribute concerts for artists, including Louis Armstrong, Fats Waller and Duke Ellington.

Midway Still

UK indie rock band whose profile initially rose through supports to the likes of Cud and the more musically similar Mega City Four. Boasting a sound that also earned comparisons to Teenage Fanclub or Dinosaur Jr, the band comprised Paul Thomson (guitar, vocals), Declan Kelly (drums) and Jan aka John Kanopka (bass). Both of the latter were formerly members of USMF. Their first single, 'I Won't Try', emerged on Roughneck records (a subsidiary of Fire Records) in July 1991. Thematically it was dedicated to their pet python and attempts to feed it with mice who bred exponentially. Thomson was an interesting character, having met Keith Moon (Who) on holiday as a child, and shared baths with a young Michela Strachan - also in childhood, alas. The band were easily distinguished by their taste in Hawaiian shirts, though their efforts at running a competition in the New Musical Express to get a reader to design a logo for them ended in disaster. So too did their short but entertaining career, with diminishing press returns for their second long-player in 1993. As its title suggested, life may indeed by too long, but musical careers can also be disastrously short.

Mighty Avengers

This short-lived UK quartet - Tony Campbell (lead guitar/vocals), Teddy Mahon (rhythm guitar), Mike Linnell (bass/vocals) and 'Biffo' Beech (drums/vocals) - enjoyed the patronage of the Rolling Stones' manager Andrew Loog Oldham. He produced the group's three singles, 'So Much In Love', 'Blue Turns To Grey' and '(Walking Through The) Sleepy City', each of which were exclusive Jagger/Richard songs. This altruism was fuelled by Oldham's desire to test the market for the songwriters' early efforts. 'So Much In Love' peaked at number 46 in November 1964, but Oldham's interest in the group waned when subsequent offerings failed to chart. The tracks remain interesting examples of Oldham's debt to producer Phil Spector. 'Blue Turns To Grey' later became a hit in the hands of Cliff Richard in 1966.

Mighty Baby

This UK rock group was formed in 1968 around Alan 'Bam' King (b. 18 September 1946, Kentish Town, London, England; guitar), Mike Evans (bass) and Roger Powell (drums), all founder members of the Action, one of London's most exciting Mod groups. Late-period arrivals Martin Stone (guitar, ex-Savoy Brown) and Ian Whiteman (piano, saxophone) completed Mighty Baby, a name suggested by their manager, John Curd. The quintet's self-titled debut album, released on Curd's self-explanatory Head Records, was a skilful blend of strong melody and instrumental dexterity, exemplified on the opening composition, 'Egyptian Tomb'. Their improvisatory prowess was even greater on live performances, where Stone's imaginative soloing combined with Whiteman's woodwind and keyboard passages, creating a mesmerising sound. The group's second album, A Jug Of Love, issued on Mike Vernon's Blue Horizon label, captured this spirit of adventure, but Mighty Baby's potential was suddenly shorn when Whiteman, Evans and Powell, who had each accepted the Sufi faith, left to form a new group, the Habibiyya. As such they recorded one album, If Man But Knew, in 1972, before pursuing careers as session musicians, notably for Richard Thompson and Sandy Denny. Stone latterly formed Chilli Willi And The Red Hot Peppers with fellow guitarist Phil Lithman, before abandoning music in favour of antiquarian books. King meanwhile joined pub-rock favourites Ace.

Mighty Clouds Of Joy

Gospel quartet the Mighty Clouds Of Joy formed at Jefferson High School in Los Angeles, California, USA, in 1960. Joe Ligon (b. Troy, Alabama, USA; lead), Johnny Martin (b. Los Angeles, California, USA; tenor), Richard Wallace (b. Georgia, USA; baritone) and Elmo Franklin (b. Louisiana, USA; bass) became the band's first permanent line-up. After a series of small-scale gospel concerts in local churches, the group were recruited by the Houston-based label Peacock Records. Throughout the 60s the group recorded a series of albums for the label that all sold well in the gospel market, although later they would change tempo to adapt to the prevailing musical climate, leading them into soul, R&B and rock 'n' roll. 'Time', on ABC Records, produced by Gamble And Huff, became a number 32 R&B hit in 1974. 'Mighty Cloud Of Joy' also achieved minor success, but their highest chart placing came with the release of '(Ride The) Mighty High' in February 1976. However, the glamour of the pop world never completely tore the group away from their religious beliefs, a fact confirmed by the title of their Grammy-nominated 1978 album, God Is Not Dead. The same year's Live And Direct won a Grammy award, as did the subsequent Changing Times (produced by Frank Wilson, former Jackson 5 associate). By 1980 the group had moved to Word Records and earned another Grammy nomination for Cloudburst, produced by Al McKay of Earth, Wind And Fire. At this time the group also included Paul Beasley (ex-Keynotes) and Michael Cook. None of this activity slowed the band's frenetic touring and recording pace, and two further Grammy nominations were awarded in 1982 for Miracle Man and The Mighty Clouds Above. When Johnny Martin died in 1987, first Dwight Gordon and then Michael McGowan stepped in. By the mid-90s they were still to be found performing hundreds of concerts a year, with over thirty albums to their name.

Mighty Diamonds

One of the most famous Jamaican vocal groups of the 70s and 80s, the Diamonds consisted of Donald 'Tabby' Shaw (lead vocals), with Fitzroy 'Bunny' Simpson and Lloyd 'Judge' Ferguson providing the harmonies and occasional lead. They recorded unsuccessfully for Stranger Cole and Rupie Edwards, among others, before their breakthrough in 1975 with Joseph 'Joe Joe' Hookim's Channel One studio. 'Hey Girl' and 'Country Living' were big reggae hits, but their next release, 'Right Time', on Hookim's Well Charge label, consolidated that success. The Diamonds' initial popularity was boosted by a number of factors: the influence of Burning Spear's championing of Jamaican national hero, Marcus Garvey; the definitive three-part rocksteady harmonies of the Heptones, together with Sly Dunbar's militant rockers style of drumming on 'do-overs' of timeless Studio One rhythms; and, of course, their own superb songwriting, vocal abilities and the odd knack of somehow managing to sound urgent and relaxed at the same time. Jamaica erupted into Diamonds-mania, while the Channel One 'rockers' sound they had brought to prominence was to dominate reggae music for the next few years, with every drummer in the business developing his very own Sly Dunbar impersonation. Virgin Records was busy acquiring reggae artists in 1976, and the Diamonds and Hookim signed with them for the release of their debut, Right Time. It was a classic collection, showcasing perfectly the Diamonds' uncanny ability to write catchy, meaningful songs - whether about 'love' or 'reality' - and set them to updated versions of some of the greatest Studio One rhythms. They sold throughout the reggae world and picked up many crossover sales. Virgin sent the Diamonds to New Orleans to work with veteran producer Allen Toussaint, which resulted in Ice On Fire. It was not well received, and sold poorly - mainly because its misguided approach baffled reggae fans, while the Diamonds name still meant very little to a wider audience. They continued to work at Channel One, and many more hit singles emerged during the 70s. In 1981, the dub plates of tunes they had recorded for Gussie Clarke were the most played on the Kingston and London sound system circuits. The most popular of these tunes was released on a 10-inch, dub plate-style record in New York, a 7-inch in Jamaica and a 12-inch in England; 'Pass The Kouchie', an updating of a 60s Studio One instrumental 'Full Up', was a massive hit. This eventually became 'Pass The Dutchie' for the English group Musical Youth, which was a worldwide pop hit. (A 'kouchie' is a pipe for smoking ganja, while a 'dutchie' is a type of cooking pot.) The rest of their work with Clarke was released on Changes, which consisted of the same combination of new songs and old rhythms, with some classic reggae songs, including 'Party Time' and 'Hurting Inside', performed in the inimitable Diamonds style. For the rest of the decade and on into the 90s, the Diamonds have continued to build on their reputation as one of the best vocal harmony trios in the business with regular releases for a variety of different producers and some lovely self-produced records. Their harmonies are always tight, and their songs usually manage to avoid obvious and naïve statements. In the constantly changing world of reggae, they are always a reliable and dependable source of top-quality music, and if their performances have not quite reached the exalted standards of Right Time and Changes, it is perhaps too much to expect any radical change in direction at this stage in their career.

Mighty Lemon Drops

This UK independent label pop band broke through in 1985 with the highly touted 'Like An Angel'. The band featured Paul Marsh (vocals, guitar), David Newton (guitar), Tony Linehan (bass) and Keith Rowley (drums), who had all enjoyed chequered careers in numerous Wolverhampton outfits. Newton had previously played with Active Restraint in 1982, which also included Marsh and Linehan. They in turn played regularly alongside Another Dream, and both bands featured on single releases by local label Watchdog Video And Records. Newton and Neal Cook of Another Dream put together the Wild Flowers, alongside Dave Atherton (also ex-Another Dream; guitar, keyboards), Pete Waldron (bass) and Dave Fisher (drums). After a further single and a support to Simple Minds, Newton moved on once more, forming the Mighty Lemon Drops with Marsh and Linehan. The temporary drummer was Martin Gilks (later with the Wonder Stuff), before Keith Rowley stepped in full-time. As part of the New Musical Express's 'C-86' generation, they were snapped up by Chrysalis Records. Despite the charm of several singles in an Echo And The Bunnymen vein, they failed to translate independent chart success into hits.

Although they were dropped by Chrysalis after three albums, they remained favourites on the US college circuit. This was not enough to sustain them, and they broke up in the early 90s leaving a compilation of live tracks and demos on Overground Records.

Mighty Mighty

Like many of the UK indie guitar pop favourites of the mid-80s, Birmingham, UK's Mighty Mighty owed more than a passing debt to Orange Juice and the Postcard Records label. Hugh Harkin (vocals, occasional harp), Mick Geoghegan (guitar, lyric writer), brother Peter (organ, guitar), David Hennessy (drums) and Russell Burton (bass, vocals) first appeared as part of the New Musical Express/ICA Rock Week gigs and accompanying C86 cassette compilation. This coincided nicely with Mighty Mighty's debut single, the catchy 'Everybody Knows The Monkey', in May 1986; like July's 'Is There Anyone Out There?' 12-inch, it was issued on the band's own Girlie label. However, aspiring local label Chapter 22 soon snapped them up, for a string of classy pop tunes that fared well on the independent sector. After December's 'Throwaway' (originally half of a fanzine flexi-disc) came the raunchy 'Built Like A Car' in May 1987, 'One Way' in October and the attractive 'Born In A Maisonette' in the New Year. Unfortunately, Mighty Mighty failed to develop, and by the time Sharks was released in February 1988, their formula had worn thin. Apart from the excellent 'Blue And Green', Sharks had little to offer in the way of new ideas at a time when the independent scene was rapidly hardening. The ensuing collapse of the band was inevitable.

● ALBUMS: Sharks (Chapter 22 1988)★★.

Mighty Mighty Bosstones

Formed in Boston, Massachusetts, USA, during the mid-80s, the band comprised Nate Albert (guitar), Joe Gittleman (bass) and Ben Carr (vocals). They were joined by Dicky Barrett (vocals) and Tim 'Johnny Vegas' Burton (saxophone) completing the line-up of the original Bosstones. After a laconic lacuna during the Reagan years the group returned as the Mighty Mighty Bosstones, having enrolled Joe Sirois (drums), Dennis Brockenborough (trombone) and Kevin Leanear (saxophone). The change of name was justified by Barrett who claimed that 'any band can just be mighty'. The musicians built a solid foundation in the USA through their fusion of ska and punk, with influences from soul and funk as well as thrash and heavy metal. They played across America to packed venues consisting of various US youth cult followers, skinheads, punks, metal heads and college students. In 1992 the group were recognized at the Boston Music Awards where they received accolades for Best Single, Best Album and Best Rock Band. Their early recordings surfaced through the independent Taang label, including the commended single 'Where D'ya Go', and an EP featuring cover versions of hits by Aerosmith, Metallica and Van Halen. Their increasing notoriety led to interest from the major labels with Mercury Records signing the band. The first release was an EP featuring 'Someday I Suppose', 'Lights Out', 'Police Beat' and a cover of the Wailers' 'Simmer Down'. In 1992 the band began working on their debut album for Mercury with producer Tony Platt who, apart from his rock productions, had worked with Bob Marley in the early 70s. In 1993 Mercury promoted the Bosstones in the UK, releasing 'Ska-Core The Devil And More' and Don't Know How To Party. The group's success led to media interest in the USA which resulted in a cameo appearance in the movie Clueless, a ska version of Kiss's 'Detroit Rock City' - featured on the tribute compilation Kiss My Ass - and imaginative merchandising. By 1997 the band's high profile was elevated in America by an exhaustive promotional campaign and the release of the excellent Let's Face It.

Mighty Sam

b. Sam McClain, 15 April 1943, Monroe, Louisiana, USA. Introduced to gospel as a child, McClain served his apprenticeship in a schoolfriend's R&B group. In 1963, he joined the Dothan Sextet and remained their lead singer for the next three years. Disc jockey 'Papa'

Don Schroeder 'discovered' Sam and signed him to the Bell subsidiary Amy, where the artist recorded eight singles. The Fame studio house band provided the perfect accompaniment to McClain's rasping interpretations, which evoked those of Bobby Bland and Little Milton. Ballads such as 'In The Same Old Way' (1967) and 'When She Touches Me' (1967), and the deep country soul of 'Sweet Dreams' (1968) stand among his finest offerings. In 1970, following Schroeder's retirement, Mighty Sam joined Atlantic Records for two excellent singles before switching to Malaco Records for a solitary release. After years of neglect, during which the singer was almost penniless, he re-emerged on the Orleans label. A Live In Japan set followed. McClain's distinctive growl can also be heard on Hubert Sumlin's Blues Party, one of the finest blues collections of the late 80s. Give it Up To Love demonstrated his voice reaching a glorious peak and is probably his finest album. It is a great pity, however, that this man has not received wider success and recognition.

Mighty Sparrow

b. Francisco Slinger, Grenada. Having moved to Trinidad as a child, calypso singer Mighty Sparrow first rose to domestic prominence in the 50s. He earned his underwhelming nickname (most calypso singers dealt in more self-aggrandizing names such as Executor and Lion) by virtue of his stage performances, which involved him moving around rapidly while most other singers were stationary. He was rewarded with the Calypso Crown of 1956 for his song 'Jean And Dinah', which complained at what Americans had left behind after leaving Trinidad's military bases. At the same time he lent his support to Eric Williams' People's National Movement, writing many calypso songs in praise of the nationalist leader. His anthem 'Cricket Lovely Cricket' was a particularly painful reminder to UK cricket fans after the humiliating drubbing West Indian star batsman Garfield Sobers gave to the English team in the early 50s. In politics, however, he subsequently revised his position in the 60s as the initial optimism of the PNP soured into disillusionment.

Despite his earlier recordings, calypso was ironically just beginning to secure a large following in the USA. His popularity was such that in the 50s and 60s he was capable of filling a venue such as New York's Madison Square Gardens. With the development of soca, Sparrow became a willing convert, although he faced some opposition from calypso purists who despised the new hybrid.

Migil Five

Red Lambert (guitar/vocals), Alan Watson (saxophone), Gil Lucas (piano), Lenny Blanche (bass) and Mike Felix (drums/lead vocals) achieved momentary fame when their 'Mockingbird Hill' single reached the UK Top 10 in 1964, on the strength of a fleeting bluebeat craze. Felix, Blanche and Lucas had previously worked as a jazz trio prior to embracing pop with the addition of Lambert. They recorded as the Migil Four before adding Watson at the suggestion of trumpeter Kenny Ball. Despite inordinate press coverage, the group was unable to repeat this success. They later became stalwarts of the cabaret circuit before disintegrating when Felix began a solo career.

Mihashi, Michiya

b. Michiya Kitazawa, 10 November 1930, Hakodate, Hokkaidô, Japan. After many years of training as a professional singer of Japanese folk-songs, Mihashi was signed by King Records as a singer of kayôkyoku (formerly the most common and typically Japanese form of popular song) with a debut single, 'Sake No Nigasa Yo' ('A Bitter Taste Of Sake') in 1954. Beginning with 'On 'Na Sendô Uta' ('A Song Of A Female Boatman') in 1955, he succeeded with many 'homepining' songs in the late 50s, including 'Ringo-Mura Kara' ('From The Apple Village'), 'Osaraba Tokyo' ('Goodbye Tokyo') and 'Akai Yûi No Kokyô ('My Hometown With The Red Sunset'). These songs were particularly popular among the young workers who had streamed into large cities from rural areas. His nasal tenor, reminiscent of his background in folksinging, and the nostalgic nature of his songs were familiar to Japanese households at least until the late 70s.

Mike And The Mechanics

Mike Rutherford (b. 2 October 1950, Guildford, Surrey, England; bass) formed the Mechanics in 1985, during a pause in the career of his band, Genesis, and while Phil Collins was engrossed in his solo career. The line-up comprised Paul Carrack (b. 22 April 1951, Sheffield, Yorkshire, England; vocals, keyboards, ex-Ace; Squeeze; Nick Lowe), Paul Young (vocals, ex-Sad Cafe), Peter Van Hooke and Adrian Lee. Van Hooke was already an accomplished session musician, having played or toured with many singers, from Van Morrison to Rod Argent. The group's first hit came with 'Silent Running (On Dangerous Ground)' in 1986, which was used as the theme to the film On Dangerous Ground. However, it was late in 1988 before they scored their first big hit with the Rutherford/B.A. Robertson penned 'The Living Years', an emotive song expressing Rutherford's regret at the lack of communication he had with his father while he was alive. It also topped the US charts. Further chart success continued although the band were seen more as an album band. Quality singles such as 'Everybody Gets A Second Chance' and the highly emotive 'A Time And A Place' failed to make the UK Top 50, a sobering thought for future songwriters with high hopes of chart success. Beggar On A Beach Of Gold was preceded by a lively single 'Over My Shoulder'; unfortunately this proved to be the album's only ingot. The title-track was written by B.A. Robertson and was a top 40 hit in the UK in 1995. Pedestrian covers of the Miracles' 'You Really Got A Hold On Me' and Stevie Wonder's 'I Believe (When I Fall In Love Again It Will be Forever)' added nothing and the album, although competent, did not break any new ground. The band continues to be as fluid as its members' careers allow.

Mike Stuart Span

The Mike Stuart Span were originally a mainstream rock/pop band formed in Brighton, Sussex, England, in the mid-60s. The prime mover behind this and all subsequent formations was vocalist Stuart Hobday. He was partnered originally by Nigel Langham (guitar), Roger McCabe (bass), Gary 'Roscoe' Murphy (drums) and Ashley Potter (organ). They drew heavily on a stylized soul and show band repertoire before coming to the attention of local promoter Mike Clayton. He encouraged them to expand their sound with the addition of brass, leading to the arrival of additional members Gary Parsley (trumpet), Dave Plumb (saxophone) and Jon Poulter (keyboards). However, their tenure as an eight-piece band was a short one, as Langham died after jumping out of an upstairs window while under the influence of LSD. The remaining members' first recording came in 1966 when they made an acetate for EMI Records comprising a cover of the Drifters' 'Follow Me' supplemented by an original Hobday composition, 'Work Out', on the b-side. EMI were sufficiently impressed to offer the group a contract and sent them back to the studio to record their debut single proper. This was headed on the a-side by another Drifters song, 'Come On Over To My Place', with another Hobday original, 'Still Nights', on the b-side. Their second single was a cover version of Cat Stevens' 'Dear', but this too failed to breach the charts. They were dropped by EMI and the original trio of Hobday, McCabe and Murphy discarded the brass section and organist Potter, and began advertising in the Melody Maker for a guitarist. The new recruit was Brian Bennett, who had previously recorded with Tony's Defenders. With the change in instrumentation Mike Stuart Span henceforth veered towards guitar rock, and in particular, psychedelia. In the search for a new contract the new line-up recorded a second acetate single, this time for Oak Records. An excellent original track, 'Second Production', allied with a cover of Fontella Bass' 'Rescue Me' on the b-side, failed to convince prospective backers Decca Records to invest in the group. Instead they self-funded the release of their third single proper, 'Children Of Tomorrow', released on their own Jewel Records. By now Hobday was becoming increasingly interested in other art forms. The group performed a 20-minute composition, Cycle, for the Brighton Arts Festival, and appeared in the film Better A Widow. They were also considered for the part of an aspiring pop group in a documentary filmed by the BBC. At the same time they released their final single, 'You Can Understand Me', for Fontana Records. By 1969 the group had relaunched itself as Leviathan, although a compilation album of Mike Stuart Span recordings was finally issued in 1995.

Mikey General

b. Michael Taylor, 9 October 1963, London, England. Taylor spent his formative years commuting between London and Jamaica. Inspired by the established singers on the island, including Dennis Brown and Barrington Levy, he embarked on his own singing career; his vocal style was initially in the high tenor dancehall style of Pinchers, Sanchez and Pliers. He began his recording career during the mid-80s in the UK, recording with Studio One producer Jackie Mittoo. The recordings surfaced on Mikey's own MGR label through Omega, and other notable recordings followed, including 'Kuff N Dem', 'A Sound Gonna Die Tonight', and the allegorical 'Cowboy Life'. In combination he found success with Richie Davis ('Back To Life' and 'Suzy Wong'), while he joined Skipper Ranking for the anti-cocaine anthem, 'Don't Nose It Up'. He accepted a starring role in the television play We The Raggamuffin, for which he also provided the theme tune. In 1992 Mikey returned to Jamaica, where he met Luciano during a recording session - the association led to his becoming part of the Firehouse Crew alongside DJ Sizzla and saxophonist Dean Fraser. In 1997 the Firehouse Crew shared top billing with Buju Banton and Bunny Wailer at the Essential Roots Day festival, and by this time, Mikey's recording career was enjoying a renaissance; Philip 'Fatis' Burrell produced his Firehouse debut, Stronger Rastaman, while his combination with Sizzla, 'Babylon A Listen/Unseen Blessings', became a dancehall anthem.

Miki And Griff

Miki (b. Barbara MacDonald Salisbury, 20 June 1920, Ayrshire, Scotland, d. 20 April 1989) was raised on Rothesay on the Isle of Bute. When she joined the George Mitchell Choir, she met Griff (b. Emyr Morus Griffith, 9 May 1923, Holywell, Wales, d. 24 September 1995). They learned vocal discipline and stagecraft there. They married in 1950, and after leaving Mitchell, developed a comedy act with props and novelty numbers such as 'Spooks' and 'Ol' McDonald's Farm'. Griff's moustache became a recognizable trademark. In 1958, they fell in love with the Everly Brothers' album of traditional country ballads, Songs Our Daddy Taught Us, as well as country albums by the Louvin Brothers, and they would sing these songs for their own amusement in dressing-rooms. Lonnie Donegan heard them and invited them to perform on his television series. He arranged a contract with Pye Records and produced their first records. In 1959, 'Hold Back Tomorrow' made the UK Top 30, and they made very successful EPs, Rockin' Alone (In An Old Rockin' Chair) and This Is Miki - This Is Griff, which topped the EP charts. They appeared on several of Donegan's own records, including 'Virgin Mary' and 'Michael Row The Boat'. Miki recorded a tender version of 'I Never Will Marry' with only Donegan's whistling and acoustic guitar for accompaniment, and they were to work with him until 1964. In 1962, Miki And Griff's only UK Top 20 hit came when they covered Burl Ives' 'A Little Bitty Tear', and the following year they made the Top 30 with a cover version of Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme's US hit, 'I Want To Stay Here'. Lesser-known records such as 'This Time I Would Know', 'Oh, So Many Years' and Harlan Howard's humorous 'Automation' were just as good. Although they often covered songs by other performers, their records were always instantly recognizable. Record producer Tony Hatch used to say, 'Miki can create a better harmony than I can ever write for her.' Visiting the USA, they received a standing ovation on Roy Acuff's portion of the Grand Ole Opry in 1964. Miki And Griff are easily the most-recorded UK country act, with most of their recordings being for Pye. They did, however, record two albums for Major-Minor and included the weepie 'Two Little Orphans'. In later years, they performed as a duo to the accompaniment of Miki's piano. Griff's humour was always evident, and his emotion-charged version of 'These Hands' was always a showstopper. Miki developed into a fine songwriter - in particular, 'God Was Here (But I Think He Left Early)'. They always had time for their fans, but Miki, who disguised her illness on stage for some months, died of cancer in April 1989. Understandably, Griff did not return to performing. The duo are fondly remembered by many listeners for introducing them to country music, and they were a fine, middle-of-the-road act in their own right.

Mikkelborg, Palle

b. 6 March 1941, Copenhagen, Denmark. Mikkelborg is a self-taught trumpeter who studied conducting at the Royal Music Conservatory, Copenhagen. After turning professional in 1960, he joined Danish Radiojazzgruppen (1963), of which he was the leader from 1967-72. He was also a member of Radioens Big Band from 1964-71. For both of these, he would write, arrange and conduct as well as play trumpet. In 1966, he formed a quintet with drummer Alex Riel which won first prize at the Montreux Jazz Festival and played at the Newport Jazz Festival (1968). Then he led an octet called V8 (1970-75) and an outfit called Entrance (1975-85). Mikkelborg has also worked with bandleaders George Russell, Gil Evans, George Gruntz, Mike Gibbs and Maynard Ferguson and a wide variety of musicians, including Jan Garbarek, Terje Rypdal, Don Cherry, Abdullah Ibrahim and Charlie Mariano. His trumpet playing is characterized by a clear, firm sound, a huge range and the successful incorporation of a variety of electronic effects. He has written many pieces for his various bands as well as a series of extended pieces for larger ensembles. In 1984, he wrote and later recorded Aura, a tribute to Miles Davis, for big band and soloists, featuring Davis himself.

Milburn, Amos

b. 1 April 1927, Houston, Texas, USA, d. 3 January 1980, Houston, Texas, USA. After service in the US Navy in World War II, Milburn formed his own blues and R&B band in Houston in which he played piano and sang, and in 1946 he was offered a contract by the Aladdin label. Between November 1948 and February 1954 he and his band, the Aladdin Chicken Shackers, had an extraordinary run of 19 consecutive Top 10 hits on the Billboard R&B chart, including four number 1s ('Chicken Shack Boogie', 'A&M Blues', 'Roomin' House Boogie' and 'Bad, Bad Whiskey'). His romping boogies about drinking and partying were hugely popular and for two years (1949 and 1950) he was voted Top R&B Artist by Billboard. Following the break-up of his band in 1954 he never achieved the same level of success, and he left Aladdin in 1956. He then recorded as part of a duo with Charles Brown for the Ace label, and in 1963 recorded an album for Motown Records. In the 60s he played clubs around Cincinnati and Cleveland, Ohio, drawing heavily on his catalogue of old hits, but did not have any more hit records. In 1970 he suffered the first of a series of strokes. In 1972 he retired and returned to his home-town of Houston where he died eight years later.

Miles Smiles - Miles Davis

This was the last Miles Davis album before his next plateau (or his next album), an occurrence that happened throughout his career. This is the quintet that moved into electronic music with Bitches Brew*, Herbie Hancock, Wayne Shorter, Tony Williams, Ron Carter, an astonishing line-up and surely Miles's best post-Coltrane group. This is like music for the last supper; they all knew that Fender Rhodes pianos and Precision basses were coming and this is a superb farewell to acoustic jazz. All six tracks are rewarding, all different, yet the sound is the same. Much more appreciated today than when it was first released.

Miles, Buddy

b. George Miles, 5 September 1945, Omaha, Nebraska, USA. A teenage prodigy, this powerful, if inflexible drummer was a veteran of several touring revues prior to his spell with soul singer Wilson Pickett. In 1967, Miles joined the Electric Flag at the behest of guitarist Mike Bloomfield, whose subsequent departure left the drummer in control. Although the group collapsed in the wake of a disappointing second album, Miles retained its horn section for his next venture, the Buddy Miles Express. This exciting unit also included former Mitch Ryder guitarist Jim McCarthy. Their first album, Expressway To Your Skull, was full of driving, electric soul rhythms that had the blessing of Jimi Hendrix, who produced the album and wrote the sleeve notes. In 1969, Miles joined Jimi Hendrix in the ill-fated Band Of Gypsies. The drummer then continued his own career with the Buddy Miles Band and the rumbustious Them Changes album, the title track of which was a minor US hit. As an integral part of the artist's career, the song was not only featured on the Band Of Gypsies album, but provided one of the highlights of Miles's 1972 collaboration with Carlos Santana, which was recorded live in an extinct Hawaiian volcano. Having participated in an ill-fated Electric Flag reunion, the drummer continued his prolific rock/soul output with a variety of releases.

Despite enjoying a seemingly lower profile during the 80s, Miles has been the guiding musical force behind the phenomenally successful California Raisins, a cartoon group inspired by television advertising. In the mid-90s Miles reappeared with an accomplished album on Ryko that included his interpretations of 'All Along The Watchtower' and 'Born Under A Bad Sign'. It was alleged in 1996 that Miles had once again fallen upon hard times.

Miles, Butch

b. Charles Thornton, 4 July 1944, Ironton, Ohio, USA. After playing the drums as a small child, Miles later studied music in college. As a teenager, he played with a rock band, but his admiration for Gene Krupa inclined him towards jazz drumming. Resident in Charleston, West Virginia, he began playing with small jazz groups and in 1972 became Mel Tormé's regular drummer. In 1975, he quit Tormé and offered his services to Count Basie. When Basie's drummer, Ray Porello, was injured in a road accident, Miles deputized for a week and stayed for four and a half years. In 1979, he joined Dave Brubeck, and the following year was backing Tony Bennett. In the 80s Miles worked extensively with small groups, sometimes as leader, accompanying such artists as Gerry Mulligan, Al Cohn, Buddy Tate, Bucky Pizzarelli, Glenn Zottola, Scott Hamilton and Bob Wilber. Miles also sings occasionally, proving an engaging if uninspired vocalist with a limited range. As a drummer, he is a gifted performer with an eclectic style that revealed his admiration for such big band drummers as Krupa, Chick Webb and Buddy Rich. In a small group setting he is a self-effacing and supportive player but, stylistically, he seems better suited for big band work, where he ably continues the great tradition set by his idols.

b. 31 January 1951, Blackheath, London, England. From early days on the folk circuit, singer and concertina player, Miles turned professional in 1976. From 1977-85 he also played with the Suffolk Bell and Horseshoe Band, and was a founder member of the New Mexborough English Concertina Quartet from 1984-88. From 1988 until 1992, he toured occasionally, both at home and abroad, with songwriter Richard Grainger, in addition to pursuing his solo career. The Dunmow Flitch, recorded with his then wife Sue Miles, was an album of traditional English music, released on the now defunct Sweet Folk All label, and featured Jez Lowe. Home Routes includes 'The Alimony Run', a bitter song by Pete Coe about marital seperation and some of it's consequences. Playing For Time included a variety of songs such as Lennon and McCartney's 'Yesterday'/'All My Loving', and 'From Four Until Late' by blues guitarist Robert Johnson, as well as more traditional material, showing the range of the English concertina. Dick has established respect for himself on the folk circuit, where he is still much in demand as a soloist. In 1990, he recorded On Muintavara with the Irish group Suifinn, and then performed with them from 1991-92.

During his career Miles has appeared on Folk On Two on BBC radio, on numerous occasions, and has performed at both the Festival Hall, and Purcell Rooms on London's South Bank. Miles now lives in Ireland and tours regularly in Ireland, England and Holland. Apart from still working occasionally with Richard Grainger, he also plays with Ril-Gan-Anim, in addition to his solo work.

Miles, Garry

b. James E. Cason, 27 November 1939, Nashville, Tennessee, USA. Miles had a busy career as solo singer, group member and songwriter in the 60s. His best-known song as Garry Miles was 'Look For A Star', a Top 20 hit in 1960 on Liberty Records. Before that, he had played guitar with Brenda Lee and performed as part of a trio called the Statues, who achieved a Top 100 cover version of the ballad 'Blue Velvet'. 'Look For A Star' had been featured in the UK film Circus Of Horrors in 1960. Released under the Miles pseudonym, it reached number 16. (N.B. Garry Mills, who had a hit with the same song, was a different artist.) A few other singles were issued under the Miles name, and as the Statues, but none were hits. Cason then recorded under his other nickname, Buzz Cason, for several labels but did not have any hits under that name. He did, however, co-write the hit 'Sandy' for Ronny And The Daytonas, and sang background for artists including Elvis Presley, Kenny Rogers and Jimmy Buffett.

Miles, John

b. 23 April 1949, Jarrow, Tyne And Wear, England. Miles achieved international fame in 1976 with the classic rock ballad 'Music' ('music was my first love and it will be my last/the music of tomorrow, the music of the past'). His beginnings in the music business found him manufacturing toilet signs by day, but by night performing in a semi-professional band called the Influences, which also included Paul Thompson (later in Roxy Music) and Victor Malcolm (later in Geordie). After this band split, Miles formed his own John Miles Band, who were successful in their native north east and also recorded for the group's own Orange label. In 1975, Miles and bassist Bob Marshall moved to London and were signed to Decca. Recruiting Barry Black (and later adding pianist Gary Moberly) they reached the UK Top 20 with the Alan Parson-produced 'Highfly'. The 1976 epic length follow-up 'Music' reached number 3 and earned the band an American tour with Elton John. The accompanying album portrayed Miles as a moody, James Dean figure and the artist came across as such when defending his composition from quarters of the music press who unfairly ridiculed the artist as pretentious. He had two further UK hits in 'Remember Yesterday' (Top 40, 1976) and 'Slow Down' (Top 10, 1977), but Miles was forever linked with his self-confessional epic. This ultimately proved to be a burden on Miles' development and although he continued to record into the 80s, he was never able to brush off the memory of that song. On 1983's Play On, Miles used a 40-piece orchestra and Elton John's old producer Gus Dudgeon. In the early 90s Miles took to the road with artists including Joe Cocker and Tina Turner.

Miles, Lizzie

b. Elizabeth Mary Pajaud, née Landreaux, 31 March 1895, New Orleans, Louisiana, USA, d. 17 March 1963. As a teenager, Miles sang with outstanding early jazzmen from the age of 16, including Joe 'King' Oliver, Freddie Keppard, Kid Ory and Bunk Johnson.

By the early 20s, she had established a reputation in Chicago and New York and toured Europe in the middle of the decade. The late 20s found her resident in New York, singing in clubs and recording with Oliver and Jelly Roll Morton. Illness kept her out of the business for a few years, but she returned to work in New York and Chicago in the late 30s and early 40s. Miles then abandoned her career, but she returned to nightclub work in the 50s, made records and re-established her reputation in the wake of the Dixieland revival, singing with Bob Scobey, Sharkey Bonano and George Lewis. She retired in 1959, turning her back on music to embrace religion. Often singing in Louisiana Creole patois, Miles had a robust and earthy style that made her a distinctive performer, despite a rather narrow vocal range. Miles was an all-round entertainer, applying her powerful delivery impartially to blues, pop songs, ballads, Creole songs, and improbable Creolized (French language) versions of 'Bill Bailey' and 'A Good Man Is Hard To Find'.

b. 8 May 1925, Lachute, Louisiana, USA, d. 23 November 1987, Los Angeles, California, USA. Another of Lightnin' Hopkins' protégés, Miles had a fitful recording career. His initial inspiration was John Lee 'Sonny Boy' Williamson, although he was not interested in the harmonica. He moved to Houston, Texas, in 1952, where he met and became a friend of Lightnin' Hopkins. Since Miles was 6 feet 5 inches tall, Hopkins bestowed upon him the nickname 'Long Gone'. He accompanied Hopkins during a series of sessions recorded by Mack McCormick. Miles sang harmony and talked on two tracks, 'Baby' and 'Prison Blues Come Down On Me'; two further songs remained unissued. He moved to Los Angeles in May 1961, where he met arranger/producer Robert 'Bumps' Blackwell, who arranged a contract with Mercury, from which a single was released. Material from the two sessions, with contributions from Sonny Terry and Brownie McGhee, was released on Sundown 20 years later. In 1964, Miles recorded an album for World Pacific with guitarist Willie Chambers and bassist Leroy Vinnegar and the following year cut two singles with Bruce Bromberg for Two Kings.

A final single, 'Hello Josephine', was recorded for Kent in 1969. Miles made occasional appearances in clubs and at festivals, but drug problems kept him inactive musically. After surviving a 1985 operation for lung cancer, he briefly returned to performing before succumbing to brain cancer in 1987. An album session with the William Clarke Band for Satch Records remains unissued.

Miles, Lynn

b. 29 September 1958, Sweetsburg, Quebec, Canada. Miles's parents brought her up in a musical household, where space on the record player was divided between her mother's opera and country records and her father' jazz albums. She studied violin and flute at school before taking piano lessons, self-financed from sporadic employment as a babysitter. Her first songs were written at the age of 10, inspired by her devotion to music and her voracious reading of mystery novels. She began to sing in clubs before studying as an opera singer for two years as she turned 20 years old. After initially working with Mark Thibeault she embarked on a musical partnership with guitarist Terry Tufts with whom she continued to earn a modest living throughout Ottawa. Initially playing covers, Miles subsequently introduced her own songs into the set, leading to her first recording sessions in 1987. This self-titled cassette recording, which included strong early compositions such as 'White Knight' and 'The Art Of Self-Defense', gave notice of her developing talent. Her personal circumstances were still difficult however, and during this period she helped support herself with work at the Ottawa Folklore Centre as a voice teacher, her students included a young Alanis Morissette. A second album for Snowy River Records, this time issued on compact disc, followed in 1991. Chalk This One Up To The Moon included a revealing testament to her nation's fixation with male sports which she had witnessed in her adolescence. 'It's Hockey Night In Canada' was the record's most powerful moment, though other songs such as 'It'll Be Here' and 'All I Ever Wanted' were also convincing. Buoyed by strong reviews, Miles ventured south of the Canadian border for her first performances in the USA and also appeared at the 1992 Mariposa Folk Festival. There she met Guy Clark, who introduced her to his producer Miles Wilkinson, who in turn found her an American publisher. In October 1994 she returned to the studio to record Slightly Haunted. Produced by Jeffrey Lesser, this included more commercial material such as 'I Loved A Cowboy' as well as more exploratory themes, including 'The Ghost Of Deadlock'. Some critics were less than convinced, Q magazine charging the contents with being 'utterly vacuous'.

Miles, Robert

b. Roberto Concina (aka Roberto Milani). Miles was born to Italian parents in Fluerier, Switzerland, in 1969 and later moved to Italy. As a child he learned the piano and began DJing when he was 13. Four years later he took his first job at a local club, around the same time as he set up a pirate radio station. After a few years he was playing at various clubs throughout northern Italy and by the time he was 22 he had become one of the most successful broadcasters in the region on account of his show on Radio Supernetwork. He subsequently invested in a studio to concentrate on writing his own material, while continuing to DJ at clubs and parties. After a number of minor successes in Italy he achieved widespread success with his single 'Children' (1996), which was initially signed to Platypus Records in the UK from the Italian independent DBX, before being picked up by DeConstruction Records. Inspired by the sounds he had heard while DJing in Goa, Ibiza, Bali and other such places, while aiming to create a contrast to the hard techno which was popular in Italy at the same, 'Children' created a rather sickening ethereal atmosphere, blending a basic trance sound with live instruments including strings, guitar and its famous piano hook. With its commercial melodic sound it was extremely successful, particularly in Europe and brought Miles's name into the mainstream. The follow-ups 'Fable' and 'One & One' and his debut album Dreamland were equally popular and lead to Miles winning various industry awards, including the Brits' Best International Newcomer and the World Music's Highest-Selling Male Newcomer. In 1997 he released the single 'Freedom' and a second album 23am which extended his sound to incorporate breakbeats and elements of drum 'n' bass as well as vocalists and jazz musicians. In the same year he mixed one side of the compilation London for the 'superclub' Rennaissance. He has remained a popular DJ throughout Europe.

Milestones - Miles Davis

An album that has matured with age. Featuring the classic sextet with the personnel of John Coltrane, Cannonball Adderley, Red Garland, Philly Joe Jones and Paul Chambers, it hints at what was to come with the phenomenal Kind Of Blue the following year. The modal jazz period was germinated here, particularly with 'Sid's Ahead', featuring one of Miles's finest solos, a tribute to late-night New York disc jockey Symphony Sid. Elsewhere the pace is swing and cool, with a unique drum sound on 'Billy Boy' and it closes with a superior reading of Monk's 'Straight No Chaser'.

Miley, Bubber

b. James Wesley Miley, 3 April 1903, Aiken, South Carolina, USA, d. 20 May 1932. By his late teens, trumpeter Miley was working extensively in clubs in Chicago and New York and was on the road with Mamie Smith. In 1923, he became a member of Elmer Snowden's band, staying on when Duke Ellington took over as leader. His heavy drinking made him unreliable and erratic, and he left the band in 1929, touring Europe that year with Noble Sissle. He briefly led his own band but was stricken with tuberculosis and died in May 1932. As a formative member of Ellington's orchestra, Miley's influence remained long after his departure. His dramatic use of the plunger mute, together with growls and other unusual sounds, helped to create many of the so-called 'jungle' effects which became an integral part of Ellington's music.

Milhûn

Milhûn, a form of traditional music accompanying sung poetry in Morocco, traces its heritage to the country's classical period. In common with other indigenous forms, such as andalous and the al-âla orchestras, it uses similar instrumentation (predominantly strings and percussion). Specifically, a Milhûn Orchestra will usually comprise oud (lute), kamenjah (violin), swisen (small lute), taarija (tambourine), darabouka (drums), handqa (brass cymbals) and hadjouj (bass lute). A performance consists of two parts. The first, the taqsim (or overture) is played on the violin or oud and establishes a dominant rhythm. This is then sustained in the qassida section, where poetry is added. The latter section begins with solo verses, before the chorus joins the poet, finally speeding up together as a finale. Poems are usually improvised, though they are often adapted from traditional works, local proverbs and devotional songs. The greatest exponent of Milhûn was Al-Thami Lamdaghri (d. 1856) whose compositions, including 'Al Gnawi', 'Al-Arsa' and 'Aliq Al-Masrûh', still form the backbone of the music's modern repertoire. The best-known contemporary singers include Abdelkrim, Haj Hussein and Abdellah Ramdani. None of these artists or any others have ever been properly appreciated outside of Morocco, but they continue to enjoy tremendous popularity at home.

Milk And Cookies

Formed in New York, USA, in 1974, Milk And Cookies initially consisted of Justin Strauss (vocals), Ian North (keyboards) Sal Maida (bass) and Mike Ruiz (drums). A power pop band with a quirky sense of humour, their sole album inspired comparisons to Sparks. Soon after its release Maida quit to join Venus And The Razorblades, and Jim Gregory, and then Jay Dee Weiss, replaced him in Milk And Cookies. North soon left, too, to form the punk-inspired Neo and Ian North's Radio, while Weiss then became a founding member of the Knickers with James Destri (who later was a member of Blondie). Strauss and Ruiz managed to keep their band going until 1977.

Milk And Honey

Jerry Herman's first Broadway score, and reputedly the first Broadway musical ever to have an Israeli setting - the block buster Fiddler On The Roof came along three years after Milk And Honey opened on Broadway at the Martin Beck Theatre on 10 October 1961. Don Appel's book deals mainly with the romantic relationship between Phil (Robert Weede) and Ruth (Mimi Benzell), two middle-aged American tourists in Israel. At the end of the piece, their on-off affair is still unresolved, mainly due to Ruth's not unreasonable misgivings concerning Phil's wife. Molly Picon played another American tourist - but one with a mission - a widow in determined pursuit of a new husband in the shape of Mr. Horowitz (Juki Arkin). Picon, a veteran of the Yiddish theatre, also starred in the film of Fiddler On The Roof. Other members of the cast included Tommy Rall and Lanna Saunders. Herman's score was acclaimed as 'melodically inventive', and particular praise was reserved for Phil and Ruth's touching 'Shalom'. However, the rest of the songs, such as 'There's No Reason In The World', 'That Was Yesterday', 'Let's Not Waste A Moment', 'Like A Young Man', 'As Simple As That', 'Chin Up, Ladies', and 'Independence Day Hora', were extremely impressive, and lingered in the memory. Milk And Honey ran for 543 performances - without making a profit. Still, the money would soon be rolling in for Herman: his first smash-hit, Hello Dolly, was set to make its elegant entrance on Broadway in 1964.

Milkshakes

This UK, Chatham, Kent-based group were originally conceived in the late 70s by Pop Rivit roadies Mickey Hampshire and Banana Bertie as Mickey And The Milkshakes. Often appearing on the same circuit as fellow Medway town bands the Dentists and the Prisoners, the group performed as a 'psychobilly' outfit, supporting the Pop Rivits from time to time with Wreckless Eric cover versions. Pop Rivit leader Billy Childish then began writing with Hampshire and in 1980 formed a new version of Mickey And The Milkshakes. Eventually settling on a line-up of Childish and Hampshire (guitars, vocals), Russ Wilkins (bass) and Bruce Brand (drums), they started recording a string of albums featuring various R&B classics plus original material. After the first album they truncated their name. Later on, when John Agnew replaced Wilkins, they began to refer to themselves as Thee Milkshakes.

In addition to their normal activities of gigging and recording, they also acted as the backing band to an all-girl vocal trio called the Del Monas. As prolific releasers of album material, The(e) Milkshakes were only modestly successful with singles, achieving two UK Independent Top 20 hits with 'Brand New Cadillac' (1984) and 'Ambassadors Of Love' (1985). The group split in 1984 (although Milkshake material continued to be released long after), with Childish going on to form the equally productive Thee Mighty Caesars.

Millennium

This Los Angeles-based act emerged in 1967, when two former members of Ballroom, producer/songwriter Curt Boettcher (b. 7 January 1944, Eau Claire, Wisconsin, USA, d. 14 June 1987, Los Angeles), and guitarist Lee Mallory, joined forces with singer/guitarist Michael Fennelly b. 1948, New Jersey, New York, USA. Doug Rhodes (organ/bass), Sandy Salisbury (guitar) and Ron Edgar (drums) - all ex-Music Machine - and Joey Stec (guitar) completed the line-up of an act enhanced considerably by the production skills of Gary Usher. Begin offered the sweet, close harmonies of west coast contemporaries the Association and Harper's Bizarre but, despite considerable acclaim, it was not a commercial success, and the unit was officially disbanded soon afterwards. The musicians also contributed to the concurrent Boettcher/Usher project, Sagittarius, while Fennelly, Rhodes and Edgar subsequently formed Bigshot.

b. Lucille Ann Collier, 12 April 1919 or 1923, Chireno, Texas, USA. A vivacious, long-legged tap dancer (500 taps per minute) who achieved stardom rather late in her career via several classic film musicals of the late 40s and early 50s. After her parents were divorced when she was about 10 years old, Miller, who is of Irish, French and Cherokee descent, moved with her mother to California and supplemented the family's finances by dancing in clubs. An RKO talent scout spotted her there, and in the late 30s she made a few films for the studio, including New Faces Of 1937, The Life Of The Party, Stage Door, Having A Wonderful Time, Tarnished Angel, Room Service, and Radio City Revels. In 1938 she was loaned out to Columbia for the Frank Capra comedy You Can't Take It With You which won the Oscar for best picture. A year later she thrilled Broadway audiences by dancing 'The Mexiconga', accompanied by the Loo Sisters and Ella Logan in George White's Scandals. During the early 40s she was often one of the few artists worth watching in a series of mostly low-budget features which included Melody Ranch, Time Out For Rhythm, Go West Young Lady, Reveille With Beverley, What's Buzzin' Cousin?, Jam Session, Carolina Blues, and Eadie Was A Lady (1945). In 1948 she had good role in Easter Parade with Fred Astaire, Judy Garland, and Peter Lawford, and provided one of the film's highspots with her scintillating solo dance number 'Shaking The Blues Away'. Her performance in that film merited a seven year MGM contract, and after performing a frenetic 'Dance Of Fury' with Ricardo Montalban and Cyd Charisse in The Kissing Bandit, joined Frank Sinatra, Gene Kelly, Vera-Ellen, Betty Garrett and Jules Munshin in one of the all-time great movie musicals, On The Town (1949). She led them all a fine dance around the anthropology museum with the clever and amusing 'Prehistoric Man'. Although she was by now around 30 years of age, Miller continued to shine during the early 50s in movies such as Texas Carnival, Two Tickets To Broadway, Lovely To Look At (which included her highly individual interpretation of 'I'll Be Hard To Handle'), and Small Town Girl in which she excelled again, this time with 'I Gotta Hear That Beat'. In Kiss Me Kate (1953) she played what is said to be her favourite role of Bianca, and this film was arguably the highlight of her whole career. Her memorable performances of Cole Porter's marvellous 'Too Darn Hot', 'From This Moment On', 'Tom, Dick And Harry', 'Why Can't You Behave?', 'Always True To You Darling In My Fashion', and 'We Open In Venice' were a joy to behold. By now, the golden era of MGM musicals was almost over, and after guesting in the Sigmund Romberg biopic Deep In My Heart, and emphasising just how good she still was with a top-class routine to 'The Lady From The Bayou' in Hit The Deck, Miller signed off in 1956 with the ordinary The Opposite Sex and the non-musical The Great American Pastime (about baseball, of course). Like so many others, in the 60s she turned to television and nightclubs and toured in stage revivals of shows such as Hello, Dolly!, Panama Hattie, and Can-Can. She also made a television commercial for soup in which she danced on the top of an enormous can, surrounded by water fountains, a large orchestra, and a bevy of chorus girls. In 1969 she returned to Broadway after an absence of 30 years and took over the leading role in the hit musical Mame to wide critical acclaim. In the early 70s her extensive tours in Anything Goes were interrupted for more than a year while Miller recovered from an accident in which she was struck by a sliding steel curtain. In 1979 she joined Mickey Rooney in Sugar Babies, a celebration of the golden era of American vaudeville which ran on Broadway for 1,208 performances before touring the US for several years, and spending a brief time in London's West End in 1988. Her honours include the George M. Cohan Award for Best Female Entertainer, the Sarah Siddons Award for Best Actress, and an award for Best Dance Number given to her by the Dance Awards of America. The University of California presented her with its Lifetime Award and endowed a yearly drama award and scholarship in her honour. Miller's colourful private life, which has involved admirers such as Conrad Hilton and Louis B. Mayer, and failed marriages to three American oil millionaires, is documented in her autobiography. She is also interested in the paranormal and is said to believe implicitly that she is a reincarnation of the first female Pharoah of Egypt.

Miller, Big

b. Clarence Horatio Miller, 18 December 1922, Sioux City, Iowa, USA, d. 9 June 1992. Miller's parents were Henry Miller, a Sioux, who was a preacher, and Nora Epperson, a descendant of slaves. His first influence in music came from his father's church but he also heard the blues sung by men working on the railroad. In the 30s, while still a student, he formed a band, but with the outbreak of World War II he joined the army. After serving in the Pacific and in Europe, he began entertaining his fellow soldiers. In 1949 he joined Lionel Hampton's band, then had a five-year spell with Jay McShann. Miller's abiding interest in the blues was such that writer-poet Langston Hughes wrote a series of songs especially for him and he also performed at Carnegie Hall in The Evolution Of The Blues Song with Jon Hendricks and Miriam Makeba, the recording of which won the Grand Prix Du Disque. In 1963 Miller moved to Australia, then to Hawaii. In 1967 he toured with The Evolution Of The Blues Song and was stranded in Vancouver. Taking a liking for Canada, he settled in Alberta and became a respected performer and educator, teaching at the Banff School of Fine Arts and the Grant MacEwan Community College. He was also the recipient of an Honorary Doctorate from Athabasca University. In 1981 the Canadian National Film Board produced a biographical film, Big And The Blues. Miller had a commanding style and his rich voice lent itself especially well to the material he favoured. His influences in the blues were Joe Turner, Jimmy Rushing, 'T-Bone' Walker and Jimmy Witherspoon, whom he followed into the McShann band. He also admired the ballad style of Billy Eckstine. Miller's chosen lifestyle was such that he has left behind considerably fewer recordings than his undoubted talent deserves.

Miller, Bill

b. Stockbridge-Munsee Reservation, Wisconsin, USA. Miller is a Native American from the Mohican tribe, and much of his songwriting concerns itself with the plight of his people since the frontier days of the nineteenth century. American society's general intolerance and vilification of 'red Indians' is something, sadly, that Miller continues to encounter to the present day. He recalls a particularly galling meeting with record company executives in Nashville where he was promised a recording contract if he 'dropped that Indian shit'. He has never had any intention of betraying his heritage, and a cursory glance at his songbook, including titles such as 'Geronimo's Cadillac', 'Trail Of Freedom' and 'Reservation Road', demonstrate his continuing advocacy of his cultural background. In 1992 he was finally awarded a major recording contract via Jim Ed Norman at Warner Brothers Records, ironically due to the success of the Hollywood film Dances With Wolves (from the same industry so responsible for the demonizing of native Americans in their 'cowboy and indians' films). Miller was born on a reservation in Wisconsin and brought up with nine siblings. He quickly descended into alcoholism, just like his father and grandfather before him. However, he was determined that it was time to break the cycle of dependency and abuse. His first musical experience came when playing guitar in his uncle's Wisconsin polka band, but he embarked on a fine arts degree before dedicating himself to music. His first two albums were both recorded for his own Windspirit label, preceding three more for Rosebud Records, which he co-owns with Kathy Mattea's manager. His first properly distributed album, The Red Road, was finally released in 1993 and confirmed him as a natural peer of fellow Native American activist John Trudell. He subsequently contributed the flute passage in Vanessa Williams' 'Colors Of The Wind', which was included on the Pocahontas film soundtrack. However, as he conceded to Billboard magazine in 1995, 'I felt real limited at Warner Western. I said "I want to rock, so can I get out of this corral?".' The subsequent Raven In The Snow collection, which saw him move to Reprise Records, included 'Pile Of Stones', a typically autobiographical song detailing how much he missed his children when on tour. The album's title was inspired by a return to his home reservation: 'With my music, my viewpoint, my belief system, I stand out like a raven in the snow.'

Miller, Bob

The instrumental group Bob Miller And The Millermen appeared regularly on UK television and radio programmes in the 50s and early 60s. After being noticed at several London gigs, including one at the Locarno Ballroom, Streatham, in London, on Coronation Day, 2 June 1953, Miller appeared on BBC Television's Dig This. He subsequently toured with current stars such as Cliff Richard, Bobby Darin, the Four Freshmen and Shirley Bassey. Later, on shows such as Drumbeat (for eight years), and the radio series, Parade Of The Pops ('a review of the week's popular music, and prediction of hits to come'), they backed many of the UK's top vocalists, and had their own featured spots. Their records included 'Muchacha', 'Square Bash', 'Dig This', 'The Poacher', 'Little Dipper', 'In The Mood', 'My Guy's Come Back', 'The Busker's Tune', 'Manhunt', '77 Sunset Strip' and 'Joey's Song'. For much of his life, Miller's abiding interest has been yacht racing, and in June 1972 he participated in the Transatlantic Race, providing a day-by-day radio commentary.

b. California, USA. Miller was a boogie-woogie piano player who had a 1955 Top 10 single with 'The House Of Blue Lights', a rocking version of an Andrews Sisters song that had previously been a hit in 1946 for its co-author, Frank Slack. Recorded for Mercury Records, the cover version was Miller's only major hit. Prior to his biggest recording, Miller had recorded some tracks for Capitol Records and, following the US number 9 hit, he continued to try for others, with no luck. His only other chart record was 'The Auctioneer', a country song that reached number 59 later in 1956.

Miller, Count Prince

b. c.1948, Jamaica, West Indies. Count Prince Miller is a veteran performer having been involved in black entertainment for over 30 years. In the early 60s he was initially a baritone singer, singing with the Downbeats. He learnt his craft performing on the hotel circuit on the north coast of Jamaica. His reputation led to his being enrolled to perform with Jimmy James And The Vagabonds, joining the group in the UK. The band released a number of singles, including 'Red Red Wine' prior to Tony Tribe's reggae version of the Neil Diamond classic. The song gave the group their only UK Top 40 hit in 1968 and it was not until 1976 that they returned to the chart. After Miller departed from the group he became more involved in the UK reggae scene. He appeared at the Wembley Reggae Festival in 1971, the recording of which was planned as a live album by Trojan Records, but the project faltered. Undeterred, the label persevered, and a live album was successfully recorded at Alexandra Palace featuring the Pioneers, Greyhound, Nicky Thomas, Delroy Wilson, Bruce Ruffin, and compered by Miller. In 1971 he had recorded a novelty hit for the label, 'Mule Train Parts One And Two', which he performed at the show. Further releases included 'Bewildered' and a comment on man's follies, 'The Monkey'. He also performed alongside his compatriot Danny Ray and was instrumental in securing the singer a contract with MCA Records. In 1974 as a soloist, he released 'Call Me' on the Trojan subsidiary Ashanti. His reputation as an MC led to his introducing a number of top Jamaican artists, including the Rainbow Theatre performance of the Jamaica Showcase in 1974, featuring Al Brown, Dennis

Brown, Cynthia Richards and Sharon Forrester. He was also invited to introduce Bob Marley And The Wailers at the same theatre in June 1977. The event was filmed and has the distinction of being the first official reggae video. In the early 80s, he re-recorded 'Mule Train' with Sly And Robbie, reviving his popularity as a performer. He continued to whip up enthusiasm at live events, and pursued his aspirations towards an acting career. By the 90s, his determination resulted in a role in the popular television situation comedy Desmond's. In 1996 he returned to the studios to produce Jimmy James and Winston Curtis's 'Muriel'.

b. USA. The son of country legend Roger Miller, Dean Miller admits that his lineage had a huge impact on his career development: 'He influenced me in every way. He was very wise and helped me become a better person as well as a better songwriter. But I don't think my music is anything like his.' Miller Jnr. was as much influenced by country rockers John Mellencamp and Steve Earle as traditional country staples such as Buck Owens and Willie Nelson. He did not set out to emulate his father, and, indeed, did not take music seriously until he had completed his college studies and attempted to work as an actor in Los Angeles. He eventually went to Nashville in 1990 and began writing songs - he estimates to have between 300 and 400 on catalogue at any time. Artists who have used his material include Shawn Camp, Brett James and James House. For his 1997 Capitol Nashville debut, Miller enlisted Travis Tritt producer Gregg Brown to guarantee a 'tough' sound. The best of the album's many strong tracks was 'Nowhere, USA', which was also released as a single. Like many of his songs, this was accomplished with voice and plaintive fiddle, providing the perfect setting for his small-town narratives. Guests on the album included Trisha Yearwood and Mavericks singer Raul Malo.

Miller, Donnie

This American guitarist and singer-songwriter was most widely renowned for his leather-clad biker image. Influenced by Steve Earle, Bruce Springsteen and the old blues masters, he specialized in a laid-back, understated approach, with fluid but economical lead guitar breaks. Signed to Epic Records, he released One Of The Boys, ably assisted by Vince Kirk (second guitar), Norman Dahlor (bass), Kurt Carow (keyboards) and Tim 'Kix' Kelly (drums). The album also featured guest appearances from Cyndi Lauper and Tommy Shaw (of Damn Yankees). 'The Devil Wears Lingerie' attracted some attention as a single, with its provocative and sordid promotional video, but it effectively marked the last sighting of the artist.

● ALBUMS: One Of The Boys (Epic 1989).

Miller, Duncan

The studio boffin behind such 90s UK dance chart regulars as Esoterix (whose product includes 'Void', the first release on Positiva, and 'Come Satisfy My Love' for Union) and Monica De Luxe ('The Temperature's Rising' and 'Don't Let This Feeling Stop'). This is only the tip of the Miller iceberg, however. He garnered an Echoes Single Of The Week award for 'South By South West', from his jazz-based project, As One, on Wow Records, and another creation, Feelgood Factor's 'Jump Up In The Air' also showed strongly in several club listings. Miller operates out of his own West London studio, working alongside various DJs and musicians. In this role he produced 'U Don't Have To Say You Love Me' for React Records, and 'Bonour M. Basie' for Wow. He has also produced a track for Robert Owens and provided keyboard services for remixer Frankie Foncett. His own remixing projects included working with Paul Gotel on the Well Hung Parliament takes of Nu Colours' 'The Power', McKoy's 'Fight' and Monie Love's 'Never Give Up'.

b. Edinburgh, Scotland. Though originally from Scotland, Miller has spent much of his life in Austin, Texas, USA. He has travelled widely, with spells in Maine, southern California, Texas and Ontario, Canada, and also frequently returns to his native Scotland to perform. His popularity is built on his simple but endearing singing and guitar playing, and an arsenal of songs drawn from traditional and contemporary Scottish sources. Though his first three American albums were never released in the UK, the Greentrax Records' compilation, At Home With The Exiles, provided an excellent selection of the best of his previous work. It added the self-penned title track and newer tunes drawing on songwriters including Nancy Nicolson, Hamish Henderson and Matt Armour. The musicians included guitarist Rich Brotherton and Scottish fiddler Alasdair Fraser. The older material consisted of standards such as 'Pittenweem Jo', 'The John McLean March' and 'The Broom O' The Cowdenknowes'.

Miller, Eddie

b. Edward Raymond Müller, 23 June 1911, New Orleans, Louisiana, USA, d. 6 April 1991, Los Angeles, California, USA. Miller began playing clarinet as a child and in his early teens played in street bands. Before he was 17 years old he was on his way to New York where he played with several bands, including that led by Julie Wintz which had the unenviable task of playing opposite Fletcher Henderson at the Roseland Ballroom. While on this engagement, Miller met Henderson's star tenor saxophonist, Coleman Hawkins, with whom he formed a lifelong friendship. By this time Miller had also taken up the tenor and in 1930, at the age of 19 joined Ben Pollack's band where he remained until its break-up in 1934. A founder-member of the co-operative group which became known as the Bob Crosby Orchestra, Miller was one of the leading soloists of the band and played an important part in its huge success. He was composer of 'Slow Mood', a hit for the band. In 1943, he briefly led his own unit before entering the US army. On his discharge, following illness, he reformed a band, but by the mid-40s he had become a studio musician in Hollywood where he remained for the next 10 years. Miller appeared in the film Pete Kelly's Blues (1955) and its television spin-off series, but by the late 50s was back on the jazz circuit. In the 60s, he played dates across the USA as a single and was also a member of the band led by Pete Fountain as well as that run by his former Crosby soulmates Yank Lawson and Bob Haggart, the World's Greatest Jazz Band. During the 70s and 80s Miller continued his career, touring as a single and working with the WGJB and its later version, the Lawson-Haggart Jazz Band. Amongst his associates in the band was pianist Lou Stein, with whom he recorded a duo album, Lazy Mood For Two. He also appeared at several Crosby reunions. He was still active when, while with the Lawson-Haggart band in 1988, he suffered a disabling stroke which ended his playing career. A later stroke was even more damaging and he eventually died in April 1991. A fluid player with a relaxed and smoothly elegant style, Miller was at his best on ballads, although his uptempo excursions with Crosby, especially on the numbers performed by the Bobcats, the band-within-the-band, lent weight to his status as one of the best white tenor players of his generation.

Miller, Emmett

b. USA. A major but unrecognised influence on the development of country music and by inference rock 'n' roll, Emmett Miller was widely known as 'the Minstrel man'. Part of the reason for the lack of acknowledgement accorded his legacy can be ascribed to the dubious nature of minstrel-singing: in more enlightened times the sight of white actors 'blacked-up' as negroes, using accentuated singing voices, is hardly likely to be considered acceptable. Despite this, Miller deserves to be accredited as a fine singer whose innovations were adopted by much better-known figures including Jimmie Rodgers, Bob Wills, Hank Williams and Merle Haggard. Though the voice was decidedly country, Miller's minstrel act stemmed from the jazz tradition. So too did his band, the Georgia Crackers, featuring Tommy Dorsey, Jimmy Dorsey, Jack Teagarden and Gene Krupa. Sadly, much of his career took place before suitable equipment was available to record his songs. However, his was the first recorded version of 'Lovesick Blues' in 1925, though this tape has subsequently been 'lost'. However, it was recut in 1929, and archivists have noted that Hank Williams' later version of the song is almost note-for-note identical. Others inspired by Miller included Jimmie Rodgers (who, like Miller, yodelled) and Tommy Duncan. Bob Wills, meanwhile, cited Miller as his favourite singer. By the 30s Miller's career was effectively over, and it was not until 1996 that anybody thought it noteworthy enough to prepare a compilation. However, when they did they were rewarded with glowing reviews, many offering the observation that Miller has been the missing link in country music's early development.

Miller, Ernest 'Punch'

b. Ernest Burden, 10 June 1894, Raceland, Louisiana, USA. d. 2 December 1971. Miller began playing cornet as a child, playing with local dance and early jazz bands. Shortly after World War I he settled in New Orleans for a while before joining the northward migration. Resident in Chicago from the mid-20s, he played with many bands including those led by Freddie Keppard and Jelly Roll Morton. From the mid-40s he was often in New York where he recorded with Jimmy Archey, Ed Hall, Ralph Sutton and others and also appeared on Rudi Blesh's This Is Jazz radio show. By the middle of the following decade, however, he had returned to New Orleans. In the early 60s he toured with George Lewis. A technically proficient trumpeter, Miller's playing mingled the New Orleans tradition with a deep feeling for the blues. His solos were often pungent and moving. He sang in a casual yet engaging manner, in this department, at least, displaying the influence of Louis Armstrong. In 1971 he was the subject of an exceptionally fine film documentary, 'Til The Butcher Cuts Him Down.
